Digitized by the Internet Archive
in 2013

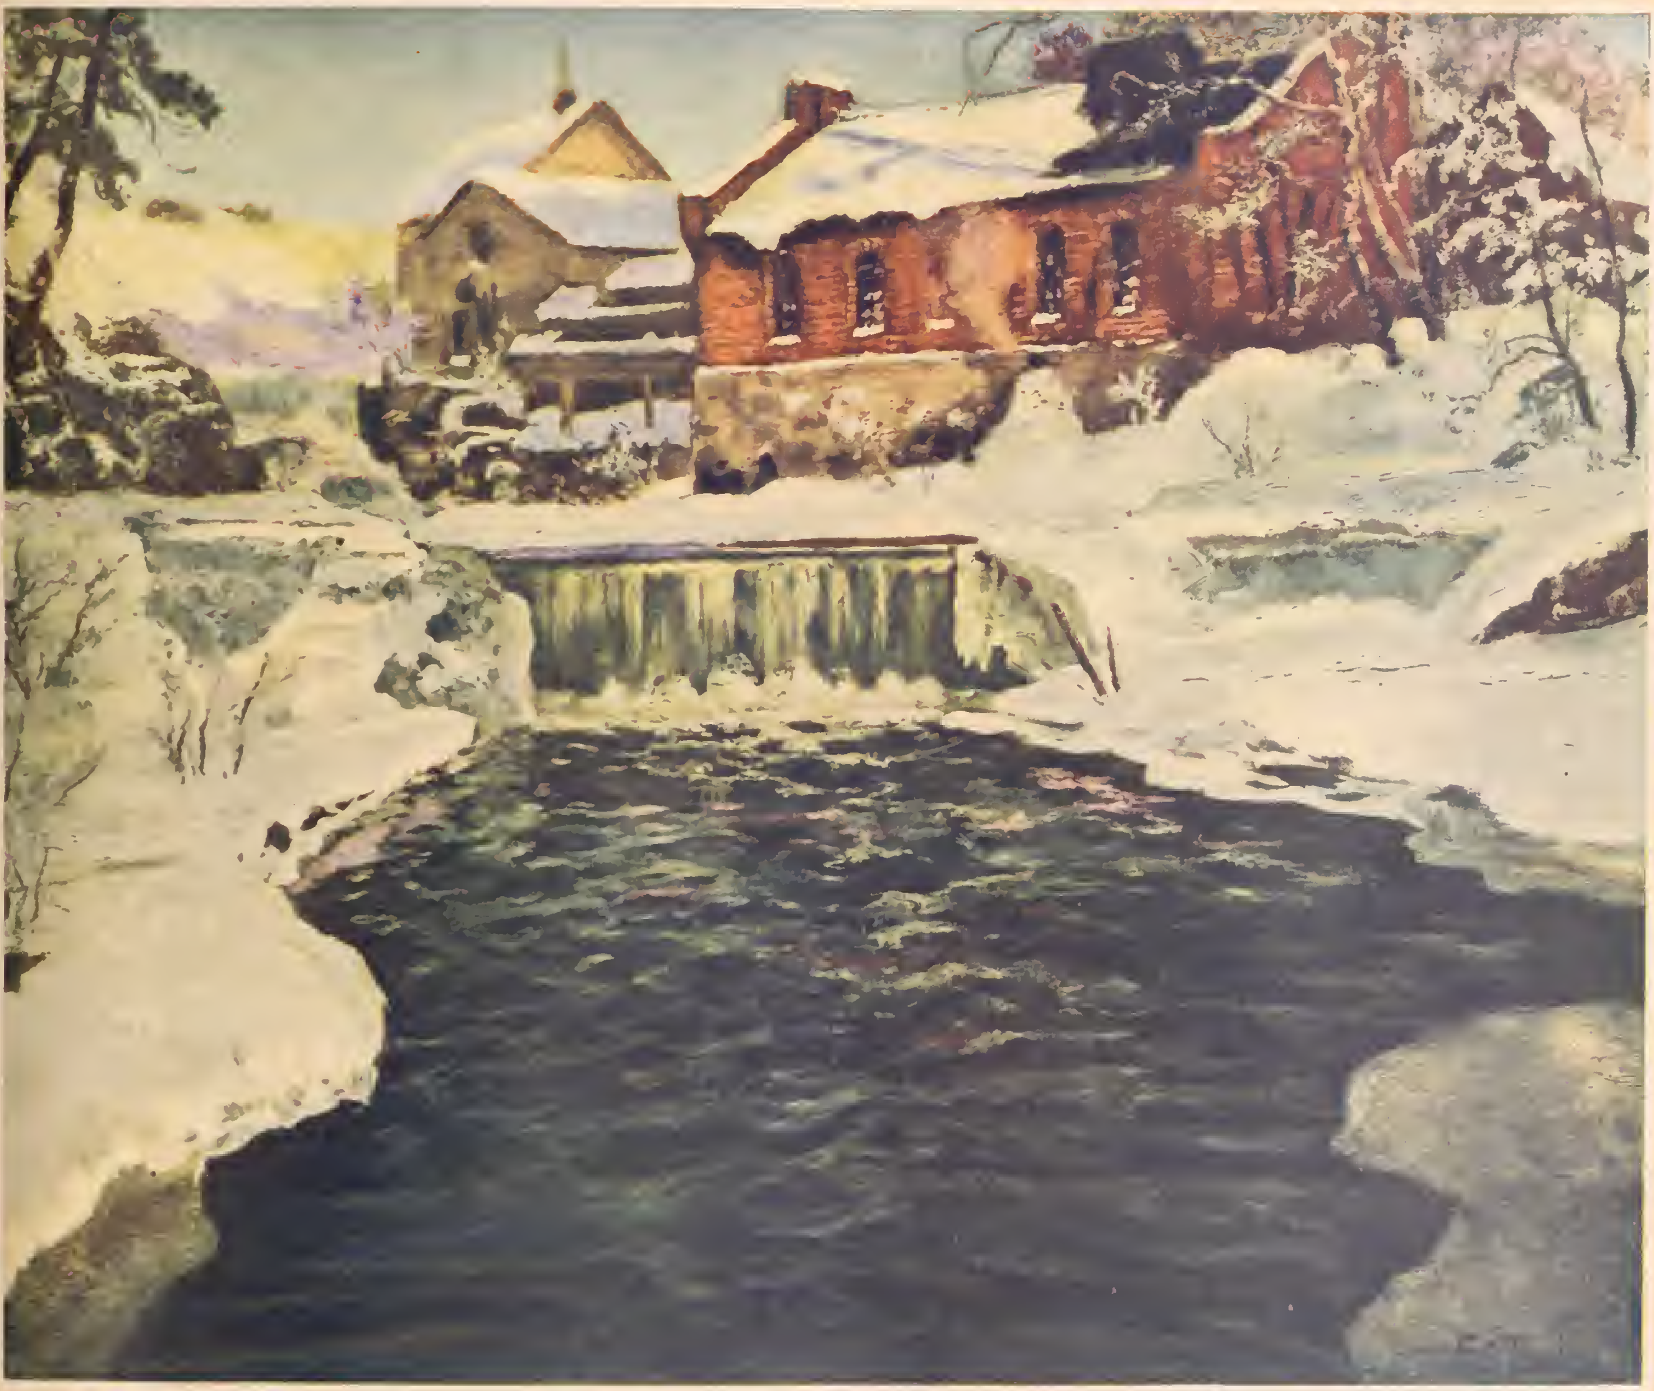
http://archive.org/details/christianherald39unse

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

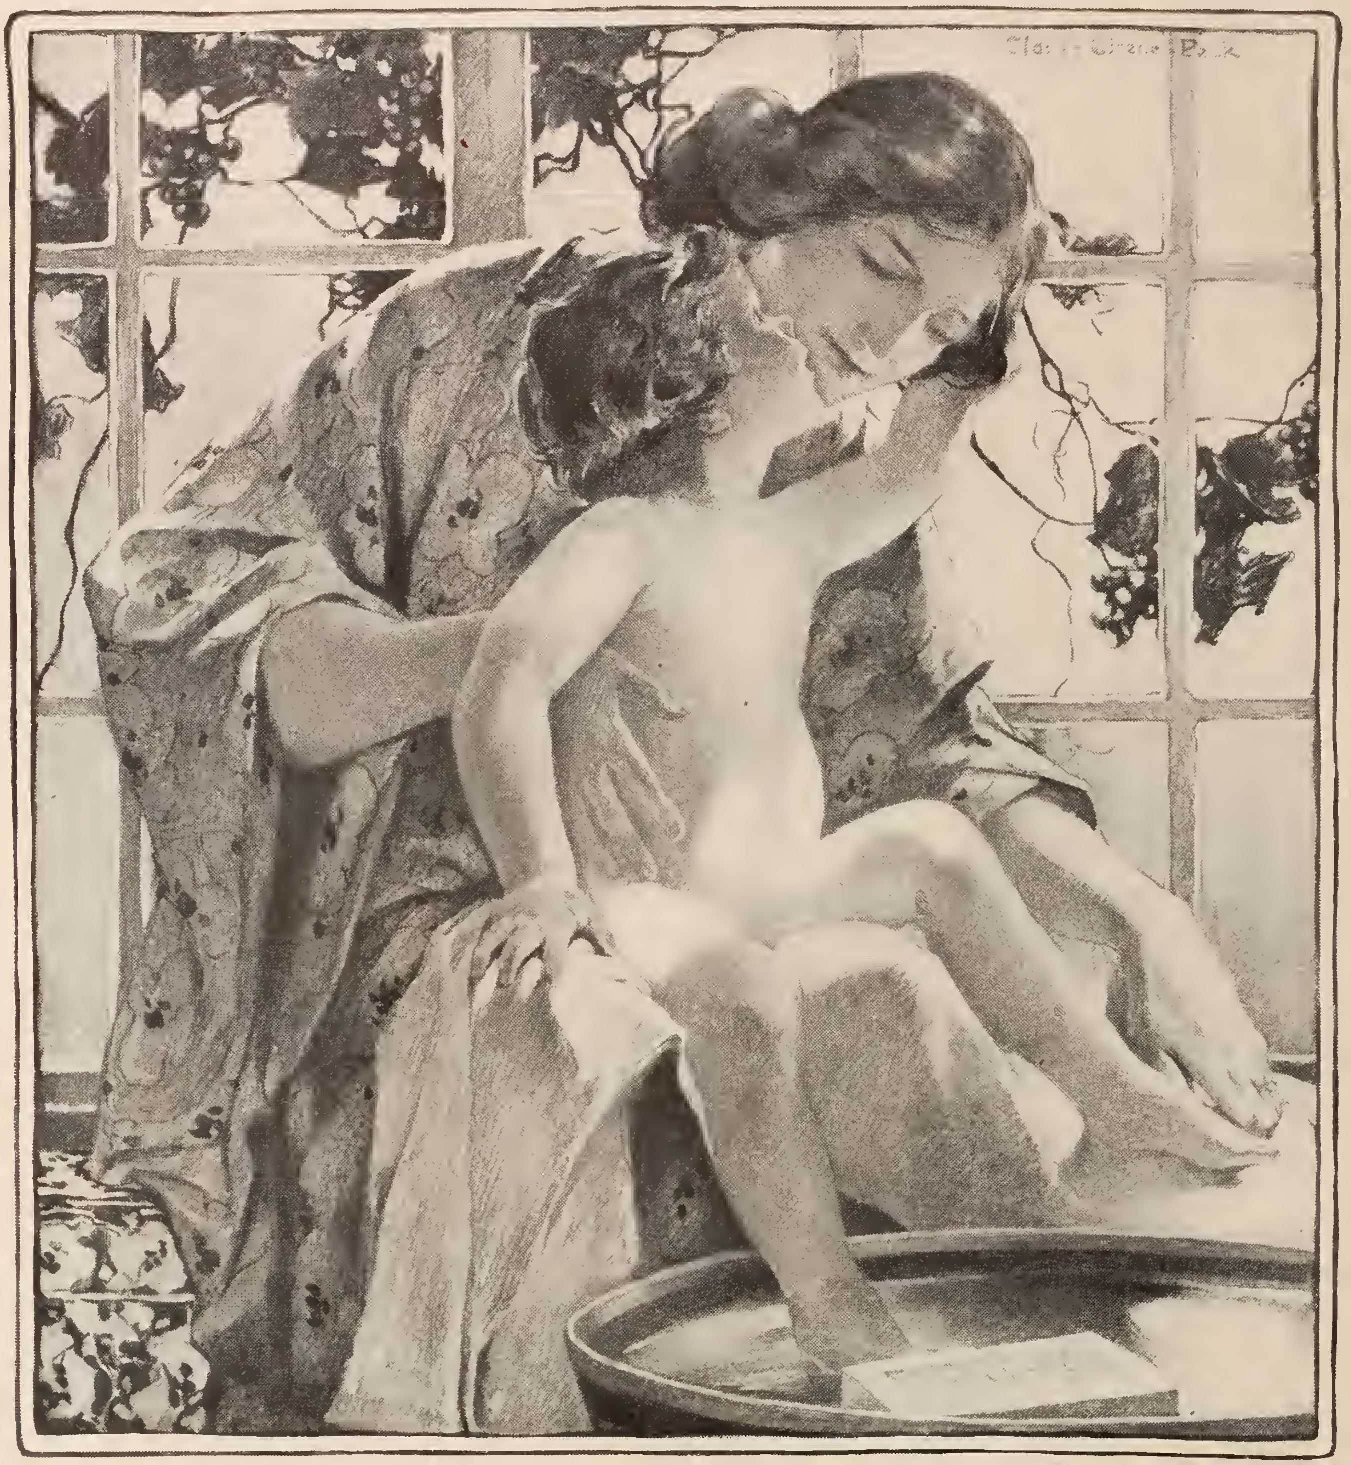
COPYRIGHT, 1916 BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
NEW YORK, JANUARY 5, 1916

VOL. 39 NO. 1. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



From the painting by Fritz Thaulow

A NORWEGIAN VILLAGE



COPYRIGHT 1916 BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO. CIN.

A FOND mother, a sunny morning, a cozy home, an eye-opening bath with the mild velvety Ivory Soap—and to baby's mind all the world seems bright and gay.

In the nursery, at least, Ivory Soap is something more than soap. It is, in addition, a distinct aid in keeping children happy and good-natured.

It feels so soft and smooth to the tender skin and it cleanses so gently without a sign of smart or burn that the daily bath becomes a pleasant diversion.

And, of course, not the least of its attractions to the busy little hands and the big wondering eyes is the fact that "It Floats".

IVORY SOAP . . . . . . 99$\frac{44}{100}$% PURE

IT FLOATS

Factories at Ivorydale, Ohio; Port Ivory, New York; Kansas City, Kansas; Hamilton, Canada.

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

An Illustrated News Weekly for the Home

Frank G. Carpenter

The New World of Alaska

Frank G. Carpenter Begins the Story of His Travels in Our Last Great Frontier

Copyright, 1916, by Frank G. Carpenter

I HAVE discovered a new world. It is the world of Alaska. It belongs to you and to me and is a part of Uncle Sam's big farm. We have had it about fifty years and have never realized the alth under our feet. The discovery, on my part, minds me of the Hindu who was devoured with great lust for diamonds. He lived on a small farm on the plateau of the Deccan. He sold his farm at he might hunt for these precious stones. He aveled all over the world and spent a lifetime in the arch. At last he returned home to learn that the amond mines of Golconda, the richest of the then orld, had been found on his own little farm. And , for almost a lifetime, I have traveled through reign lands seeking strange things to write about d I now find the strangest right here in my own untry and almost under my feet.

I went to Alaska last spring, shortly after the breakg up of the ice, and spent the whole summer and ll there, making photographs and gathering material r a series of letters of which this is the beginning. found the country full of new things; and stories live human interest came to me at every step. he territory was so different from what I had antici-ated, and withal so wild, that it made me feel like pioneer, and at times I imagined myself a Fernando Soto or a Columbus, rather than a plain newspaper an, gathering plain notes of travel for the plain ople.

A World in Itself

HAVE called Alaska a world. I wonder if you appreciate what a great world it is. The territory ntains more than one-sixth of all the land under the merican flag. It has so much that if it were all vided equally among the citizens of the United tates there would be eighteen acres for every family d leave some to spare. Alaska is almost three mes as big as Germany, France, Austria-Hungary, the Spanish peninsula. It is one-third larger than e Atlantic states from Maine to Florida; larger an all the territory north of Tennessee and east of e Mississippi River. If Alaska could be lifted up and ropped down upon the main body of our country, ith its eastern end touching the Atlantic Ocean at avannah, the westernmost end would be in the acific beyond Los Angeles. The territory begins ot far west of Los Angeles, and it extends Uncle am's dominions almost to Japan. When I was at ome, I was 3,000 miles west of San Francisco; and he mainland of Alaska is less than forty miles from Siberia at Bering Strait. The island of Attu, at the end of the Aleutian chain, is not far from Asia. From north to south Alaska reaches almost as far as from Canada to Mexico.

This mighty territory is a world in the variety of its lands and waters. It is a country of seas, lakes and rivers, and of almost as many islands as the empire of Japan. It has a vast continental mainland, with mountains and valleys, rolling plateaus and great owland plains. I traveled a thousand miles through rocky islands in going from Seattle to Skagway; and later passed through the Aleutian archipelago, which extends from the end of the Alaskan peninsula about as far westward as the distance from the Atlantic ocean to the Mississippi River. The island of Kodiak is as big as Porto Rico, and Prince of Wales Island is as large as Connecticut. All of these islands are green from one year's end to the other, and some have a vegetation as dense as that of Hawaii.

Washing Down the Hills for Gold Dust and Nuggets
Alaska Placer Mines Have Already Produced
$200,000,000 in Gold

I spent some time on our Coast Survey vessels which are now exploring the waters and dragging the channels for the terrible pinnacle rocks that rip open the hulls of the big ocean steamers. The officials tell me that the Alaskan coast line, with its windings, is longer than the girth of the world at the equator, and that it is for the most part uncharted. The Department of Commerce is building new ships for this work.

Wonderful Rivers

THE rivers of Alaska cover all parts of the territory, and their navigable waters reach thousands of miles. I traveled almost 2,000 miles on the Yukon. That river is the fifth among the great streams of the North American continent, and in the United States it is surpassed only by the Mississippi-Missouri. The Kuskokwim, which lies south of it, has just been opened by the Coast Survey vessels, and it is found that steamers can travel upon it into the heart of the country as far as from New York to Cleveland.

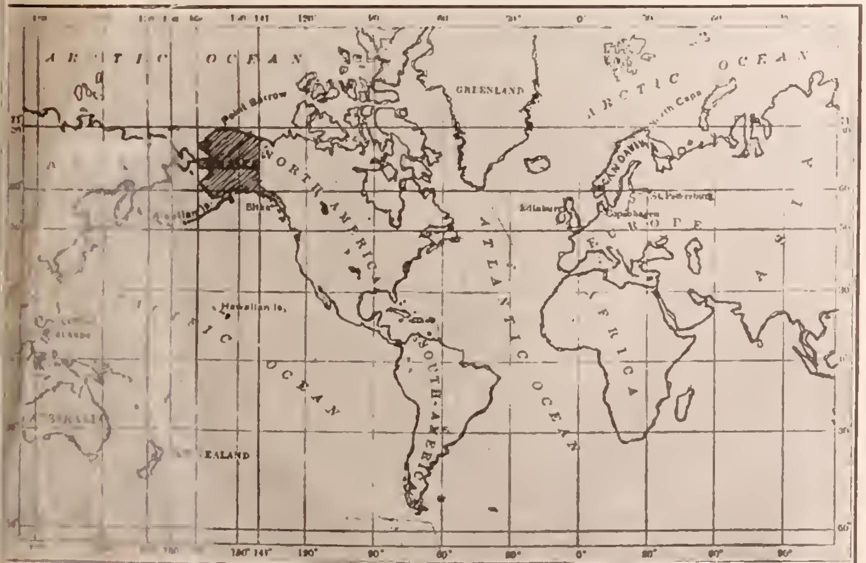
I spent two days steaming from the Yukon up the Tanana River from Fort Gibbon to Fairbanks. That river flows into the Yukon. It will be cut by the new railroad now building. It has a wide valley as long as from Philadelphia to Pittsburg.

And then there is the Porcupine, which enters the Yukon at the Arctic Circle. It is a big stream, and flows 500 miles down from the north. Dan Cadzo, who has a store on it just beyond the Canadian boundary, tells me he can go by stream all the way to his station.

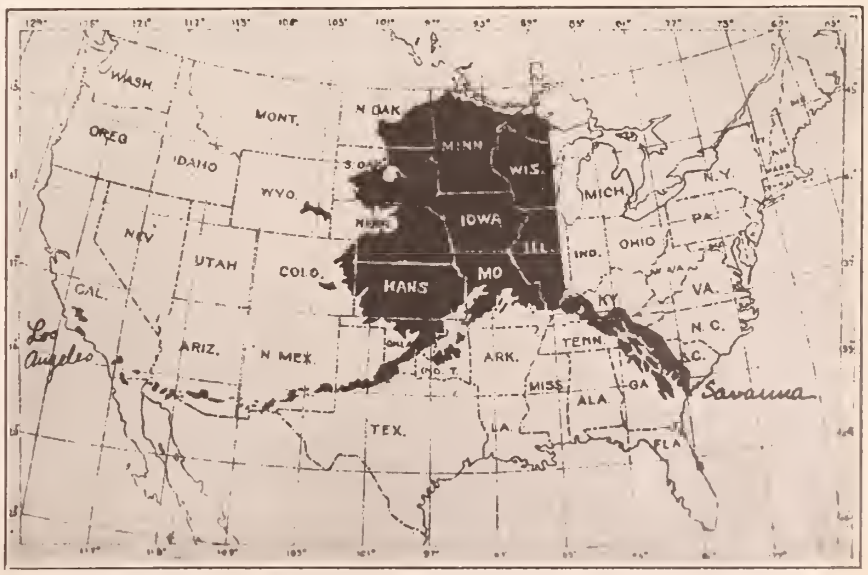
Into the lower Yukon empties the Innoka, up which you go to the Iditarod gold region, and from the north comes down the Koyukuk, whose sands are also gold-bearing. The latter stream is 600 miles long.

Have you ever heard of the River Kobuk? It flows into the Arctic Ocean at Kotzebue Sound. They are now washing gold from its sands, and Mr. Patterson, who has a trading station at its mouth, showed me the photograph of a gold nugget from there almost as big as my fist. The Colville is another great river that drains the far north.

The mainland of Alaska is practically unknown. It consists of a great central valley over 200 miles wide, with mighty ranges of mountains on the north and the south. These ranges correspond to those which uphold our Rocky Mountain plateau, but the central valley is much lower and it slopes gently down toward Bering Sea. The fall is less than a foot to the mile all the way from the Canadian boundary. The Yukon, which flows through it, is so sluggish that it builds up great islands, and on the Yukon flats, about two days' ride from the boundary of Canada,



Alaska in Same Latitude as Scandinavia and Many European Cities, and in Same Longitude as New Zealand and Hawaii



Showing Relative Size of Alaska. Our Northwestern Corner Is as Big as One-Fifth of the United States Proper the stream in places is twenty miles wide. At the lower end of the valley and along Bering sea there are coastal plains; and another great plain extends from the Arctic Ocean back a distance of perhaps 150 miles before the rugged highlands begin.

Our American Switzerland

AND then the mountains of Alaska! Before I investigated the country I thought it all mountains, and had no idea that there were millions on millions of acres of lowlands and high rolling plains. There are some places in Alaska where you can travel for miles without seeing a hill.

There are low tracts of vast extent far in the interior. The Yukon flats, which I crossed last summer, are in the heart of the country only 500 feet above the level of the sea.

Nevertheless, Alaska has the highest mountains on the North American continent. It has some of the greatest glacial fields upon earth, and scores of peaks never lose their perpetual snow. Mount McKinley, which kisses the sky at over 20,000 feet, is the tallest mountain north of the Isthmus of Panama, and it will be of easy access to tourists when the new railroad is finished. A little farther east is Mount St. Elias, which is 18,000 feet high, and about Mount Wrangell, in a territory not three-fourths as big as Massachusetts, there are ten snow-clad peaks twice as high as Mount Washington, and two which are higher than Mont Blanc. There are three mountains there of over 10,000 feet which have not yet been named. They belong to the Alaska range which runs around the whole southern coast and has a width here and there approximating eighty miles. The range has several low passes, and one of these, Broad pass, is only 2,700 feet above the sea. It is from six to eight miles in width and it forms an easy way for Uncle Sam's new railroad to get into the great central valley. It is over that pass the survey has been made.

Extending westward from the Alaska range, we have the Aleutian mountains, that run hundreds of miles through the Alaskan peninsula, and then, dropping down into the sea, form the Aleutian Islands, extending 1,200 miles farther. They are volcanic peaks, some of which are 6,000 feet high. The volcano of Katmai belongs to that chain.

North of the great plateau is the Rocky Mountain system. This is not so high as the mountains of the south, but in places the range is one hundred miles wide.

The Truth About Alaska's Climate

WE are apt to think of Alaska and the North Pole as synonymous. They remind us of nothing but glaciers or of mountains of ice and of perpetual snow. We have read of the terrible cold, where the thermometer falls to seventy degrees below zero; of the reindeer and dog teams flying over the snow and of the Cimmerian darkness of the long winter nights. The truth is, Alaska is a world in its climate, and the nights are so bright that they seem almost day. Only one-fourth of the country lies inside the Arctic circle and has weather that could be considered as arctic. Other parts of it are as temperate as Tennessee or Kentucky; and southeastern Alaska, a region larger than Maine, has a winter climate milder than that of Washington city. The greater Yukon valley, a land of rolling plains and plateaus, has winters like those of Montana and northern Dakota, and the summers of the whole territory are not far different from those of Ohio, Indiana and Virginia. In midsummer I found the whole land covered with a dense vegetation, and it seemed to me that you could drop any part of it down into the main body of the United States and at a slight distance away you would not recognize the change.

There is such crass ignorance concerning the climate of Alaska that I will say a little more about latitude. Take the city of Seward, which is to be the terminus of our new railroad. That town is no farther north than St. Petersburg, and it is not half so cold in the winter. Juneau, the capital of Alaska, is in about the same latitude as Edinburgh, the capital of Scotland, and Juneau, is, I venture, by far the warmer. The same is true of Sitka and Copenhagen. The whole Scandinavian peninsula is within the latitudes of Alaska, and some of the Aleutian Islands are farther south than Birmingham, Berlin, Dublin or Warsaw. Ketchikan and Moscow are on about the same parallel.

"I Stopped at All of Uncle Sam's Experimental Farms"

Untold Wealth in Mines

ALASKA is an unknown world as to its mineral resources. Only about one-fourth of the country has been explored by our geologists, and not one-hundredth of it has yet been touched by the foot of the prospector. Nevertheless, its placer mines have already brought in more than $200,000,000 worth of gold. Dr. A. H. Brooks of our Geological Survey estimates that there are several hundred million dollars' worth of gold dust and nuggets still in the gravel of the Seward peninsula. Fifty million dollars' worth had been taken out of that region up to 1908, and during my stay at Nome I saw them dredging and hydraulicking quantities of gold from the tundra.

Mt. McKinley will be of Easy Access when the New Railroad is Finished. Altitude, 20,300 feet Enormous dredges are now working at Dawson, and that region is still producing its millions of dollars a year. I spent some time on the gold dredges there, and shall tell you how they are turning over the icy gravel beds of the Klondike to a depth of from thirty to sixty feet.

A great future for Alaska will be found in its quartz mines. You have all heard of the Treadwell properties and of their product of lowgrade gold. Just opposite them, across the Gastineau channel, other mines are being opened that are already producing millions, and will be producing millions for a century to come. The gold regions of Ju promise to be second only to those of South A in their great gold production.

The copper deposits are unknown and un pected, although some have been opened which already producing millions of dollars per annum. coming back from Alaska I traveled on a stea which had $600,000 worth of copper concentrat its hold, and the manager of the mine from w they came told me his company would pay $6,000 in dividends this year. There are new copper m on an island not far from Seward, and copper is b mined at a profit on Prince of Wales Island, in so eastern Alaska.

As to the coal of the territory, the Matanuska fi are to be opened up by U Sam's new railroad. There is patch not far from the r which is said to have veins f feet thick, and to contain m million tons. Some of our g ogists have figured the amoun good coal in Alaska at 150,000, tons, and others say that country has enough coal to the human race more than years at the present rate consumption.

Uncle Sam's Big North Far

ALASKA is an unknown w as to its farming resour I stood on the hills near F banks and looked over a mill or so of acres of tillable soil in Tanana valley. The whole ritory is said to have 50,000, acres of possible farm lands, the Aleutian Islands will f thousands of cattle. Here there I visited the homestead and I stopped for some time all of Uncle Sam's experimen farms. Upon one of them grain which stood in the fie reached to the height of my he and I saw them growing oa barley and hay, and even alfalfa. I saw pot patches that were yielding four tons to the ac and one potato field which, I was told, had a c in the ground that will sell for $10,000.

Another surprise was the wild berries that gr all over Alaska, and another the wild flowers th make the sides of the hills and the lower slopes of t mountains blazes of color. I found plenty of gr everywhere and in places the weeds were as high my head. I saw fat stock on t homesteads of the Tanana vall and visited dairies which w supplying butter and milk to t towns and mining camps near The Aleutian Islands have a mate milder than Scotland, a on the island of Kodiak, which as big as Porto Rico, they now raising Galloway cattle a long-wooled sheep.

In connection with the far ing of Alaska I shall describe n industries which I have fou starting up here and there o the territory. I shall speak of t fox farms and show how fur-far ing will eventually be one of t great sources of our clothing. T climate of Alaska is just right f furs, and the hunter and trapp will eventually be displaced the fur farmer. Fox farms a already springing up here a there along the Yukon and oth rivers, and fox skins are shipp from there to the markets London.

Another great possibility of t future will be the raising of rei deer for the United States ma kets. I have visited the reinde herds and the slaughter-hous at Nome, where the deer are ev now being killed, to be sent cold storage to San Francisco a Seattle. The shipping of venis has already begun and the ti is not distant when fresh deer-meat from Alask will be sold in all of our cities, just as fresh Alask salmon and halibut are sold to-day.

But I have written enough to give you a peep the new world which Uncle Sam proposes to thro open by railroads. It takes the notes made on t ground and snapshots out in the open to give livi descriptions. These I hope to furnish in my le ters to come. They were written in Alaska a will be dated and published as they came from m pen.

Frank G. Carpenter.

NEXT week Mr. Carpenter's narrative begins with his arrival at the first port at which steamers call in entering Alaska, Ketchikan. He says: "I despair of giving you any idea of the beauties of this voyage"—the trip across Puget Sound and onward through straits and sounds and among islands, some of which have mountains more than a mile high. Nevertheless, he succeeds giving us a wonderfully vivid picture, and gets us started on the great inland journey with very intimate knowledge of Ketchikan itself, a busy place of surprising interest.

A Voice in the Wilderness

By GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL LUTZ

CHAPTER I

WITH a lurch the train came to a dead stop, and Margaret Earle, hastily gathering up her belongings, hurried down e aisle and got out into the night.

It occurred to her as she swung her avy suit case down the rather long ep to the ground, and then carefully ung herself after it, that it was strange at neither conductor, brakeman, nor rter had come to help her off the ain, when all three had taken the ouble to tell her that hers was the xt station. But she could hear ices ahead. Perhaps something was e matter with the engine, and they d forgotten her for the moment.

The ground was rough where she ood, and there seemed no sign of a atform. Didn't they have platforms this wild Western land, or was the ain so long that her car had stopped fore reaching it?

She strained her eyes into the darkss, and tried to make out things from e two or three specks of light that nced about like fireflies in the disnce. She could see moving figures mly, away up near the engine, and ch one evidently carried a lantern. e train was tremendously long. A dden feeling of isolation took possesn of her. Perhaps she ought not to ve got out until some one came to help r. Perhaps the train had not pulled to the station yet, and she ought to t back on and wait; and yet, if the in started before she found the conctor she might be carried on someere, and he justly blame her for a l.

There did not seem to be any build on that side of the track. It was obably on the other side, but she was anding too near the cars to see over. e tried to move back to look, but the ound sloped and she slipped and fell the cinders, bruising her knee and tting her wrist.

In sudden panic she arose. She uld get back into the train no matter at the consequences. They had no ht to put her out here away off from e station, at night, in a strange coun. If the train started before she uld find the conductor she would tell n that he must back it up again and her off. He certainly could not pect her to get out like this.

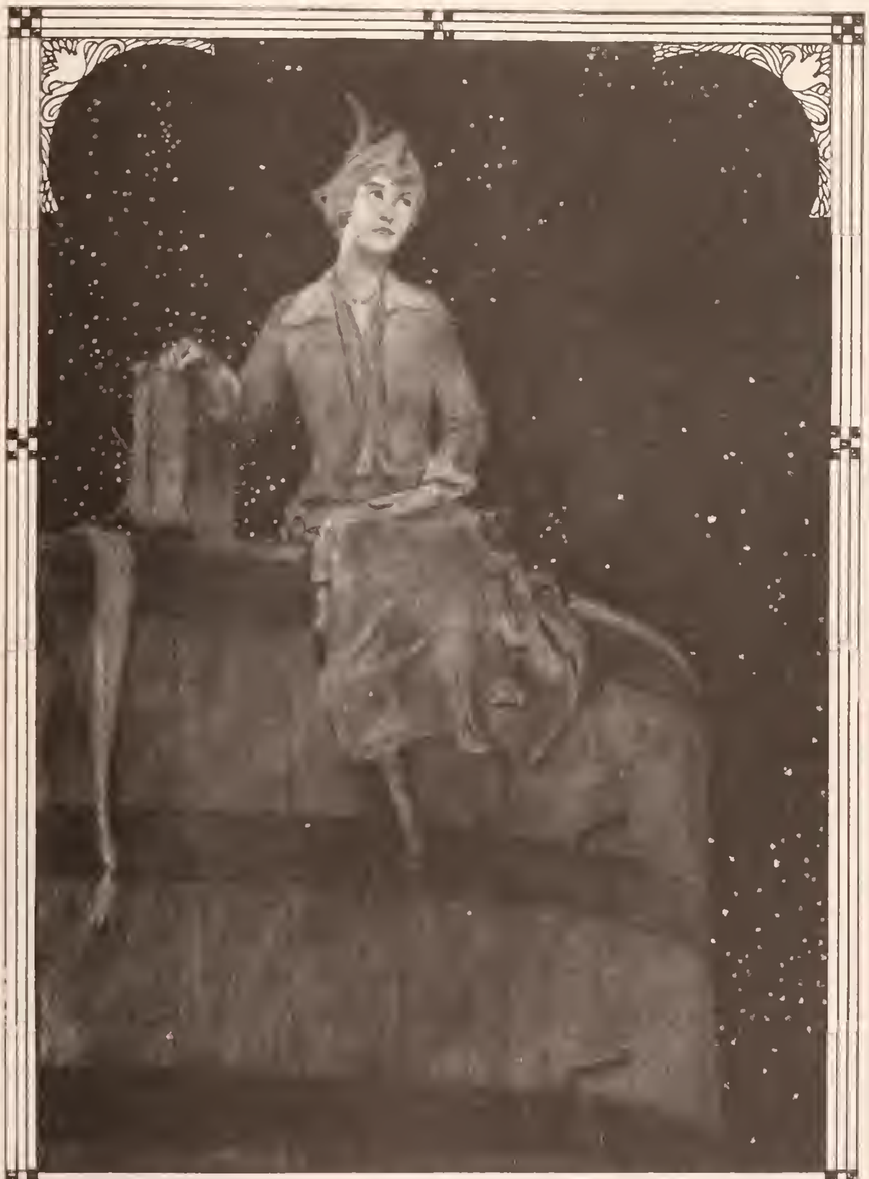
She lifted the heavy suit case up the gh step that was even farther from e ground than it had been when she me down because her fall had loosened me of the earth and caused it to slide ay from the track. Then, reaching to e rail of the step, she tried to pull rself up; but as she did so the engine ve a long snort and the whole train, if it were in league against her, lurched ward crazily, shaking off her hold. e slipped to her knees again, the suit se toppled from the lower step, dending upon her, and together they d and rolled down the short bank; ile the train, like an irresponsible rse who had slapped her charge and t it to its fate, ran giddily off into the ght.

The horror of being deserted helped e girl to rise in spite of bruises and ock. She lifted imploring hands to e unresponsive cars as they hurried her, one, two, three, with bright ndows, each showing a passenger, mfortable and safe inside, unconscious her need.

A moment of useless screaming, nning, trying to attract some one's ention; a sickening sense of terror d failure; and the last car slatted elf past with a mocking clatter as if it joyed her discomfort.

Margaret stood dazed, reaching out lpless hands; then dropped them at r sides and gazed after the fast reating train, the light on its last car inging tauntingly, blinking now and then with a leer in its eye, rapidly vanishing from her sight into the depth of the night.

She gasped and looked about her for the station that but a short moment before had been so real to her mind; and lo! on this side and on that there was none!



Drawing by Joseph Cummings Chase

"She had room enough to sit on the edge."

THE night was wide like a great door shut in by a low, vast dome of curving blue, set with the largest, most wonderful stars she had ever seen. Heavy shadows of purple-green, smoke-like, hovered over earth, darker and more intense than the unfathomable blue of the night sky. It seemed like the secret nesting-place of mysteries wherein no human foot might dare intrude. It was incredible that such could be but common sage-brush, sand and greasewood, wrapped about with the beauty of the lonely night.

No building broke the inky outlines of the plain, nor friendly light streamed out to cheer her heart. Not even a tree was in sight except on the far horizon, where a heavy line of deeper darkness might mean a forest. Nothing, absolutely nothing in the blue, deep starry dome above, and the bluer darkness of the earth below, save one sharp shaft ahead, like a black mast throwing out a dark arm across the track.

As soon as she sighted it she picked up her things and made her painful way toward it, for her knees and wrist were bruised and her baggage was heavy.

A soft drip, drip greeted her as she drew nearer; something splashing down among the cinders by the track. Then she saw the tall column with its arm outstretched, and looming darker among the sage brush the outlines of a water tank. It was so she recognized the engine's drinking-tank, and knew that she had mistaken a pause to water the engine for a regular stop at a station!

Her soul sank within her as she came up to the dripping water and laid her hand upon the dark upright as if in some way it could help her. She dropped her baggage and stood trembling, gazing around upon the beautiful lonely scene in horror; and then like a mirage against the distance there melted on her frightened eyes a vision of her father and mother sitting around the library lamp at home, as they sat every evening. They were probably reading and talking at this very minute, and trying not to miss her on this her first venture away from the home into the great world to teach. What would they say if they could see their beloved daughter, whom they had sheltered all these years, and let go forth so reluctantly now, in all her confidence of youth, bound by almost absurd promises to be careful and not run any risks!

Yet here she was, standing alone beside a water tank in the midst of an Arizona plain, no knowing how many miles from anywhere, at somewhere between nine and ten o'clock at night! It seemed incredible that it had really happened! Perhaps she was dreaming. A few moments before in the bright car surrounded by drowsy fellow travelers, almost at her journey's end as she supposed, and now, having merely done as she thought right, she was stranded here!

She rubbed her eyes and looked again up the track, half expecting to see the train come back for her. Surely, surely, the conductor or the porter who had been so kind would discover that she was gone, and do something about it. They couldn't leave her here alone on the prairie! It would be too dreadful!

That vision of her father and mother off against the purple-green distance, how it shook her! The lamp looked bright and cheerful, and she could see her father's head with its heavy white hair. He turned to look at her mother to tell her of something he read in the paper. They were sitting there feeling contented and almost happy about her, and she, their little girl—all her dignity as school teacher dropped from her like a garment now—she was standing in this empty space alone, with only a water tank to keep her from dying, and only the barren desolate track to connect her with the world of men and women. She dropped her head upon her breast and the tears came, sobbing, choking, raining down. Then off in the distance she heard a low, rising howl of some snarling angry beast, and she lifted her head and stood in trembling terror, clinging to the tank.

That sound was coyotes, or wolves, howling. She had read about them, but had not expected to experience them in such a situation. How confidently had she accepted the position which offered her the opening she had sought for the splendid career that she hoped was to follow! How fearless had she been! Coyotes, nor Indians, nor wild cow-boy students! Nothing had daunted her courage. Besides, she told her mother, it was very different going to a town from what it would be if she were a missionary going to the wilds. It was an important school she was to teach, where her Latin and German and mathematical achievements had won her the place above several other applicants, and where her well-known tact was expected to work wonders. But what were Latin and German and mathematics now? Could they show her how to climb a water tank? Would tact avail with a hungry wolf?

The howl in the distance seemed to come nearer. She cast frightened eyes to the unresponsive water tank looming high and dark above her. She must get up there somehow. It was not safe to stand here a minute. Besides, from that height she might be able to see farther and perhaps there would be a light somewhere and she might cry for help.

INVESTIGATION showed a set of rude spikes by which the trainmen were wont to climb up, and Margaret prepared to ascend them. She set her suit case dubiously down at the foot. Would it be safe to leave it there? She had read how coyotes carried off a hatchet from a camping party just to get the leather thong which was bound about the handle. She could not afford to lose her things. Yet how could she climb and carry that heavy burden with her? A sudden thought came.

Her simple traveling gown was finished with a silken girdle, soft and long, wound twice about her waist and falling in tasseled ends. Swiftly she untied it and knotted one end firmly to the handle of her suit case, tying the other end securely to her wrist. Then slowly, cautiously, with many a look upward, she began to climb. It seemed miles, though in reality it was but a short distance. The howling beasts in the dis-

Continued on page 28

The President's Wedding

WITH as little as possible of the atmosphere of officialdom, President Wilson was married on December 18 to Mrs. Edith Bolling Galt. Not only was the ceremony as private as such an event can be, but simplicity in arrangements prevailed and publicity was rigidly avoided. Preparations, including the day and hour of the wedding, were learned only with the utmost difficulty by representatives of the press, and it was apparent that Mr. Wilson wished his wedding to be considered as being entirely outside his official life.

The guests numbered about forty, all members of the immediate families or else particularly close friends either of the President or of Mrs. Galt. The marriage took place at 8.30 on the evening of Saturday, December 18, at the bride's home, 1308 Twentieth Street, N. W., Washington. As stated last week, Rev. Herbert Scott Smith officiated. Mr. Smith is rector of St. Margaret's Episcopal Church, where Mrs. Wilson will attend; the Rev. James H. Taylor, Pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church at Washington, where the President attends, assisted. The drawing-room of the bride's residence was beautifully decorated with orchids and American Beauty roses, and a floral bower was erected for the bridal party. The halls and the stairways of the house were also profusely decorated with flowers and ferns. There was no music, however, during the actual ceremony. Mrs. Bolling, widow of the late William H. Bolling of Virginia, gave her daughter in marriage to the President. An interesting feature of the arrangements was the placing of a mirror in such a manner as to reflect the features of the bridal party, so that the guests could witness what was taking place instead of gazing as usual upon the backs of the bride and groom.

Following the ceremony, a stringed orchestra gave a program of special selections during the supper and until the President and his bride left to spend their honeymoon at Hot Springs, Va. The wedding cake is said to have been in three tiers, but without ornamentation other than some pale-tinted orchids which were placed across it, and was cut by the bride.

The bride looked very stately and beautiful in a gown of black and chiffon velvet. The bodice, which was made almost entirely of blue metallic silver trimming, had long sleeves of tulle, and pointed cuffs of velvet. There was a high girdle of silver lace shrouded by a jacket of embroidered net. The em broidery was done in shades ranging from the deepes blue to the most delicate pastels. The dress was ope at the throat, but had a high lace collar in the back The only ornament that the bride wore was the Presi dent's gift, a brooch of pure white diamonds. Mrs Galt dispensed with the usual bridal bouquet and veil and wore instead a bouquet of lilies of the valley an a black velvet picture hat with a spray of feathers a the front. On leaving the house, Mrs. Galt did no change into a traveling dress. Instead she threw heavy fur coat trimmed with black velvet over he wedding gown.

The wedding gifts were very beautiful and include a large number of books, a set of rare English prints a large assortment of Tiffany glass, and fur rugs fron different parts of the United States; the differen ambassadors and diplomats, of course, sent handsom presents.

Mrs. Galt's house is a very modest, unassuming on just on the edge of the ultra-fashionable part of Wash ington. It seems fitting that its mistress, hersel a modest, sweet and unassuming woman, should g from it to preside in the Executive Mansion.

The War in Europe

THE last week has been a week of preparation rather than one of action. The complete success from the English standpoint of the recruiting efforts of the Earl of Derby has greatly heartened the British public. Parliament on December 21 increased the authorized numerical strength of the British army from three million to four million, and the first section of the new recruits, the unmarried men from eighteen to twenty-one, was called to the colors. The total number of recruits secured in the campaign of the Earl of Derby was given out as 2,500,000 men, which, it is expected, will make it unnecessary for Great Britain to resort to conscription, for the present at least. David Lloyd George in an address in the House of Commons on December 21 gave an account of his stewardship as Minister of Munitions. He announced that victory was practically in the hands of labor; the new munitions factories that are being created by his department would require 80,000 skilled men and from two to three hundred thousand unskilled men. Organized labor has so far shown what is considered in many quarters a very unpatriotic attitude, in demanding guarantees that conditions after the war will return at least to the basis that was standard before the war, and in blocking the use of unskilled labor at tasks normally performed by skilled labor, but not necessarily requiring skilled labor. London, Paris and Berlin have all been considering the raising of additional funds for war expenses.

Very little action of moment has occurred on the Western front, slight gains by the various combatants being counterbalanced by slight successes on the part of their opponents. There has been a marked increase in the intensity of artillery fire along the whole front and in Flanders, each side apparently being determined to prevent any massing of troops by the other. Meantime, reports indicate that Germany and England and France all are strengthening their lines, this strengthening being evidenced clearly in actions between December 20 and 22 over the much disputed ground on the summit of Hartmann's-Weilerkopf, which the French claimed to have captured from the Germans on December 21, taking 1,300 prisoners. German counter-attacks won back portions of the lost trenches, the Germans claiming to have regained the summit, although the French deny this while admitting the loss of some trenches. The German captures in these counter-attacks netted them more than 1,500 Frenchmen.

GENERAL SIR CHARLES MUNRO has been appointed to command the British first army, succeeding General Sir Douglas Haig, promoted to supreme command of the British in France and Flanders. The most significant event of the week on any of the fronts has been the practical abandonment by the British of the campaign in Gallipoli. One hundred thousand British troops were removed from the peninsula under the guns of the fleet, completely abandoning the positions at Suvla Bay and in the region known as Anzac, only the tip of the peninsula now being retained under the control of French and British troops. The British Admiralty stated that the withdrawal had been accomplished with insignificant casualties. The Turks, on the other hand, claim to have driven the British into the sea with considerable losses.

The Gallipoli campaign has been marked by tremendous fighting, with little advantage. The total of killed, wounded and missing among the British was nearly 113,000, of whom twenty-five thousand were killed. In addition more than eighty thousand men have been sent to the hospitals or invalided home. Success on Gallipoli would have meant a great gain to both Great Britain and her ally Russia, and would have blocked the course of Germany toward the east and Egypt. The destination to which the troops withdrawn from Gallipoli have been sent is not announced, although it is generally believed they have been used to strengthen the English defenses of Egypt and the Suez Canal, the reported objective of the Teutonic allies at the present time.

The British Mesopotamian expedition is still holding its position at Kut-el-Amara, though still meeting daily attacks by the Turks, the Turks claiming to be steadily drawing nearer the British position. A Constantinople dispatch of December 22 reported the sinking of two British monitors in the Tigris.

© Underwood & Underwood

Veteran Russian Troops on the March

The situation in the Balkans has not materially changed. Austrian troops have gained some ground and have taken a few prisoners in Montenegro. The Austrian and Bulgarian armies have driven the remnants of the Serbian army farther into Albania. Italy has been reported as sending a large army to Albania, but no reports of activity on the part of this army have yet been received. The British and French have been reinforcing their positions inside the Greek border north of Salonica, and have been busily fortifying the heights about the city in preparation for a vigorous resistance to the attack which the Germans, Austrians and Bulgarians are reported to be preparing. Greece has not yet consented to permit the Bulgarians to enter her territory but it is understood that Greek troops will not contest the advance of the Germans and Austrians.

GERMAN and Austrian lines a being reinforced, the railways d stroyed by the Allies and Serbs are bein repaired, and it was announced in th dispatches of December 23 that Gree had been notified that the attack o Salonica would begin on January 1 Since it is not usual for keen tacticia thus to announce their plans, it is pro able that January 15 is not the date f which the attack is scheduled.

Action on the Italian front has bee confined to artillery exchanges, an skirmishes between patrols.

The long front from the Gulf of Rig to Bessarabia has been unusually quie both sides apparently being prevent from making any active maneuvers the weather conditions. There h been some activity in Galicia, confin to patrols, and there have been attemp by small forces to make advances the lake district south of Dvinsk. T Russians claim they are making son progress in the Caucasus and in Pe sia. On December 21 the Russian fle was reported to have captured the Bu garian port of Varna and to have land infantry and artillery. The repo proved to be incorrect, the fact bei that two Russian gunboats had engag a small Bulgarian torpedo boat, a had followed it almost to the harb where they were driven off by the la batteries defending the city. The gre Russian army which had been report on the borders of Rumania at t Danube port of Rimi, has been report as leaving the Rumanian frontier. T report lent color to the reported atta on Varna. It is apparent that Russ has, for the present at least, given hope of crossing Rumania for an atta on Bulgaria.

◆

Relief Fund Report

Kensington Palace Gardens,
London, W., 6 December, 1915.

AS the chairman of the Lond Committee of the Christian Hera Relief Fund, I am desired by m colleagues to send a brief report, that your readers who have generous subscribed to the fund may see ho we in England have spent the mone entrusted to us.

The expense of administration extremely small.

The Duchess of Marlborough kind allows the committee to meet at h house. Mr. Gordon Selfridge, o honorary treasurer, provides us free with office accommodation for o secretary, Miss Patrick. The oth members of our committee are Ea Grey, formerly Governor-General Canada; the Rev. Dr. Dixon, of t

Continued on page 26

A Week in the World's News

MEXICO APPROACHES PEACE. President Wilson has appointed Henry Prather Fletcher as ambassador to Mexico. Mr. Fletcher has nde a very good record in the diplomatic rvice and goes to Mexico City from Chile. is presumed that the other nations on the estern Continent will also resume full plomatic relations with the new government. n December 20, representatives of the Car- nza government and representatives of the lla faction signed an agreement whereby the rranza government agreed to grant general nnesty to the leaders and followers of Villa. neral Villa may become a political refugee the United States. In return for the amnesty e Villa leaders were to turn over all the 'airs of the local governments still in their nds, and the Villa troops were to be em- oyed in the campaign soon to be inaugurated ainst the Zapatistas, who are now the only ganized rebels in Mexico. Villa has been sured safe refuge in the United States so long he behaves himself, but at last accounts had not availed himself of this provision. ie surrender of the Villa forces gives the rranza government practically undisputed ntrol of the whole of Mexico. The real hting now will be led by American doctors ainst the epidemic of typhus which is reatening Mexico City and other cities of the public.

THE PRINCETON LEAVES THE NAVY. he Navy Department, in response to a request m the Cuban government for a vessel suit- le for a training ship for naval cadets, has cided to sell to Cuba the small gunboat inceton, now undergoing repairs at the get Sound Yard. The Princeton is the rd of her name in the American navy and s launched in 1897

TO OPPOSE PREPAREDNESS. The Na- nal Anti-Militarism Committee has opened dquarters in Washington for a nation-wide ht against the "cult of preparedness." nong prominent members of the committee Rev. John Haynes Holmes and Rabbi phen S. Wise of New York City, and Mr. wis P. Lochner, private secretary to Henry rd.

WHERE THE GOLD IS. The United tes has more than one-fourth of all the ney gold of the world, the holdings of the easury on December 1 in bullion and coin ng $2,260,687,547, an increase of $370,- ,243 since July 1, 1914.

A TRIFLE AFTER ALL. The owners of Titanic have offered to pay $664,000 in tlement of all claims arising from the sinking the Titanic on April 15, 1912, when 1,500 sons were sacrificed on the altar of overcon- ence, carelessness and speed. The actual s by such a calamity cannot be computed. e claims filed aggregate two million and a lf of dollars and the offer means payment about twenty per cent., of which about 00,000 will come to American claimants.

CHILD LABOR BILL IN PERIL. It is ported from Washington that the bill intro- ced by Representative Keating of Colorado o weeks ago has not yet been referred to any nmittee, and that there is an active lobby the interests of the cotton mills of the South king to kill the bill by having it sent to a nmittee which would fail to report it.

NEARING'S MARTYRDOM NOT IN AIN. Following attacks by the friends of . Scott Nearing upon the policy of the Uni- sity of Pennsylvania in its relations with its truction force, the announcement has been de that in future, in accordance with an endment to the regulations recently adopt- no professor or assistant professor will be noved by the trustees until after consulta- n with the faculty. Members of the faculty ose terms of appointment are expiring will eive formal notice of the intention of the iversity to reengage them. Such summary ion as that which removed Dr. Nearing from faculty will not be repeated.

TO PROTECT THE NATIONAL AN- HEM. Some years ago the army and navy cted "The Star Spangled Banner" as the cial military anthem, making it thereby the ional anthem. At that time, military ers were issued forbidding the use of "The r Spangled Banner" in medleys or in con- tion with other airs or in any other way n separately, when it can be given proper ognition. When played separately, every dier and sailor and every citizen with a per regard for his country and his flag is pected to stand at attention until the play- is finished. This order has been supported state laws in some states and by city ordinances in some cities. The Sons of the American Revolution and other patriotic and civic organizations are now pressing such an ordinance in Baltimore.

© Underwood & Underwood

The Welland Canal, an International Link Threatened by War Zealots

NEW SUFFRAGE PRESIDENT. Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, who has served the suffrage cause faithfully for many years, has finally retired from the cares of office and has been succeeded as president of the National Woman Suffrage Association by Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt. Mrs. Catt has the unusual distinction of being the famous wife of an able and famous husband, Mr. Catt having been a leader among American engineers. His wife has been no less a leader in educational work, in charitable work, and in the cause of suffrage.

MOTON SUCCEEDS WASHINGTON. Major Robert R. Moton of Hampton Institute was the unanimous choice of the trustees of Tuskegee Institute for president to succeed Booker T. Washington. Major Moton was born in 1867 in Virginia and graduated from Hampton Institute in 1890. Immediately following his graduation, he accepted a position as drill master and assistant to the commandant of the cadets. Shortly afterward he became commandant, which position he held until his election to the presidency of Tuskegee. He was the right hand man of the president of Hampton and has held a position of leadership among men of his race second only to that of Dr. Washington.

COMMISSION GOVERNMENT IN CITIES. The commission form of government is now in effect in 81 of the 204 cities in the United States of more than 30,000 inhabitants. Civil service regulations govern the appointment of policemen in 122 cities, including all those of more than 300,000 inhabitants. Policewomen are employed in 26 cities. Municipal prohibition prevails in 15, state prohibition in 17, and county and parish prohibition in 3 of these cities. The city commissions range in size from three to seven members, the majority having five. Dayton, Ohio, has a commission of five members and a city manager appointed by the commission, who is responsible for the administrative work of the city. Of the 204 cities, 155 own their water supply system, the oldest municipally owned plant being that of Philadelphia, which dates from 1801.

AN UNOFFICIAL AMBASSADOR. Colonel E. M. House, private citizen and confidential adviser to President Wilson, is to go to Europe at the request of the President. He denies that his trip is in any way a peace mission, and says: "I am going to Europe at the request of the President and Secretary of State for the purpose of taking information to some of our ambassadors, in order that they may have a more intimate knowledge regarding certain phases of international questions now pending, and in order to obtain from them their point of view on these matters."

PARCEL POST OUTSIDE THE PALE. Answering protests regarding the seizure of parcel post packages in the Danish mails, the British government contends the parcel post is plain freight. It is not entitled to the protection given first-class mail under the International Postal Convention. It has been reported that considerable food was reaching Germany from neutral countries through the parcel post.

CANAL PARTLY OPEN. Announcement was made from Washington on December 22 that the Panama Canal was partly reopened. At the same time warning was issued to shipping interests against routing ships via the canal until a stable channel had been opened, the continuous movement of earth making it impossible at present to guarantee passage.

PROTECTING THE WELLAND CANAL. The Welland Canal, connecting the waters of Lakes Ontario and Erie, is one of the most important highways of commerce on the western hemisphere. It was first opened in 1829 and has been enlarged three times, its present width being one hundred feet, depth 14 feet, the locks being 200 feet long. This canal has made it possible for the wheat raisers and cattlemen of the western United States and Canada to ship their wheat and hides direct to Europe by way of the St. Lawrence River. The annual freight traffic through the canal has been approximately 1,500,000 tons. The canal is twenty-seven miles long and has twenty-six locks, making a rise of more than 326 feet. During the Spanish war two revenue cutters which had recently been launched on the Great Lakes were sent through the canal, in two sections each, put together again in Lake Erie, and did valuable work as scouts along the Atlantic coast. On December 17, the Chief of Police of the Hamburg American Line, New York, and a dealer in antiques, also of New York, were arrested by United States secret service men charged with plotting the destruction of the Welland Canal, the specific charge being the starting in the United States of a military enterprise against the Dominion of Canada. In connection with the charges that German subjects attempt to aid Germany by means in contravention of our laws, an official disavowal of all such efforts was wirelessed from Berlin by a staff correspondent of the New York Times on December 18. The last paragraph of the statement is as follows: "It [the Imperial German Government] can only say, and does most emphatically declare to Germans abroad, to German-American citizens of the United States, to the American people, all alike, that whoever is guilty of conduct tending to associate the German cause with lawlessless of thought, suggestion, or deed against life, property and order in the United States is in fact an enemy of that very cause, and a source of embarrassment to the German Government, notwithstanding anything he or they may believe to the contrary."

THE SECOND ANCONA NOTE. The second American note to Austria regarding the Ancona was made public December 22. While couched in courteous terms, the note is final in form and leaves no opening for discussion. This note is reported to have been well received in Vienna.

RESIGNS FROM THE NAVAL BOARD. Henry A. Wise Wood has resigned from the Naval Advisory Board because he deems the Administration program for preparedness to be dangerously weak, and wishes to be free to criticise it. Mr. Wood is chairman of the Conference Committee on preparedness which has been formed to unite the activities of the National Security League and other organizations interested in increased armament.

A CHALLENGE TO LEADERSHIP. Whether the Ford peace pilgrims are following a forlorn hope, or whether they are guided by a prescience above that of other men and are to be the forerunners of the peace that shall be, a cable from Louis Lochner, Mr. Ford's secretary, to the American people through the New York Evening Mail, carried a message and a quotation each of which is worth the consideration of thoughtful citizens. The message was, that the most disconcerting thing about their voyage was the fact that lurking behind them as a sinister background to their mission, were the signs of America following in the wake of Europe's horrible militaristic mistakes. The quotation was from a memorandum delivered at the Court of St. James by John Quincy Adams in 1817: "In regard to this system of competition among nations, the forces of destruction can only lead and must inevitably lead to war. I am therefore commissioned by the government of the United States to go to any length to which your majesty's government is ready to go in the direction of disarmament along the Canadian-American frontier." From that time the border between the United States and Canada has been free of armament. The telegram which Mr. Ford sent by wireless to the heads of the nations at war may yet become a classic in the annals of peace. Calling attention to the facts that he and his associates came to them in a time of trouble to be of help if possible, and that in every country love of country was impelling the sacrifice of tens of thousands of lives every day; that in effect each nation was fighting for its own existence, each people struggling for a like end, and that among such common ideals there must be a basis for a magnanimous and honorable peace, and stating that enough blood had been shed, enough agony endured in war which had proven a failure at solving the problem, the telegram closes with this appeal: "Let the armies stand still where they are. Then let the negotiations proceed so that the soldiers may be delivered from another bitter Winter in the trenches and sent back to their labors and their firesides. As there is no other way to end the war except by mediation and discussion, why waste one more precious human life?" The Ford delegation has been courteously received in Norway, but was informed officially that the Scandinavian governments can do nothing individually without consultation, and that they feel the time is not ripe for peace; interference is not wanted now and therefore Norway will give no recognition of the conference planned by the Ford party. The Swiss Federal Counsel has also taken action deferring the offer of its good offices to belligerents, feeling that this is not the proper time.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE $1.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

THAT GOOD PART

A SERMON

By

*REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

TEXT: Luke 10: 42. "But one thing is needful: and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her."

I DO not like many of the bold and obtrusive contrasts which have been built upon this vividly depicted and familiar scene. I think they have been unwise and unjustifiable contrasts, many of them bearing hardly upon Mary, and others of them bearing with equal hardship upon Martha. The contrasts have been too sharp and definite. We cannot separate the two characters like two sharply opposed and glaringly antagonistic colors. They are not like two strips of ribbon, one perfectly white and the other perfectly black; I think we should find that each ribbon shades off into a gray where they both become one. Let us be careful that in our exposition we are unjust to neither.

Take the first of these unwise contrasts. We are frequently told that the two women represent two diverse and almost contrary types of temperament. Martha is said to be the practical type, and Mary the contemplative and the dreamer. We are told it is not Martha's sphere to indulge in reverie, nor is it Mary's function to busy herself in the kitchen. Martha is the handy woman, ready to roll her sleeves up and cook a dinner or nurse a patient; ready to busy herself in dusting a room, and when she has finished to begin dusting it over again. You never find Martha dreaming!

On the other hand, there is Mary, poetic, sentimental, far-away, going to the noon-day prayer-meeting, reading devout little books, and moving about with her eyes in heaven! According to this theory we should never catch the modern Martha devouring "The Saints' Everlasting Rest," and we should never catch the modern Mary with a cookery book under her arm. Martha likes the crowd and the bustle, and is happiest when she is perspiring in practical labor; Mary is like "a star and dwells apart." Now I think this is a most unfair delineation, and it is Mary who is the greater sufferer in the contrast.

If this be a fair interpretation of the two women, then give me Martha to live with, for I fail to see "the good part" which wins for Mary the Master's commendation. So I reject this sharp contrast of the practical and contemplative, the busy doer and the eager dreamer, and I seek for the true explanation elsewhere.

NOR do I like that further contrast which has been made, by which Martha becomes the type of secular employment and Mary the type of the devout and holy calling. This interpretation makes work profane, and reserves the sphere of holiness for a separated and mystic communion. The "good part" is to get away from the common crowd and the common service. It was this theory that drove men and women away from the ordinary toil of the field and workshop, and led them to seek sanctity in the cloisters of the monastery and convent.

Cardinal Newman has a sermon on this very text, in which he gives "the good part" to the priest, the separated man who is withdrawn from the ordinary work of men. Men and women who are withdrawn from the ordinary means by which we earn our bread represent the typical Mary who won our Master's regard.

I utterly reject the interpretation! There is nothing more holy in lighting the candles at the altar than in lighting the lamps in the streets; nothing more sacred in distributing the bread at the communion table than in lovingly feeding our little ones at home. A priest has no more "the good part" than a peddler; nay, the peddler may be infinitely more distinguished by it than the priest. Cardinal Newman gives the good part to those who do no work in the ordinary sense of the word, to old people who cannot work, to little children who have not begun to work, and to priests who are withdrawn from common work altogether.

This is the Mary type, the folk who are withdrawn from the bustle and the stir of working life. I reject the interpretation. For if this were true, again I say, let me dwell with Martha, the nimble-handed helper, and not with Mary, who gives no finger to lift the crushing burden that weighs upon the weary and heavy-laden hearts of men.

NO, let us lay this down as a primary axiom in our interpretation; the good part is not the gracious prerogative of a few, something apart, of which the majority have been deprived. The Lord's good part is for everybody, for the minister in his study and the workman at his bench. There is no favored aristocracy in the Lord's kingdom.

With this axiom let me give another interpretation. Mary had chosen "the good part" because it included Martha's. A pound is better than a penny because it includes it. Mary both sat and served, she communed and labored, she had partnership with her Lord and ministry for her fellows. Where have we got our assumption that Mary was always sitting and reading and moping! There was no busier woman in all Bethany than Mary! Where have we got our impression that the devout are the indolent, and that the prayerful are the inactive? The mystics are not the loafers; they are the most practical of their kin The one who sits at the Master's feet does the most the running. To be a Mary is to include a Marth too. Yes, just because Mary sat she could run!

Dr. Johnson has told us that the two characterist marks of the saints are "vigor and efficiency." The are characterized by force, aiming at some definit and practical end. Saint Theresa was a mystic, dreamer, if you will, one who sat long at the Master feet; but she was a woman also of boundless activit speeding here and there, seeking the salvation an education of the race. And so it was with Mary. Sl was a busy woman, but her output was effectiv If you had seen Martha you would frequently hav said of her doings: "She would do more if she di less!" She was always on the move, but her mov ments were not effective. If she had sat a little mo with the Lord her running would have been mo fruitful. Mary never seemed so busy as Marth but every ounce of her energy told. In her doin she was not "cumbered"; that is to say she was n distracted, not anxious, not troubled. She moved wit the strength of quietness.

To use a very modern analogy, Mary moved like perfume. Mary knew when sitting would help tl running. She was never afraid of seeming to was time in order to save it. Martha was afraid of wasting time that there was a co stant leakage of her power. Mary knew th for all competent activity it was needful to at the Master's feet. And so Mary's pa included Martha's; she chose the good pa which shall not be taken away from her.

NOW, what is the lesson of all this? Sure we are taught that deep communi with the Lord is the secret of all effecti service of men. "Doing" is comparative easy, but "efficient doing" demands the Infinit Why, in the very instance before us Ma tha's doing might have been much better don There are signs of nervous waste about her, hot intensity, of irritableness and irritatio The woman is overwrought. The Lord hims describes her as distracted and "troubled." S bustles about her doing, and her very doing like the firing of an ill-directed and feeb handled gun. What does Martha need? S needs to sit down! Ay, but she must sit in t right place. "At Jesus' feet, to hear Word."

The busiest mother in this assembly will amazingly well for herself if she will withdra from the ardent demands of the domestic cir and have ten minutes with her Lord. "But have so many things to do!" I know all abo it, but you will do them better for the appare waste. Deep communion gives us the pow of fine action. It conveys to the soul a cal assurance of God. You come back to yo housework or to your day's work, whatever be, with a tremendous consciousness that y are in the presence of the Lord. That assuran clinches and consolidates the entire life. dismisses distractions and binds up the heart unity. The nerves are soothed and calmed a the soul is stilled.

And there is a still further advantage reap from this retirement into the presence of Go We get a truer sense of the proportion of thin When we are bustling about amid the manifo and clamant duties of the day, giving ourselv no time for thought, we are apt to lose t emphasis of things, and mountains beco valleys, and valleys are lifted up to the heig of mountains.

Now, quiet withdrawal from the bustli scene gives us the "quiet eye," and we see thin as they are. Shall I say that we get a bird's-e view of things? "They that wait upon t Lord shall renew their strength; they sh mount up with wings as eagles!" And fro those supreme heights they shall see life in holiness, part in relationship with part, a everything shall assume its just and prop shape and color. Do not let us, therefor regard the hour of communion as a wasted a wasteful season.

All the best workers in the Kingdom fi time to sit at Jesus' feet. We get our fighti power in the green pastures.

PRESS ON

By
Louis E. Orcutt

The year is gone; we hail the new
That on its record we may write a fairer tale
Than that to which we now subscribe.

Each day that's past of this old year
Could well have held as much of promise or of power
As this new day which now appears.

We paid scant heed to hours and days
That passed us in the swirling tide of hastening time:
Shall we blame Fate for things undone?

Fate is ourself. Good fortune waits
Upon our purposes, thoughts, efforts and desires.
They measure us. They mark our goal.

Now God, not Fate, rules all our life;
But rules it through our will alone. He waits,
He watches, He believes, He hopes,

He sends His spirit when defeat
Has all but crushed us, and we cry, "enough! enough!"
He bids us try, try once again.

We can refuse, we can accept.
The strength He offers we can use or spurn. If used
We rise again. Fate waits our choice.

Take courage then. Throw off the pall
Of past defeats, discouragements, of hopelessness.
Add strength to strength. His strength to ours.

Face the New Year; meet each new day
Strong in our faith in Him, strong in our will to do;
Press on, still on, and ever on.

Spend all we have, of heart, of mind
Withhold no talent, yield to no alluring rest.
Press on, believe, the crown is ours.

---

*Pastor, Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York.

Daily Meditation

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY

J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

The Odor of Fresh Hopes

SUNDAY, January 9. Rom. 8:24. "We are saved by hope." Who has not experienced the odor of a new hope? It is like the reviving scent of the bog-myrtle on a heavy and sultry day. It is like the opening of a window in a long-closed room, and the letting in of the fragrance of the garden, or the bracing breeze from the moor. A new hope is the gift of a vision to the sightless spirit. It is the unveiling of new roads to the beleagured soul. It is a way of escape.

There is no more helpful ministry in friendship than to be the inspirer of new hopes. And our day is filled with folks who need the inspiration. The night has fallen suddenly upon them, and they are unfamiliar with the darkness, and the light of their lamp is almost a spent beam. It may be a soldier's mother, or a soldier's widow, or a soldier's orphaned children: and for them life just now has no clear shining ahead. Have we any oil for their lamps? Can we bring the breath of God to their fainting hearts? Have we no gospel of redeeming and uplifting grace? Cannot we bring the wonderful assurance of a radiant Presence, of an intimate Companionship, which takes the chill out of the night, and makes the soul feel that the lonely road is peopled with heavenly company? Cannot we so minister of the grace of Jesus Christ that the depressed and weary heart shall wonderingly say, "Some one hath touched me!"

Sometimes we can restore a hope by recalling a memory. It seems it was when Abraham got back to the old altar at Bethel that he recovered the hope he had lost in Egypt. Cannot we lead people back to early altars? Cannot we be the King's remembrancers, reminding sorrowing folk of forgotten mercies, recalling old triumphs, former conquests of grace? Cannot we remind them how the good Shepherd in other days led them "through the thirsty desert or the dewy meads"? And memory will re-kindle hope, and the light of tomorrow will shine even more brightly than the light of the past.

J. H. J.

The Well That Satisfies the Soul's Thirst

MONDAY, January 10. Isa. 55:1-9. "Ho, every one that thirsteth!" There are things which money cannot buy. It is absurd to bring gold or silver or any such equivalent for them, for they are without price. They therefore elude the rich, who have acquired the habit of supposing that money is the only medium of exchange, and who find it hard to think of wealth other than that which passes current in the market; whilst they are within the reach of those who have no money, but who are sorely athirst.

It is highly necessary that God should call the attention of the Jewish people to these unpurchasable possessions. Their life in Babylon had become so luxurious that there was danger of their losing sight of the great facts of the spiritual world. It was needful for them to be reminded that the immortal thirst of the soul cannot be quenched by waters whose source is the depth of the earth, though the wells be deep as Sychar's; and that its hunger cannot be satisfied with the provision beneath which the tables of a Dives groan. True satisfaction—that which is really bread, the fatness that delights the soul—can only be obtained where the coins of this world do not pass current; in fellowship with Him whose voice is ever speaking in the marts of commerce, saying, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye! Hearken unto me! buy wine and milk! eat ye that which is good!" These gifts of the spiritual world by which the soul lives are given in covenant. Each man must enter for himself into covenant relationship with God. Yet in the deepest sense, the covenant has been already made on the behalf of all faithful souls, by their Representative, who here looms out, amid the mists of the dim past, in the unmistakable glory of the Son of Man.

F. B. M.

Helping Others to Think

TUESDAY, January 11. Matt. 16:15. "He saith unto them, But who say ye that I am?" Jesus made men think by asking them questions. He tried to arouse the mind to consider for itself the great ideas of Christianity. Read the Gospels and count the questions of the Great Teacher; it will be illuminating as to the divine method of making religion real.

Is it not true that we often talk too much about religion and have too little thought about getting others to think? Many a Bible class has to listen to too much talk. Many a pulpit is a crutch upon which parishioners lean with all their weight, when it should be a suggestive line of thought-provoking questions to stir the people's minds to work out for themselves their religious faith. A young man in one of my Bible classes told me that the only point he remembered in the class hour was the point he made himself.

Sir William Robertson Nicoll has given a fine definition of a real instructor: "The teacher who first calls the mind from its slumber and sets it to work and to love work, he is the true teacher." Socrates went about the streets of Athens asking questions. It was the Master's method, raising questions which he frequently did not answer, making the questioner think for himself and become convinced through his own effort.

The modern Christian needs to think out his reasons for being a Christian. It is not an age of arch skepticism. Ingersoll with his wholesale ridicule of the Bible would not be popular today; yet many a person is uncertain as to the essential and central truth of modern Christianity. If a man from a pagan community should come to you and ask: "What is Christianity?" could you tell him?

C. S. C.

The Saviour's "Cup" of Anguish

WEDNESDAY, January 12. John 18:11-24. "The cup which the Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" The "cup" evidently referred to all the anguish caused to his holy nature in being numbered among the transgressors, and having to bear the sin of the world. Whether it was the anguish of the body, beneath which he feared he would succumb, as some think; or the dread of being made a sin-offering, a scapegoat laden with sin, as others; or the chill of the approaching eclipse, which extorted the cry of the forsakenness, as seems the more likely—it is not pertinent to our present consideration. It is enough to know that, whilst there was much that cried, "Back!" there was more that cried, "On!" and that he chose, from the profoundest depths of his nature, to do the Father's will, to execute his part in the compact into which they had entered before the worlds were made.

But here we note to all appearances the cup was mingled, prepared, and presented by the malignity and hate of man. Had we been left to our unaided reasonings, we might have supposed that the most bitter ingredients of his cup had been supplied by the ingratitude of his own, the implacable rancor of the priests, and the treachery of Judas; but, see! he recognizes none but the Father; it is always the cup which the Father had given. There have been times in our lives when we have been tempted to distinguish between God's appointments and permissions, and to speak of the former as being manifestly his will for us, whilst we suspended our judgment about the latter, and questioned if we were authorized in accounting them as being equally from heaven. But such distinctions are fatal to peace. What God permits is as equally his will as what he appoints. Look up into his face, and say, "My Father, this is thy will for me; thine angels would have delivered me, had it been best. But since they have not interposed, I read thy choice for thy child, and I am satisfied. It is sweet to drink the cup which thy hands have prepared." F. B. M.

Personality and the Bible

THURSDAY, January 13. Matt. 8:19. "Teacher, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest." The Scribe who spoke thus to Jesus voiced a deeper truth than he may have realized; it was the fact of the attraction of personality, which is frequently more impressive than the words of teaching. The Master taught by what he was, quite as much as by what he said. Christian personality is one of the highest means of Bible teaching.

An old lady in Dr. McCheyne's church said she had rather see Dr. McCheyne walk from the door of the church into the pulpit than hear any other man preach a sermon. Some one has said that Christians are "the only Bibles most men read." The great hope of getting religion popular is in its incarnation in average human lives. Men must be reminded of high and pure things when they talk with us; reality and the charm of faith must shine in our faces and follow the glance of our eyes, if Christianity is to affect our unreligious friends. Goodness is contagious as well as evil. It is my candid belief that the majority of people are looking for spiritual aid: they are hungry for the real bread of life, which is more than meat for the body. We can feed them by being sincerely what we talk about in prayer-meeting—"living epistles known and read of all men." Character is caught as well as taught.

When George Peabody was an old man, he was sitting in his office one day in London, and a boy entered carrying a Bible. Looking up the old man said: "My boy, you carry that book easily in your youth, but when you are as old as I am it must carry you." The Bible carries us by being wrought into us, by becoming a part of us, lodged in our thought and associated with our daily acts. Every Christian is a Bible teacher, whether he is conscious of it or not.

C. S. C.

The Bible the Christian's Treasure-House

FRIDAY, January 14. II Tim. 3:1-17. "Furnished completely unto every good work." It is related of Daniel Webster that on one occasion, when seated in his drawing-room, he laid his hand on a copy of the Scriptures, and said with great emphasis, "This is the Book! I have read through the Bible many times. I now make it a practice to go through it once a year. It is the Book of all others for lawyers as well as divines; and I pity the man who cannot find in it a rich supply of thought, and of rules for his conduct. It fits a man for life, it prepares him for death. My brother knew the importance of Bible truths. The Bible led him to prayer, and prayer was his communion with God. On the day he died, he was engaged in an important cause in the courts. But this, important as it was, did not keep him from his duty to God. He found time for prayer; for on his desk, which he had just left, was found a prayer written by him that day, which for fervent piety, devotedness, and humility, was never excelled."

The great orator and statesman went on to say: "If ministers of religion would return to the simplicity of the Gospel, and preach more to individuals and less to the crowd, there would not be so much complaint of the decline of religion; but many of the ministers of the present day take their text from St. Paul and preach from the newspapers. When they do so, I prefer to enjoy my own thoughts rather than listen."

F. B. M.

We Must Die That We May Live

SATURDAY, January 15. John 12:24. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." There is life in the center of the grain that must be liberated by the death of the body that envelops it, in order to its fruitage and beauty. Death is ever the way to grander life. What cannot die, cannot live. Mountains and rocks do not die, for they have no life. Trees shed their body of leaves for a new and more beautiful resurrection. Wild fruits die for richer qualities in development; flowers fall for a brighter blooming. Grains perish for a more abundant harvest. God's children lay aside the ripened husk of the body for the harvest home of the soul.

Death should be to us a lovely transition, a beautiful unfolding, a glorious departure, an eternal resurrection life. Christ knew his death would be the way to the world's life. What was to his disciples a terrible grief, became to after generations a great joy. He put on the bodily life, that he might illuminate death's dark valley and show mankind the beauty of the glorified body and the emancipated soul.

Death, then, is the way to holier life—a step upward into the holier and higher. Men may make their failures ladders to the summits of greatness, or graves of gloom. As Browning says,

> "We fall to rise, sleep to wake,
> Are baffled to fight better."

E. W. C.

Our Editorial Forum

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

For 1916

SOME people complain that they do not have a chance. They would do great things if they only had an opportunity. They say their resources are too limited; their influence too restricted; their field of action too small. So they look at the big, big world, and think of its great needs, and mourn over its great sorrows, and dream of the great things they would do if they only "had the chance."

Now the Christian Herald comes to say: "We will give you the chance. We will make your life big. We will make your opportunity great. We will open a channel for your hopes, your dreams, your prayers, your consecration so that they may bear fruit throughout the world."

Look again at the striking diagram on page 1334, in last week's issue of the Christian Herald. From the portico of the Bible House at New York the Christian Herald is sending out lines of helpfulness into all the world. But who are really sending forth these streams of help? You think perhaps of the editors, busy at their desks, writing and gathering material for the paper; you think of the business officers, carefully managing the details of the organization; you think of the employees helping to make and to send the paper. But after all, the Christian Herald means not the editors and officers, but you; the real home of the Christian Herald is not the Bible House, but your house, where you work, and wish and dream and pray; the real power of the Christian Herald for good is not so much its staff as it is you—you who may have thought your life was counting for so little.

First of all, you can join your prayers with ours. When a number of people wish anything, and wish it hard enough, and put their wishes into the form of a prayer to the Almighty, that thing is sure to come to pass. We are all wishing for peace; we are all wishing for the triumph of the gospel; we are all wishing for the uplift and comfort and betterment of the peoples of the world. As we wish together and pray together and work together we shall, by God's great grace, make our wish come true.

The science of prayer can never be adequately written; the mystery of prayer can never be adequately explained. But the history of great movements for God shows that prayer has had a large part in their accomplishment. And who knows whose shall be the greater share when the final rewards are made—those who went forth to do the work, or those who stayed behind to pray? So you, in your home, in your room, at your church, can have a definite, positive, personal part in helping the Christian Herald do its world-wide work.

But you can help not only by prayer. You can help by giving. Often it is not the biggest gifts that count for most. When the statements of gifts are printed and read, often the sight of many small gifts, that come evidently at the cost of real sacrifice, stimulate one who is better able to give more. Giving promotes giving. By the very volume of the stream of benevolence, by the great numbers of souls inspired and engaged in the work of charity, the work itself grows faster and larger in magic ratio. So you will give this year to spread by means of the Christian Herald the grace and love of God throughout the world.

And you can help by getting others to help. When a fund is to be raised, or a work to be done, or a principle to be proclaimed, you will not only do all you can yourself, but you will go and talk with others about it and ask them to help, too. Thus your gift and your influence are multiplied enormously and immediately. Do not be afraid to talk with your friends about these great enterprises that the Christian Herald has under way. You will be surprised to find how many you can enlist and how your influence will thus be magnified.

Coming down to a very prosaic and matter-of-fact detail, you can get others to help the work of the Christian Herald by getting them to become subscribers to the paper. Every new subscriber adds new vitality, new power to the Christian Herald's work. The paper has grown in little more than thirty years from twenty-odd thousand to three hundred thousand. How has that been done? Chiefly by one subscriber and another and another saying to his friend: "Won't you let the Christian Herald come every week to your home, too? Won't you help the work the paper is trying to do?"

Who is going to help now? Who is going to help us help make 1916 the best year the world has ever seen? Nineteen fifteen seems in some respects to have been the worst year the world has known. Nineteen sixteen may be the best. If it is to be the best, if peace is to come again, and newer and stronger foundations than ever before are to be laid for righteousness and brotherhood, it is the gospel of Christ, spread by the followers of Christ, that will bring these things to pass.

The church must be aroused.

The ministry must be stimulated and encouraged.

Christian workers everywhere must be helped.

The truth must be announced.

The minds of men must be turned toward God.

The bounty of Christ's people must be shared with the needy throughout the world.

The institutions and customs and systems that make for wrong and hatred and injustice and oppression must be torn down and the foundations of a new civilization, built upon the words and the work of Jesus, must be laid.

Never before have the followers of Christ had so great an opportunity as nineteen sixteen brings.

The Christian Herald wants to help.

Will you help us help the world?

"Through Gates of Pearl"

THERE are some natures so highly spiritualized and so exquisitely attuned that they seem to be gifted with power to penetrate the veil that divides the world of sense from the life beyond. In periods of protracted invalidism, when the hold on life is but feeble, there are times when the sensitive spirit would seem to be almost freed from earthly trammels, and to be led afar beyond material boundaries into the unknown. This state of trance—or vision—has been experienced by some who have recorded their impressions afterward. Such books as "Beyond the Gates," "The Life Beyond," "Intra Muros" and others are of this class. Swedenborg, too, had his visions. All of these have made a deep impression upon the minds of thoughtful readers throughout the Christian world.

We have acquired the manuscript of a remarkable work of this character, entitled "Through Gates of Pearl," which we are to publish serially commencing in next week's issue. The author is Miss Augusta Albertson, a Christian lady of rare culture, who was compelled to abandon an artistic career because of protracted ill health. Meanwhile, during intervals of comparative strength—which, however, have been brief and precarious—she has devoted herself to Christian work in home mission fields. In retirement at her home in southern California, she had written much but published little. Essentially a mystic in her own Christian experience, she has sought to add her influence to the movement for the deepening of the spiritual life of the church. The manuscript of "Through Gates of Pearl" has been read by more than a score of persons of discernment and spirituality, who have been much impressed by the reverence and sanity of its treatment of delicate sacred themes. They have been reminded of Paul's utterance in speaking of his vision: "Whether in the body or out of the body, I know not." And they have urged that this remarkable record of spiritual experience be made known to a larger circle through the pages of the Christian Herald.

Purporting to be only a vision or series of visions, "Through Gates of Pearl" contains a world of suggestion for those who, in thinking about the world to come, often ask: "What must it be to be there?" We believe it will be read with universal appreciation.

Has Preparedness Failed ?

THERE are evidences on every hand that the consciousness of the nation has at last been fully awakened to the great danger that threatens from the scheme to turn over the government to the war-crazed militarists. Platform, pulpit, press and congressional forum are alike opposing the extravagant demands of the advocates of preparedness. Since the curtain was lifted on the plot to hand over the control of the country to a military caste, and impose an intolerable burden of taxation on the people for the benefit of a few, public opinion has undergone a marked change.

Saber-rattling is no new experience here. In the past it has usually been regarded as the frenzy of a few untamable disturbers, who were incapable of real harm; but now that it has been attempted on a scale so large as to be preposterous, it is a development only to be met by firm measures. Our people are not to be stampeded into big armaments by any wild alarmist scheme, however cleverly concocted and insistently urged. Their eyes are now wide open. They have seen what the drain of armaments has done for Europe. They have seen what a colossal failure preparedness has proved as a barrier to war, wherever it has been adopted. They have seen that inordinate military power and sea-power have everywhere been productive of costly wars, instead of protecting against war. And now, with clearer sight than ever before, they see the dark shadow of the world-wide War Trust brooding over our own peaceful land, and the horde of war harpies in its train ready to coin dividends out of death here as they are doing abroad.

One of the keenest observers, Professor Theodore S. Woolsey, voices the general feeling in a powerful article on "Sanity in Preparedness," in which he asks point blank the questions: Against whom are we to prepare? If for defense, against whom are we to defend ourselves? And if we strengthen our army and navy, will not our weaker neighbors arm against us in turn? There is widespread suspicion, he declares, that the present expenditure of our army and navy is neither wise nor economical. Before venturing on a vast increase in expenditure, our government should do the best with what it has and thus earn public confidence, before seeking a large increase in this kind of expenditure, unless the danger from which the country is to be protected is imminent.

Therein lies the gist of the whole situation. There is no danger, imminent or impending, on the horizon. This the President has repeatedly stated. Professor Woolsey punctures the militaristic gasbag, when he adds that neither Germany, in spite of her reported desire for Southern Brazil, nor Japan, even if she valued the Philippines at the cost of war with the United States, could finance a war with us for at least a decade after the conclusion of the present hostilities. He urges Congress to go slowly. The people take a similar view of the situation and are looking to our senators and representatives to give the finishing stroke to the frightfulness bugaboo, through which the militarist organizations, the munition manufacturers and a few capitalists planned to scare the country into creating a huge billion-dollar army and navy, all under the guise of patriotism, while the taxpayers were to foot the bills.

The Grace of Charity

WE of today, who think so highly of ou civilization and our philanthropy, migh still do well to sit at the feet of the ancient and learn of them not merely wisdom an philosophy, but also how to invest hospitality and a few other virtues with adorning graces. It was a ancient custom in prosperous Oriental homes never t sit down to a meal without having a poor stranger a the table, not as a menial, but a guest. Thus charit was robbed of its harshness, and the visitor was mad to feel that he was welcomed on a footing of socia equality with the household. There is surely a lesso in this for those who, when they toss a coin or give meal to some one who has missed the road to fortune do it with the air of one who is so conscious of superiority that the act loses much of its virtue. In th truest sense, charity should be viewed as a privileg and an opportunity. If we give with the heart, th lips will utter no ungracious word that might wounc All that we own is given us that we might make th best use of it for God's glory and the elevation, not th humiliation, of our fellow man.

Let us do our benevolences, then, graciously, so tha the hand with which we help may not hurt. "I regar my charities as the best of all my investments," said Christian business man to the writer. "I give wha the good Lord gave me to give, and I feel that I a only paying him back that which he entrusted to m for this purpose." That was the true sense of stewarc ship. There are multitudes of God's people who rea ize in their own experience the blessing that comes t the liberal heart, and who know well how to interpre the old couplet:

"What I gave, I had;
What I kept, I lost."

So, whether you help the sick poor in their homes, th hungry wayfarer at your door, or the unemployed an destitute men of the Bowery Mission Bread Line, le your gift like your prayers be from the heart and witl out ostentation, and it will yield you dividends suc as the world cannot give.

◆

Some preachers need their chairs upholstered, I am tol
More often than they need to have their shoes half-sole

. . .

The saintly man who does his prayerful best
Does what he can and trusts God for the rest.

The Bible and Newspaper

CONDUCTED BY

FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Flower Blooming in Snow

THERE is a beautiful flower miscalled the Christmas rose. It has five large beautiful white petals resembling in structure t wild rose. It is not a rose, but be- gs to the botanical family Helleborus. e plant grows to a height of eight ten inches, and its blossoms, someies three inches in diameter, come through the snow to adorn it with auty. Its roots yield a valuable dicine, and a powder that kills insects ich destroy plants. This nt, living and blooming beauty above the snow of nter and providing death the enemies of life, is the pe of the One "Who hath olished death and hath ught life and immortality light through the gospel." im. 1: 10.)

normous Life Insurance

HAT the assets of American life insurance comnies have doubled in the st ten years, and now exed $4,935,000,000, of which er $654,000,000 have been aned to farmers, is the atement made at the ninth nual meeting of the Assoation of Life Insurance residents held recently. ver 37 per cent. of the farm ortgages in this country e held by the life insurance mpanies, and the average te of interest is 5.55 per nt. These insurance assets nearly five billion dollars e within ten million dollars f the total savings bank deosits of the country. Earthly ortality preached by the assing years is the basis of fe insurance. A company hat could guarantee against hysical death would get ost of the money of the orld poured into its treasury. here is a safe insurance for he soul, the guarantee that t will pass through the river f death into a life of love hat never shall end, for, 'this is life eternal, that they hould know thee, the only rue God, and Jesus Christ, hom thou hast sent." (John 7: 3.)

One Way That Toronto, Canada, Helps Its Tubercular Children

WHEN Professor Koch announced in 1890 that he had found a cure for tuberculosis, the whole world rejoiced at the announcement. The remedy was a forty to fifty per cent. glycerine solution of a pure cultivation of the tubercle bacillus, which fluid was called Tuberculinum Kochii. Great disappointment followed the failure of the remedy to do what was promised for it, and up to this time medical science has not found anything for the prevention and cure of tuberculosis like God's sunlight and fresh air. They are the strongest enemies of the deadly bacillus. This is the most important medical question of the nation. In 1904, a National Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis was organized, now numbering hundreds of branches and thousands of members, and hundreds of thousands of dollars are spent in spreading information, sounding warnings, and improving conditions. "Tuberculosis week" has recently been observed, and yet the slaughter goes on. There are people in every community who are in the incipient state of this disease and may be cured. Some are poor and the well can help them. No resolution would be more appropriate for the beginning of the year nor better please the Master than for his children to look up and help care for and cure those who have a fighting chance for their lives. Christ was the minister of physical healing as well as the cure for the soul. "And great multitudes followed him; and he healed them all.' (Matt. 12: 15.)

Drunkard Beats Mother

SIX months in the workhouse for beating his mother, eighty-four years old, was the sentence imposed on an engineer, forty-three years old, by a magistrate in the police court of a arge city the other day. The man's nly defense was that he was drunk. This is his seventh conviction on the harge of beating his mother. The judge in his charge said: "I am only sorry that I cannot make this sentence sixty years instead of six months. There should be a law that men such as you could be put in state's prison, and I am going to ask the legislature to enact such a law. Drunkenness is no defense at all. This drink question is a terrible thing, and the magistrates know it better than any one else. Alcohol turns you into a brute." The man's mother, fourscore and four years old, came trembling into the court room leaning on a cane. She showed to the judge the cruel bruises on her hands and arms where she said her son had beaten and kicked her. Her daughter, a married woman, told the magistrate she had tried to protect her mother from her brother's insane drunken fury, and that he had struck her with his fist and kicked her into insensibility. The six months' term in the workhouse will not do the man any good, and a term in state's prison, while it would compel abstinence, would likely have little effect in reforming his soul. There is but one cure for the drunkard as there is for every sinner, and that is the regeneration of the soul by faith in the blood of Jesus Christ. It is fortunate that so many poor broken, wicked victims of drink have found how efficacious is this divine remedy. The Bible is very plain in making the drunkard responsible for his conduct, and placing him among other sinners outside the pale of the kingdom of God, as in these words: "Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God." (1 Cor. 6:10.)

Lowest Immigration in 20 Years

THE tide of emigration to the United States ebbed to its lowest point in more than twenty years during the last fiscal year. Figures just made public in the annual report of Secretary Wilson of the Department of Labor show that the total number of immigrant aliens fell from 1,213,480 in the previous year to 326,700 in the period ending June 30 last. All aliens, immigrant and non-immigrant, were only 434,244, as compared with 1,403,807 the year before. Departures of aliens, emigrant and non-emigrant, likewise show a notable decrease. For the fiscal year of 1914 they were 633,805; for 1915, 384,174. The war has made this low record. It is just as well for us to have a little breathing spell in the difficult and successful task of Americanizing our foreign population. There is this mention of foreigners on the Day of Pentecost: "Parthians and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judea, and Cappadocia, in Pontus and Asia, Phrygia and Pamphylia, in Egypt and in the parts of Lybia about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, . . . Cretes and Arabians. (Acts 2: 9-11.)

The Costliest Jewels

WOMEN, in discussing the beautiful things they saw at the Panama Exposition in San Francisco, refer with delight to the exhibit of black opals which the Australian Government sent. These exquisite gems, which were practically unknown up to comparatively recent years, cost more, carat for carat, than do diamonds, while experts declare that they are much more beautiful. The term black opal is misleading. It was coined to distinguish it from the familiar "light opal." The black opal is alive with myriad shades of flaming splendor, from brightest tints of green-glowing fire to meteoric gold or lavender, that in an instant quivers to crimson, or slips into molten ruby or sapphire, as the angle of light alters. Black opals are dear, not only because they are so beautiful, but because they are so rare. They are found only at one spot, a comparatively small tract of ground in New South Wales adjoining the Queensland border. It is a wild and desolate spot about five hundred miles from Sydney. There is nothing to guide the miner in selecting a likely spot. The shafts average forty feet in depth, and all rock has to be "bucketed" to the top. Water is scarce, food hard to get. And yet the man who hits the gems gets his fortune. Precious stones are used in the Scriptures to illustrate truths and personal characteristics. Christ himself thus uses one as the illustration of his priceless salvation: "The kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchantman, seeking goodly pearls; who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it." (Matt. 13: 45, 46.)

New York's Growth

NEW YORK CITY every year for eighty years has been adding a city of about 100,000 persons to itself. From 391,000 in 1840 the population in the Greater City grew to over 4,500,000 in 1910. It is estimated that about 7,000,000 now live within its limits. A number of cities, especially in the West, have shown a larger percentage of gain, but for steady increase in population the metropolis of the Empire State takes the lead. From 1900 to 1910 there was an increase of population in Chicago of 486,708, in Philadelphia of 255,311, in Pittsburg of 82,393, in Boston of 109,693, in Los Angeles of 216,719, and in Seattle of 156,523. That of New York City for that decade was 1,329,681, which was a little more than the increase of all the other cities mentioned put together. Among the earliest records of the past we find the records of great cities. The spade of today is digging among the ruins of some of them, revealing something of the fabulous wealth that built, and millions of people that inhabited, them. The transitory earthly habitations and the abiding city are thus contrasted: "For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." (Heb. 11:10.)

Home for the Aged

THE will of Andrew Freedman of New York gives the most of his fortune to found a home for the aged, reserving a life interest in half of the estate for relatives. This home for the aged is to be called the Andrew Freedman's Home. It will have an endowment of more than six million dollars. It is to be "a home for the free and gratuitous reception, shelter, nourishment, care and maintenance of aged and indigent persons of both sexes and without regard to race or religious creed," selections to be first from among those persons who have been in good circumstances, but have become poor and dependent, and also in case of husband and wife being received into the institution, provision shall be made so that they may dwell together. If any charities can be said to claim precedence, surely it is those that care for the little helpless coming into the world, and the helpless going out of it. Mr. Freedman's gift is an answer to this prayer: "Cast me not off in the time of old age; forsake me not when my strength faileth." (Ps. 71:9.)

Christmas at the Chinese Sunday School

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

I HAVE just attended the Christmas exercises of the Chinese Sunday school of the Church of All Nations, and many of my old ideas about that people have fallen to pieces, and new ideas are forming themselves. China, the land of the dragon, and of evil faces, and bound feet, seems very far away. Our Chinese brothers who live here, in the heart of my own city, seem very close indeed.

The Church of All Nations has two doorways. One doorway opens at 291 Bowery; the other is at 9 Second Avenue. Neither neighborhood is—pretty. I went in the Second Avenue way because Second Avenue is more brightly lighted and clean-looking; 9 Second Avenue is very near the end of the street.

The Church of All Nations is not prepossessing from the outside. It is dingy, and not as bright with lights as the shops and moving picture houses that adorn either side of the street. Second Avenue is called the Fifth Avenue of the East Side, and truly it has the same air of light and sparkle and life—more sordid, of course, but the same air.

One enters the Church of All Nations past a smiling policeman, a smiling sexton, and a group of smiling children. One climbs a flight of dimly lighted stairs, and walks around to the other side of a huge mirror—just like Alice in "Alice in Wonderland." One walks down a short passageway on the other side of the mirror—and one is in wonderland.

The chapel of the Church of All Nations is at the other end of the short passageway. I saw a huge, light-colored, friendly-looking room with a deep platform at the far end of it. The walls were painted with scenes from other lands, the pulpit glowed with rich Chinese embroidery, but somehow all of the artistic and beautiful details became a background for the radiant picture that the Christmas tree made and the more radiant picture of glowing little Chinese faces grouped together at the foot of the tree.

An ultra-polite little Chinese boy met me at the doorway of the chapel. Tactfully, smilingly, but in a businesslike way, he detached me from my admission ticket and handed me a program. To him I appealed.

"Can you find Dr. Henry for me?" I asked.

The Chinese boy became even more polite.

"If you will please to wait here," he murmured, and as I waited he flew to the side of the room, located Dr. Henry and flew back. In a few minutes he had taken me to the side of the pastor.

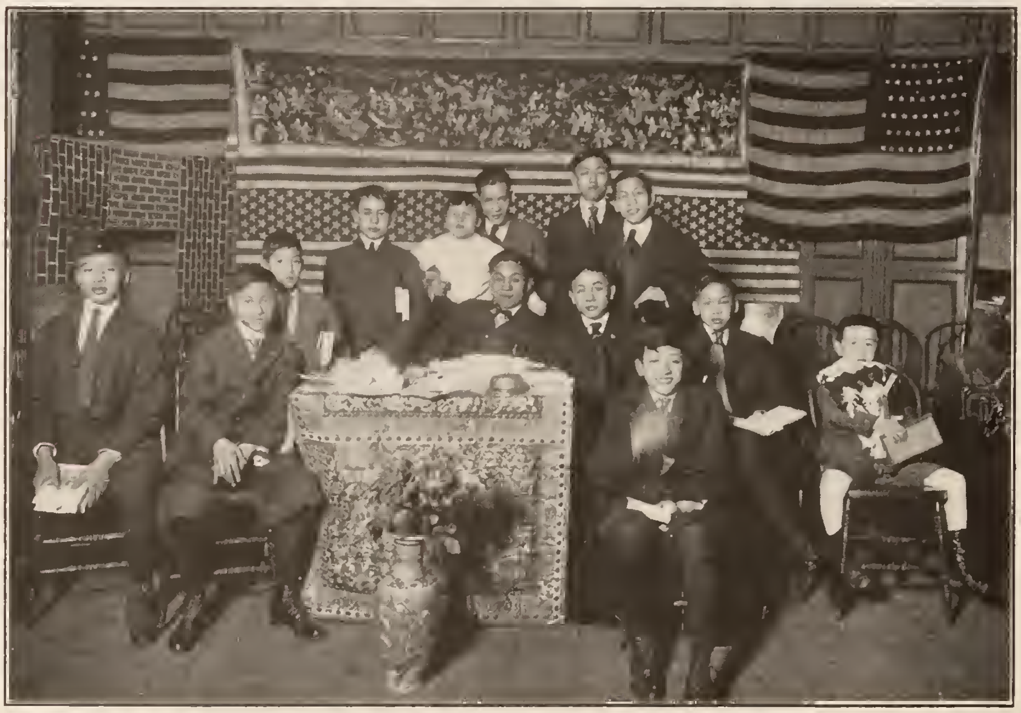
Dr. Henry is a very young-looking man to be in charge of such an enormous and wonderful work as the Church of All Nations. Even in the confusion and bustle of getting folk seated, the smile never left his face. Smiling seems to be the chief characteristic of the Church of All Nations.

"After the services start," Dr. Henry told me, "I will find a seat for you near the platform. Is there anything special that you want to see and hear?"

"I want to see and hear everything," I answered, "and I want to get some pictures taken. There's a photographer who's going to meet me . . ."

Dr. Henry looked puzzled. "Well," he said at last, "if you don't scare the tiny children, it will be all right. And you had better wait until Santa Claus comes in, when the children are all excited and won't notice the flash. Don't take anything until I give you the word." (Alas! The photographer managed to get very little in the excitement of the evening.)

THE exercises soon began and at a nod from Dr. Henry I was hurried to a seat in the shadow of the Christmas tree. From that vantage point I could get a glimpse—a large panoramic glimpse—of the audience. It was an audience that ran well up into the hundreds. There were Chinese women and children and boys and girls in the audience; there were rich Americans, and there were very poor ones, who had come on invitation. There was a smattering of other foreign elements, but the keynote of the audience was Oriental.



A Group of the Ambitious Sunday School Boys of the Church

Before the entertainment began Dr. Henry brought Miss Banta, the superintendent of the Chinese department, down to meet me. Miss Banta loves the Chinese and she has done a great work for them. Her eyes sparkled as she looked at the Christmas tree and at the rows of eager faces. As one bright-faced little girl passed me, Miss Banta whispered, "Look at her! She was a slave girl that we rescued."

There was a commotion on the platform and Miss Banta hurried away. I followed her with my eyes and saw that she was lifting tiny Chinese children from the floor to the stage. Some of the children were not over two years old, some were perhaps five or six, but they all looked like toys, and I felt a wild desire to play with them as I would play with toys.

Some of the children were in the conventional American dress, but others, the majority, were clothed in the more fantastic, vastly prettier Chinese costume. A number of the girls had flaring ribbons on; some of the boys had close-cropped Chinese doll heads, but as a general thing I could not tell the boys and girls apart. They were placid, rather stolid children, with very bright beady eyes, and very sleek black hair. Most were fat and rosy-cheeked. The prevailing Chinese costume consisted of a satin coat reaching to the knees, and trousers of some contrasting color reaching to the ankle. Many of the children wore small embroidered silk shoes.

"Most Were Fat and Rosy-cheeked"

The exercises began with a flourish of loud music. Before I caught the tune, the entire Chinese audience had clambered to its feet. I rose, too. The orchestra was playing "The Star-Spangled Banner."

It's a rather wonderful thing, when you sit down in your own quiet room to think it over—it's a rather marvelous thing to see a group of Chinese people—a race who believe in idols and strange angry gods—stand up and sing "The Star-Spangled Banner." It was stranger—and far sweeter—to hear them sing "The King of Love My Shepherd Is." They san that a little later. Toward the end of the progra they sang, "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus." recognized only the music, for the words they san were Chinese. I felt very near to God when the sang that hymn, reverently, in their foreign tongue.

MY seat was near the front of the room by t platform, and almost in the center of the seni boys' Sunday school class. There was a boy sittin next to me—a dark, attractive, well-dressed little bo who picked up my pencil and gloves and progra when they kept dropping to the floor. Soon I g talking to him.

"Have you a place on the program?" I asked.

"Oh, yes," he told me in perfect English, "he and here." He touched his name with a finger, and underlined it so that I would make no mistake. was Samuel Fung. He is sitting at the left side of t table. The fourth boy from the left in the pictur the one with two books under his arm, is Herbe Jung. He sat next to Samuel, and he, too, talked me. During the intermission the two boys told m about their Boy Scout movement, and about t Morning Star Mission in Doyer Street, that they vis I found out why Samuel talked such good Englis Though he is not yet fourteen, he is in high scho The older boy, next to Herbert, who is holding t smaller boy in his arms, is Joseph Lee. The litt boy is his six-year-old nephew, Robert.

I don't know what part of the exercises enjoyed the most. A group of fat little boys ga a jolly recitation called "Christmas Jumping Jacks a number of older girls sang a song called "In t Heart of a Rose." There was Chinese music a American music, there were vocal solos and speech and polite conversation. And then, of course, the was Santa Claus, a jolly Santa who ran up the ai from the back of the church; a Santa who gave o dolls and candy and many other things. After it there was an informal reception with refreshmen

Mrs. Henry and her blonde little daughter stood my side as I was taking a last look around the chap

"Do you like them—the Chinese?" she asked.

I thought for a moment before I answered: " didn't expect to like them—much," I told her frankl "when I came. But I think that they are lovel May I come again?"

Mrs. Henry smiled, and as I looked into her swe face I thought that she typified the spirit of Chris mas, for a bit of holly w thrust into her soft golden ha and the sparkle of the Chri mas candles dwelt in her smi I read my answer in her ki eyes.

SO I left the Church of Nations and went hon As I sit at my desk—tryi to rearrange and classify r ideas—I tell myself over a over that I have been unfair a charmingly polite, hospitab courteous people. A few wor that Dr. Henry spoke in closi came back to me:

"The Chinese," said I Henry, "are the most misu derstood people in the wor Nobody credits them with t intelligence and loving-kin ness and beauty of charact that they possess. Eve school-boy probably kno something about Alexander t Great, but his empire disa peared not long after his deat Very few people in the wor have heard of the Empe Ching, and yet he broug together the whole empire China, an empire that h endured for twenty-one ce turies since his death. V are not fair to the Chinese."

No, we are not fair to t Chinese. I, for one, had nev tried to know them, but I am going to begin and ma up for lost time. I am going to get acquainted wi more of the Chinese people; for the Christmas ent tainment at the Church of All Nations has given r a new meaning to an old text and I feel that, de in my heart, I am beginning to realize the significan of "good will toward men."

The splendid work which the Church of All Natio is doing among our immigrant population is support in most part by voluntary gifts. A present budget about $8,000 confronts the workers. Perhaps y would like to inquire of Dr. Henry at 291 Bowe how you can help.

The Land of Covered Faces

By MINERVA L. GUTHAPFEL

THE minutes dragged slowly on. The sick missionary's watch ticked away each individual second of the long night. From twelve midnight, when the two hundred ative women left, until dawn, the missionary had stened to the "tick, tock, tick" of her watch. At mes the "tick, tick" sounded like the booming of annons. That was when the fever was mounting, nd a distorted brain worked unsteadily. Then gain a chill overcame the fever, and the "tick, tock, ick" changed to low slight clicks that sounded like he screwing of the lid on a coffin.

Her cot felt as if hard boards were being pounded gainst her fever-racked body. Her six-by-eight-foot oom, with its mud walls, looked like a prison cell in he weird light of the solitary candle she was burning. The room was comparatively clean, a ative Christian home; for this she was grateful indeed.

Suddenly the watch began to talk: "It's etting light, now," it said. "The night will soon be done. It's almost five o'clock." Was it the voice of the watch or her eyes hat told her this? She could not remember; only she knew that it was true. Meanwhile she listened for further conversation and the watch went on with slow emphasis: "Tick, tock, tick, tock—you are a foolish young woman. How can you expect anything else than to be sick when you let those natives stay here and question you until midnight? It was the same last night and the night before, yet you felt the fever even then, but in spite of it you got up at dawn this morning because the 'congregation' had come back; you taught till noon with scarcely any breakfast, because they crowded you so you couldn't eat. Then you traveled the six miles, rolling around in that uncomfortable chair part of the way and walking part of the way, even though this fever was burning; and what did you do when you got here?" The watch paused and seemed to mutter to itself.

"Well, what did I do?" said the missionary aloud, irritably. "What did I do? Nothing but what I had to do." And raising herself on her elbow she glared at the watch lying half under her pillow.

"Tick—tick, tock—tock, tick, tick," said the watch meekly.

"Oh, out with it," scolded the fever victim. "Don't pretend you were through, because I know you are not."

"Tick, tick, tock," thundered the watch, cannon-fashion, while the sick one covered her ears and moaned. When she uncovered them and looked at the watch again it meekly said, "Tick, tock, tock, tick. Better lie down, and I'll tell you the rest." A tired sigh, and the listener lay quiet. "What did you do?" The watch was very gentle now. "Why, you did as you did the other night: ate little and taught and answered questions for the women here until midnight again, yet your fever has been getting worse all day."

"But I—why, I did dismiss the women last night three times, just as I did the night before. I—" she laughed hysterically—"I closed church three times, but they seemed to think it was only part of the service."

"Why, certainly they did—tick, tick, tock," sputtered the watch; "but you knew they always want to stay all night when they haven't had a missionary to explain things to them about the Jesus religion for two whole years. Don't—tick, tick, tick, tock—try to hide behind that excuse," fairly thundered the watch.

"Oh, please," said the sufferer, "don't scold so loudly." A pause. Then, again: "I—I can hear better if you'll tell me more quietly."

"Tick, tick, tock—well, I'll try to be more patient with you. Listen. You know that this isn't America, and that you cannot close meetings here in these country places by dismissing the people as you can in our country." The watch took a whole round of ticks to sigh in. It was homesick. "You knew that you had to run to your room to get lost from the congregation, or else you never would get a moment to sleep or be sick, as you are. Why didn't you come in here and get lost by nine or ten o'clock, instead of holding on until midnight? A nice pickle you'll be in if you are sick, out here twenty miles from the station and ten miles from the railroad! How will that one overworked doctor have time or strength to come out here and get you back home?"

"Oh, I don't know. I've taken the medicines regularly," sobbed the convicted one.

"Yes—tick, tick, tick," again sputtered the watch, "but you know it cannot help you unless you get more rest. You cannot get rest here, so you better go back to the station and wait till those church members at home in dear old America decide to send that medical missionary waiting in your town over here. She could take the crowds while you rested and you could take them while she rested, and maybe that way keep well. Jesus sent the disciples two by two, and there ought to be two of you right now." And with a booming "tick, tock, tick," the watch's voice choked with its own indignation. After which it ticked more quietly, and taking courage, the missionary again protested feebly:

"But the ladies sending us out haven't enough new members who promise regularly to pay at least a dollar a year. Many of the folks give $5 at a time, but the next year they forget, and then there isn't enough regular income to pay our support. People don't want to be 'tied down' to being regular members—they are 'too busy' to go to the meetings and hear about us, and so on—so there's not regular income enough to send the doctor who's waiting, and——"

"Bang, boom, crash—tick, tock, tick," stormed the watch. "I am out of all patience with such talk. If those people really loved Jesus they would not care how much they joined things—at least they would be regular paying members, so that the Jesus way of doing things might be carried out, and you wouldn't be here alone. But no use; you cannot do anything with those half-Christians by scolding, so all I want you to promise is that you and I will go back to the station tomorrow, if you're able to travel, and let the other villages go. Then, if they cannot send out the other lady, you pack up and go back to America, where you can live and do some good. It's all very well to die on the field and be a martyr, but a dead missionary is no good to these natives, and a live, returned missionary might stir up a few people to join the society, and finally get two people here instead of one. God wants live missionaries, not dead ones. Tick, tick, tock—now will you promise?—tick, tick . . ."

"I guess you're right. Yes, I'll promise. If able to travel, I'll give up. I'm no good anyway. Another woman might have stayed well in spite of working these months alone, but evidently I couldn't. I love these poor folks and Jesus, too, but I can't help them while I'm like this. I'll give up tomorrow and do as you say. I'm a failure—" A burst of tears startled the watch.

"Tick, tock, tick, tock—there, there, never mind, you are no failure—it's the people who won't join who are the failures, but Jesus knows all about that. There, there, the day has come; sleep now. I'll be still—tick, tock, tick, tick, tick, t-i-c-k, tock, tick," and the woman slept while the morning came in through the paper windows and rested lovingly like a halo on the pale, tired face of a discouraged missionary.

THE morning grew brighter. Over the little village, nestling at the foot of the mountain, a soft radiance spread as the rising sun climbed higher. Sounds of native village life became more pronounced, but the exhausted missionary slept on. The Bible-woman had looked in upon her, and, frightened by the pale face and evidences of a night of suffering, had recklessly driven all the native inquirers away from the room of the much-sought-after missionary. So passed the time until noon, when the sick one awakened with a start.

"Mary," she called, "what time is it? My watch must be wrong."

The brown face quickly peered in through the low door. "Why, lady, the sun is high overhead—it is the foreigners' mid-day meal-time."

"But the people, Mary—why have they not come?"

"Oh, they have come and gone again, lady; I managed all that. They will be back soon, I fear now. Are you well enough to see them? No, you are not," she answered herself, quickly. "But if you will eat the canned soup of your country I have made ready, perhaps you will be able to see the people a little while, and then, lady, don't you think we had better send a messenger to the other villages to tell them that you cannot travel farther, but must to your own house go back and get well?"

"Yes, send the messenger. I cannot travel farther. I will go to my own house, Mary." "To my own house," she repeated softly to herself, as the faithful woman disappeared on her errand. "To my own house, as the watch bade me go in the awful hours of last night. Dear God, forgive me if I am a coward. I cannot even think to pray, the room runs around so; only, if you've got anything for a failing-hearted missionary, send it to my help this day, for Jesus' sake. Amen!"

THE long hours crept by. Two hundred women, eager inquirers after truth, pressed and jostled the missionary. Questions poured forth, were answered as rapidly as possible, and at last, one by one, the eager natives reluctantly scattered to their homes to prepare the evening meal.

The missionary watched them go—her last country district meeting, for she was going to give it all up, because she couldn't be bright and workable twenty-four hours out of each day. "If I'd only been created a perpetual-motion machine, I might not have to give up." She smiled faintly at the sound of her own weak voice, as she wearily turned to enter the low doorway of her room, when a soft voice called:

"Missionary, please, missionary, may I ask you one question?"

The lady turned and looked into two eager, dark eyes. A native woman stood there. She had an unusual amount of silvery strands in her dark hair, yet she could not have been more than thirty—the missionary's own age. The face, too, was intelligent, but there was in it a peculiar look, half sad, half resentful.

"Yes, you may ask a question. I'll try to answer. Did you forget it when we were holding the meeting?"

"No, lady, I wanted to wait until the rest had gone. I've waited two years to ask this question. You have the fever? Too bad, I'm sorry. It will not take long."

"Yes, I have the fever; but ask your question. Are you a Christian?"

"I have been a Christian two years, but I've never

On the Summit

By Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

THE path was steep and snowy—the way was hard and cold,
The wind rushed fiercely at us like a wolf upon the fold;
And we bit our lips and struggled in the terror of the blast,
And we blessed our staffs and wondered if the storm would soon be past.
Sometimes our feet slipped backward on the crusty ice and snow,
Sometimes we stumbled, helpless, for the way was hard to go,
Sometimes we fell, and failing, we were sorry we had tried
To reach the mountain's summit, and the hope within us died.

The path was steep and snowy—the way was hard and cold,
But we struggled ever forward, half afraid—no longer bold;
And with dogged perseverance, we pushed up the hidden trail,
And we seemed but children playing with the elements—too frail
To live long in the displeasure of the wind and hail and sleet,
And the snowy down-like blanket seemed a mammoth winding sheet. . . .
And we almost started homeward with a weary broken sigh,
But we flinched and struggled forward 'neath the scorn that cleft the sky.

The path was steep and snowy—the way was hard and cold,
But at last we reached the summit, and it glittered with the gold
Of the sun that had been shining, with a perfect, glowing light
From behind the heavy stormclouds that had turned the day to night.
And, standing on the summit, we looked down and tried to pray,
For we wished to thank the Father who had kept us on our way;
For the snow and sleet and windstorm were but trifles in the past,
And they made the sunshine brighter when we reached the top at last.

seen a missionary before. There's been none in this village for two years, I think, lady."

"You are right. I was not in the country myself two years ago. But what is the question?"

"Just this, lady. How long have you known that Jesus loved us over here?"

"All my life."

"Did your mother and grandmother know it?"

"Yes."

"Were they missionaries?"

"No."

"Why not?"

"Well," answered the missionary, passing her hand wearily across her forehead, "everybody cannot come here. Folks have home cares, too, in America. Not every woman can come—"

"Did your mother and grandmother ever read this?" Turning instantly to the last chapter in the book of Matthew, she read from her native Bible, 'Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.' Did they ever read that?" she demanded as she finished. "Then they knew that Jesus loved us, too, over here, and told them to come and teach us? But they did not come. Why not?"

"Well, as I said, folks have home cares—everyone cannot come here. But my mother and grandmother prayed for you, and told me about you, and I have come."

"Oh, you are too late for some people, lady. Listen: One day, on the floor of our home, my old grandmother lay on her rice-straw bed dying. My mother and I were working over the cooking out in the courtyard, when we heard grandmother cry out. Mother hurried into the room, and I followed. I was only a little child and was frightened. I crouched down back of my mother. Grandmother's old gray head was tossing, and her hands were up trying to push something from before her face. 'Is that you, daughter?' she called to my mother. 'Yes,' sobbed mother. 'Oh, what is the matter, mother? Mother, what is it? Are you worse?'

"'I'm dying,' shouted my grandmother, 'and I'm afraid. Quick, pick me up in your arms! I can't see you, but I can hear you. I'm afraid to die. No, don't cry. There's no time for that. Pick me up and hold me tight. Don't let me go. The spirits are waiting out in the darkness, and I don't know what to say to them. I'm afraid of the spirits! Don't let me go!' She stopped for breath, panting.

"'Oh, mother, don't die! But if you must, don't be afraid. You have worshiped the spirits—you've done the best you could. You've been a good mother to us; you needn't be afraid of the spirits.' Mother's voice fairly shrieked as she tried to make my grandmother hear.

"'But I am afraid. That doesn't help me. Yes, I've worshiped the spirits, but who can worship them enough? Hold me closer to you—hold me tighter! I'm so afraid! Quick, tell me what to say to the spirits!'

"'I don't know, I don't know—but oh, mother, don't be afraid—oh, don't.'

"Suddenly, lady, there was a shriek that I'll hear as long as I live, and my grandmother's old gray head was still and her hand dropped. She was gone where she was afraid to go. My mother moaned in fright—'Oh, if I had only known what to tell her! But I did not know—I didn't know.'

"By and by she took a clean piece of linen and covered grandmother's face, and we buried her that way. Lady," the speaker turned sharply, choking dry sobs making her gasp rather than ask, "they tell me that in your country you look at your dead when they die. Do you?"

"Yes," whispered the missionary, dry-eyed, burning-cheeked, and yet fascinated by the dark eyes peering into hers, "we do."

"We don't," bluntly went on the questioner. "We cannot look at the fear and misery, the horror and agony. We cover the faces of our dead." Then, with a half-smile of misery, "You might call this the land of covered faces."

"The land of covered faces!" murmured the missionary, looking off into space; but the voice of the native woman went on, quieter but clear, and penetratingly deadly:

"Yes, lady. When I grew up my mother died that way. I held her tight, I told her not to be afraid, but she too went out of life shrieking, and I covered her face and buried her that way. I suppose, lady, that your grandmother and mother died about the same time in America—we are about the same age—"

"Yes," said the missionary, feeling as if she understood what was meant by a third degree.

"Then I guess you were reading this to them." Opening the well-worn Bible, she read: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest."

"It was read to my grandmother when she was dying."

"Ah, then, she had that to die on, and mine died this way. Was it fair? Didn't Jesus mean my folks too?"

Aroused at last to making the effort to comfort, the missionary replied: "But, see here, my sister, listen. Jesus is a good God. Your mother and grandmother did not know about him, and he will be fair. He is even now doing what is right for them. Don't worry about them." As she spoke the missionary caught the dark-skinned sister's hand in hers, sure that she had at last answered well, and comforted. Was that not what the nice people of her own country were saying? Surely—how often they had said it to her before she left home—"Why do you go there? Why don't you let those people alone? If they do not know the way of salvation, they are not responsible for following it. God is just; there will be no punishment for the untaught heathen." Well, here was an almost untaught heathen talking of entirely untaught heathen. She could now comfort with the words of the Americans.

THE eyes of the native woman flashed and grew darker until they looked like great pools of black waters, in which the satisfied countenance of the missionary was reflected. That lady felt as if she were being drowned in those eyes, even as her life was being slowly burned from her down here in the black pools of heathenism. But she could not look away. What was the woman saying? If only the fever would not make her head ring so! But she must listen.

"What do you mean, lady, by 'Jesus is not punishing them now'? I didn't ask you that, did I? Jesus is a good God. He has saved me from my sins, and I know here in my heart, that whatever he is doing with my mother and grandmother now is all right. He'll do what is best. I'm not afraid to leave them with him. But I didn't ask you that, for that is not the business of your people. He does not say in the Bible, 'Attend to them after they are dead'—no, not that. He says, 'Go,' while they live. What's he going to say to you and your mother and your grandmother for letting us live that way and die that way? That was your work, not what will happen after we are dead, but to come here and tell us how to live and how to die in peace and joy and comfort."

THE voice ceased with a sob. Once more the listener gazed into those eyes. Her defense had fallen from her. The wise sayings of the "folks at home" had dissolved into thin air, despised and sneered at by the first heathen upon whom they were tried. Stunned, she stood in silence. In as profound silence stood the questioner waiting—as the whole heathen world is waiting—for the answer to that question. But there was no answer, and the missionary turned her head. She must get away from those eyes.

The woman thought she was indifferent, and didn't care. Casting herself on her face at the feet of the worn-out worker for God, she clutched the white hands, and with streaming eyes said, "O lady, will you not answer? Don't your people care over there? Listen then once more:

"In my home long ago there were two babies. When disease came to the village both my babies, two years apart, died in one day. They were all I had. I was like a crazy woman when my babies died. What do mothers do in your country when two babies die in the same day—all they have?"

The missionary slowly turned. Her dry lips parted. "Death is the same in all countries. Don't kneel to me," she said, sitting down close to the questioner. The woman of the East and the woman of the West sat side by side; their tears mingled; and the story went on, passionate, full of longing.

"Then your people must forget that death is the same to us over here. I was like a crazy woman when my babies died. I took a dead baby in each arm, and rocked them backward and forward. The neighbor women said: 'Give us the babies; they are dead. Give them to us that we may bury them.' But I cried, 'No, no! Mothers love them dead if they can't have them alive,' and still I rocked them. So they took them from me and got them ready for the burial. By and by I followed up over the hillside, and there by my mother's grave men had dug two little graves—such tiny holes! Just big enough for my babies! They put them in while I watched, stunned, and then they started to put the dirt on my only babies. I couldn't stand that. I cast myself down between the two graves and put a hand out over each one. I tried to call to the women, but they were crying so they wouldn't listen. I spoke then to the men, saying, ' ease don't put any dirt on these bies. They are my babies, all I have. on't cover them up until you tell me here they've gone, and who's got em. You see,' I said, 'you see, they not fight the spirits, they are too littl Big people have to fight the spirits; hey are always doing wrong anyway but babies could not. They are too tle. Tell me, have the spirits got my ba es?' I waited, but the men answere not. I cried out again, 'Oh, please t me where they are. Why, there m be somebody that gives babies to m ers and who ought to take them back gain when mothers can't have them. ase, sirs, listen: if you will tell me o om- one like that caring for my ies keeping them from the spirits, I w not cry; only tell me where the babie ave gone.' I said it again and again, b the men just hung their heads. I gues hey didn't know either. By and b the women helped me up and made m to my house. When I got to the top the hill I looked back, and the men ere putting dirt on my only babies, a my questions were not answered."

The speaker paused—only sobs oke the stillness. Soon she conti ed: "See my hair, lady. It turned it in the front like this that day. hen I got to my house I flung myself the floor of the room. Soon one the women came over, shook me, and aid 'Don't! It won't do any good t ry. We have all had to go through it We have all lost babies. You have on one hope.' 'One hope!' I cried, 'what t?' 'Why, just be careful—don't trea n a bug, or a worm, or anything hat crawls on the ground. You se the spirits have your babies, and t y'll bring them back in some form. I ou never kill anything, you are sure u'll never crush the soul of your chil If you kill something—well, that m be your child.' And that, lady, tha was my only hope. I had walked fo wo days since the babies died—wha ad I not killed? Oh, lady, all this ti in America you knew, didn't you, hat Jesus had my babies, and that is keeping them for me. You and our people knew that Jesus waited o in the darkness for my mother and g ad-mother, and that he also has my b es. I know it now. For two years 've told all the mothers I could reach but I'm only a poor ignorant woma I can read but very little—so ma I cannot reach. Oh, lady, why n't you come before? Why don't you me faster from your country? It's not air. oh, it's not fair! What will Jesu ay to the Americans!"

ONE week later, a convale nt missionary left that village. er body was weak, her brain was tired ut her face was calm and peaceful. A he corner where two roads met, ne leading home, the other to the xt village on her district, she took ut her watch and looked at it.

"Lady, which road shall we ta ?" asked the Bible-woman.

"The one to the next village, M y. We will go right on with our work."

She spoke to the Bible-woman ut she looked at the watch. It er answered, save by a faint reproa ul "tock, tick—tick, tock—tick," it was carried onward still farther int he "land of covered faces."

Among the Workers

REV. THOMAS NEEDHAM, who was at one time a member of the D. L. Moody evangelistic party and who has become widely known as an evangelist, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Bethlehem Baptist Church of Philadelphia. Bethlehem Church is noted for the fact that no fair, festival or entertainment, to which admission is charged, may be held in any part of the church. No pews are rented, the work of the church being entirely supported by voluntary contributions. Mr. Needham succeeds the Rev. F. W. Farr, who goes to Calvary Baptist Church, Los Angeles, Calif.

EVANGELIST CHARLES REIGN SCOVILLE has been conducting a five weeks' series of revival meetings in Jefferson City, Mo., with marked success. Among those who have "come down the trail" are a chief justice of the state, a supreme court judge, attorney general, state auditor, and the son of a governor The total number of converts claimed is 3,723. But the "high and mighty" are not the only ones who have responded. More than 100 guards at the state prison have confessed Jesus Christ in the last month. One hundred women responded at a women's meeting, Sunday afternoon, and hundreds of boys and girls have followed their example. The city is being revolutionized socially. Liquor-drinking, card-playing and dancing have become decidedly unpopular.

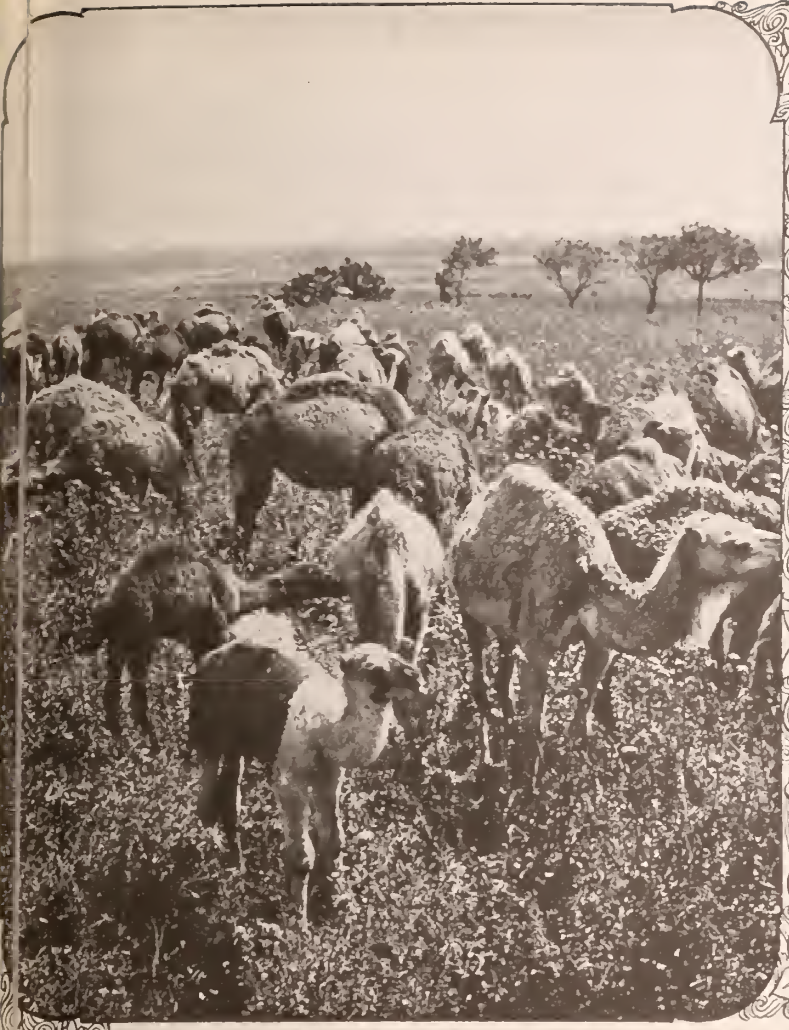
TWENTY-FOUR years ago a colored minister, the Rev. D. J. Jenkins, began to help and train the little fatherless and motherless children of his race in Charleston, S. C. Booker T. Washington gave him great assistance and encouragement, and friends who had been interested in Hampton and Tuskegee made the first gifts for the foundation of the Jenkins Orphanage. The founder and president writes to the Christian Herald: "If you or your readers were down in the mire and filth, sin and vice, poverty and starvation among the poor for twenty-four years, pleading against crime, weeping over conditions and lifting up fallen humanity, as I have been, you would not only think I am in earnest, but you would help us before the sun goes down." He will welcome gifts of clothing or shoes or "anything that can be used by the poor."

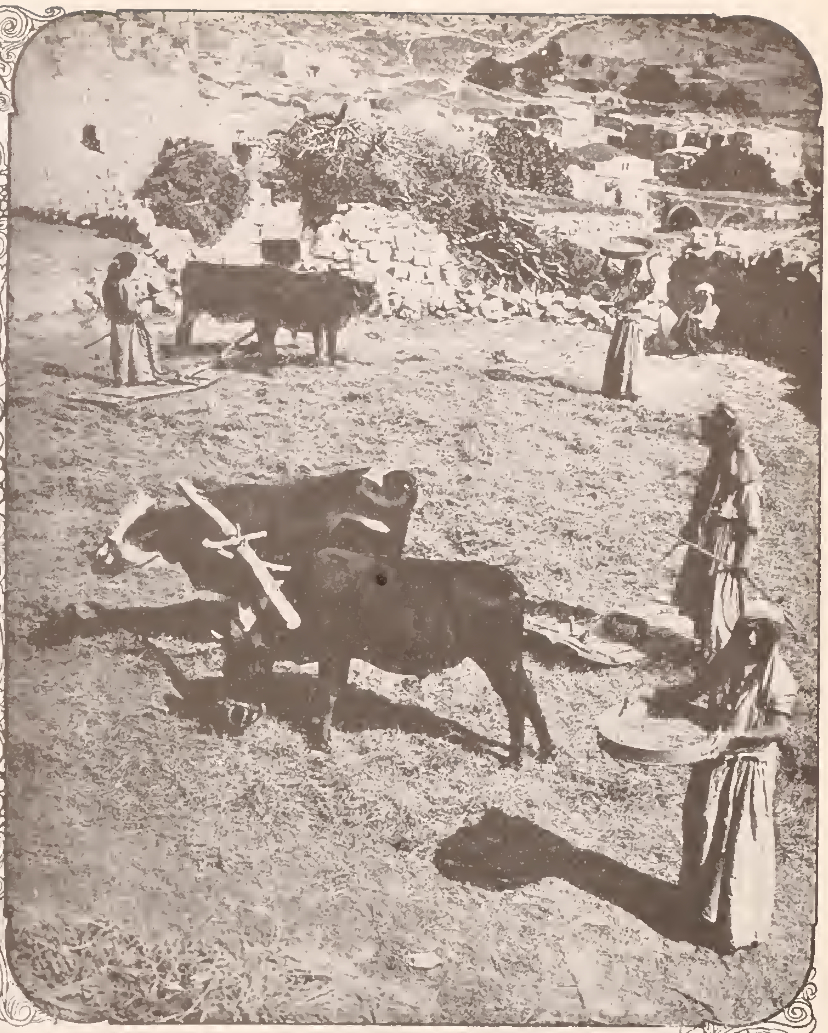
REV. GEORGE H. MESSENGER reports good work in his mission at Marion, S. C. He recently forwarded to the Christian Herald copies of his "Messages of Love" cards which he is using in his revival work with good results.

GIPSY SMITH, JR., and his party have just closed a three weeks' campaign at Central Baptist Church, Memphis, Tenn. The congregations were large, sometimes hundreds being turned away. On two Sunday its the pastor preached downstairs while Ir Smith preached upstairs.

ACCORDING to the annual report c he Utah Gospel Mission, Cleveland, io. Mormonism is now making increasing u of women missionaries in the insidious wo of spreading its peculiar doctrines. It has en found that the women can gain entran to homes from which the "elders" are excl ed. The women missionaries are very active i he Mississippi valley states, especially in he smaller towns and in the colleges.

THE little city of Massena, N. Y. as just seen the prayers of its Chri an people answered in a revival under the le r-ship of Dr. Ward Mosher. More than ne hundred persons, among them a large nu ber of young men, made public confession of eir faith in Christ.





© Photos by Underwood & Underwood

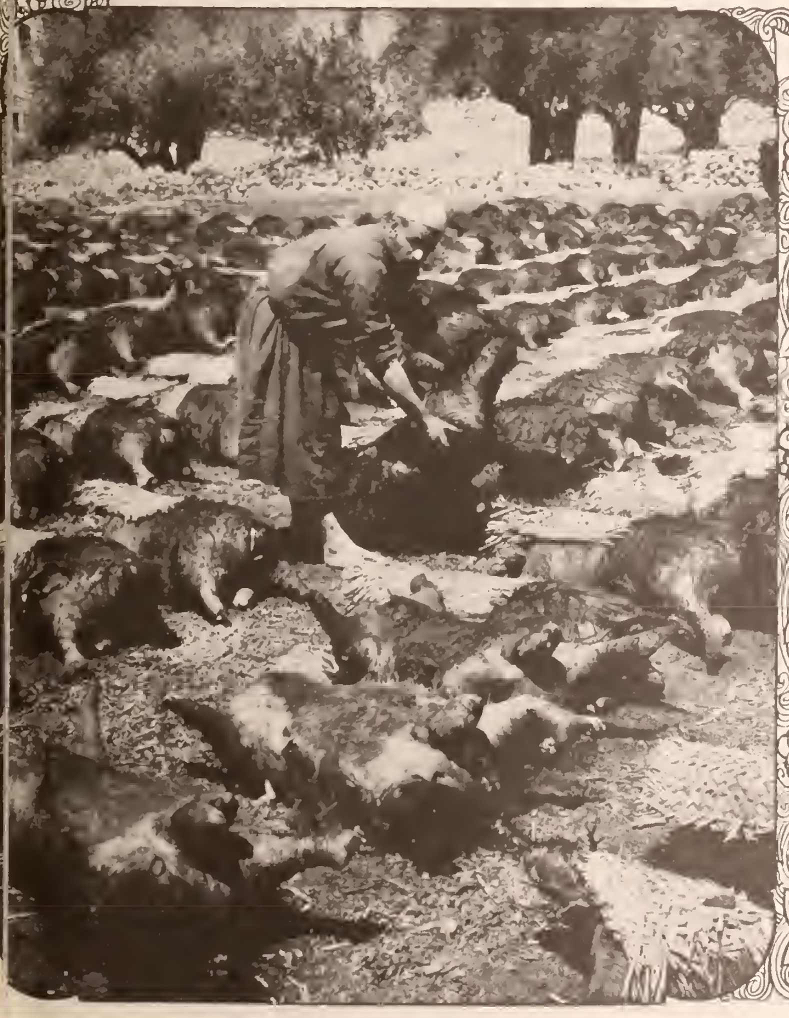
Under the Smiling Skies of Palestine

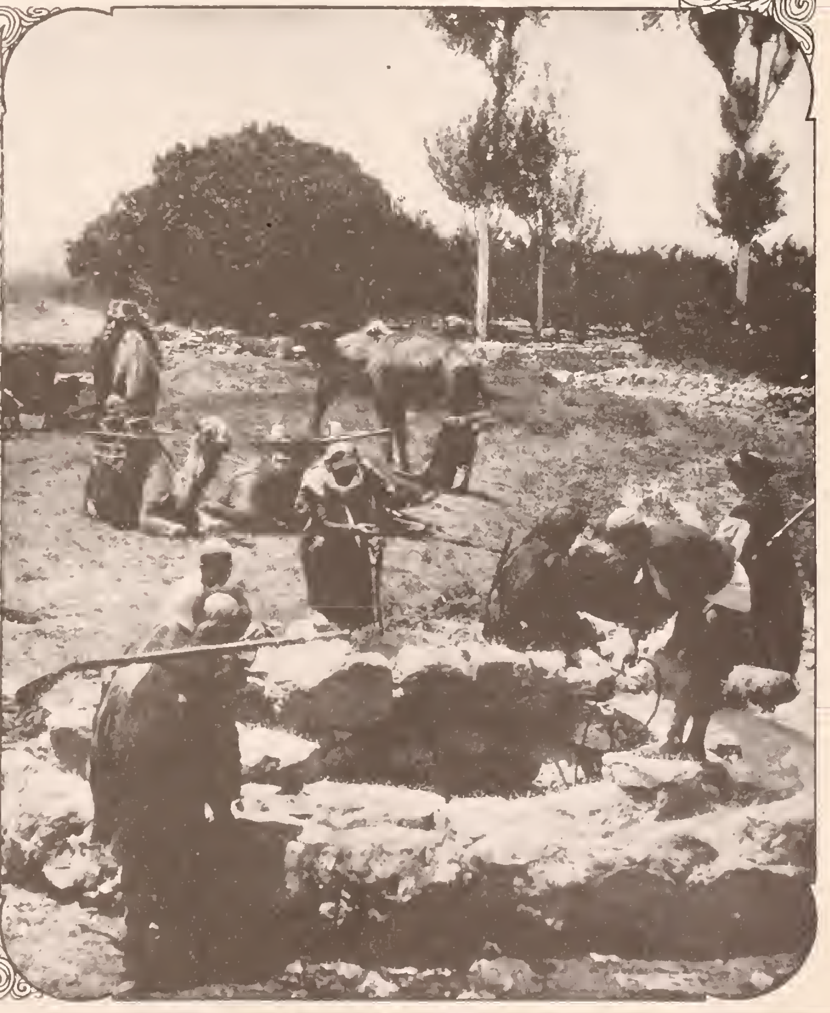
Camels (of which Job had—how many?) are still bred in Palestine. These are in the foothills of Mount Hermon.

Bran-filled goatskins being cured at a modern factory. Mark 2:22 says something about exactly the same kind of article.

Are these oxen muzzled contrary to Deuteronomy 25:4? But possibly they are working not their owner's, but a neighbor's field.

At just such a well (this is an ancient one; note watering trough at sides for beasts) the Ishmaelites of Genesis 37 refreshed themselves.





Amarilly of Clothes-Line Alley

By BELLE K. MANIATES

Copyright, 1915, by Little, Brown & Co. All rights r ved

CHAPTER XXVI

ANOTHER spring found the members of the Jenkins Syndicate still banking regularly and flourishing in their various walks in life. The Boarder had received a "raise"; Lily Rose was spending her leisure time in fashioning tiny garments which she told Cory were for a doll baby; Iry was wearing his first trousers cut from a pair discarded by Bud; and Amarilly was acquiring book lore with an ease and rapidity which delighted Miss Varley and Derry. Through the medium of Mr. Vedder the attention of the manager of a high-class vaudeville had been drawn to Bud, and he was now singing every night with a salary that made the neighbors declare that "them Jenkinses was getting to be reg'ler Rockyfellers."

Amarilly coming home one Monday evening found the family grouped about the long table listening with bulging eyes and hectic cheeks to the Boarder, who had before him a sheet of figures. Amarilly was at once alert, although somewhat resentful of this encroachment upon her particular province.

"Oh, come and hear, Amarilly!" "Amarilly, we've bought a farm!" "Amarilly, we air a-goin' to live in the country!"

"Let me explain," said the Boarder, usually slow and easy-going, but now alert and enthusiastic of mien and speech. "We've got a chance, Amarilly, to sell this place and make quite a profit. That new factory that's a-goin' up acrost the alley has sent real estate scootin'. With what we git fer it, we kin make a big payment on a farm. I took a run down yesterday to look at one we kin git cheap, cause the folks on it hez gotter go west fer the man's health. What we hev all saved up sence we bought the place will keep us a-goin' till we git in our fust summer crops."

"Tell her about the house," prompted Mrs. Jenkins, her quick maternal eye noting the bewilderment and disapproval in her daughter's expressive eyes.

"It's all green meaders and orcherds and lanes," said the Boarder with the volubility of one repeating an oft-told and well-loved tale, while the young Jenkinses, with the rapt, intense gaze of moving picture beholders, sat in pleased expectancy, "and the house sets on a little rise of ground. It's a white house with a big chimbley and two stoops, and thar's a big barn with two white hosses in it, and a cow and an animal in the paster lot. A big pen of pigs, fifty hens in the hen-house, and a few sheep. Thar's a piece of woods and the river.

"I'm a little fearful of the river on Iry's account," said Mrs. Jenkins, "but we kin spank him good as soon as we git thar, and then he'll understand he's to keep away."

"We kin git a good dog to keep track of Iry and the cattle," said the Boarder, and then he paused expectantly to listen to Amarilly's approbation. But she was strangely silent.

"It will be a fust class investment," he continued sagely.

"Why will it? We don't know anything about farming," objected Amarilly. "We'll have to hire someone to run it."

"I was brought up on a farm," replied the Boarder. "Thar ain't a thing I don't know about farm work."

"I was raised on a farm, too," said Mrs. Jenkins. "I can make good butter and I know all about raisin' chickens. I'll get some young turkeys, and have them ready to sell for Thanksgiving, and I'll set out strawberries and celery plants."

"I kin larn, and I'll work hard and do just what he tells me to do," said Flamingus, motioning toward the Boarder.

"I kin have my dairy all right, all right," said Gus joyfully. "I'll have a hull herd of cattle soon."

"I shall go in heavy on hens," said Milt importantly. "The grocer give me a book about raisin' them. There's money in hens."

"I choose to take keer of the sheep," cried Bobby.

"I'll help ma do the work in the house and the garden," volunteered Cory.

"And I'm strong enough to work outdoors now," said Lily Rose. "I shall help with the garden and with the housework."

"We'll all pitch in and work," said Flamingus authoritatively, "and we're all partners and we won't hire no help. It will be clear profit."

"Ain't it lovely, Amarilly?" asked the mother, apprehensively lest the little leader might blackball the project.

"We're all doing so well here, why change? Why not let well enough alone?" she asked.

There was a general and surprised protest at this statement. It was something new for Amarilly to be a kill-joy.

"Do you like to live in this alley when we kin hev all outdoors and git a chanst to be somebody?" demanded Flamingus, who was rapidly usurping his sister's place as head of the house.

"And think of the money we'll make!" reminded Milton.

"And the milk and butter and cream and good things to eat without buying them!" exclaimed Gus.

"And huntin' f'r eggs and swimmin' in the river and skatin' and gettin' hickory nuts and all the apples you kin eat," persuaded Bobby, who had evidently been listening to the Boarder's fancies of farm life.

"Thar's a school close by, and all the chillern kin go," said the mother anxiously. "Mebby you kin git to teach it after a while, Amarilly."

"Oh, Amarilly!" cried Lily Rose ecstatically, "to think of all the trees, and all the sky, and all the green grass and all the birds—oh, Amarilly!"

Words failed Lily Rose, but she s ned a far-seeing blissful sigh of exq ite happiness at her horoscope. he Boarder looked at her, his hear lo-quent in his eyes, but he said no ng.

"Amarilly," cried Cory, "we ki hev real flowers fer nuthin' and pies an ce-cream, and we kin cuddle little cks like ma told me, and make daisy c ns, and hev picnics in the woods. C—"

Words also proved inadequa to Co's anticipations.

"Amawilly, we kin play wiv the lambs," lisped Iry.

"Bud, you haven't made your s ech yet," said Amarilly wistfully, rea ing that the majority was against her

"Bud won't go till fall," said rs. Jenkins.

"Till fall!" cried Amarilly fa ly. "Why, when are we going?"

"Next week," answered the Bo ler jubilantly. "The folks want to ve right away, and we must get sy plantin'. I went to Vedder's fi nd, the real estate man, this morni as soon as I got back, and he says s a real bargain."

"But why isn't Bud going?"

"This morning," informed Mrs. n-kins proudly, "Bud had an offer As soon as the theater shuts down. Ir. Vedder is going to take Bud to big resort and manage him for the se on. He'll git lots of money. I wouldn let Bud go off with no one else, but Ir. Vedder is so nice, and he says wher ud goes to the country in the fall h kin come into the city Saturday nigh on the Interurban and sing in the oir Sundays and come back Monday. He kin stay with him, Mr. Vedder ys. And the country air and fresh mill nd eggs will make a diff'rent boy of m. It's what the doctor says he'd ter hev."

"Then, we'll go, of course," dec red Amarilly resolutely.

"And, Amarilly," said the Bo ler gravely, "your ma ain't said why she

The WOODSMAN

By Remington Schuyler

My neighbors and my kinsfolk say;
"Ain't you afeered to go that way?
"Into the woods alone each day?
"And you a man so old and grey-
"Nigh unto fourscore years," they say.

"Ain't you afeered a fallin' limb,
Will ketch you like it kotched Old Jim?"
"Why, bless you, no!" I always say,
"I can't be skeered to hew away-
"And fell the big trees every day;
"My blessed God is nigh alway,
"He never seems real far away,
"He is my staff and strength each day;
"I trust in Him!"

nted to go, but think of the diff'rence will make in her life. To be sure, will have to work hard, but with u, Lily Rose, and Co to help her, it n't be so hard, and it'll be higher ss work than slushing around in s and water, and she'll hev good din' and good air, and we'll all feel we was folks and our own bosses."

"Ma, I was selfish!" cried Amarilly morsefully. "I'll work like a hired n!"

Amarilly thereupon bravely assumed cheerful mien and looked over the arder's figures, listening with aprently great enthusiasm to the plans d projects. But when she was upirs in her own little bed and each d every other Jenkins was wrapt in ppy slumber, she turned her face to wall, and wept long, silently, and serably. Far-away fields and pasres did not look alluring to this little ughter of the city who put bricks and rtar and lighted streets above trees d meadows, for Amarilly was entirely tropolitan; sky-scrapers were her thright, and she loved every inch her city.

"But it's best for them," she acknowlged.

A little pang came with the realiion that they who had been so pendent upon her guardianship for idance were entirely competent to without her.

"It's Flam. He's growed up!" she bed, correctness of speech slipping m her in her grief. "And he don't ow near so much as I do, only he's a n—or going to be—so what he says es."

And with this bitter but inevitable cognition of the things that are, arilly sobbed herself to sleep.

CHAPTER XXVII

HE next morning Amarilly served Derry's breakfast in heavyarted silence, replying in low-voiced nosyllables to his gay conversational vances. She performed her houseld duties about the studio listlessly ough with conscientious thoroughness. When it came time to prepare luncheon, Derry called her into the studio.

"Come here to the light, where I can see you best, Amarilly."

Reluctantly she came.

He turned his searching artist's eyes upon her unsparingly, noting the violet shadows under the white-lidded eyes, and the hard, almost tragic lines in the drooping of her mobile mouth. She bore his gaze unflinchingly, with indrawn breath and clenched hands.

"What is it, Amarilly?" he asked gently. "You will tell me, nicht wahr?"

These two last words were in deference to her new study of German.

At the genuine sympathy in his voice, Amarilly's composure gave way and there was a rush of tears.

He led her to a divan and sat beside her.

"Yes, of course you will tell me, Amarilly. I knew there was an emotional side to my practical little maid, and I noticed at breakfast that there was something wrong."

"Yes," she replied, with an effort, wiping away the rising tears, "I will tell you, but no one else. If I told Mr. Vedder, he would not understand; he would say I must do what was sensible. If I told Mr. St. John, he would be shocked, and tell me that duty was hard, and that was why it must be done—to strengthen. Mrs. St. John would laugh, and say: 'Oh, what a foolish Amarilly!'"

"And what will I say, Amarilly?" he asked interestedly.

"You! Oh, you will understand what I feel, and you will be sorry."

"Then spin away, Amarilly. You'll have my sympathy and help in everything that makes you feel bad, whether it's right or wrong."

"Oh, Mr. Derry, we are all going away—way off to the country—to live on a farm!"

"Amarilly, you little city brat! You'd be a misfit on a farm. Tell me what has sent the Jenkins family into the open."

Faithfully Amarilly enumerated the pros and cons of the agricultural venture. When she had concluded her narrative, Derry, to her surprise and sorrow, looked positively jubilant.

"And you don't want to live in the country, eh, Amarilly?"

"No, Mr. Derry," she protested. "I don't. I've never been there, but I know the woods and the fields and—all that—must be beautiful—in patches—but I couldn't bear it all the time—not to see all the bright and white lights at night and the hurry, and the people, and the theaters. No! I'd rather be the poorest little speck here than to own and live on the biggest farm in the world."

He laughed delightedly.

"Oh, Amarilly, you little gamin! You have the right idea, though. We don't want anything, however perfect it may be, all the time. We want it just 'in patches'—as you say. You'll love the country with your whole heart and soul when you come to see it if you know that you can leave it. But this is a big change in your affairs, and we must talk it over. We'll go to Carter's again for luncheon. Take off your apron and cap. You won't have to fix your hair this time. It's even more beautiful than it was then. Your frock, if it is cheap and plain, is artistic in cut and color."

Amarilly felt cheered in spite of herself at his exuberant manner, but burst into tears when on leaving the studio he casually remarked:

"So this is almost the last of your work here! I can never hope to get such another housekeeper as you. I shall have to eat out again."

At sight of her grief he took hold of her arm almost roughly.

"Amarilly, you little goose, do you suppose I am going to let you be exiled to a farm and lapse into the vernacular of the Boarder? Now, buck up and trust to the judgment and affection of your twin brother."

Amarilly, wondering but hopeful, "bucked up," and they walked in silence to Carter's, where Derry ordered a private dining-room and luncheon. Then:

"Now, listen, my child, and you shall hear, not of the midnight ride of Paul Revere, but of the sad story of the life of your twin brother. My parents died when I was too young to grieve for them. They are only a faint memory. I had a cold-blooded, sensible guardian who put me into a boys' school, from which I went to college, and then for a year in Paris. He didn't let me know the amount of my inheritance. Consequently I really worked and worked hard at the only thing I cared for and formed no extravagant tastes. Neither was I courted and flattered by parasites.

"On my return from Paris, a year before I met you, I came into my mother's fortune, and recently I have received the one left me by my father. Having been brought up to live a comparatively simple life, in the belief that I would be dependent on my own exertions, I have more money than I know what to do with as yet. I have no one, not even a fifth cousin, to be interested in. I have any number of acquaintances, but no really intimate friends, so I have no one to help me spend and enjoy my money.

"There was something about you, Amarilly, that appealed to me that first day you came up to the studio. It couldn't have been your looks, for aside from your hair, your expressive eyes, and your hands, you are quite ordinary looking; but something about you amused me, then interested me, and now fascinates me. I have thought about it a good deal, and have come to the conclusion that it is your direct naturalness and earnestness. I have really come to feel as if you were a sort of a younger sister of mine. I have done a very little for you in the way of education, and I have intended to do more. The reason I have been slow about it was—for reasons. I have discussed your future with the Merediths a great many times.

"What I wished to do was to put you in the best girls' school I could find, and when you were finished there, to send you abroad, and give you the same advantages that a sister of mine would have. But, as I say, I hesitated. It

Continued on page 22

Doughnuts

The Crisco Kind

Crisco made doughnuts are wholesome all the way through.

They are sweet, light and dry inside, crisp outside and not "grease-soaked".

Crisco doughnuts fry so quickly that little fat is absorbed and this little is digestible.

CRISCO
For Frying - For Shortening
For Cake Making

Many other delicacies which are "impossible" for some when cooked with lard are easily digested when Crisco is used.

Nut Doughnuts

A recipe sufficient for a jarful of seventy-five

1¼ cupfuls sugar	1 cupful chopped English walnut meats
4 tablespoonfuls Crisco	1 teaspoonful vanilla extract
1½ cupfuls milk	1 teaspoonful lemon extract
2 eggs	½ teaspoonful salt
4 teaspoonfuls baking powder

Flour to make soft dough
(Use level measurements)

Cream Crisco and sugar together, add eggs well beaten, milk, salt, extracts, baking powder, nuts, and sufficient flour to make soft dough. Roll out, cut with cutter and fry in hot Crisco to a golden color. Drain and sift with sugar.

There are recipes for other doughnuts in the "Calendar of Dinners" which we will be glad to send you. This cloth-bound, gold-stamped, really handsome book tells you all about Crisco and its preparation; gives a dinner menu for every day in the year and 615 tested recipes gathered by Marion Harris Neil, the cooking authority. Address Department S-1, The Procter & Gamble Co., enclosing five 2-cent stamps. A paper-bound edition, without the "Calendar of Dinners" and with 250 recipes is free.

A Calendar of Dinners with 615 Recipes
The Story of Crisco
CRISCO
For Frying, For Shortening
For Cake Making

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE.

The editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag, provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

READER. Can you advise me how to place to best advantage in the Lord's work a gift of, say, one hundred dollars? I note, in reading the Christian Herald, that there are many who take advantage of its far-reaching connections and facilities for distributing their benevolences, and I would be grateful to have the same privilege.

We are always glad to be of service in such cases. In receiving requests of this character, we make it conditional that the donor should state to what field the money is to be devoted, whether to home or foreign missions, for the spread of the Gospel, or to charitable or benevolent institutions. If to the mission field, the donor may have a wide choice, both as to location and denomination, and a list of active and deserving missions is submitted with a brief explanation of the character of each, so that a selection may be made. If for domestic charities, a list of home causes is sent for examination and approval. On the list being returned to the Christian Herald, with the apportionments duly noted, the money allotted to each of the causes selected by the donor is forwarded without further delay, and the beneficiaries are instructed to send acknowledgments to us, which are duly transmitted to the donor. There is, of course, no charge connected with such service, the Christian Herald having undertaken to forward the contributions of its readers and their friends in full to destination. In this way, many very worthy and needy home charities have been greatly helped, and a large number of missionaries in the foreign field are strengthened and encouraged by the consecrated offerings of good people at home, many of whom, in turn, become stanch supporters and ardent lovers of missionary work.

I. M. G., New Orleans, La. Your case is a very perplexing one, yet not at all uncommon. There are many to whom the call to a distant and possibly more promising and remunerative field seems urgent and compelling, yet who are held back by home ties and duties that would suffer greatly were they to be dropped. We think you would do well to leave the decision in his hands, who will guide you right if you trust him. Instead of trying to force matters, leave it all with him, and a way may be opened that will solve the problem. The duty near at hand has always the first claim, and if it be done faithfully and patiently—as it has been in your case—you will not regret it. Meanwhile, take the opportunity of preparing yourself for larger service, that you may be ready when the time—not your time, but his—comes. Your sister is right when she says "God has led you into the work and he will lead you out."

J. S. C., Youngstown, Ohio, writes a long letter, in the course of which he says: "I must express my gratification at reading your advertisement in the Sunday School Times—I mean the 'revolt' against teaching war in the Sunday school. You may remember that I have at divers times in the last year upbraided you and many others with gross inconsistency in teaching that God was a God of war. The spectacle of the Christian, praying so fervently for peace, and in the next breath teaching the children that he distinctly told people to go to war, was such an evident inconsistency that even the children asked puzzling questions about it. No doubt there ought to be some teaching of Jewish history, but the less said about the details the better. We can teach that we are inexpressibly indebted to that race, but we need not expose the follies and frailties of a people just emerging from barbarism, and drag God down to a level which only obscures the vital truth to be learned. Again I thank you for your stand for a different course of study for the Sunday school. A paper like yours, with the ear of a million people, can work wonders if you will help the twentieth century thought of the Bible."

O. P. F., Milton, Wis. In the Christian Herald of November 24 I read your article on "The President and the Bible." The seventh paragraph closed with this sentence: "It is the Dark Ages with us again." This agrees with Isaiah's words: "For, behold, darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the peoples." At the time of this gross darkness, however, we read, "the Lord shall arise upon thee (Jerusalem), and his glory shall be seen upon thee." (Isa. 60: 2.)

At this time of world crisis, many interpreters of prophecy have appeared We have expositions from pre-millennarians and post-millennarians and others on the subject. The unraveling of the web of prophecy is a task beyond human power, and one which calls for divine wisdom. However much we may search and study the Scriptures, any attempt to foretell the times, places and circumstances of coming events is futile. Let us be content to be in an attitude of spiritual preparation and to leave the issues with God, who will reveal them at the proper time.

J. A. S., Richmond, Calif 1. An outright purchase of stock in any lawful business concern is a legitimate investment. With regard to investing in a business the nature of which you do not approve, it is a matter for the individual conscience. If your heart condemn it, and you feel that it is wrong, why not listen to the inward voice? See Rom. 14: 14, 23. 2. To a very large majority of Christian people, the suggestion of investing money in any concern that furnishes war supplies to keep up the slaughter would be an abhorrent one, no matter who used the product. 3. We do not see how any sincere Christian can be an advocate of militarism, which means huge armaments and devoting the youth of our nation to the trade of war. 4. There are unquestionably many good men of fine Christian character, who have done military service; but the soldier's trade must be repugnant to such men. Some of the most distinguished among them have admitted this. General Sherman voiced this view when he uttered the memorable words, "War is hell."

John M., Nisland, S. D. The preacher who said that Isaiah 29: 11, 12 referred to the Book of Mormon spoke in ignorance. The chapter in question deals with the prophecies as to the coming invasion of Judea under Sennacherib, and its ultimate deliverance. The vision was likened to "a sealed book," which could not be read either by the learned or the unlearned. The people had become wholly indifferent to spiritual things, and Jehovah "gave them up judicially to their own hardness of heart."

M. B., Cawker City, Kan. Pitcairn Island is in latitude 25 degrees 3 minutes south and longitude 130 degrees 6 minutes west, or almost exactly south of Vancouver Island, and just a little south of the tropic of Capricorn. It was first settled in 1790 by nine mutineers from the English ship Bounty and eighteen natives of Tahiti. By the year 1808, when the island was discovered by the English, the population had grown to sixty-six persons, who formed a model community under the patriarchal government of John Adams, the only surviving mutineer, who had saved a Bible from the ship and was ruling with wisdom and justice his little kingdom of slightly over two miles in length. The island is under the British flag and in 1905 contained 211 inhabitants.

Reader. The commentary of Jamieson, Fausset and Brown, speaking of the statement in Jonah 4: 11, that there were in Nineveh "more than six score thousand persons that cannot discern between their right hand and their left hand"—that is, children under three or four years of age—estimates, allowing them to be a fifth of the whole population, that Nineveh contained about 600,000 inhabitants.

Are locusts still eaten? An answer to this question, which was raised in the Christian Herald of June 23, 1915, has just been received from Arthur and Edna Chilson of Kisumu, British East Africa, and is as follows: It may be of interest to you to know that there is a race that eats them even today. We are, in British East Africa about 600 miles inland from Mombasa. We are working, and have been for years, among a people called Kavirondo. These people are troubled at times, of course many years between, with the locust. If the harvest season is over and little in their gardens, it is a time of rejoicing for them, because they eat the locust. They not only eat them then, but cook them and dry them in the sun and put them in baskets to eat for some months to come. They say that they taste and smell something like our crackers used in America. This may make you feel that our people are not very civilized, and it is true they are not. When we began the work over thirteen years ago they were without clothing, could not count above six, slept with their cattle, goats and sheep, and so forth. Of course this has not all changed, but we are glad to say that much of it has changed. We are working under the Friends' Board and have an Industrial Mission, which is conducted along evangelistic, educational medical and industrial lines.

Subscriber, Cohoes, N. Y. The text to which the President referred was Ezekiel 33: 2-6.

L. E. G., Jefferson, S. C. Will you please tell me the name of that big, bright star, or planet, that shows so plainly in the eastern sky these nights? I have a small telescope and enjoy viewing that planet. The little stars change positions, but always appear to be in a line.

The bright star in the eastern sky in early evening is Jupiter, one of our fellow planets. It is probable that the small stars near him are some of his larger satellites. The are frequently seen by the aid of a field-glas

Mrs. J. C. P., Weed, Calif. The ord "Paradise" does not occur in the Old ta- ment in the English Version, but is u in the Septuagint to translate the Hebrew ord "gan"—a garden (see Gen. 2: 8). "Par se" is simply the Anglicized form of a word ich appears in the Greek, Sanscrit, Persia nd Arabic in almost identical forms, an has virtually the same meaning in all, a park. It is unquestionably true, ho rer that "Eden" and "Paradise" are substar lly identical in the average mind. In old H ew writings, Eden was spoken of as the ire tract and Paradise a part of it to the st- ward, this conclusion being in harmony ith the Bible, which says that the Lord od "planted a garden eastward in Eden" en. 2: 8).

Miss S. H. P., Norwich Town, Con In 1655, at the height of the Waldensian se- cution, Cromwell, then Lord Protect of England, issued a mandate against the se- cution, which secured the victims a few ars of comparative rest. Hundreds of the les returned to the Piedmont valleys. he persecution soon flamed up again a few ars later.

J. B., Des Moines, Ia. Scientists rm that what has been called the "death a y" does not exist, in a physical sense; that ien nature, ceasing to fight against appro ng dissolution, runs up the flag of surrender, ere is no further pain. The only pain in de is that which assails the mind and tormen he soul from the remembrance of a missper fe. of opportunities wasted, of grievous sin re- pented and unforgiven, of kindness unreq ed. of sincere affection despised and degrad of restitution neglected, of deeds of wicke ss and shame, for which atonement is n no longer possible. In that last hour of s a life, the spirit of man is his own accuser.

Reader. The term "feminism" is var ly defined. During a recent debate on the b- ject in New York, Mrs. Beatrice F s- Robertson Hale, one of the advocat of feminism, explained it as "that part he progress of democratic freedom which a ies to women—a century-old struggle by g ps of people to bring about the remov of artificial barriers to the development he female half of the race." Mrs. John M in. an anti, on the other hand, gave her idea is: "The feminists would have woman dup te and imitate man. They would have h pl- low him into the workshop and factory to mines, up in balloons, in his baseball ch we cannot understand), his prize fights to the saloon, polling booth and war." he term has gradually broadened. At first, m- inism was simply a doctrine which procl ed the mental and social equality of women th men. Now it has been extended to in de political and industrial equality, with a gle standard of morals for both sexes, and a c ge of attitude toward marriage and the he. the outcome of which none can foresee.

J. B. D., Harrison, N. J., writes: ke your correspondent, I. G. B., of Indiana is. I was very much pleased with 'The Goo ld Hymns' that appeared in the Christian H ld of September 22—so much so that I s it over 3,000 miles to an old schoolmate of er sixty years ago, who does appreciate a od thing. The following is his reply. If ou have room in your Mail-Bag, may I e ect you to put it in? It might stir happy m o- ries in the minds of those who can look ck half a century to what was the custom, m- mon then, of singing the Psalms of Dav

There's lots of music in the Psalms—
Those dear sweet Psalms of old;
With visions bright of lands of light
And shining streets of gold.
I hear them singing, singing, still
In memory soft and clear,
"Such pity as a father Unto his children dear."

They seem to sing for evermore
Of better, sweeter days,
When the lilies of the love of God
Bloomed white in all the ways;
And still I hear the solemn strains
In the quaint old meeting flow,
"Oh, greatly blest the people are
The joyful sound that know."

No singing-books we needed there,
For very well we knew
The tunes and words we loved so well
The dear old Psalm-book through
To "Coleshill" at the Sacrament.
The song, as tears, would fall,
"I'll of salvation take the cup,
On God's name will I call."

And so I love the dear old Psalms;
And, when my time shall come,
Before the light has left my eyes,
And my singing lips are dumb,
If I can only hear them then,
I'll gladly soar away,
"So pants my longing soul, O Lord,
That come to thee I may."

LACK OF MONEY

Was a Godsend in this Case

It not always that a lack of money is a bene.

A dy in Ark. owes her health to the fact that ne could not pay in advance the fee dem ded by a specialist to treat her for stomach uble. In telling of her case she says:

"had been treated by four different phys ans during 10 years of stomach trouble. Late I called on another who told me he coul ot cure me; that I had neuralgia of the ston h. Then I went to a specialist who told me ad catarrh of the stomach and said he coul cure me in four months but would have to ha his money down. I could not raise the nece ry sum and in my extremity I was led to q coffee and try Postum.

"e results have been magical. I now slee ell at night, something I had not done for a ng time; the pain in my stomach is gone and m a different woman.

"ery time I had tried to stop coffee I suff d from severe headaches, so I continued to d k it although I had reason to believe it was jurious to me. But when I had Postum to sl t to it was different.

" my surprise I did not miss coffee when I be n to drink Postum.

"ffee had been steadily and surely killi me and I didn't fully realize what was doin t until I quit and changed to Postum." Nan given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mic

P um comes in two forms:

P tum Cereal—the original form—must be l boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

In ant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolv quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with crea and sugar, makes a delicious beverage inst tly. 30c and 50c tins.

B h kinds are equally delicious and cost abo the same per cup.

" ere's a Reason" for Postum.

—sold by Grocers.

eep Your omplexion Attractive Through Coming Years

A ittle Hinds Cream k ps the skin smooth, cl r and fine textu d in any climate.

inds
h EY AND ALMOND
ream

th oughly cleanses th pores—soothes ar softens sore irrit d skin:

revents roughn , chapping and w lburn—promotes a ir, fresh girlish co plexion.

ing everywhere, or po aid by us on receipt of ice. Hinds Cream in ttles, 50c. Hinds Co Cream in tubes, 25c.

Sa les sent for 2c stamp o pay postage.

not take a substitu -Hinds Cream wi mprove the skin.

. S. HINDS
291 st St., Portland, Me.

HINDS Honey an Almond Cream SO , 10c and 25c. Tr cake, 5c postpaid.

PEWRITERS FACTORY TO YOU

ook ese bargains! Typewriters Rebuilt in our own acto , and guaranteed for one year.
nd oods $25 to $70 Royals $25 to $65
C lth $30 to $55 Olivers $20 to $45
nd new No. 2 Smith Premiers $45
Special this month
emington Visible No. 10, $38.50
e h thers, of course. Send for catalogue describ-g th Branch offices in principal cities.
ME AN WRITING MACHINE CO., Inc., 345 Broadway, N. Y.

STOR'S COMMUNION SERVICE

For Visiting the Sick

Every Pastor should have one. Leather Case, Silver-plated Flagon and Wafer Box, six crystal glasses. An ideal gift for the pastor. Special price, $6.50 postpaid, satisfaction guaranteed.
THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
Box 611 LIMA, OHIO.

A Thought for the New Year

A YEAR ago a young man—his name doesn't matter—made a sensible New Year resolution.

He had been married a few years; he received a small salary and had been mortgaging his future—drifting into debt. The sums he owed were not large, but they were larger than he seemed able to shake off, and his wants were steadily increasing. He was a promising young man in his business; his advancement was certain, though slow; his wife was a sensible and frugal helpmate, and his prospects were bright enough, except for this burden of debt around his neck, which, in spite of all he seemed able to do, grew heavier and heavier, steadily dulling his courage and sapping his energies.

He determined to get rid of the deadening weight at any sacrifice. He felt that if he were to progress he must have his full manhood, full liberty, full respect of himself and others. He realized that he could never command prosperity until he proved himself master of adversity.

So he and his willing wife set about for a way to pay these debts. Of course, they might cut down expenses. Everybody can do that—in theory; in practice it is often different. These two had come of well-to-do families, had always had all reasonable wants satisfied, and they knew very little about strict economy. Even as it was, nearly all their friends and associates lived better than they did. Besides, they had long been living as cheaply as they knew how.

But they were determined all debts should be paid before the year was out.

His work was such that he could work overtime and get extra pay for it. He had perfect health and discovered for the first time that it was valuable capital. He put that health and strength and skill of his into the smelting mill, and they assayed pure gold.

He found in time that while he was making more money than before, he was also making himself more efficient. Interest in his work increased, energies that had lain dormant were revived, ambition that had been suffered to become sluggish found fillip.

Wholesome work, to the full limit of his powers, though hard at first, eased with habit and lightened with increased hope, and was proving in his case, as it does in all others, the best tonic there is.

AS his pleasure in his work grew, a lot of little expenses for amusements dropped off almost unnoticed. As his purposes grew in seriousness, his wants became more simple. He was finding ideals the attainment of which money cannot buy, and which call for no expenditure. His extra work was making money for him at both ends.

And it was doing more. It was making manhood and efficiency, right hope and settled purpose, self-confidence and self-respect.

He had set out to pay his debts before the end of the year. He had cleaned them all up within a few months. But he did not cease his efforts. He had found something more than mere freedom from debt—something even more valuable than that.

He had found what it means to bring into use his full powers.

He had learned that labor is in reality one of the best blessings mankind has—a means of developing dead clay into virile manhood.

He had learned that to put one's shoulder to the wheel and push, not perfunctorily, but with all one's strength, until every muscle strains and every nerve tingles, and to feel the wheel move under his force, gives the best exhilaration to the body, the mind and the spirit that is ever felt in this life.

Yes, he had learned, too, what hollow mockery there is in that word "duty," as commonly used. He had been "doing his full duty" before; now he was doing the very best he could—and it was wonderfully different!

He had been fulfilling his obligation to his employer, which meant that his work had been up to the average. Now, he was fulfilling his full obligation to himself also, which meant that his work was far above the average. His employer could not fail to see it and appreciate it.

A good bank account in his own name today helps this young man to see the vast difference between being a slave of circumstances and a master of them.

CHARLES GRANT MILLER.

"One of God's Farmers"

The Conversion of William A. Quayle (Bishop Quayle) as Told by Himself in "The Retired Minister."

I THINK of the funny men I have had preach to me, and I remember how some of them did tear the beautiful garment of dramatic expression into small ribbons, and did not care about the ribbons at all; and I remember when I heard them fall on the "whoms" and the "whos" and all the ridiculosities of speech. Yet I remember some of those men, who could not get it arranged whether they should say "who" or "whom," who brought you up until you fell on the outstretched Hand, and caught the foot of the Cross. I would not say I like people to be ungrammatical; but I would rather hear some people who are ungrammatical and divine, than hear other people who are grammatical and utterly human.

The preacher came over to me and said, "Billy, you belong with Jesus!" He was a kind of a farmer fellow, and he grew all crops but hair; and he wore farmer clothes and spoke about farming and sowing; and he said that there was a Sower who went out to sow, and that there was a great harvest. And everybody paid heed. Then he came and put his hand on my shoulder and said, "Billy, God wants you to be one of his farmers." And I came up the aisle of the schoolhouse; not to the chancel—there wasn't anything but a dictionary in the schoolhouse, so I came up and bowed at the dictionary. And oh, the wind was wild that night! It was as stormy as on the wild sea, the storm that beat upon that prairie schoolhouse. The wind had its chance, and blew as it did on the Sea of Galilee; and it seemed to me that Christ came over and said, "Boy, what do you want down here?" and I said, "I want thee, O Christ." And he said, "I have come."

OH, people, there isn't anybody who ever drew breath, or who knew how to draw the bow of steel and aim the arrow of strange words, golden and beautiful, who can use words beautiful enough for the preachers of God; and though they had small salaries and large families and few belongings and scant wealth, they had God. In their dreams they talked about God. Said an old preacher in my hearing at a conference: "Brother Quayle, I am very old, and have no business to be here. I have been superannuated for years, and I cannot preach; and oh," he said—and his voice was as wistful as a mother's calling the name of her dead daughter; if you have ever heard that you will never forget it—"Brother Quayle, sometimes in my sleep in the night I awaken myself from my slumber because I dream that I am preaching."

Thanks be to God for the preachers who thought so little of themselves, because they thought so much of Christ! Thank God for the preachers who had no more sense than to go around visiting everybody, and did not know that there were lowly people in the world, but thought that there were only high people in the world, because Christ died for them; and who said to every one, "Brother, Christ spoke your name in my ear and he said that he knew you. Come on over, come on over!"

"Swift's Premium" Calendar for 1916

Little Red Riding Hood

4 Fairy Tale Pictures

By Jessie Willcox Smith

This is one of the best and most novel calendars we have published. It is arranged in four leaves—each leaf picturing a scene from a popular fairy tale with a brief word story on the back.

The scenes are from the following fairy tales:

Little Red Riding Hood—Goldilocks
Cinderella—Jack and the Bean Stalk

Every child will delight in seeing these favorite fairy tale characters attractively illustrated in brilliant colors. Everybody will appreciate the artistic conception of these child-like myth children so masterfully painted by this famous artist.

The calendar will be a daily reminder of the satisfaction given by

"Swift's Premium" Hams and Bacon

How to Get the Calendar

This beautiful calendar will be sent to any address in United States for 10 cents in coin or stamps:
or—Trade-mark end of five "Swift's Premium" Oleomargarine cartons or—Labels from five "Swift's Premuim" Sliced Bacon cartons or—4 Covers from Brookfield Sausage cartons or—6 Maxine Elliott Soap wrappers or—10 Wool Soap wrappers
(add 10c extra in Canada on account of duty.)

Swift & Company 4215 Packers Ave. Chicago

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE

To try in your own home 30 days free, no matter where you live. Show your friends. Send it back at our expense if you do not want to keep it. Hundreds of thousands in daily use. Perfect bakers, efficient heaters, made of high grade material, beautifully finished, smooth design, guaranteed for years by our Two Million Dollar Bond.

Ask your dealers to show you Hoosier Stoves. Write for our big free book showing photographs, describing large assortment of sizes and designs to select from, explaining our free trial. Send postal today. Write your name and address plainly. No obligations.

HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, Ind.

20 Packets Seeds—10c.

We want every reader to test "HARRIS SEEDS THAT HUSTLE." Send 10c. now—before you forget for this mammoth collection. We send you 20 separate packets finest varieties—one each—of Beets, Carrot, Cabbage, Celery, Cucumber, Lettuce, Cress, Muskmelon, Watermelon, Onion, Parsley, Parsnip, Radish, Salsify, Spinach, Tomato, Mixed Poppies Giant Cosmos, Double Jap Calendula and Children's Botanical Garden, a curiosity collection of flower seeds. With this collection we send rebate check for 10c. and big catalog of world's finest seeds.

HARRIS BROS. SEED CO., 180 Main St., Mt. Pleasant, Mich.

Public Speaking Taught at Home

Write for our special offer. Become a powerful speaker in spare time by mail. Overcome "stage fright", enlarge your vocabulary, train your memory, gain self-confidence. Learn how and when to use gestures; how to suit the speech to the occasion. Increase your earning power—become more popular. We have trained hundreds of successful speakers by mail.

Write Now for Special Offer Send quick for details of our special limited offer. No obligation. Write while this offer lasts.

Public Speaking Dept. American Correspondence School of Law, 2491 Manhattan Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

PIANO TUNING AT HOME

A LUCRATIVE PROFESSION easily acquired. Anyone can learn. Our PATENTED TUNE-A-PHONE METHOD makes success more certain than best oral instruction. Guaranteed. Write for FREE BOOKLET, telling how our STUDENTS MAKE BIG MONEY.
Niles Bryant School of Tuning, 22 Inst. Bld., Battle Creek, Mich.

How We Protect Our Good Name

To you, Goodyear quality—which we believe to be the highest it is possible to put into a tire—means service and utter tire satisfaction.
To us, it means the continuance of your good will, and the good will of the increasing thousands of Goodyear users.
Your thoughts of Goodyear are worth more to us than any monetary profit.
And to retain your good opinion, and protect our good name, we constantly build into our product quality beyond which we believe it impossible to go.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company
AKRON, OHIO

GOODYEAR
AKRON
TIRES

Burns Kerosene (Coal Oil)

LIGHTS WHOLE ROOM
BEATS ELECTRIC OR GASOLINE
10 DAYS FREE Charges Prepaid Send No Money

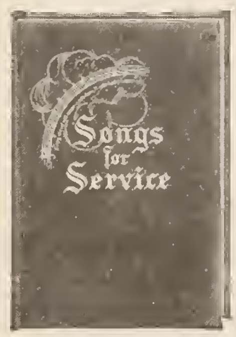
We don't ask you to pay a cent until you have used this wonderful modern light in your own home ten days—we even pay transportation charges. You may return it at our expense if not perfectly satisfied after putting it to every possible test for 10 nights. You can't possibly lose a cent. We want to prove to you that it makes an ordinary oil lamp look like a candle; beats electric, gasoline or acetylene. Lights and is put out like old oil lamp. Tests by Government and 33 leading Universities show it Burns 50 Hours on One Gallon common coal oil, and gives more than twice as much light as the best round wick open flame lamps. No odor, smoke or noise; simple, clean, no pressure, won't explode. Several million people already enjoying this powerful, steady light, nearest to sunlight. Guaranteed.

Men with Rigs or Autos make big money

delivering the ALADDIN on our easy plan. No previous experience necessary. Practically every farm home and small town home will buy after trying. Conrad, a farmer near Basil, O., and subscriber to Christian Herald, used an Aladdin one year in his own home, then started distributing among his neighbors and has disposed of several hundred lamps in his County the past three winters, making splendid money. Thousands who are coining money endorse the Aladdin just as strongly.' No Money Required. We furnish capital to reliable men to get started. Ask for our distributor's plan and learn how to make big money in unoccupied territory. Sample sent for 10 Days' Free Trial. We want one user in each locality to whom we can refer customers. Be the first and get our special introductory offer under which you get your own lamp free for showing it to a few neighbors and sending in their orders. Write quick for 10 DAY ABSOLUTELY FREE TRIAL. Address nearest office.

Won GOLD MEDAL at World's Exposition San Francisco

MANTLE LAMP COMPANY, 339 Aladdin Building
Largest Kerosene (Coal Oil) Mantle Lamp House in the World
CHICAGO NEW YORK CITY PORTLAND, ORE. MONTREAL or WINNIPEG, CANADA



A Great Song Book

Sparkling, snappy, invigorating, energizing, appealing, effective and useful, this latest and greatest of Rodeheaver productions has set a new high-water mark in gospel songbook making. Hundreds of churches, Sunday schools and other religious societies are already using it and are expressing unbounded approval and delight. The first to introduce it into your church community will have exercised "winning strategy."

Songs for Service

has 288 pages, is printed from new plates on better-than-usual paper and is finely bound. Orchestrated for 15 instruments. Printed in both round and shaped notes. It is the book used exclusively in the "Billy" Sunday campaigns.
EXAMINE A COPY FREE—Simply state that you will either return it in good condition within 15 days or will remit the retail price. State binding desired.
PRICES—Cloth 35c, limp 25c, manila 20c per copy, postpaid.
Cloth $25, limp $18, manila $15 per 100, not prepaid.

THE RODEHEAVER CO.
1083 MONON BLDG., CHICAGO, 633 LIPPINCOTT BLDG., PHILADELPHIA

Guaranteed
Everbearing
Strawberries

Free for Testing

A pair of mated EVERBEARING STRAWBERRY PLANTS FREE if you will report as to your success with them. Will bear loads of big, red, berries from June to November. We have counted 480 berries, blossoms and buds on a single plant. A postal will bring the plants, also enough seed of the new CEREAL FETERITA to plant a rod square of ground. Also a pkt. of perennial ORIENTAL POPPY seed. Send 10 cts for mailing expense or not, as you please. Write today and get acquainted with
THE GARDNER NURSERY COMPANY
Box 769, Osage, Iowa.

LAW

LEARN AT HOME
SPARE TIME ONLY

Graduate correspondence students most successful at Bar Examinations. Our method of instruction same as HARVARD, MICHIGAN and other big Law Schools. GUARANTEE to coach FREE graduates failing to pass Bar Examinations. Write today for special offer and catalog. (Sent free.) Offer limited, write immediately.

American Correspondence School of Law, Dept. 9491, Manhattan Bldg., Chicago

A Forty-Language Guide Book

THE War in Europe has produced a number of unexpected results (and undoubtedly will bring about many more), but certainly one of the most unlooked-for will be an increased knowledge of the Scriptures. It is probably true that since Miles Coverdale printed the first English Bible, the Old Book—in parts or in the whole—has never come into the possession of so many millions of people as has been the case since the war began.

Chaplains and workers in the armies agree in their statements as to the eagerness that, speaking generally, prevails among the soldiers to obtain the Scriptures, and religious leaders in Great Britain are hopeful that a great revival will come from this new study of the Word of God by men who are looking realities in the face on the battlefields of the world.

On the bearing of the war on the work of the oldest Bible Society in the world, the British and Foreign, its Secretary, Rev. John H. Ritson, had some interesting remarks to make in a recent interview.

"It is not generally known," said he, "that over forty languages are spoken by men actually fighting in the war, which of itself shows the world-wide character of the conflict. Those languages include the tongues of the Great Powers and lesser known ones such as Welsh, Gaelic, Flemish, Bohemian, Bulgarian, Serbian, Polish, Esthonian (West Russia), Lettish, Lithuanian. Ruthenian, Turkish, Armenian, Arabic, Dutch (in South Africa), Japanese, Fijian, Tunisian, Arabic, Morgevi (Morocco), Persian, Pasthu, Urdu, Mepauli, Yiddish, Hebrew, Slovak, Slovenian, Finnish, Maori, Punjaubi; and there are others, but these are sufficien show how varied are the races enga in this awful struggle.

"In each of the forty-odd langu we had some portion of the Script ready," continued Mr. Ritson; many cases the whole Bible; and w the books were not already pri plates were ready from which edit of all sizes were immediately struck

All the troops of the peoples al named have been supplied with Scriptures by the Bible Society's a and colporteurs, who have never ce their work in any of the bellige countries; none of the depots has closed (unless maybe in Warsaw now in Belgrade), and it is pleasan know that even the "unspeakable Tu has not interfered with the Soci depot in Constantinople. One o fact which sheds a little gleam of amid the horrors of the war is tha the fighting nations have allowed society to ship Bibles to and fro. it too much to hope that by allowing Word of God to pass the barriers warring people are admitting an e sary of peace?

About three millions of Bibles, Testaments, and portions have distributed by the Bible Society am fighting men, wounded and priso while all the time its normal work gone on as usual; quite recently it opened a depot in Abyssinia an fitting up a floating depot for worl the Amazon. Mr. Ritson's opini and he has been seventeen years retary of the British and Foreign Society—is that there never was a when people took to the Bible as do today.

HARRY ELMOR

Correspondence of Professor David Smith, D.

HOW is it that wicked, blasphemous thoughts come into one's mind—thoughts that one hates and is terrified by? They make me feel sometimes as if there were almost no hope for me, and as if I could never be forgiven. And yet I love all that is good and true and noble, and hate whatever is base and mean. What does it all mean? Are such wicked imaginations prompted by the devil, and how can one get rid of them? One occasionally gives way to a strong temptation, knowing it to be wrong and yet giving way (perhaps it may be through not fighting hard enough), and is immediately sorry for it. Is that what is meant by the "sinning wilfully" spoken of in Hebrews?—J. L.

John Bunyan had precisely this experience. In his autobiography, "Grace Abounding," he tells how diabolical impulses would seize him. "I often found my mind suddenly put upon it to curse and swear, or to speak some grievous thing against God, or his Son, and of the Scriptures. . . . And in so strong a measure was the temptation upon me that often I have been ready to clap my hands under my chin to hold my mouth from opening; at other times to leap with my head downward into some muckhill hole, to keep my mouth from speaking." You remember what befell the pilgrim in his passage through the Valley of the Shadow of Death. "I took notice that now poor Christian was so confounded that he did not know his own voice. And thus I perceived it: Just when he was come over against the mouth of the burning pit, one of the wicked ones got behind him, and stepped up softly to him, and whisperingly suggested many grievous blasphemies to him, which he verily thought had proceeded from his own mind. This put Christian more to it than anything that he met with before, even to think that he should now blaspheme Him that he loved so much before; yet, if he could have helped it, he would not have done it, but he had not the discretion either to stop his ears or to know from whence those blasphemies came."

There lies your comfort. Your wicked thoughts intrude upon you; they are suggestions from without, and you hate them. It is an experience like this accredits the Scriptural doctrine evil is no more impersonal force—t are not only good spirits, but evil malign angels ever besetting us, obs ing our weaknesses and taking ad tage of our unguarded moments. T let us alone when we are under dominion of sin, for then the evil is in our hearts suffices, and they no need to intervene; but the mo we turn to God they prosecute fiendish activities. Hence it app that those evil suggestions and sensitiveness concerning them, are a ally an evidence that you are on heavenward road. If you loved t they would be your own, the thou of your own evil heart; but bec you hate them they are alien insi tions. Have no fear. This is not "sin wilfully." It is involuntary, an truth it is not sinning at all, so lon your soul recoils from the evil sug tion. It is indeed a temptation, temptation is not sin, else our would not have been sinless, sinc was tempted. Sin lies not in b tempted, but in yielding to the tem tion. "First," says St. Thoma Kempis, "there occurs to the mi simple thought, then strong imagina afterwards delight, and wicked m ment and assent." It is with "strong imagination"—that is, harboring of the "thought"—tha begins. The harboring of the tho leads to delighting in it and obeyin

You are quite right in tracing trouble to the nervous excitabilit your disposition and your pronene introspection. It was when he wa the Valley of the Shadow that Chri was thus assailed, and the remed that you should escape into the day and the broad sunshine. Morbid is the tempter's opportunity, an surest antidote lies in occupying mind with wholesome and uns employment. It is your misfor that you have "no definite work," until you have some you will n enjoy spiritual health. There is service for you in this strenuous w especially in days like these. Fir and do it, and then you will not "w and let your imagination run a with you."

DAVID SMIT

ARE YOU A GOOD OBSERVER?

The Christian Herald Offers Cash Rewards of

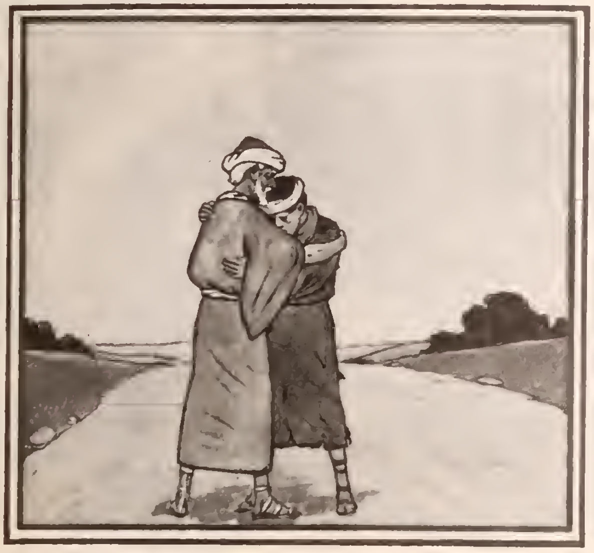
$3,500.00

For Picking Texts to Describe Sixty Pictures

IN THE

Bible Picture Contest

Picture No. 7



Here Is the Full List of Rewards Which Will Be Distributed to 419 Persons to Encourage Effort

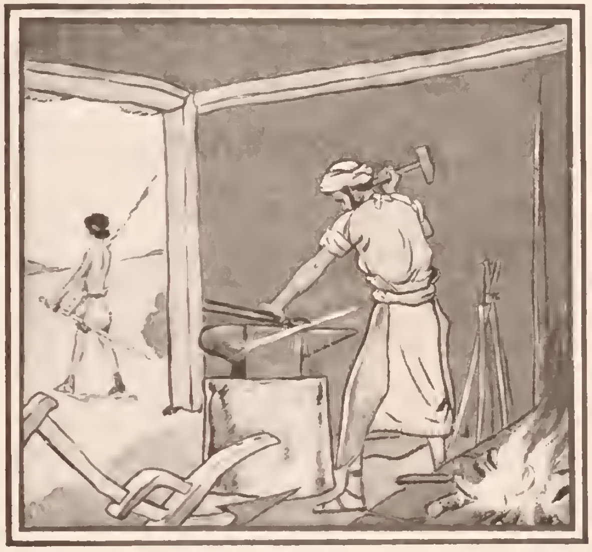
FIRST REWARD	$1,250.00
Second Reward	$625.00
Third Reward	$350.00
Fourth Reward	$250.00
Fifth Reward	$150.00
Sixth Reward	$100.00
Seventh Reward	$75.00
Eighth Reward	$50.00
Ninth Reward	$20.00
Fifteen Rewards of $2.50 each	$37.50
Three Hundred and Ninety-five Rewards of $1.50 each,	$592.50

Now Is the Time to Start

You can obtain, free of charge, the first six pictures which have already appeared in the Christian Herald in connection with other data, as explained below, in the event that you did not see or have mislaid last week's issue.

You should greatly enjoy participating in the Bible Picture Contest. Every member of the family and all your acquaintances will find it

Picture No. 8



ALL IN CASH

419 REWARDS

aggregating

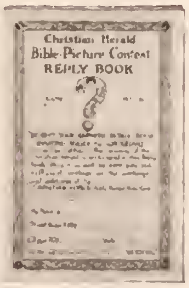
$3,500.00

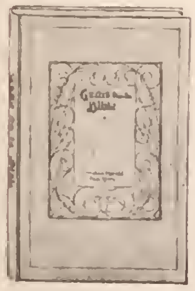
The Contest Is Open to All, Old and Young

No special knowledge is needed. Contestants are to pick their answers for the picture out of a given list of eligible Bible verses available to everybody.

An Absorbing Home Recreation

The Bible Picture ContestOutfit consists of these two books each 7⅛ x 4¾ inches in size. Read the details to the right





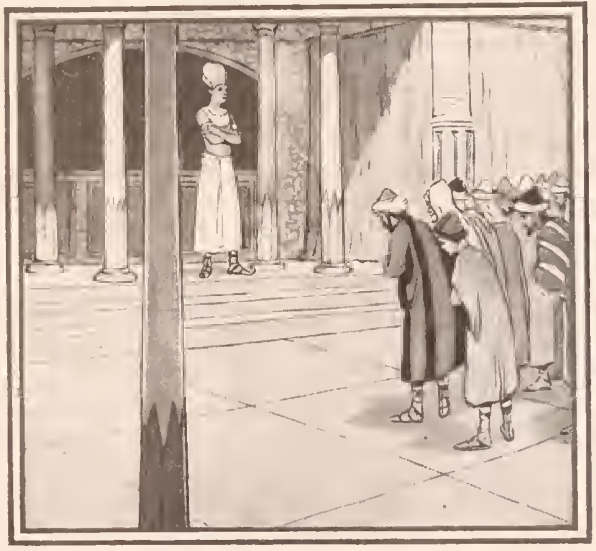
Included in the Bible Picture Contest Outfit are full rules, object lessons and the back pictures if requested

Invest your spare quarter hours in the pleasure and benefit of matching appropriate Bible verses to a series of pictures. Three pictures each week. Don't send in your answers until all the pictures (60 in all) have appeared.

An impartial committee will approve the best of the answers submitted by the contestants. The rules as announced will govern.

2,000 Bible verses have been selected as your standard to choose from. They can be found in your own Bible by obtaining the references. However, as the full list is contained in the handsome book "Gems from the Bible," you may wish to consult this book as a convenient guide. Read our special offer.

Picture No. 9



HOW TO OBTAIN "GEMS FROM THE BIBLE" AND "REPLY BOOK"

OFFER NO. 1: "Gems from the Bible," together with the booklet known as "Contest Reply Book," into which you can write your answers, will be sent on receipt of $2.00 for yearly subscription to the CHRISTIAN HERALD (new or renewal).

OFFER NO. 2: "Gems from the Bible" and "Reply Book" will be sent FREE to any subscriber who sends us $1.50 for a new yearly subscription to the CHRISTIAN HERALD.

OFFER NO. 3: "Gems from the Bible" and "Reply Book" will be sent FREE to any subscriber who sends us $2.00 for a new subscriber who enters the contest. The new subscriber will receive the CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, "Gems from the Bible" and "Reply Book" and the present subscriber, sending the new subscription, will receive, as a present from us, "Gems from the Bible" and "Reply Book" FREE.

Address: THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City

Amarilly of Clothes-Line Alley

Continued from page 17

didn't seem exactly wise to separate you from your family, surround you with different environments and then have you come home to—the alley. I know your loyal little heart would never waver in its affection for them, but such a decided change would not be wise.

"Now, you see, this farm business simplifies things wonderfully. With the thrift and industry of your brothers and the Boarder I can easily see the farm is going to be a prosperous undertaking, and by the time you are finished—say five years, for Miss Varley tells me you are quite up with the girls of your age in your studies—they will have a substantial country home which you will enjoy immensely between times. There will be only one term this year, but I think you should remain through the summer vacation and have private tutoring."

The waiter entered with the first course. When he had again gone out, Amarilly looked up at Derry, her eyes full of a yearning that touched him.

"It would be lovely, Mr. Derry. Too lovely to happen, you know."

"There, Amarilly," he said with a combination of frown and smile, "there it is again—your contradiction of eyes and mouth—the one of a gazelle; the other of a mule. I'll answer your objections before you make them.

The look he had ascribed to Amarilly's mouth came into the forward thrust of his chin.

"First, you think you are too proud and independent to accept. From your viewpoint it seems a good deal to do. From mine, proved by my bank account, it is an absurdly small thing to do, but if you are truly grateful for what you are pleased to think I have done for you, you will let me do this, because you feel sorry for me that I am so alone in the world. And St. John himself would tell you it was your duty to make the most of your talents and opportunities. You can also do a little charity work in keeping me straight, for you see, Amarilly, I am going to Paris for two years to study, and I will have an incentive to work and not play too hard if I know I have a little sister over here in school who would be sorry if her brother went wrong and didn't get to be a great artist. So for your sake, and for my sake—"

"But there's ma's sake," she said wistfully. "The Boarder says woman's work on the farm is hard."

"There's the Boarderess and Co—"

"Lily Rose is not strong and doesn't know much about farm work, and Co's only a kid."

"Well, I hadn't finished. You have an interest in the farm as one of the syndicate, and you have some money saved."

"Yes," admitted Amarilly, bewildered, not following his train of thought.

"Well, you won't need that now, and it can go toward a woman to help during the busy seasons. And you can go home summers. Every week you are to write me a long letter and tell me about yourself and them."

Amarilly was gazing into space, and in silence he watched the odd little signs of conflict. It was the same sort of a struggle, only harder and more prolonged, that she had passed through two years before at the theater when her untutored conscience bade her relinquish her seat. Suddenly her countenance became illumined.

"I am going to do it, Mr. Derry! I am going to let you send me to school, and abroad and wherever you think best."

THE END

◆

TIMKEN ROLLER BEARINGS

Even Billy Knew

A Scene from a Familiar Drama

DRAMATIS PERSONAE

ROBERT PIERCE, prospective buyer.... ....Any Business Man

HELEN PIERCE, his wife.......... ....Any Average Woman

BILLY PIERCE, his son....A Typical Boy

CHARLES KELLOGG................ .....A composite of 40,000 dealers

SCENE—Dealer's Show Room. TIME, any day in the year. Pierce family and dealer discussing features of car, following demonstration trip.

Billy—(Putting his hand on the front hub) Got Timken Bearings in here? You didn't say so in your ads.

Kellogg—(Scratching his head.) Thought they were given in our specifications. Well, they're in the car all right. (Turning to Mr. Pierce.) Your boy seems to be wise to the big things in motor cars.

Pierce—Yes, he's the best posted one in the family—but I'm just as much concerned about bearings as he, and I'd have asked about them if he hadn't.

Mrs. Pierce—Why are Timken Bearings so important?

Billy—(Eagerly.) Let me tell her.

Kellogg—(With a grin.) All right, young man, what's the reason?

Billy—'Cause they do all the things any other bearings will and they last a lot longer while they're doin' 'em.

Kellogg—You see, Mrs. Pierce, the bearings in a motor car must do a number of things. Their original function, of course, is to eliminate friction.

Billy—(interrupting.) Sure! If the axles and insides of the hubs were grindin' away on each other, they'd be hard to turn, and they'd get hot as the dickens, and wear out awful fast. So they put bearings in there, an' the wheels roll 'round on 'em, easy as anything.

Mrs. Pierce—That's all clear, but why are Timken Bearings better than others?

Kellogg—Because they not only eliminate friction, but carry the weight of car and passengers and meet end-thrust as well.

Mrs. Pierce—What is "end-thrust"?

Billy—It's what makes you think you're gonna slide off the seat when you go whizzin' 'round a corner. Just think of all that weight tryin' to shove the axle ends right through the wheels sidewise!

Pierce—You've overlooked one thing, Billy—there are different kinds of bearings. Any of them reduce friction, but some can't stand end-thrust at all: Timken Bearings do both.

Kellogg—(Taking two bearings from his display board.) Let me show you, Mrs. Pierce, what your husband means. You notice in this Timken Bearing it makes no difference whether the weight presses straight down or from the side. In this other bearing the side pressure would quickly wear the parts out of shape or push them out of place, because the bearing will carry only a straight downward pressure.

Billy—(Breaking in again.) Besides that, Timken is the only kind of bearing you can make as good as new by pushin' the parts closer together.

Kellogg—That's a big point, Billy. Timken Bearings not only show less wear after thousands of miles o hard service, but what little wear there is can be entirely corrected by this simple adjustment. Other types of bearings, when worn, must be replaced.

Pierce—I've heard enough about bearing troubles from some of my friends. I won't take any chances in my car.

Kellogg—Well, any bearings that stand up on front axles and outlast the car, ought to satisfy you. Timken Bearings have been doing that ever since the first days of motor cars.

Billy—Yes, and "front-wheel service is the test that makes or breaks."

Kellogg—(Laughing.) Your boy certainly reads advertising, Mr. Pierce!

Mrs. Pierce—Why are the front wheels so important?

Kellogg—There's no other plac the ca where bearings get such sev punishment. Timken Bearings a built t stand that extra hard servi You'l find it all explained in this b "T Care and Character of Beari ."

Mrs. Pierce—I'm glad your is well built, because it's a perfect uty. I like the big seats and everyt g about it. I'm willing to take Mr. P e's and Billy's word for the things I 't see.

Billy—(Anxiously.) Mr. Kell . How many Timken Bearings are here in your car?

Kellogg—(Pulling a little book t of his pocket.) Here's the eviden on th page of "The Companie. Timken Keeps."

Billy—(Reading aloud.) "Tim 1 Bearings in front and rear whe in th transmission, on the pinion sl and a the differential."—That's the uff!

Kellogg—If you want a copy, ite th Timken Company, either a Canton Ohio, or Detroit, Michigan.

Billy—I'm satisfied, Dad, pay m now and let's drive her home.

Pierce—(Producing check book. Shall make this to your order, M Kellogg or to the Company?

(Curtain)

"American Ideals"

MR. CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER'S new book, "American Ideals," is particularly timely at present, when "men of alien sympathies" (to use the President's phrase) have aired their views so freely. It is refreshing to find a book in which a true American voice speaks neither bombastic spread-eagleism nor cynical pessimism. Mr. Cooper is not blind to the follies and dangers in American life today, but his unfaltering conviction is that of James Bryce, viz., that the fundamental sanity and common sense of the American people and their inbred idealism for higher things will in the long run triumph over our pangs of growth. This is the keynote of the book—a tempered but very real enthusiasm for the ideals of America and the heritage of our Republic.

Mr. Cooper is particularly well equipped to discuss American traits from a detached standpoint. He is well known as a traveler in many parts of the world. He has learned by intimate association with foreign customs that our American way of doing things is not the only way nor necessarily the best way; consequently he views American life from a human and not merely a provincial standpoint. A particularly valuable section of his book deals with America's spiritual kinship with the Orient. Mr. Cooper finds in our American character a rich vein of unselfish idealism, and in this respect we are much closer to the Far East than to our European cousins.

Perhaps the most distinctive feature of Mr. Cooper's valuable book is the testimony of one hundred representative American citizens which he has gathered into the chapter "An American Symposium." The author asked one hundred Americans of his acquaintance, men in all walks of life, these two questions:

One—What are the leading ideals of the men with whom you most frequently associate?

Two—What do you consider be the chief points of weakness in our temporary American life?

In reply to these questions h received very interesting and sugg ive replies. In an important chapt he summarizes the gist of the answe received and quotes some of the ost striking ones.

"American Ideals" is a thoug ful and penetrating study, and Mr. C per crystallizes in a clear and convi ing way the meaning and message o our civilization. He is particularly vell equipped to do this by his broad k wledge of American educational ins tutions. He has visited more than ive hundred universities, colleges nd schools in this country, and is a re lar lecturer and writer on educational t ics as well as co-editor of Educat nal Foundations.

Peter's Sermon at Pentecost

Iernational Sunday School Lesson for January 16. Acts 2:14-47

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By REV. F. B. MEYER, D.D.

"Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." Acts 2: 21.

That all-comprehending word whosoever, ike a big seine-net, included all the mass f people on whose upturned faces Peter ooked. In his own words, "by the hand of awless men" they had just slain the Messiah. Already conviction was at work. he Master's forecast was being fulfilled in heir agonized experience: "When the pirit of Truth is come, he will convict the orld of sin, because they believe not on e." He had come and was driving coniction home to consciences and hearts that ad suddenly commenced to realize that he great and terrible day of the Lord had lready broken upon them. With Bunyan, e may amplify this scene. One cries: 'But I drove in the nails of the cross." "Whosoever," replies Peter. "But I pierced his side," cries another. "Whosoever," says the apostle. "But I mocked at him, and spat in his face," says another. "Whosoever" is the repeated reply. "Repent ye, and be baptized, every one of you, unto the remission of your sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." A holy man of God used to rejoice because the chief of sinners had already been saved, because if he had crossed the plank into the ark, there was hope for a less weight than his to follow. Call on the name of the Lord, the Lord who died and lives again, and whosoever thou art, thou shalt be saved. Trust him in thine heart, and confess him with thy mouth!

Peter's Pentecostal Sermon

By Arthur H. Howland

THE Miracles of Pentecost have been widely discussed, but the greatest miracle of all was that ich took place in the soul of Simon er. A few days before he had been eculiarly base and despicable coward; ay he stands out in splendid courage. man ever had occasion to accuse an embly of a crime so monstrous as that h which Peter was to charge this ish multitude. They had long aited the Messiah; now it was Peter's k to tell them that the Messiah had ne and they had killed him. A man h a long record of bravery and faithness might well have shrunk from h a task. But there is nothing to icate that Peter shrank or hesitated moment.

efore analyzing Peter's Pentecostal mon—notice again that it was the sence and power of the Holy Spirit t had drawn the crowd to the spot. stors and church workers often exss surprise that people do not come church. They mourn and wonder l ask one another, "Why do they not ne?" It might help them solve their dle to put the question the other way out: "Why should they come?" hat is there in the church that will aw a crowd of people away from the nforts of their homes or the pleasures d freedom of the open air? There has t to be a positive power, a definite traction, something real and fascinatg and magnetic, to pull the people into church.

And precisely this kind of a thing had st happened in that Jerusalem house, an upper room of which had been iting and praying a hundred and enty friends of Jesus. Something had ppened to them. Something had me to them. A delight, a glory, a passn, so unusual and extravagant as to be staken by the gathering crowds for toxication. This was the question on their lips: "What meaneth this?" hatever it was, it had changed Peter m a coward to a brave man, and he od up to tell them.

Young people ought to get into the bit of analyzing the sermons and adesses they hear.

Remember, Peter's topic is their quesn: "What meaneth this?" A huned and twenty souls have been filled th the Holy Spirit, and the crowd asks ter to explain. Before analyzing the rmon notice how much of it is quoted ripture. The whole sermon as rerted by Luke contains only twentyree verses. Eleven of these are Scripre quotations. So this was not only a spel sermon, the first gospel sermon; was a Bible sermon. It is hard to sist the temptation to give the preachs two more hints about preaching. ey wonder why people don't come to ar them. Perhaps if they would each the gospel and preach the Bible ople would come.

Peter's first answer to the question, What meaneth this?" is to say that it a fulfilment of the prophecy that the oly Spirit was to be poured forth upon man souls. He quotes the wonderful Pentecostal prophecy from Joel and says: "This is the day. This thing that Joel foretold has happened. My companions and myself have just received the experience Joel foresaw." Notice again the positiveness, the precision with which Peter talked with his fire-touched tongue. He added to the power of the Scriptures the power of his own personal testimony. "This blessing has come to me. I am one of these one hundred and twenty people who have been acting so strangely that you thought we were intoxicated. God's grace has come to me. God's promise has been fulfilled for me."

But the prophecy of Joel that has just been fulfilled was not only for preachers and other mature people. "Your sons and your daughters shall prophesy"—that is, shall receive helpful messages from Jehovah which they will tell again to others, "and your young men shall see visions"—visions of truth, visions of righteousness, visions of God.

This is the first division of Peter's sermon. A statement that the blessing just received is the blessing of the Holy Spirit's fulness, and a ratification of that explanation from the words of Scripture. His second division is a beautiful and wonderful epitome of the life, death and resurrection of Jesus. He puts that all into three verses, the 22d, 23d, and 24th. It is into these verses that he first puts the accusation that they have killed God's Messiah: "Him ye have taken and by wicked hands have crucified and slain." But he does not dwell now upon this accusation. He is to use it later with more telling effect. He stops to prove his claims for Jesus and his resurrection by the Scriptures again. The heart of the quotation from the Psalms is the 27th verse. "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." Peter argues that David could not have been referring to himself, for his body was still lying entombed, and they themselves knew its sepulcher. Peter insists that David was foretelling the resurrection of Jesus—and then adds his own and his companions' startling testimony: "This Jesus hath God raised up; whereof we all are witnesses."

Here, then, says Peter, is the explanation of this that has happened. The prophets said the Holy Spirit would come, and he has come to us. He came to us because Jesus of Nazareth, God's Messiah, came to earth, lived, died and rose again. "Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear." He makes another quotation from Scripture, foretelling the ascension of Jesus, which had just taken place. "Therefore," he concludes, "let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God hath made this same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Messiah."

THERE was the sermon. What were the results? Conviction. Terrible conviction. They were guilty. They had killed the Messiah. They could not doubt that he had risen from the dead. They could not doubt that he had ascended to God's right hand.

Start Them On Oat-Lined Paths

Do you agree with this?

That oats as a vim-food stands unique and supreme? That modern science confirms the lore of the Ages about oats as the food for growth?

And that love of oats, inbred in childhood, lasts to the end of the journey?

If so, start children on the oat-lined path. This energy food makes the steep places easier. It qualifies body and brain. At every step, at every age, the love of oats will prove helpful.

Quaker Oats

Spirit-Giving, Energizing Flakes

We help you to foster the oat habit by making oats extra-delicious. That is, we pick out for Quaker Oats just the richest, plumpest grains. Two-thirds of each bushel are discarded in this brand.

That, with our process, creates a delightful dish. Its flavor has won connoisseurs the world over. Quaker Oats is the breakfast of kings. Yet the millions can enjoy it without any extra price.

If love of oats is important, Quaker Oats is important. And this is to urge that you get it.

10c and 25c per package
Except in Far West and South

Quaker Cookers

Now in 700,000 Homes

Pure Aluminum
Extra Large

Another help is this Quaker Cooker, made to our order so Quaker Oats may be cooked in the ideal way. Made of pure aluminum, extra heavy, cereal capacity 2¼ quarts. Every week thousands of new homes adopt it.

Send us our trademark—the picture of the Quaker—cut from the front of five Quaker Oats packages. Send one dollar with these trademarks and this perfect cooker will be sent by parcel post. Or send us 15 of these trademarks and only 75 cents.

If you love oats well enough to get Quaker, let us supply you this cooker. Address

The Quaker Oats Company
Railway Exchange, Chicago

(1117)

MAGAZINE READING FOR 1916

IF you have not ordered your magazines for this year, now is the time to do so. The Christian Herald Magazine Bureau has made arrangements with the publishers of other magazines whereby readers of the Christian Herald can obtain two or more magazines at a considerable saving over the price if ordered singly. The prices given here are for one year (new or renewal) and can go to different addresses, excepting in a few cases noted otherwise. No one can fill your order for these magazines at any lower price.

The cost of any combination can be obtained by referring to the periodical list below. Canadian postage 50 cents additional; foreign postage, $1.00 additional.

WE WANT YOUR ORDER WHETHER CHRISTIAN HERALD IS INCLUDED OR NOT

BIBLE PICTURE CONTEST

Magazines	Price
Christian Herald Gems from Bible and Reply Book	$2.00
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Gems from Bible and Reply Book	$2.50
Christian Herald American Messenger Gems from Bible and Reply Book	$2.10

GEMS FROM THE BIBLE and REPLY BOOK are supplied only with these magazines. See full details of Bible Picture Contest on page 21.

SPECIAL COMBINATIONS

Magazines	Price	Saving
Christian Herald Housewife	$1.55	Save 45c
Christian Herald McCall's (free pattern) Housewife To-day's (free pattern)	$1.90	Save $1.10
Christian Herald Pictorial Review	$2.40	Save 60c
Christian Herald Woman's Home Companion	$2.40	Save 60c
Christian Herald Home Needlework	$1.75	Save 50c
Christian Herald Mother's Magazine	$2.00	Save $1.00
Christian Herald Etude (Music)	$2.00	Save $1.00
Christian Herald *Mother's Magazine *Ladies' World *McCall's (free pattern)	$2.40	Save $2.10

Magazines	Price	Saving
Christian Herald People's Home Jnl	$1.55	Save 45c
Christian Herald Little Folks	$1.90	Save 60c
Christian Herald Ladies' World Housewife	$2.00	Save $1.00
Christian Herald American Poultry Advocate Book—200 Eggs a Year per Hen	$2.00	Save 50c
Christian Herald American	$2.40	Save 60c
Christian Herald *Woman's Home Companion *American	$3.15	Save $1.35
Christian Herald *Delineator *Everybody's	$3.15	Save $1.35
Christian Herald Youth's Companion McCall's (pattern)	$3.25	Save 75c
Christian Herald Everybody's Woman's Home Companion	$3.65	Save 85c
Christian Herald Woman's Home Companion Review of Revs.	$4.40	Save $1.60
Christian Herald McCalls (pattern)	$1.65	Save 35c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla	$2.00	Save 50c
Christian Herald Housewife People's Home Jnl.	$2.15	Save 35c
Christian Herald McCall's (pattern) Woman's Home Companion	$2.90	Save 60c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Pictorial Review	$3.05	Save 95c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Woman's Home Companion	$3.25	Save 75c
Christian Herald American Boy Woman's Home Companion	$3.25	Save 75c
Christian Herald Pictorial Review Woman's Home Companion	$3.65	Save 85c
Christian Herald Woman's Home Companion World's Work	$4.40	Save $1.60
Christian Herald Everybody's Review of Revs.	$4.40	Save $1.60
Christian Herald Ladies' World	$1.90	Save 60c
Christian Herald McClure's Mag.	$2.15	Save 35c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Home Needlework	$2.40	Save 85c
Christian Herald Boys' Magazine Housewife Illustrated World	$3.15	Save $1.35
Christian Herald Pictorial Review Metropolitan	$3.15	Save $1.35
Christian Herald Delineator Woman's Home Companion	$3.55	Save 95c
Christian Herald Current Opinion	$3.65	Save 85c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Pictorial Review Ladies' World	$3.65	Save $1.35
Christian Herald Collier's Woman's Home Companion	$4.15	Save $1.35
Christian Herald Youth's Comp'n Woman's Home Companion	$4.40	Save 60c

* Must go to the same address.

Send All Orders and Make All Remittances Payable to

CHRISTIAN HERALD MAGAZINE BUREAU

Bible House, New York, N. Y.

With the spectacle of the Pentecostal blessing before their eyes, with the sound of Peter's Pentecostal sermon in their ears, they knew themselves guilty in God's sight, they felt the soul hunger for the heavenly blessing these Galileans had received, and so they cried out: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?"

Peter now leads the after-meeting. "Repent. Be baptized in the name of Jesus for the remission of your sins. Ye, too, shall receive this gift of the Holy Ghost."

Here follows one of the most beautiful verses of the Bible. So many people think wistfully of the deeper and richer experiences of the religious life and sigh that they are not for them. Peter has a word for you. "The promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." The fact that you ever heard of these promises is a call to receive their fulfilment. The fact that you long to have them fulfilled is a call. You have precisely the same right to the blessing of the Holy Spirit that Peter had—the right of believing in Jesus.

Three thousand other persons thought so at this very time and joined themselves to the company of believers that they, too, might share the riches of the Holy Spirit's cleansing and blessing.

Now notice the beautiful practical results. See how the Pentecostal blessing enabled these believers to live together a sweet, happy, peaceful, affectionate, pious, fruitful life. "They continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship and in breaking of bread and in prayers."

Much has been said and written about the communism of Pentecost. "All that believed were together and had all things in common; and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all as every one had need." This description is repeated and amplified in chapter 4: 34, 35. But while this was a beautiful and significant episode, there is nothing in the remainder of the New Testament history or epistles to indicate that the believers continued permanently this communistic plan of living. It may have been the intention of the Holy Spirit that they should do so; an intention thwarted by the greed and deceit of Ananias and Sapphira, who brought the first note of discord into the early church. Or it may be that this Pentecostal communism was simply to provide for the great multitude of Jews who, having come from distant cities to the feasts of Passover and Pentecost, found themselves unprepared for a longer stay and, when the events of Pentecost prolonged their residence in the city, had to receive help.

But there is undoubtedly in this beautiful picture a proof of what Christians might do and a promise of what society might become. Property has been one of the chief temptations of the church.

In these modern days there comes a new call to the church to turn from the allurements of wealth and give itself afresh to the tasks of saving men's souls and of delivering their minds and bodies from ignorance and oppression.

Not only did these early Christians live in joy and good fellowship, but their lives were fruitful, for "the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved."

The How Column

Conducted by Frank L. Brown, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association.

How to Secure Home Bible Reading

AN excellent plan comes from a teacher of a class of young ladies.

"I give definite home reading work as 'Daily Bible' Outlines (as given below); questions such as, 'Find out how Moses' mother combined faith and works.' 'What does I Cor. 5: 7 say about the Passover?' 'Read Matt. 5: 7.'"

The outlines worked out by this teacher for the study of the class at home of the fourth Gospel emphasize the key words of the Gospel, "Belief" and "Life," and suggest that the following questions be applied to each chapter and the answer be recorded: 1. What signs are found in this chapter? 2. What does the chapter show of the results of belief? 3. What does the chapter show of the results of unbelief? 4. What characteristics of life are found in this chapter? 5. What characteristics of death are found here?

A teacher of Berkeley, Calif., urges Bible home reading by the class "as the basis of the lives of all men of Christlike chara r."

A wise teacher from Denver uses the ci m- stances of trouble in the lives of her sc ars to "drive home the need of the Bible the memory and life."

The "weekly reminder" by the teach has been found effective in a Brooklyn, N Y., Sunday school.

A Kansas teacher says, "I love the ble myself, and this has influenced my sch s."

A successful Brooklyn teacher v es: "Each girl of the class has a very small te- book for home work. In these books ey have jotted down the books of the Bibl te., and studied them. Then each week we ve taken one chapter, starting with the b of Matthew. I trained them so that if the ere asked what the fifth chapter of Matthe vas about, or the second chapter, etc., they uld tell. This was all notebook work wh I mapped out myself."

One of the most effective ways of g ing the scholars into the habit of daily ble home reading is to encourage the doing his in the Junior Departments and beyon In the writer's school a monthly blank was en the scholars upon which they were to ord each day by a cross their reading of the ily Bible portion. At the end of the qua a certificate was given all who had m a perfect record.

In the East Side Baptist Sunday Sch of Portland, Ore., there is a "Home Bible ad- ing Department." There is an applic on card in connection with this which reads

"I desire to become a member of the me Bible Reading Department of the East de Baptist Sunday School, and agree to re at least one chapter a day from the Bible a period of one year. I also agree to m a monthly report to the Secretary."

This monthly report card has a plac for the date, and opposite it the statement he portion read.

Four things are essential if the Bible to become the loved and used possession our scholars. They must own a good copy he Scriptures; they should be encourag to bring it to school; they should be taug to mark the Bible in a way that will m it personal and interesting; they shou be drilled by teacher or superintendent in ns for locating books, passages and h ul verses.

Above all, they need to become acqu ed with the Author of the Book. A young dy was asked by a friend her opinion of a c in book. She said she thought it very y. Some time after she became acquainted th the author of the book. She read it w. Every page had new meaning. The a or was her friend. So the Bible will bec a new book when one gets personally acqu ed with Christ. "The words that I speak to you, they are spirit and they are life."

Do You Know Your Bible

NEW QUESTIONS

List No. 9. Half-year Contest, List No.

This list of questions, postponed fron e- cember, closes the 1915 Contest.

Timothy and Titus

I AND II TIMOTHY

1. (a) What was the name of Timo 's mother? (b) What was his grandmo r's name? (c) What was his father's nation y?

2. (a) In what two towns was Tin hy known? (b) What was his reputation?

3. (a) At what city was he living and k- ing when Paul wrote? (b) What pa ge indicates that the second letter to Tin hy was written in prison? (c) What articles es Paul ask Timothy to bring with him wh he comes?

4. (a) Find the exhortations given Tin hy to study the Scriptures. (b) Those to id profitless discussions. (c) Those to ac re, or exhort others to adhere, to sound doc ne.

5. (a) What expressions show that ul was near the end of his life at the tir of writing the second epistle? (b) How d he sum up his faithful career? (c) To wha as he looking forward? (d) Who else ld receive this same reward?

TITUS

6. (a) How does Paul characterize us in the salutation of this epistle? (b) How es he characterize him in an expression ll Corinthians?

7. (a) Where was Paul planning to s nd the winter following the writing of this ep e? (b) What two friends does he ask Tit to bring? (c) To what profession did o of these friends belong?

8. (a) On what eventful journey did us accompany Paul (reference not in this epi)? (b) Where had Paul stationed Titus to k? (c) What church officers was he to ordain?

9. What advice does Paul give thr gh Titus to (a) Aged men? (b) Aged wo n? (c) Young women? (d) Young men?

10. (a) How should all Christ's foll rs live? (b) In this great passage descr ng the Christian's duty, what does Paul de re to have been the purpose of Christ's d h? (c) In what measure had the Holy Spirit en given?

Answers to these questions must reac he Christian Herald office not later than Ja 9.

Correct answers to list No. 8 will follow

A Year's Growth in Good Will

A year ago this time Dodge Brothers enjoyed an enviable reputation as manufacturers of a very large volume of motor car parts.

This reputation aroused extraordinary expectations on the part of the public, when it was announced that they would build a motor car. Thousands of dealers were eager to represent them. Thousands of orders were placed by individual buyers.

But as manufacturers of motor cars Dodge Brothers were still on trial at the bar of public opinion.

The car as a car was an unknown quantity.

In January, 1915, a few of the cars began to be shipped from the factory; and a few individual good opinions began to be formed.

The growth of this volume of good opinion was in exact ratio, at first, to the growth of the volume of production.

But not many weeks had passed before the reputation of the car outstripped the capacity to produce.

The good news of its performance travelled faster than the supply—in sixty days' time there was a waiting list in all parts of the country.

Substantially the same state of affairs has existed ever since, and exists today, in spite of largely increased production.

There is a very pronounced and definite public opinion now in this country concerning Dodge Brothers car.

Nearly every man or woman you meet has a clear-cut idea of the kind of a car it is.

How friendly and how favorable that idea is you probably know so well that it is not necessary to go into details.

In twelve months' time the American people have bought more than thirty-five million dollars' worth of Dodge Brothers cars.

This is a notable record for one year even in an industry which has been marked by many amazing achievements. For a first year, it stands absolutely unique and alone.

But the sales growth, to our way of thinking, is as nothing in importance, compared to the growth of a very favorable public opinion concerning the merits of the car.

This phase of the year's work is very gratifying to Dodge Brothers and to their representatives everywhere.

It goes without saying that Dodge Brothers will never do anything, or permit anything to be done, which might jeopardize the standing of the car with the American public.

DODGE BROTHERS, DETROIT

The price of the Touring Car or Roadster, complete, is $785 (f. o. b. Detroit)
Canadian price $1100 (add freight from Detroit)

The price of the Winter Touring Car or Roadster, complete, including regular mohair top, is $950 (f. o. b. Detroit)
Canadian price $1335 (add freight from Detroit)

"Foot and Leg Now Straight" (his mother)

Marlen Ohman had Infantile Paralysis. The result was a badly deformed foot and leg. Compare the two photographs and read his mother's letter.

"All our friends think it simply wonderful that Marlen's foot and leg are perfectly straight, and that he has such good use of it. How thankful I am that I learned of the McLain Sanitarium and its wonderful results before it was too late. I wish every mother who has a crippled child could know of your Sanitarium and its great work—and be persuaded to take her child there." MRS. CHARLES OHMAN, Box 216, Deming, New Mexico.

Infantile Paralysis often affects limbs, spine and body. Don't delay treatment.

For Crippled Children

The McLain Sanitarium is a thoroughly equipped private Institution devoted exclusively to the treatment of Club Feet, Infantile Paralysis, Spinal Diseases and Deformities, Hip Disease, Diseases of the Joints, Bow Legs, Knock Knees, Wry Neck, especially as found in children and young adults. Our book, "Deformities and Paralysis"—also "Book of References" free.

The McLain Orthopedic Sanitarium
923 Aubert Ave. St. Louis, Mo.

HAVE YOU AMMUNITION?

The nations of Europe now at war are calling for more great guns and more destructive ammunition. A great gun is worth more than a regiment of men, and one high-explosive shell will put a company of men out of action.

Systematic Bible Study

By correspondence is the only way by which many Christians can get the great guns and the destructive shells for their warfare. The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago is now providing eight courses of study that have been tested and proven worth while. The majority of these courses is Bible Study, the remaining courses being on methods of Christian work and allied subjects.

The Scofield Bible Correspondence Course

Is now owned and controlled by the Moody Bible Institute, and is the most comprehensive course ever prepared for correspondence work.

If you are within reach of the mails these courses can be taken in your homes, more than 2,300 students now taking them. 1,368 new students enrolled in the last year.

Full information will be sent on application to the

Correspondence Department
The Moody Bible Institute
Dept. F-8, 153-163 Institute Place, Chicago, Ill.

Earn a Good Income In Your Own Home

Help to meet the huge demand for knitted goods created by the war.

Industrious persons can secure profitable, all-year-round employment on Auto-Knitters. Experience is unnecessary, distance immaterial. Write for particulars, rates of pay, etc. Send two cents in stamps.

AUTO-KNITTER HOSIERY CO. of Leicester, England
147 F Franklin Street, Buffalo, N.Y.

Sunshine Lamp 300 Candle Power FREE

To Try In Your Own Home

Turns night into day. Gives better light than gas, electricity or 18 ordinary lamps at one-tenth the cost. For Homes, Stores, Halls, Churches. A child can carry it. Makes its light from common gasoline. No wick. No chimney. Absolutely SAFE.

COSTS 1 CENT A NIGHT

We want one person in each locality to whom we can refer new customers. Take advantage of our SPECIAL FREE TRIAL OFFER. Write today. AGENTS WANTED.

SUNSHINE SAFETY LAMP CO.
695 Factory Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

HAVE YOU A CAMERA? Send a quarter, just half price, for latest issues of my three helpful magazines, AMERICAN PHOTOGRAPHY, POPULAR PHOTOGRAPHY, PRACTICAL PHOTOGRAPHY. F. R. Fraprie, 864 Pope Building, Boston, Mass.

Relief Fund Report

Continued from page 6

Metropolitan Tabernacle; the honorary secretary of the committee, and myself.

The amount remitted to us has been $12,250. Of this sum we have disbursed $8,492. We have now available $3,758 in the treasury.

Our plan has been to limit the grants to $50 for any one person. Each case has been inquired into with much care, so that the relief should be given to really deserving and necessitous persons whose need is directly caused by the war, and who are not getting adequate help from the government or in other quarters. Each applicant is recommended by responsible persons known to the committee, and visited. Full inquiry is made as to their character and necessity. The committee deal with every individual case, deciding how the grant should best be made. When the grant is made in weekly payments the secretary remits these and so keeps in touch with the recipients. In several instances we have been able not only to render pecuniary aid, but have been able to assist the applicants to obtain employment.

A special group of persons we have helped to the extent of $575, are people whose houses have been, or who have been personally, injured in some of our east coast towns, such as Hartlepool, Scarborough, Whitby and Yarmouth. The people so injured were principally women and children.

ONE such case is that of a woman aged ninety. We gave her $50. Another is a widow whose husband was killed by a bomb. She has four small children, one of whom was injured for life. To her we gave a similar sum. We should have liked to give more. In another case we provided $50 to help a widow to restock her small shop, which was destroyed with its contents. In another town we helped a music teacher who lived with her aged mother. Their small lodging was wrecked; the mother is permanently injured.

Another group of widows and their families to whom grants have been given are the widows of sailors engaged on the fishing smacks and steam trawlers in the North Sea, whose ships have been sunk by German mines or submarines.

We have also granted $50 each, payable in weekly amounts, to thirty widows of soldiers recruited from the staff of the London Railways and the London General Omnibus Company, who have fallen in the war. The war has made a great demand upon the Railway Companies. The Underground Electric Railways and the General Omnibus Company of London alone have sent 8,400 of their employees to the war, of whom 197 have been killed and 654 have been wounded.

We granted $300 from our fund to six sufferers through the Lusitania disaster. One of these cases to which we granted $150 was a widow, with her two daughters, who lost her husband and their father, a public official, who was returning home. All his savings and effects were lost. This lady is in urgent want. We should like to render her some further aid.

On behalf of these war sufferers the committee offer their sincerest thanks to the readers of the Christian Herald who have in this practical way shown their sympathy with our suffering fellow countrymen. We have dispensed the fund regardless of creed or politics. Dire need, due directly to the war, has been the sole test we have applied.

May I add that there is every indication that the opportunities for relieving like distress will not only continue but will grow greater. If there are any generous donors who feel that their contributions towards alleviating the suffering and sorrow caused by the war will be disbursed wisely by the small committee which represents your journal here, we shall be very thankful to continue this work of Christian aid.

Yours faithfully,
ROBERT W. PERKS.

Additional Gifts for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

Miscellaneous Amounts

Miss Lilian Fish, 45 cents; ——, Springfield, Ore., $75.00; E. G. T., Allentown, Pa., $30.00; Margaret Mosher, 75 cents; Mrs. R. B. Baker and Mrs. Smith, $4.00; Mrs. Lizzie C. Nicholas, 10 cents; Nellie S. Sawyer, $14.00; A Subscriber, Horton, Kans., $1.90; Mr. Fred Speicher, $12.00; Alex. G. Williams, $30.00; The Griffith Family, $4.50; R. W., Shickshinny, Pa., $9.00; Ida Hedrick, $5.25; Mrs. M. A. Finfrock and Daughter, $8.00; Congregational Church, Francestown, N. H., $17.50; Wilson Tract S. S., Harlingen, Texas, $23.00; Amanda Wertenberger, $1.25; Union Meeting, Fort Plain, N. Y., $17.20; Alma Donithen, $6.00; Mrs. E. Clark, $7.00; Three Churches of Gibbon, Neb., $10.55; Bapt. Bible School, Stafford, Conn., $2.21; Mrs. K. M. Hardy, $7.00; First Bapt. Church, Waupaca, Wis., $20.50; L. Butterway, $6.00; ——, Brookville Pa., $4.00.

Gifts of $100 Each

Mrs. Peter Kells Dederick; Mrs. Margaret Kyle.

Gifts of $50 Each

"In His Name," Evanston, Ill.; Miss Julia R. Roszel.

Gift of $25

"A Brother in Jesus," Rushville, Nebr.

Gifts of $20 Each

M. O. Gibson, Mrs. M. Moon, Fort Lupton, Colo.; Olive Hunting; Miss Maggie Somervaill; Mrs. N. F. W. Pond; Mr. & Mrs. J. P. Judson.

Gifts of $15 Each

——, Worcester, Mass.; W. C. Stryker; Mr. Thomas Rutherford; Ladies Aid, Canwood, Sask., Can.; X'mas, Iola, Kansas.

Gifts of $10 Each

Chas. A. Davis, Congregational S. S., Stratford, Conn.; Mrs. Wm. A. Winston; "Friends," Fort Wayne, Ind.; Wm. M. Schwenn; A Sympathizing Brother, Auburn, N. Y.; Harry Tiedtke; Virginia J. Nash; Mr. & Mrs. G. V. Shedd; Elizabeth B. & I. G. Grover; Mrs. T. O. Loizeaux; Lambert Bewkes; ——, Hamilton, Mont.; Wm. Sayer; "A Friend," Detroit, Mich.; Mary E. Wilson; Miss Jennie Horner; Mrs. A. E. Howes; "Anonymous 146," New Britain, Conn.; Mrs. Annie Watson, Sr.,; Mrs. J. Johns; E. P. Skelton; A. W. Golder; A Reader, Worcester, Mass.; J. W. Baker.

Gifts of $5 Each

Agnes Kennedy; C. M. D. Browne; Mrs. S. S. Dickinson; Mrs C. L. Hibbard; Miss C. O. Van Duzee; C. E. S., Watertown, N. Y.; O. P. J., Saint Charles, Ill.; W. Thurlow, Hope M. Kilby; ——, Junction City, Kansas; Lorenzo Waldren; Walter H. Manning; Mr. & Mrs. Jno. Stephenson; Miss A. C. Ruddick; Alvin Hill; W. S. Stryker; Sister E., Ft. Lauderdale, Fla.; Lydia & Richard Quirk; Mrs. L. N. Seegar; Mrs. Harriet E. Hutson; Mrs. James Muirhead; Chas. W. Rittenhouse; R. C. Annan; Anna K. Hoersch; W. B. Harrison; Cynthia A. Smith; W. H. Allen; Christian Wirkler; J. A. Hughes; J. M. Schellinger; Miss Elizabeth B. Clark; James Baley; E. L. Culler; Sarah M. Jamison; Mrs. N. Gortner; S. D. Crane; Mrs. W. B. Hill; W. H. Housel; Mrs. E. Porter; T. M. Adams; J. N. Ward; Mrs. O. H. Elliott; C. V. Kintner; W. H. Sill; A Friend, Huntington Beach, Calif.; "In His Name," Randolph, Vt.; L. W. Felter; J. C. Geitz; M. A. Motycka; W. Friend; Mrs. James Clayton; Anna Lansdown; Grant Woods; H. Bradford; A. D. Frierson; Mrs. Alice E. Whiting; Geo. H. Stephens; Hugh Dennis; Elizabeth Smerdon; Mrs. C. Zeek; H. J. K., Canal Dover, Ohio; Mrs. Estella Clark; Mrs. Thos. Ricalton; E. H. Catlin; Mary E. Sturgeon; Mrs. Mary H. Dunlap; Mrs. Lou Pratt; Mrs. J. Marie Oswalt; Sarah Cockin; J. Warren Clark; Gunder Gunderson; A Sister, Gesing, Nebr.; Mrs. Anna Murberg; M. H. Boyer; J. H. McCarthy.

Gifts of $3 Each

Nelson H. Crane; W. J. Treloar; Sara A. Gilbert; W. W. Fairbanks; C. A. Lynam; A. H. S., Schuylerville, N. Y.; Mrs. L. H. Bratton; Mattie Allen; G. W. Baker; Mrs. M. J. Kennedy; W. H. Kirk; Sarah E. Abbott; Mrs. E. B. Underhill; Carrie Dettman; W. S. Cleaver; Mr. & Mrs. W. A. Beard; ——, West Bridgewater, Pa.; L. Sanford; Geo. McGaffin; A Subscriber, Cottonwood, Minn.; Alcide Reichenbach.

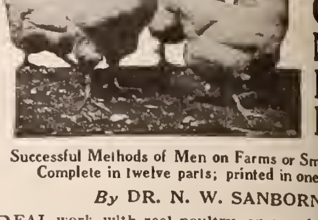
Gifts of 25 Cents Each

Mrs. Peter Mill; Miss Nancy Starret; A Friend, Waynesborough, Pa.; Mrs. Mary B. Gillespie.

——, White Post, Va.; H. M. Noblett.

Additional acknowledgments will be made later. Please address all gifts to the Widows and Orphans Relief Fund, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York, N. Y.

The Truth About Pou ry



Get the Facts Reading The One Ma Pou ry Pla

Successful Methods of Men on Farms or Small Ac
Complete in twelve parts; printed in one volum

By DR. N. W. SANBORN

REAL work, with real poultry, on a real New E Farm. This is a simple story of what has bee by a man, at forty-five years of age, town bred a educated, getting out of practice of medicine, b small farm in the hill country, and making a su the venture. Not only is the rearing of chicks management of adult fowl completely covered, interesting side issues of fruit growing, grain and the production of milk, that cannot be esca a real farm. You get rugged facts — rarely f print. The truth about poultry as found in act on a one-man poultry farm.

You Can Do the Same, Book Tells Ho

OUR SPECIAL OFFER—The One-Man Poultry in twelve parts (book form), and the American Advocate, one year, for only 50 cts., book and Ad three years, for only $1.00, if order is sent at once.

Our paper is handsomely illustrated, practica gressive and up-to-date on poultry matters. lished 1892. 44 to 132 pages monthly. 50 cents 3 months' trial, 10 cents. Sample copy free. Ca of poultry literature free. Address

AMERICAN POULTRY ADVOCATE
580 Hodgkins Blk. Syracuse, Y.

$15 95 Upward ON TRIAL American FULLY GUARANTEED CREAM SEPARATOR

A SOLID PROPOSITION to send new, well made, easy running, perfect skimming separator for $15.95. Skims warm or cold milk; making heavy or light cream. Bowl is a sanitary marvel; easily cleaned.

ABSOLUTELY ON APPROVAL

Different from picture, which illustrates our large capacity machines. Western orders filled from western points. Whether dairy is large or small write for handsome free catalog. Address:

AMERICAN SEPARATOR CO.
Box 4184 Bainbridge, N. Y.

Feed For Eggs!

Now is the time to make your layers produce—whil price of eggs is soaring

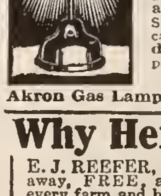
RED COMB POULTRY FEED

Free Book By Experts

Just out. Tells how to feed for eggs — how to develop poultry for market and show. Your name on postal brings it. Get the book. Then go to dealer near you who handles Red Comb Ask for Red Comb Meat Mash—the great egg-maker.

Edwards & Loomis Co., 343P No. Elizabeth St., Chicag

Also Manufacturers of the Famous Red Horn D Feeds



AGENTS WANT

for Independent hollow-wire lightin tems for homes, stores, etc.; also co line of lanterns and portable and lamps. Use common gasoline.

AKRON GAS LAMP are most improved, simplest and safe all. Best and cheapest illumination k Shed a clear, soft, bright, white light o candle power. Fully guaranteed. H demonstration outfit. Our Agenc position cannot be beat. Exclusive ter

Write quick for Catalog and Ter

Akron Gas Lamp Co., 627 So. Main St., Akro

Why Hens Stop Layin

E. J. REEFER, the poultry expert, is givin away, FREE, a valuable book explaining ho every farm and backyard hen can be made to pr duce 200 eggs per year. The book contains scientif facts of vital interest to every poultry raiser. Write tod for one of the valuable books—FREE.

E. J. Reefer Dept. 2491 Reefer Bldg. Kansas City, Mo

Trees—Roses—Vines

in small or large lots at wholesale prices. Catalog and Green's Fruit Book — FREE. Green's Nursery Co., 18 Wall St., Rochester, N. Y.

Pearl Grit Aids digestion, mak shells, makes eg makes feathers, mak strength. Send for prices and free valuable booklet. Write to-day.

The Ohio Marble Co., 31 S. Cleveland St., Piqua, Oh

6% NET

For 36 years we have been paying our cust the highest returns consistent with conser methods. First mortgage loans of $200 and up we can recommend after the most thorough pe investigation. Please ask for Loan List No

$25 Certificates of Deposit also for saving Inv

PERKINS & CO. Lawrence, K

FRUIT TREES SMALL FRUITS IN LARGE OR SMALL LOTS AT GROWER'S PRICES, direct from nursery to planter. Safe delivery, personal attention and satisfaction guaranteed. APPLE TREES TOP BUDDED TO FIVE VARIETIES—just what's needed for the home garden. Buy at rock-bottom prices of the grower and save disappointment at fruiting time. Get our illustrated catalog, mailed free upon request. SHRUB ROSES

WELLS WHOLESALE NURSERIES, 25 Wellsley Avenue, Dansville, N. Y.

PAIGE

The Standard of Value and Quality

ON December 31st—at the Automobile Show in New York City—we formally introduced to the American people a new addition to the Paige line—a six-cylinder car which sells for $1050.

We want you to FIND in this car your ideal of what a five-passenger automobile really should be.

We want you to set your expectations just as high as you possibly can. Then, examine this new Paige and see if you are obliged to make one single compromise.

We ask you to do this for yourself. We shall be quite content to abide by the result.

And, now, let us say a word about "price."

This has been a strenuous season in the motor car field—an especially strenuous season in the light six division.

Prices have been slashed right and left. Bold, intemperate "claims" have been made and it has, perhaps, been difficult for the public to separate the wheat from the chaff.

But—no matter what the "claims" may be—the public is concerned first and last with Quality—basic quality—fundamental quality.

It is a matter of public knowledge that the cost of raw material and labor has vastly increased during the past twelve months.

So, this is the year of all years when you must investigate and analyze before you finally decide to make your investment in an automobile.

Only too often a cut in price means a proportionate cut in quality. A car, you must remember, can be "refined" to the point where all of the goodness is taken out of it.

Therefore, make it a point first of all to critically investigate the car which you propose to buy. Pay attention to the little details quite as well as the big ones. Actually satisfy yourself that price reduction has not meant quality reduction.

It is on this basis that we want you to consider the new Paige.

Last year the "Six-36" sold for $1095. Now, we offer you a greater car—a finer car—a more luxurious car—and a reduction of $45 in price.

All of this has been made possible by just one thing—the overwhelming demand for Paige automobiles.

This demand has increased Paige production more than 200 per cent. in the past six months. This demand has forced us to double the size of our factory—double our equipment of machinery—double our force of skilled workmen.

Now, we are in position to make use of every labor-saving device known to scientific management. With large scale production methods, we are able to effect savings which were absolutely impossible with a smaller output.

As a consequence we are in position to offer more actual dollar for dollar value than ever before in the history of this company. We have reached the point where each unit of a Paige car is produced with maximum Efficiency and Economy.

These are the facts. These are the reasons for the extraordinary value which you will find in both the new five-passenger "Fleetwood" model and the larger Fairfield "Six-46."

But see the cars for yourself. Take nothing for granted except the evidence of your own eyes. Give the Paige dealer an opportunity to prove his case to your entire and absolute satisfaction. That is quite all that we ask.

Brief Specifications

Motor—38 H. P.; six cylinder; cast en bloc from special gray iron; bore 3⅛″, stroke 5″. Cylinder head cast separate. Bottom of crank case sheet steel.

Transmission—Three speeds forward and reverse in an aluminum case at rear of motor. Transmission gears and shafts are Chrome nickel steel, heat treated and ground. Shafts carried on Annular ball bearings; and Hyatt roller bearings. Oil capacity 2 quarts.

Clutch—Multiple disc, cork inserts enclosed in flywheel and running in oil; 14 discs; 36 corks in each of seven driving discs.

Frame—High carbon steel, channel section, 4″ deep and 3½″ flange; ⅛″ thick. Frame tapers to 29″ in front, giving short turning radius.

Springs—Special spring steel stock, heat treated. Front semi-elliptic 36″ long, 2″ wide. Wear: Cantilever type 44″ long, 2¼″ wide.

Tires—Goodyear or Firestone 32″x4″; safety tread on rear.

Wheel Base—117″.

Steering Gear—Jacox irreversible screw and split sleeve type.

Carburetion—Rayfield, fitted with hot air intake tube. Dash adjustment.

Electric System—Gray & Davis improved electric starting motor; Gray & Davis separate electric generator with automatic electric governor.

Ignition—Remy high tension distributor and Willard 6-volt battery.

Standard Colors—Paige Richelieu Blue; straw wheels. Nickel trimmings all models.

Other Models

Fairfield "Six-46"	$1295
Cabriolet	$1600
Sedan	$1900
Town Car	$2250

Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company, Detroit, Mich.

The Fleetwood "Six 38"

$1050

F.o.b. Detroit

Send for Catalogue showing illustrations and complete specifications.

Is Your House a Home?

A Home is not made of brick walls, chairs, tables or tapestries. Happiness is the note that transforms the house into the Home—and Happiness comes from Health which is the child of Harmony. Health comes from living in harmony with law. Make your house a Home by serving the food of Health and Strength that gets you into harmony with Nature—made of the whole wheat, steam-cooked, shredded and baked. A natural elemental food, ready-cooked, ready-to-serve, easy-to-digest.

Shredded Wheat

For breakfast heat one or more biscuits in the oven to restore crispness, pour hot or cold milk over them, adding a little cream; salt or sweeten to suit the taste. Deliciously nourishing with sliced bananas, baked apples, prunes or preserved fruits of any kind.

Made only by

The Shredded Wheat Company

Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Gail Borden
EAGLE
BRAND
CONDENSED
MILK
THE ORIGINAL

Crispy Muffins-Light As Air-

are made with Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk. In all cooking where milk and sugar are required use pure, rich, "Eagle Brand." With it you can make delicious rice meringue, rich velvet cream and and hundreds of dainty desserts.

BORDEN'S CONDENSED MILK CO.
EAGLE BRAND
GAIL BORDEN
EAGLE BRAND
Gail Borden
BORDEN'S CONDENSED MILK CO.
NEW YORK U.S.A.

A Voice in the Wilderness

Continued from page 5

tance sounded nearer now and continual, making her heart beat wildly. She was stiff and bruised from her falls, and weak with fright. The spikes were far apart, and each step of progress was painful and difficult. It was good at last to rise high enough to see over the water tank, and feel a certain confidence in her defense.

But she had risen already beyond the short length of her silken tether, and the suitcase was dragging painfully on her arm. She was obliged to steady herself where she stood and pull it up before she could go on. Then she managed to get it swung up to the top of the tank in a comparatively safe place. One more long spike step and she was beside it.

The tank was partly roofed over, so that she had room enough to sit on the edge without danger of falling in and drowning; for a few minutes she could only sit still and be thankful and try to get her breath back again after the climb; but presently the beauty of the night began to cast its spell over her. That wonderful blue of the sky! It hadn't ever before impressed her that skies were blue at night. She would have said they were black or gray. As a matter of fact she didn't remember ever to have seen so much sky at once before, nor to have noticed skies in general until now.

This sky was so deeply, wonderfully blue, the stars so real, alive and sparkling, that all other stars she had ever seen paled before them into mere imitations. The spot looked like one of Taylor's pictures of the Holy Land. She half expected to see a shepherd with his crook and sheep approaching her out of the dim shadows, or a turbaned, white-robed David with his lifted hands of prayer standing off among the depths of purple darkness. It would not have been out of keeping if a walled city with housetops should be hidden behind the clumps of sagebrush farther on. 'Twas such a night and such a scene as this, perhaps, when the wise men started to follow the star!

But one cannot sit on the edge of a water tank in the desert night alone and muse long on art and history. It was cold up there, and the howling seemed nearer than before. There was no sign of a light or a house anywhere, and not even a freight train sent its welcome clatter down the track. All was still and wide and lonely, save that terrifying sound of the beasts; such stillness as she had not ever thought could be; a fearful silence as a setting for the awful voices of the wilds.

The bruises and scratches she had acquired set up a fine stinging, and the cold seemed to sweep down and take possession of her on her high, narrow seat. She was growing stiff and cramped, yet dared not move much. Would there be no train, nor any help? Would she have to sit there all night? It looked so very near to the ground now. Could wild beasts climb? she wondered.

THEN into the interval of silence that came between the calling of those creatures, there stole a sound. She could not tell at first what it was. A slow, regular, plodding sound, and quite far away. She looked to find it and thought she saw a shape move out of the sage brush on the other side of the track, but she could not be sure. It might be but a figment of her brain; a foolish fancy from looking so long at the huddled bushes on the dark plain. Yet something prompted her to cry out, and when she heard her own voice she cried again and louder, wondering why she had not cried before.

"Help! Help!" she called; and again, "Help! Help!"

The dark shape paused, and turned toward her. She was sure now. What if it were a beast instead of a human! Terrible fear took possession of her; then to her infinite relief a nasal voice sounded out: "Who's that?"

But when she opened her lips to answer nothing but a sob would come to them for a minute, and then she could only cry pitifully:

CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOK

TWO BOOKS BY A FAMOUS PASTOR

REV. J. H. JOWETT, D. D., has been aptly desc as the most spiritual preacher in America. H written two volumes, "Thirsting for the Springs" "Brooks by the Traveler's Way." These delightful books are written in this great preac happiest vein and the gift of felicitous expression shines out on every page.

Dr. Jowett is a deep student of human nature. He has a faculty of kindling the emotions and awakening the noblest ambition. This was the impression on the min the editors of the Christian Herald after reading these two companion volumes.

These two volumes, aggregating 530 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, will b sent together with the Christian Herald for one whole year, postpaid, for $2.00 Or, we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, these two volumes for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $1.50.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER'S NEW BOOK

MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR., not make up her stories and poems— just form themselves on the backgroun her mind as winter sprites trace wonderful pictures on windowpanes, and then sin because she cannot help herself, she sets down a description of these pictures. There in all, in her new book, "Real People and Dreams," about eighty poems and thirty- short stories and sketches.

We will send this new volume by Margaret E. Sangster, Jr., handsomely bound in cloth, with a new photographic frontispiece of Margaret E. Sangster herself, and with illustrations for a number of the poems, together with the Christian Hersld for one whole year, postpaid, for $1.85. Or, we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, this volume for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $1.50.

"FORTY THOUSAND BEAUTIFUL QUOTATIONS"

SOME years ago the Christian Herald p lished a work entitled "Forty Thousand S lime and Beautiful Thoughts." It was comp of a collection of the best sayings on every conceivable subject which the compiler could c upon. In the course of time the edition of this book was exhausted. We have had so m inquiries for it that we have decided to republish it this year thoroughly revised.

We will send you this volume, together with the Christian Herald for one whole year, for $3.00, or we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, "Forty Thousand Sublime and Beautiful Thoughts" for sending us two new yearly subscriptions to the Christian Herald with $3.00.

LUTHER IN LIGHT OF RECENT RESEARCH

WHILE there are several lives of Luther, Profes Heinrich Boehmer's famous work, which has tracted universal attention in Europe, is one of the that has ever appeared. It comes most opportunely in view of the approaching celebrat of the four hundredth anniversary of the nailing of Luther's famous Thesis on the gat the old castle church at Wittenberg, which was the beginning of the Reformation. Christian Herald has had the good fortune to secure the exclusive American rights of book and has had it translated by Professor Carl F. Huth, Jr., of the University of Chica

The Foreword to Boehmer's work by Professor J. H. Robinson of Columbia Universi pays a high tribute both to biographer and to the translator.

The Life of Luther, handsomely bound in cloth, will be sent together with the Christian Herald for one whole year, postpaid, for $2.25, or we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, this volume for sending us two new yearly subscriptions to the Christian Herald with $3.00.

A NEW "DO SOMETHING" BOOK

DID you read "Janice Day," which was offe with the Christian Herald last year? You remember it was the "Do Something" book. The s cess of the book was such that the author, Helen Beecher Long, wrote a sequel entitled " Testing of Janice Day." It is a vivid and delightful picture of typical New England and character.

We will send "The Testing of Janice Day," 310 pages, attractive cloth covers, together with the Christian Herald for one whole year for $2.00, or we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, "The Testing of Janice Day," for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $1.50.

OUR ART CALENDAR FOR 1916

THIS beautiful calendar is composed of a reprod tion of that remarkable picture of Christ walki beside the plowman in the field, which was publish under the title of "Lo, I Am With You Alway." The picture is described in verses by Marga E. Sangster, Jr. This calendar is printed in eight colors, achieving a most beautiful effe

We will send this superb calendar together with the Christian Herald for one whole year for $1.75, or to old subscribers sending us their renewal and one new subscription to the Christian Herald, we will send two copies of this calendar mailed to separate addresses if desired, FREE.

A COMPANION TO THE BIBLE

HAVE you bought your copy of "555 Difficult Bible Questio Answered?" Here is another book which has had a wond ful success during the past year and every lover of the Bible shou possess a copy. Indeed it is a wonderful help to Bible study. This book is the result research covering a period of twenty-seven years. Its theology is thoroughly sound.

The beauty of this book is that it answers those very questions which you are alwa on the point of asking but for some reason don't.

We will send "555 Difficult Bible Questions Answered" together with the Christian Herald for one whole year for $1.85. Or, we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, this volume for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $1.50.

A STORY FOR THE FAMILY CIRCLE

WE do not know when we have had quite as mu pleasure in reading any book this year as "Litt Sir Galahad." There is so much that is charming a humorous and intensely human in the whole story that it appeals to the reader probab with greater force than if the action were on a more dignified level.

"Little Sir Galahad" is really a story of the golden age in our own time.

It is as good a story as we have encountered in many a day.

"Little Sir Galahad," 376 pages, illustrated and handsomely bound in cloth, will be sent postpaid with one yearly subscription to the Christian Herald for $2.00. Or, we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, this volume for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $1.50.

OUR 1916 ALMANAC

DON'T forget the Almanac. This year it is better than ever. I addition to its permanent features, its prose and poetry, its wit an humor, it contains new departments such as the story of the Europea War up to date of going to press; political information which should be at the disposal every voter in the Presidential Election of 1916. There is a comprehensive descriptio of the Lincoln Highway; difficult Bible questions are answered; a department devoted Common Law, etc.

Add ten cents to your subscription to the Christian Herald and we will send you the Christian Herald Almanac for 1916 postpaid.

Address, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New Yor

T True Flavor of High-Grade ocoa Beans is Found in

BAKER'S
REAKFAST
COCOA

Registered U. S. Patent Office

is is due to the perfection of the chanical process by which it is nufactured, no chemicals being d, and to the care and skill used in selection and blending of the beans.

igh authority on cocoa has recently d: "A pure cocoa, unchanged by desuctive chemicals, is the best cocoa. ere is no more need for introducing alies into cocoa than there is into cked wheat or oatmeal."

ker's Cocoa is Delicious, Wholesome, Pure and of Great Food Value

Booklet of Choice Recipes sent free

Valter Baker & Co. Ltd.
Established 1780
Dorchester, Mass.

nd Prize, Panama-Pacific Exposition, 1915
nd Prize, Panama-California Exposition, 1915

Vapo Cresolene

US WHILE YOU SLEEP"

ESTABLISHED 1879

for Whooping Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Asthma, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Catarrh.

I 'l fail to use Cresolene for the distressing, and oft fatal, affections for which it is recommended.

I a simple, safe, effective and drugless treatment Vorized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping ough and relieves Spasmodic Croup at once.

I a boon to sufferers from asthma.

T air carrying the antiseptic vapor, inspired with eve breath, makes breathing easy, soothes the sore tht, and stops the cough, assuring restful nights.

Csolene relieves the bronchial complications of Sct Fever and Measles and is a valuable aid in the trenent of Diphtheria.

Csolene's best recommendation is its 36 years of succesl use. Send us postal for Descriptive Booklet.

For Sale by Druggists

Try olene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated throat, composed of ery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene. They can't harm you. Of druggist or from us 10c in stamps.

TH APO-CRESOLENE CO., 62 Cortlandt St., New York
Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada

ION'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. 'How?' With the MORLEY PHONE. I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right. "The Morley Phone for the

DEAF

is to the ears what glasses are to the eyes. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. ne can adjust it." Over one hundred thousand ld Write for booklet and testimonials.

H MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Bldg., Phila.

"Help! Help!"

"Whar be you?" twanged the voice, and now she could see a horse and rider like a shadow moving toward her down the track.

CHAPTER II

THE horse came to a standstill a little way from the track, and his rider let forth a stream of strange profanity. The girl shuddered and began to think a wild beast might be preferable to some men. However, these remarks seemed to be a mere formality. He paused and addressed her.

"Heow 'dyeh git up thar? 'Dyeh drap er climb?"

He was a little, wiry man, with a bristling, protruding chin. She could see that, even in the starlight. There was something about the point of that stubby chin that she shrank from inexpressibly. He was not a pleasant man to look upon, and even his voice was unprepossessing. She began to think that even the night with its loneliness and unknown perils was preferable to this man's company.

"I got off the train by mistake thinking it was my station, and before I discovered it the train had gone and left me," Margaret explained with dignity.

"Yeh didn't 'spect it t' sit reound on th' plain while you was gallivantin' up water tanks, did yeh?"

Cold horror froze Margaret's veins. She was dumb for a second.

"I am on my way to Ashland Station. Can you tell me how far it is from here and how I can get there?" Her tone was like icicles.

"It's a little matter o' twenty mile, more 'r less," said the man, protruding his offensive chin. "The walkin's good. I don't know no other way from this pint at this time o' night. Yeh might set still till th' mornin' freight goes by an' drap atop o' one o' the kyars."

"Sir!" said Margaret, remembering her dignity as a teacher.

The man wheeled his horse clear around and looked up at her impudently. She could detect an odor of bad whisky on the air.

"Say, you must be some young highbrow, ain't yeh? Is thet all yeh want o' me? 'Cause ef 'tis I got t' git on t' camp. It's a good five mile yet, an' I ain't hed no grub sence noon."

The tears suddenly rushed to the girl's eyes as the horror of being alone in the night again took possession of her. This dreadful man frightened her, but the loneliness was dreadful too.

"Oh!" she cried in dismay, forgetting her insulted dignity, "you're not going to leave me up here alone, are you? Isn't there some place near here where I could stay over night?"

"Thur ain't no palace hotel round these diggin's, ef that's what you mean," the man leered at her. "You c'n come along t' camp 'ith me ef you ain't too stuck up."

"To camp!" faltered Margaret in dismay, wondering what her mother would say. "Are there any ladies there?"

A loud guffaw greeted her question.

"Wal, my woman's thar, sech es she is, but she ain't no highflyer like you. We mostly don't hev ladies to camp. But I got t' git on. Ef you want to go too, you better light down pretty speedy, fer I can't wait."

In fear and trembling Margaret descended her rude ladder step by step, primitive man, seated calmly on his horse, making no attempt whatever to assist her.

"This ain't no baggage car," he grumbled as he saw the suit case in her hand. "Well, hist yerself up thar, I reckon we c'n pull through somehow. Gimme the luggage."

Margaret stood appalled beside the bony horse and his uncouth rider. Did he actually expect her to ride with him?

"Couldn't I walk?" she faltered, hoping he would offer to do so.

"It's up to' you!" the man replied indifferently. "Try't 'an' see!"

He spoke to the horse and it started forward eagerly, while the girl in horror struggled on behind, over rough uneven ground, between greasewood, sage brush and cactus, back into the trail. The man, oblivious of her presence, rode contentedly on, a silent shadow on a dark horse wending a silent way between the purple-green clumps of other shadows, until, bewildered, the girl almost lost sight of them. Her breath came short, her ankle turned, and she fell with both hands in a stinging bed of cactus.

She cried out then, and begged him to stop.

"Larned yer lesson, hev yeh?" he jeered at her foolishly. "Well, get in yer box then."

He let her struggle up to a seat behind himself with very little assistance, but when she was seated and started on her way she began to wish she had stayed behind and taken any perils of the way rather than trust herself in proximity to this creature.

From time to time he took a bottle from his pocket and swallowed a portion of its contents, becoming fluent in his language as they proceeded on their way. Margaret remained silent, growing more and more frightened every time the bottle came out. At last he offered it to her. She declined it with cold politeness, which seemed to irritate the little man, for he turned suddenly fierce.

"Oh, yer too fine to take a drap fer good comp'ny, are yeh? Wal, I'll show yeh a thing er two, my pretty lady. You'll give me a kiss with yer two cherry lips before we go another step. 'Dyeh hear?" and he turned with a silly leer to enforce his command, but with a cry of horror Margaret slid to the ground and ran back down the trail as hard as she could go, till she stumbled and fell in the shelter of a great sage-bush, and lay sobbing on the sand.

The man turned bleared eyes toward her and watched until she disappeared. Then sticking his chin out wickedly he slung her suit case after her and called:

"All right, my pretty lady; go yer own gait, an' larn yer own lesson." He started on again, singing a drunken song.

To be Continued

◆

A Thought for Today

"To depart and be with Christ, which is very far better."—St. Paul.

WHAT had drawn us together for the evening does not matter. Suffice it that the children had had a happy evening. Now it was time to go home.

The road was dark and the storm beat upon us as we struggled through the mud.

A lantern flashed in the rain! A little girl was caught in her father's arms!

Again a stream of light from an open door and another went into his home.

So we plunged on through the darkness and the storm, an ever-lessening number as one after another went into light and love and rest.

So is this life! We plunge through its shadows an ever-changing company, as one after another hears the call or sees the light.

Weep not for those who have entered in. Pity (if pity thou wilt) those who must strive a little further through the storm.

WARREN ROCHELLE.

◆

Is Your Home Open ?

TWO educated Christian Armenian girls, without means of support, except what they managed to scrape together before their hurried flight from Constantinople last August, when the persecution by the Turkish government seemed to threaten their existence, are now in New York. They came to this country in the hope of finding employment. Aghannie Yegehenian and Sarouhi Boligian, aged 22 and 25, are both graduates of the Armenian Girls' High School at Adabazar, Asia Minor (which is under the direction of the A. B. C. F. M.), and also of the American College for Girls. They can talk several languages, including Armenian, Turkish, French, and English. They would gladly accept employment as governesses in American families. Any interested reader may address one or both, in care of the Christian Herald.

◆

A GREAT HELP TO BIBLE STUDY

Have received the book "555 Difficult Bible Questions Answered." Many thanks. I am pleased with it and I find it helps one to look up the references, and is an encouragement to Bible study.

Oswego, N. Y. MRS. S. L. RANDALL.

Going to Build Remodel or Repair?

YOU can actually save from $5.00 to $500.00 on your building material bill, so write today for these two free books and see and judge for yourself.

Material Complete for Houses from $375.00 up

Our Building Material Catalog shows 8,000 price bargains and our Plan Book shows splendid views and floor plans of 50 modern homes and bungalows. You can remodel, repair or build new for much less than you expected.

We ship everywhere everything in the way of high-grade lumber, flooring, roofings, doors, windows, storm sash, mouldings, porchwork, screens, hotbeds, building hardware, paints, wallboard, plumbing, heating and water supply outfits, cement machinery and interior woodwork—ALL AT WHOLESALE PRICES DIRECT TO YOU.

Don't plan to build, repair or overhaul until you see these two great books. Quality, safe delivery and satisfaction absolutely guaranteed. Write for them today.

Catalog of 8000 Price Bargains
Beautifully Illustrated PLAN BOOK

CHICAGO MILLWORK SUPPLY CO.
1488 West 37th Street
CHICAGO, ILL.

Books Are Free

WANT A WEEKLY INCOME?

You can earn a regular income in your spare time by showing Queen Fabrics' exclusive designs. Dress Goods of Silk, Linen, Cotton, Worsted. "From the Mills to the Millions." Permanent business—not ordinary canvassing. Experience unnecessary. Instructions ready. Be first in your locality.

Queen Fabric Mfg. Co., Dept. 427, Syracuse, N. Y

FREE TO YOU FOR 10 DAYS!

The World Famous Frantz Premier Electric Cleaner

Yes, Madam, that is exactly what we mean. We will send you one of our superb, BRAND NEW, easy gliding and deep cleaning Frantz Premier Electric Cleaners on 10 days FREE Cleaning trial. We are going to loan you free, this splendid cleaner for 10 whole days. Remember, this free loan won't cost you a penny. We even pay all delivery charges. We bear every expense. All you have to do is to use it to your heart's content for all cleaning purposes about the house!

Without Cost To You

Simply sign and mail the coupon below or write us and we will send you the full details of this wonderful free loan offer, and also our beautifully illustrated booklet. No strings are attached to this free loan offer. We want you to use the Frantz Premier for 10 full days just as though it were your own. Clean your carpets and your rugs with it. Try it on your furniture, mattresses and walls. Use it in all the nooks and corners. We want you to see for yourself how it picks up threads, lint and ravelings and every speck of dust and dirt.

And then, at the end of the 10 days free trial if you are not more than delighted with the cleaner, you may return it, or we will send for it, without a cent of cost or obligation on your part. But if you decide that you simply cannot get along without it, then you may keep the cleaner and pay for it on

Easy Monthly Payments

The cleaner goes to you right from our factory, or direct from our dealer if we have one in your town. First you get the free trial and then the easy monthly payments. And, remember, you get the rock bottom factory price—you do not pay a penny more because of this special Easy Monthly Payment Plan.

We expect to be so swamped with Free Trial requests that we reserve the right to withdraw this offer after a reasonable length of time. So send at once for your Free Trial. Remember—absolutely no obligation to buy.

MAIL THIS COUPON Sign this coupon and mail it to us at once. The minute we hear from you we will mail you the full details of this great free trial offer and easy payment plan. We will also send you free, the beautifully illustrated literature. Send coupon or write today—at once.

The Frantz Premier Company
Dept. 1163, Cleveland, Ohio

Sign this Coupon NOW!

THE FRANTZ PREMIER COMPANY
Dept. 1163, Cleveland, Ohio

Without expense or obligation to me send full and complete details of your wonderful Free Trial and Easy Payment offer. Also your beautifully illustrated booklet.

Name..

Address..

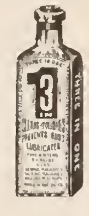
If Your Teeth are Loose—and if you suffer from inflamed and receding gums, you should CONSULT YOUR DENTIST. These symptoms should be treated before they grow worse and cause suffering and loss of teeth. 4 out of 5 people past forty, as well as many younger persons, have Pyorrhea. If used in time, Forhan's Pyorrhea Preparation prevents this condition, and gives prompt relief in most cases. Your dentist probably prescribes it with his treatment. Very agreeable to the taste—use daily like a dentrifice.

Large tube (as illustrated) 50c. If your druggist hasn't it, send his name (with price) to Forhan Company, 21-27 Elm Street, New York, who will see that you are supplied.



3-in-One is a household oil, lubricating, cleaning, polishing and preventing rust—

Try for oiling sewing machines, clocks, locks, guns, bicycles, etc. Try for cleaning and polishing any furniture; fine pianos, old tables, etc. Try for preventing rust on any metal surface. Trial bottle sent free. 3-IN-1 OIL CO., 42 CW. Broadway New York.

Indoor Closet

More Comfortable Healthful and Convenient than the Out-Door Privy

Eliminates the out-door privy, open vault and cesspool. They are breeding places for germs. Have a warm, sanitary, odorless toilet right in your house. No going out in cold weather. A boon to invalids. Endorsed by State Boards of Health.

ABSOLUTELY ODORLESS

Put It Anywhere In The House

The germs are killed by a chemical process in water in the container, which you empty once a month. Absolutely no odor. No more trouble to empty than dishwater. Closet absolutely guaranteed. Write for full description and price.

ROWE SANITARY MFG. CO.
130 Rowe Bldg. Detroit, Mich.

Ask about the Ro-San Washstand—Hot and Cold Running Water Without Plumbing

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent." RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

TABLE GRACES For DAILY USE SPECIAL DAYS and OCCASIONS

All Will Welcome This New Book of Graces. Postpaid. Paper, 25c. Cloth, 50c. M. E. MUNSON, 77 Bible House, New York, N.Y.

Young People s Topics for January 16

How to Work With Others

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. Isa. 41: 1-7

WHY do Christians fail to work in harmony? Why do they, in choir, and church, and young people's society, clash and strive? The trouble is that each worker wants his own way. Many of these differences of opinion are thoroughly honest. One worker or group of workers thinks the others are wrong; thinks it is terribly important that matters be done a certain way. The other group is equally insistent. Such honest differences as this are inevitable. Even such saints as Paul and Barnabas contended sharply over the problem of Mark's accompanying them; and one of the saddest events of church history is the colloquy of Luther and Zwingli at Marburg, when two great men who loved each other and loved their ord and his work found that their minds and their consciences forbade their working together.

But some differences are thoroughly wrong and easily preventable. People are ambitious for power, for authority, for recognition. They want to get ahead; they want to be in control. Others may differ with them sincerely, but they will not surrender. The twelfth chapter of Romans should be read during the meeting and the twelfth chapter of First Corinthians from the fourth verse to the end.

This Corinthian passage leads up to Paul's great sacred classic, which gives us the real answer to our problem—Love. "Yet show I unto you a more excellent way"—and the thirteenth chapter shows the way, the beautiful way of love.

Emphasize that word "others" in our lesson topic. Work with others for others. As we love more ardently the others for whom we work, we shall be more ready to yield to the wishes of the others with whom we work.

A vision of Jesus—that is what will help. A love for him that shall melt all our differences and make us eager just to please him; a baptism with the Holy Spirit that shall make us devoted, enthusiastic, self-forgetful in our work for those for whom he laid down his life.

Evangels of the Home Land

Epworth League Topic. Luke 10: 1-20

IT was the very worst day of winter. Sleet was falling stingingly and the wind was sharp. At the door of a New York office building an old woman was sitting on the doorstep, drunk, bruised, helpless. One or two young men were mocking her and urging her to get up. One or two others were sympathetic. She made her way into the building and tried to crawl up the stairs. The elevator man did not know what to do. He was a converted man, a mission convert, and knew what it meant to be cold and homeless. It seemed terrible to drive the woman out into the storm again. But he had to report to the superintendent. He could not leave his elevator and could not have the woman dragging herself about the stairs. She reached the second landing and threw herself down, groaning. The superintendent arrived on the scene and said that he wou tele- phone at once for the police agon Evidently the woman heard anc nderstood, for she got up, staggerec lown- stairs, went out the door and disa eared in the storm.

And not one woman, but h dred in New York that night, were h eless, friendless, helpless; not one m ,, but thousands.

What to do?

Oh, a thousand things!

But first of all to care. We n st ge to the place where we grieve a ut it where we suffer about it. Th per- haps something will be done.

Divide your evening study i five parts.

(1) Conditions in other cit and localities, and what is being d and could be done to relieve them.

(2) Conditions in your own l ality and what is being done and m it be done to relieve them.

(3) Conditions that are more unda- mental. The industrial and con rcial system that perpetuates pove and unemployment.

(4) The old, old story of sin.

(5) The old, old story of Je and his redemptive love.

Then make an appeal. W will you do, what will you give t make things better? Appeal to all esent to stop at nothing short of givin hemselves, their lives, to purge th ome- land of its sin, to relieve its s ring to spread the gospel of Christ's emption and the principles of b herly love and cooperation that sha some day save not our land only, the world.

Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

MRS. McC., Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "Some time ago I sent in a request for prayer for the conversion of my husband, that he would be enabled to give up the drink habit of almost forty years' standing. Shortly after sending in the request, he stopped drinking entirely and now attends church faithfully, something he never did before. It is wonderful and I praise God every day for it. Also I asked prayers for a daughter who was leading a worldly life. Since sending in the request she has broken away from those that were leading her and is trying to lead a better life."

Mrs. E. C., Oakland, Ill., writes: "In answer to prayer my husband's sister, who has been insane for nearly five years, is almost well. Her sister writes that they never saw her so well." D. B. C. writes from Los Angeles, Calif.: "I want to thank God for restoring my sight. I was blind and had to be led. Now I can read, write and walk everywhere." O. A. K., San Bernardino, Calif., writes: "I wish to acknowledge that the dear Lord has answered my prayer and has brought my three children back into his fold." M. C. M. writes from Bristol, Va.: "I want to acknowledge that the dear Lord has returned our dear son who has been gone for three years." "English" writes from Macksville, Kan.: "I sent a request for prayer for my nephew over a year ago, that he might be cured of the liquor habit. He hasn't touched a drop for a year, for which we are very thankful."

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have also been received from

Mrs. H. B. E., Toledo, Ohio; L. M. S., Hope, Ark. (for sustenance through a period of darkness); Mrs. R. A. R., Greensboro, Vt.; Miss E. E., Canyon Falls, Ky.; A Reader, Bedford City, Va.; Mrs. I. K. F. A., Springfield, Mass.; Miss A. W. G., Philadelphia, Pa.; Reader; Mrs. J. A. R., Oakdale, Neb.; L. D. F., Mobile, Ala.; Miss D. McD., Toronto, Canada; H. R., Wellsville, Ohio; F. B. S., Leon, Iowa; Mrs. L. S., Highland, Mich.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at Chewelah, Wash. (in the M. E. church); Greenville, Ill.; Shelbyville, Ind. (that many may be saved during revival meetings); La Fayette, N. Y. (that young people may be kept from sin); Albion, Mich.; Greensboro, Vt. (that families may be saved); Alfred, Ohio; Ono, Pa.; Penland, N. C.; Reed City, Mo.; Hutchinson, Kan.; Georgetown, N. Y.; Roanoke, Ind.; Navarre, Ohio (for the success of the church there); Denver, Colo.; Hiddenite, N. C.; Childs, Md.; Oakdale, Neb.; Isabella, Tenn.; Mulberry Grove, Ill.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Los Gatos, Calif.; Garrison, Iowa; Emerson, Iowa; Mrs. N. P. F. asks prayer that the church in Yoncalla, Ore., may become more like Jesus and that many souls may be saved during the series of meetings beginning the first of January.

L. E. B. asks prayer that mother's mind may be restored; Mrs. A. H., Mrs. G. W. J., Mrs. A. E. W., and A. W. V. their sons'; M. A. D., a daughter's. Seventeen other friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for other relatives or friends, or for themselves.

Mrs. H. P. asks prayer that husband's sight may be restored; A mother, her son's; K. E., a sister's. Five other friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for other friends, or for themselves.

Forty-two friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Six parents ask prayers that their sons may be delivered from the liquor habit; five wives, their husbands. Five other friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be delivered from the liquor habit.

M. S. R. asks prayer that husband may be cured of the drug habit; Mrs. L. A. B., her brother. A sister asks prayer that she may be cured of this habit.

Mrs. N. H. asks prayer that five sons may be saved; thirty-five other parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; twenty-one wives, their husbands. Sixty-five other friends ask prayer for the conversion of friends or relatives.

Thirteen readers ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for relatives or friends.

Seventy-eight friends ask prayer for the healing of friends and relatives, including C. C. C., that friend's limbs may be strengthened, and Mrs. A. H. that son may regain the use of his limbs. Seventy-six friends ask prayer for the healing of self, including Mrs. C. S. P. and Mrs. J. E. C. that they may be cured of lameness.

Mrs. M. A. B. and Mrs. A. M. B. ask prayer that their husbands' hearing may be healed; A reader, a sister's. Eleven friends ask prayer for the restoration of hearing.

Fifty readers ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Fifty-three friends ask prayer for t grant- ing of varied desires and needs, includ Mrs C. W. B., who asks that father-in-law aloo may be closed, and L G., who ask rayer that she may be saved from suicide.

POMPEIA OLIVE OI

ALWAYS FRESH

There is the same marked difference between fresh Olive Oil and Olive Oil packed months ago as there is between a newly-laid egg and an egg months old. Insist on POMPEIAN

THE STANDARD IMPORTED OLI

Try My Rapid Fireless C 30 Days—

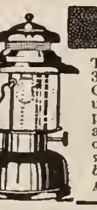
Cook every meal If you are not satis delighted I will every cent. Get Special Low Facto direct to you. Cooke inum lined through set of famous "We aluminum cookin comes with it. As book of valuabl

William Campb
Dept. 2, Detroit



ACORN UNI- FR

Turns night into day. 300 candle power. Carry as a lantern; use anywhere as a lamp. W proof. For house, barn, garag and around the farm. Write for offer. Special opportunity to stockmen and motorists. Agent big money. Write tonight.

Acorn Brass Mfg. Co., 879 Acorn Bldg.

500 TYPEWRITER

Typewriter prices smashed! Your choice of any factory rebuilt machine at a bargain. Every one perfect—guaranteed for 3 yrs.—including repairs. My free circular tells how to save 40 per cent—60 per cent on each machine. Write for it! C. E. GAERTE, Pres.

DEARBORN TYPEWRITER EXCHANGE, DEPT. 731. C

YOU CAN AFFORD Familiar Song Gospel (No. Round or shape n per hundred; samples, 5c each. 83 songs, words a

E. A. K. HACKETT, FORT WAYNE, I

AGENTS—Steady Income Large manu Handkerchief Goods, Etc., wishes representative in each locality. consumer. Big profits, honest goods. Credit give particulars. FREEPORT MFG. CO., 32 Main St., Bro

The Jeffery Sedan

COMBINING WINTER LUXURY WITH SUMMER COMFORT
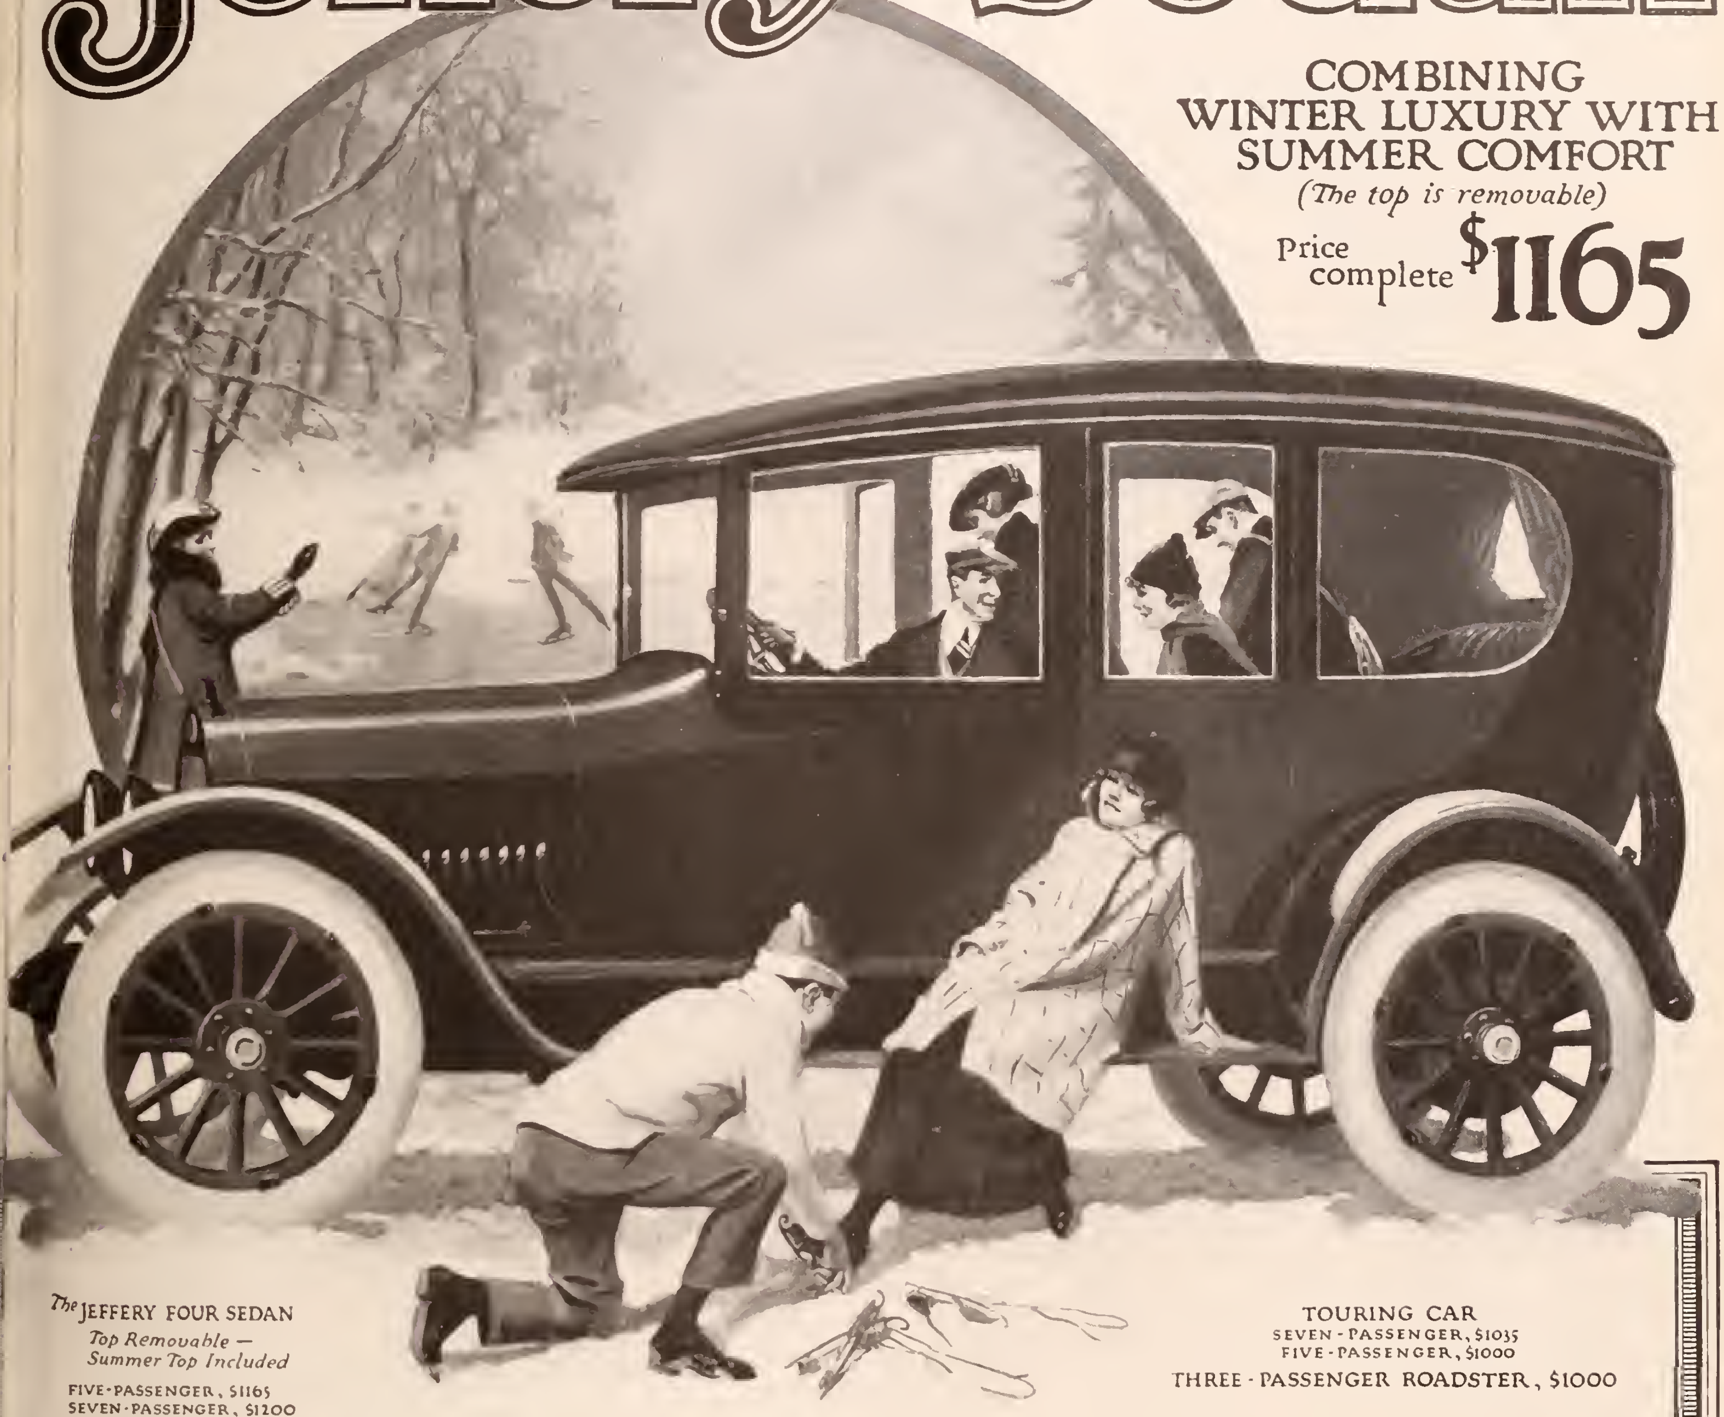
(The top is removable)

Price complete $1165



The JEFFERY FOUR SEDAN
Top Removable — Summer Top Included
FIVE-PASSENGER, $1165
SEVEN-PASSENGER, $1200

TOURING CAR
SEVEN-PASSENGER, $1035
FIVE-PASSENGER, $1000
THREE-PASSENGER ROADSTER, $1000

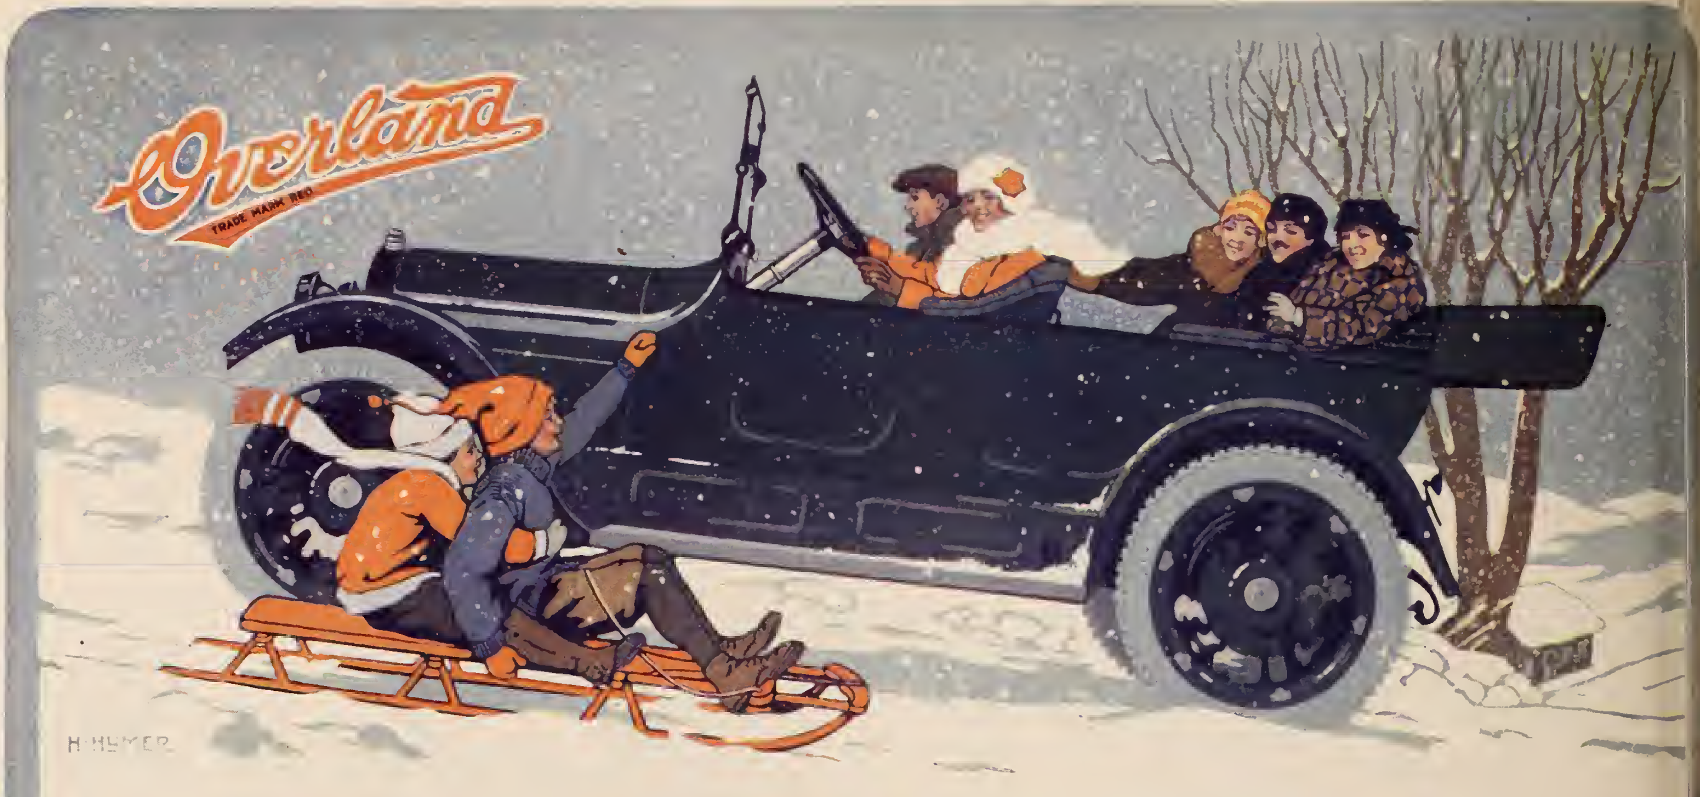
Picture to yourself a handsome, high-grade, beautifully-finished, luxuriously easy-riding enclosed coach—put as much quality into your picture as you can—and you still will not be overestimating the quality and appearance of the Jeffery Four Sedan. ¶ Yet the cost of this car complete is extremely moderate—and the Sedan body is easily removed, giving you an open touring car including summer top for pleasant-weather touring.

Divided front seats afford easy access from the front compartment to the tonneau · Windows, extra wide, three-sixteenth inch crystal plate, ground and polished, adjustable for ventilation · Curtains, silk portiere type. Upholstery, grey whipcord—leather optional for seats · Interior illumination from an electric dome light.

Prices, F.O.B. Kenosha, Wisconsin

The Thomas B. Jeffery Company
Main Office and Works · Kenosha, Wisconsin

Illustrated booklet on request



You Can Now Get the Big Comfortable 35 Horsepower Overland for $695

Roadster - $675

Model 83 B—f. o. b. Toledo

With unerring judgment of value—

With a rush that swallowed up a record production in jig time—

The public took more than 50,000 of the $750 Overlands in six months.

In six months we've absorbed all the overhead; absorbed all the development expense; realized on all the experimental cost that is usually spread over a year.

We covered our material requirements at before-the-war prices—saved three and a half million dollars on aluminum and another million on steel.

We have increased our production capacity of 300 cars per day last June to 1000 cars per day.

So again we have broken all records.

Again we have planned and bought material for a bigger production program.

And again we are setting a new and supreme standard of value—

You can now buy the big, roomy, comfortable, thirty-five horsepower Overland for $695.

Here is the value which has clearly dominated the automobile market for the last six months—now made even more clearly dominant.

Here is the car with a performance record never even approached by any car of its size ever built—fifty thousand in every-day service.

And though the price is reduced the car is improved.

It has an up-to-the-minute power plant, en bloc type, developing full thirty-five horsepower. It has abundant power and speed and an exceptionally quick get-away.

The value is pre-eminent—unapproached.

We guarantee that the price for this model will never be lower.

But this price reduction is made in the face of a rising material market—we cannot guarantee that it will not be higher.

See the Overland dealer now — anticipate your requirement if need be—but make sure of your delivery now.

En bloc 35 horsepower motor Electric starting and lighting system Four-inch tires
106-inch wheelbase Electric control buttons on steering columns Demountable rims with one extra
Deep divan upholstery One-man top; top cover

Catalog on request. Please address Dept. 369

The Willys-Overland Company, Toledo, Ohio

"Made in U. S. A."

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1916, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PULISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, JANUARY 12, 1916

VOL. 39 NO. 2. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Silent, mysterious, serene, the Nile flows past the shore,
Where pyramids have towered high these thousand years and more;
The sunset flickers in the sky, still is the desert breeze —
And dreamily the stream reflects the drowsing, silent trees.

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

The editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

LETTERS come to us frequently from white and native missionaries in distant fields, asking for free copies of the Christian Herald for use in their work. We are now filling a considerable number of such requests, but others keep coming. It has been suggested to us that some of our readers, who are interested in the missionaries' work, might wish to supply some of these demands by adding one or more missionary subscriptions to their own when they renew. The Christian Herald would be a weekly reminder of their friendly interest and would be greatly appreciated.

T. H. H., Brady, Texas, writes: "Furthering the fight on pernicious newspaper items, advertisements, etc., I am attaching two clippings from recent issues. The literature that is going into homes today is in too many instances of a decidedly pernicious influence. The sole defense of the publishers seems to be that it is what the public demands—in my humble estimation, a very wrongful impression of what the reading public, especially the home portion of it, want, and something which there should be a united and decided fight to abolish." The stream of "sex-literature" seems to be reaching high tide. Not only is it found running through novels and other books, but the magazines and many weeklies are full of it. It is a sign of the temporary degeneracy of the literary standard, and those who encourage it—writers, publishers and readers—incur a heavy responsibility. In claiming that the public demands such stuff, the producers of it admit that they are catering to the lowest tastes and cultivating a popularity for that which is especially pernicious to youthful minds. If the self-respecting readers were to unite in drawing the line sharply against this class of literature, and refusing to buy it or permit it to be brought into their homes, it would soon fall into disrepute and cease to be profitable.

M. L., Hillsdale, Ill. See the articles on the Gary School system now appearing in the Christian Herald. These are written by a very careful and discriminating observer, and we can commend them as reliable and authoritative.

Reader, Connellsville, Pa. There are many very good and sincere Christians who, while courageous enough in all business matters, are diffident when asked to speak or pray in public. We have seen strong men in acute distress when they rose in response to an invitation to pray. Now, all of us are not alike in regard to capacity for service. The silent worker may be quite as effective, however, as his neighbor who can speak freely at will. Our Saviour did not commend long prayers in public, but rather quiet communion with God. You may not be eloquent in prayer, but the work you do—that is your prayer which speaks in your behalf. It is an old saying of the early fathers that "work is prayer"—work done in the right spirit and to the glory of God. If a man build a church, putting his hard-earned savings into it, every brick, every beam, every stone and nail and timber in it is a prayer. Of such a church one might pray: "Lord, we reverently dedicate this gift to thy service. Accept it, and bless it. Fill it with thy presence, and make it a place where sinners may be brought to the Cross and souls won to thee. Let thy living truth be spoken here and the Gospel of thy dear Son, our Saviour, boldly proclaimed. Let it become the familiar gathering-place of those who love thee, and may the hours that are spent here in praise and worship be the happiest in our lives."

W., Watertown, Conn., writes: "I read with much interest the Mail-Bag questions and answers in each number. My attention was particularly drawn to the first question and answer appearing in the issue of November 24 in which 'B. L., Iowa,' is 'in deep trouble about a thing said to my dear husband just before he died.' Your answer is most excellent. At the same time, may I ask the privilege of speaking a few words out of an experience of a similar kind? I have at least two friends, who some years ago passed over into the spirit land, to whom, if I could, I would make sincere apologies and explanations concerning things I said and things left undone, which have since been a source of much grief and pain. I have asked the Lord to forgive me, and I have the assurance that my prayer has been fully answered. In connection with this assurance, two other very comforting thoughts have been given to me. I think they came from the same source as the answer to my prayer. These thoughts are as follows: 1. It may be that these dear friends know already of my penitence and prayer, and of the answer the Lord has sent. 2. Whether the above thought is imagination or not, I have resolved that when I too pass over into the other life, if the Lord will permit, I will as speedily as possible seek out these friends, and tell them of my grief and pain and the forgiveness of God, and ask them also to forgive. The assurance of my answered prayer, with these two other thoughts, has brought to my mind present perfect peace and rest."

If our departed ones are privileged to know of our troubles and struggles here (as many believe, and as Paul seems to convey in Heb. 12:1) they may know of our sorrow and repentance over "things left undone" which marred our happiness in the past. It is not an unreasonable thing to believe that they can sympathize with us. We are told that "there is joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth," and if they share in such joy, they cannot withhold their forgiveness. The root of the matter is that if we "get right with God" here and now, we may be assured that all will be right between our loved ones and ourselves when we rejoin them, and that the transient misunderstandings of the earth-life will all be cleared away.

The Shadow

By Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

THERE'S a cross in the dust of the roadway,
A cross in the gold of the sun;
And over the mountains before us
There thunders the sound of a gun.
We march to the blare of the trumpet,
We sing, and we shout as we stride,

. . . . . .

But ah! there's a cross in the roadway,
The cross of a Saviour who died.

THERE'S a cross in the dust of the roadway,
A cross in the heat of the day;
And dark it looms up, like a warning,
From out of the sunbeams at play.
Far off come the sounds of a battle,
A shriek, and a cry and a moan—
But we sing as we march—we march forward,
Though deep in our souls we may groan.

THERE'S a cross in the dust of the roadway,
A cross in the sun's golden light—
The day seems too gentle for killing,
Too pleasant and joyful and bright.
The sound of the cannon comes nearer,
Each one has a life that he gives!

. . . . . .

We follow the cross in the roadway,
The cross of a Saviour who lives!

J. C., Minneapolis, Minn. Where is the warrant for the old-time Methodist observance of the "love feast" to be found in the Bible, and is its observance continued?

The love feast was based on two fundamental principles of Scripture: one, the duty of testimony, the other, the fact that worshipers are a help to one another as they unite in prayer, praise and conference. The duty of testimony is insisted upon throughout the Scriptures. Those whom God has blessed are to announce that blessing both to those without and within the Lord's fold. Testimonies given at the love feast were addressed to those who were of the household of the faith, for the mutual encouragement of the believers. In early Methodist history, the love feast was closely to the class meeting, the class meeting being compo small group of believers who met weekly to state their condition, giving testimony to grace received or e of grace lost. The love feast was a similar gatherin whole church or for a group of churches. And in the l the note of praise predominated. Some of the favo sages commending such observances are Mal. 3:16 they that feared the Lord spake often one to another: Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of reme was written before him for them that feared the Lord thought upon his name"; and Heb. 13:15: "By him let us offer sacrifice of praise to God continually, tha fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name." There sincere and well-founded regret among both the lea the rank and file of Methodism that l class meeting and the love feast have falle into disuse. The love feast is still found camp meetings. The annual love feast a Grove is one of the great events of the ye Testimony meetings in every denominatic doubtless be revived if the church mer were by consecration and faith to recei great measures of divine grace. When C richly blessed a soul, the tongue cannot refr telling it. Eph. 5:19, which exhorts to C communion and song; and Col. 3:16, " word of Christ dwell in you richly in all teaching and admonishing one another ir and hymns and spiritual songs, singing wi in your hearts to the Lord."

Mrs. R. H. R., Birch Tree, Mo. Will yo state the accepted belief as to tl Spirit?

The orthodox doctrine of the Holy S that he is the third person of the Trinity the attributes of personality and of deity said, God is a Spirit. He promised before his disciples that he would send the S them. This promise was fulfilled at P when God himself, by his Spirit, came t in the hearts of those who believed i Notice particularly the Sunday school notes for January 2, 9 and 16, in which t ing of the Holy Spirit is fully discussed. death Christ opened men's hearts to rec indwelling God, who will come today to any ing soul in the same fulness as to the disc the day of Pentecost.

J. R., Lyons, Kan., writes: "I have ju your editorial on 'The President and th which I most surely endorse, in spirit and except perhaps your strictures on the E pastor as an extremist who said 'that such a tion used with such intent is almost sacril man may make a statement which is sac in effect, and yet do so ignorantly. Why President take one isolated passage in Testament in the effort to justify his p Why did he not try to justify his position b ing something from the New Testament, s Prince of Peace made his advent into the and taught that men should love their e Such a position is sacrilegious in effect or al to my mind. To change one's position fro to war principles, or from any other good other bad, when recognized as such, n held as a doubtful attitude, to say the l all good men."

J. S., Ukiah, Calif. The passage in Matt "For all they that take the sword shall with the sword," has its parallel in Gen. Rev. 13: 10. In none of the other three does the final clause (quoted above) appear has given rise to the impression in certain that it may have been an interpolation. T authorities, however, are agreed upon its a ticity. Jesus was impressing upon his fo the fact that "those who took the sword m all the risks of human warfare, whereas h fare was one whose weapons, not being carry no such hazards, but give assura victory."

G. M. B. In the paragraph on page 89 Christian Herald of September 8, the ill in Kansas thirty years ago should hav given as 4.9% instead of 49%.

J. H. A. Michael Hillegas was treasurer United Colonies under the authority of th tinental Congress and was appointed Ju 1775. He served until September 11, 178 Treasury Department was organized und constitution, in effect March 4, 1789, and t of Congress of September 2, 1789. Mr. H was treasurer for nearly five months aft inauguration of Washington and nine day the Treasury Department was organized. We cannot t any more about Mr. Hillegas. Alexander Hamilton wa Treasurer of the United States. He was the first Se of the Treasury and as such gave us our decimal coina established the credit of the United States at home and a The office of Treasurer of the United States is a subor office in the Treasury Department.

J. E., Long Beach, Calif. Marriages between perso are closely related are discouraged for physiological, The offspring of such unions is apt to be defective. Anglican Church the lines were rigidly drawn at degrees of relationship.

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD
An Illustrated News Weekly for the Home

China Under Emperor Yuan

What Influence Will Present Changes Have on Politics and Missions?

*By ISAAC TAYLOR HEADLAND

IS it not Campbell who says,

> "I watch the wheels of nature's mazy plan,
> And judge the future from the past of man"?

Predicting is always a dangerous business, especially for those who value their reputation for good judgment and veracity, for very few of us can see far into the future. Nevertheless, I think it is allowable for those who know history—the history of nations as well as the history of the men who make the governments—to predicate upon what has gone before, and upon the character of those in power, what we may have reason to expect in the near future.

Only recently we found 400,000,000 of peace-loving people transforming themselves from an absolute monarchy of three thousand years' standing into a republic. But it behooves us at this time, and all the time, to remember through whom that almost bloodless victory was obtained. I wonder if there is one of all those who fought on the side of the rebels who would refuse to admit that that victory could not have been brought about—the overthrow of a dynasty of 2[illegible] years' standing by a war of practically 100 days—had it not been for the statesmanship and diplomacy of the man who is now, and will most likely be for some years to come, at the head of the Chinese government—President or Emperor Yuan Shi Kai. When that rebellion was in progress I said repeatedly, when asked if the Chinese were ready for a republic: "If I were adviser to the rebels, I would urge them to enter into a peace treaty with the Manchus that we would abide by the empire during the reign of little Pu Yi (Hsüan Tung), and that during his reign we would study republican forms of government, and that when he dies we will elect a president to take his place; because," I said, "you can't jump off a boat at two jumps." You must be near enough the shore or you will flounder between boat and wharf. They did, however, make the jump, but only by the diplomacy, patriotism and statesmanship of Yuan Shi Kai.

In order to predict what the future holds for China and missions, let me review some of the leading incidents in the life of this great Chinese statesman, for he is the one who will mold and make the future, and only by knowing him can we hope to know approximately what China will be. Moreover, we are justified in thus reviewing his past, for, so far as we have seen, not one article thus far published has given a just estimate of his character. The newspapers, and the Japanese for their own end, have branded him as a time-server, while the reformers a dozen, nay almost a score of years ago, branded him as a traitor, not one of which estimates are just, nor are they such as are held at Washington.

I shall show by the incidents I shall give that Yuan Shi Kai has never been a traitor nor a rebel, but always a statesman and a patriot, and always true to the government as it stood, and to what he believed to be the best interests of the people, and that, not infrequently, at the risk of his own life.

The Temple of Heaven at Peking

IN 1898, when the Emperor Kuang Hsü was issuing his reform edicts, he dismissed two presidents and four vice-presidents of the Board of Rites because they had failed to comply with his orders. These men with their friends went to the Summer Palace, where the Empress Dowager was spending the summer, and begged her to come in and take the throne and teach the boy how to govern or he would ruin the empire. She listened to all they had to say, and then dismissed them without making a move.

When His Majesty heard what they had done, he sent post haste for Yuan Shi Kai, then a man of thirty-nine, who had been given control of an army corps in Tientsin, and ordered him to come to Peking. When he came the emperor ordered him to return to Tientsin, assassinate Jung Lu, the viceroy of the province, the generalissimo of the army, and bring his troops to Pekin, surround the Summer Palace, make the Empress Dowager a prisoner, and, some say, if necessary put her to death.

No two worse orders could have been given by one Chinese to another. If he had assassinated Jung Lu, his superior officer, the generalissimo of the army, he would have put himself in the list with John Wilkes Booth, the most execrated man, perhaps, in the United States. But if he had attempted to imprison the Empress Dowager with, say, 12,500 troops, all China would have raised the cry that he had rebelled and was going to take the throne, and all the troops that could have been mustered would have swooped down upon him, and there would have been a revolution.

But for a boy whom she had placed upon the throne to have ordered a young man whom she had placed at the head of the army to imprison her—his own adopted mother—in a country where filial piety ranks so high that if in a city a boy should murder his parent the authorities would tear down a corner of the city wall and build it up in a semi-circular form to reveal to all future ages that one boy had so far forgotten his filial relations to his parents as to murder one of them! And yet here is the pattern of four hundred millions of people ordering this young general to put to death his (the emperor's) mother.

Yuan Shi Kai was between two fires. He must either disobey an absolute monarch, and perhaps lose his head, or commit the two worst crimes that a man in his position could commit. The reformers would have forgiven him if he had obeyed the orders, and would have dubbed him a patriot if the thing had proven a success. It is easy to forgive others for committing crimes for you which you are afraid to commit yourself. Yuan Shi Kai chose, however, at the risk of his life, to disobey the command, revealed the plot to Jung Lu, the man he was ordered to murder, and for this courageous act the reformers dubbed him a traitor.

Yuan Shi Kai was the only man during that troublous time that dared to do so brave an act.

But we are told that he did it to curry favor with the Empress Dowager. If that be the case we may expect him to do other things, as opportunity offers, to gain favor with Her Majesty. But did he?

In 1900, when the Empress Dowager, after the coup d'état, was in the midst of the Boxer movement, and was compelled to remove the governor of Shantung,

Section of the Great Wall, Near Nankow Pass

Approach to the Ming Tombs, Nanking

---

*Dr. Headland's long and distinguished missionary services in China, and his intimate relations with the leaders of thought and public opinion, Yuan Shi Kai among them, eminently qualify him for presenting a forecast of the policy of the new constitutional government.

Yü Hsien, she appointed Yuan Shi Kai as acting governor in his stead. Still later Prince Tuan, Prince Chuang, Chao Shu Chiao, Chi Hsiu and Na Tung, members of the foreign office, decided they must do something drastic to get the Empress Dowager to side with the Boxer movement. They therefore drew up a demand, purporting to come from the foreign ministers, and forged the names of Conger, Sir Claud McDonald, and the other ministers to it, and took it to the Empress Dowager saying, "These foreign ministers demand that you give up the throne and restore the emperor once more to power."

This made her very angry, and it was then she issued the only foolish edict that that great woman ever issued. She ordered every governor and viceroy to massacre all the foreigners and all the Chinese Christians in their respective provinces, an order which if it had been carried out would have doomed China in the eyes of the European governments who were on the watch for an excuse to divide China up among the Powers.

NOW suppose you had been acting governor of Shantung instead of Yuan Shi Kai, what would you have done? If you disobey her and do not do it in a wonderfully diplomatic way, you will surely lose your head, and your head is a very important part of your constitution. But if he wants to curry favor, perhaps the natural thing to do would be to disobey her. If he disobeys her, how will he do it in such a diplomatic way that she cannot get a hold on him?

As we said, he is a diplomat. He pretended he did not believe it came from her—it was a forgery—and he could not afford to put into operation such a vast and dangerous forgery as this without due consideration. He might have telegraphed to Peking. That, however, would have been too rapid a method. He could have sent a horseman—that also would have been too rapid a method, and he needed time. He sent a runner—or perhaps in this case a walker—and ordered him to go to Peking and remain there until he got confirmation from the Empress Dowager's own pen that this was a genuine edict. While that courier was on this errand he removed all the foreigners from the province, and the Chinese Christians to places of safety, and when his messenger returned he was ready to obey the edict to the letter.

But no one called him a traitor for thus disobeying the Empress Dowager, saving the lives of foreigners and Chinese Christians, and furnishing almost daily messengers to Consul Fowler at Chefoo. He disobeyed the Empress Dowager just as he had disobeyed the Emperor, because he was a statesman and a patriot, and not a time-server.

Let us take one more incident out of the life of this great man. In January, 1909, after the death of the great Dowager, Yuan Shi Kai was dismissed from office as Grand Councilor by Prince Chün, the father and regent of the baby emperor, and was sent home in disgrace. He went home, a black-bearded, black-haired man (for he was born in 1859 and hence was only fifty years old), in January, 1909, and remained there until he was called back to office in October, 1911, by the outbreak of the rebellion; and during these three years his hair and beard became "as white as snow," and he is the second man in all Chinese history whose hair turned white in a short time. While he was in disgrace the rebels asked him to join them. Never would a man have been more excusable for doing so. He had been dismissed in disgrace without reason by an alien monarch, and it was his own people who were in rebellion. He refused to join them, but chose rather to remain in disgrace, without any assurance that he would ever be called back to power. He preferred to remain true to the government as it was rather than ever to be among the rebels. This is a third time he has shown his patriotism without any prospect or promise of personal reward, but at the risk of sacrificing all personal ambition.

Gate to the Temple of the Classics, Peking

So we repeat: Yuan Shi Kai has always been a patriot, true to the government as it stood, or as the people wanted it; and as he has always been, so we believe he will continue to be till the end.

We must not forget how, when called back to power by the Manchus (Prince Chün), he tried to save the dynasty, first by choosing all the rebel leaders in his cabinet, and when that failed, by sending Tang Shao-i to try to settle matters by arbitration through Wu Ting Fang.

WE must not forget also how, when he had induced the Manchus to give up the throne and the dynasty, and had saved them from the wholesale massacre which has always happened at the fall of a dynasty, they unanimously selected him to establish the provisional government; how when Sun Ya Sen resigned his position as provisional president the republic south of the Yangtse River his own Na nal Assembly "unanimously" elected Yuan Shi K as provisional president over the north and south ow when the year was up he was then reelected pre ent for five years, all of which indicates a confide in him by the great mass of the Chinese people ich the carpings and criticisms of Japanese and her newspapers and students and other alien C ese can scarcely counterbalance.

That the Chinese are not ready for a republic s as our own we have never doubted. We uld not but hope, however, that this fo of government might continue to the end ith some better provision for electing a pre ent than to have the whole country stirred for a year as we do, but if it had been a rep lic, it would have been one in whic the president would have had all the p ers and prerogatives of an emperor. I on the other hand, Yuan Shi Kai has ab lished a dynasty (though he has een elected thereto), it may last durin his lifetime without serious rebellion, ile revolt may come at his death, ess his son is strong enough to prevent i

If it is a monarchy, however, i vil simply be a government such as it uld have been if the republic had conti ed. In other words, the government will r ain the same whatever its name ma be. The greatest danger that China h to fear is her nearest neighbor, but th est man to protect her from that neigh is Yuan Shi Kai.

I have no misgivings in the mat of Christian missions, as both Yuan Sh Kai and Li Yuan Heng have repeatedl expressed themselves as willing to fu her the missionaries in all their benev ent enterprises. Such expressions, how er are cheap and easily made, though th far they have protected the lives and pro rty of the missionaries during all their disturba es.

We have better evidences than mere promises, wever. Miss Clara Cushman of Tientsin star a school for high-class girls—a school in which all pils must pay all their own expenses. Bishop Lewis tes me that "Yuan Shi Kai has placed his nieces in iss Cushman's girls' school, where my own daugh is teaching them." And Miss Cushman writes at "President Yuan has sent me a gift of 500 els (ounces of silver) to help support the school."

But later even than this comes the news that i he effort of the Baptist, the Friends, the Met ist Episcopal and the Canadian Methodist Missio to establish a Union University in Chengtu, in est China, when the matter was called to the attenti of Yuan Shi Kai by my friend Joe Beach, the pres nt of the institution, Yuan insisted on sending him a ter of commendation, together with a check for $ 00, which read as follows:

"I am sending you herewith two enclosures my written endorsement for the University, and my ersonal check for Four Thousand Dollars, which ise be gracious enough to receive."

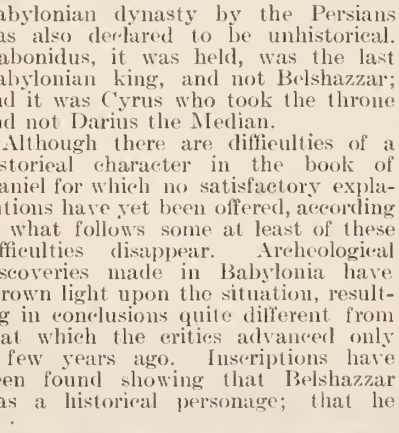
New Light on Belshazzar

By PROF. ALBERT T. CLAY

Babylonian Department of Yale University

FOR a long time Belshazzar of the Book of Daniel, was regarded by many scholars as a mythical personage. The Greek version of the overthrow of the Neo-Babylonian dynasty by the Persians was also declared to be unhistorical. Nabonidus, it was held, was the last Babylonian king, and not Belshazzar; and it was Cyrus who took the throne and not Darius the Median.

Although there are difficulties of a historical character in the book of Daniel for which no satisfactory explanations have yet been offered, according to what follows some at least of these difficulties disappear. Archeological discoveries made in Babylonia have thrown light upon the situation, resulting in conclusions quite different from that which the critics advanced only a few years ago. Inscriptions have been found showing that Belshazzar was a historical personage; that he was the son of Nabonidus, the ruler from whom Cyrus took the kingdom; that he was peculiarly associated with his father in ruling Babylon, as he took a prominent part in governmental affairs; and that he was killed "by night" by the army of Cyrus under Gobryas.



Interpretation of a Dream

Dr. T. G. Pinches, of London, has recently published a contract tablet in the Expository Times in which the contracting parties swore by Nabonidus, the king of Babylon, and Belshazzar, the son of the king. It is dated in "the 12th year of Nabonidus." This, together with other facts set forth below, make the statement ascribed to Belshazzar, that Daniel "should be the third ruler in the kingdom," perfectly intelligible.

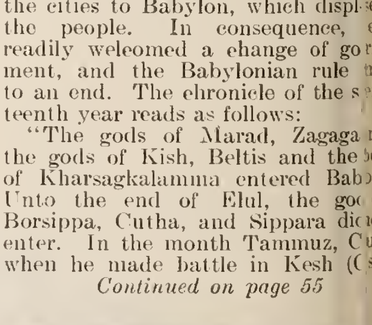
Dr. Pinches also published another tablet, dated thirteen years after the fall of Babylon, in the fourth year of Cambyses, in which a certain Gobryas is called the "governor of Babylon," from which he makes the deduction that while Cyrus became king of Babylon after the fall of the Neo-Babylonian dynasty, he appointed governors, which Dr. Pinches claims throws light on the last verse of the fifth chapter of Daniel, where it is stated that after Belshazzar was killed "Darius the Mede took the kingdom"; that is, not as king, but as governor.

FOR some years the existence has been known of a chronicle, by the help of which the description of Herodotus concerning the strategy whereby the city of Babylon was taken, and the story in the Book of Daniel concerning the overthrow of the kingdom, can in a general way be harmonized. This chronicle says that in the seventh year the king (Nabonidus) was in Tema; the son of the king (Belshazzar), the princes and the army were in Akkad. In consequence, when the great festival of the year, on New Year's day, namely Akitu, was celebrated, "the king to Babylon did not go; the god Nebo to Babylon did not go; Bel did not go forth; the Akitu was omitted." Upon this festal occasion, the statue of the god Nebo was carried from his shrine in the temple Ezida, in Borsippa across the river, on the procession street, Aibur-shabu-rabu, which ran from Ezida to the temple Esagila, in Babylon. It was necessary for the king, or the son of the king, to head the proce on. In the ninth, tenth, and ele th years the feat was also omitted ue to the absence of the king, his son nd the nobles.

Nabonidus had not been an irreli ous man, but he had conducted affairs a way that had made him unpop ar. Besides neglecting the ancient es, he had brought the gods from ma of the cities to Babylon, which displ sed the people. In consequence, ey readily welcomed a change of go rnment, and the Babylonian rule me to an end. The chronicle of the s enteenth year reads as follows:

"The gods of Marad, Zagaga nd the gods of Kish, Beltis and the ods of Kharsagkalamma entered Bab on. Unto the end of Elul, the go of Borsippa, Cutha, and Sippara di ot enter. In the month Tammuz, C us, when he made battle in Kesh (C s),

Continued on page 55



A Royal Contract

A Voice in the Wilderness

By GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL LUTZ

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

MARGARET EARLE, school teacher, tenderfoot," mistaking a water stop for her station and discovering her mistake just too late was left behind on the desert plain of Arizona and saw her train disappear into the night. Alarmed by the calls of coyotes she climbed laboriously to the top of the water tank where visions of her parents reading comfortably at home alternated with fear at her predicament and with wonder at the glory of the star-lit sky. A passing half-drunken rancher told her that her station was twenty miles away. She climbed down from her point of vantage on the tank and started to go to the rancher's camp, first on foot and then riding behind on the pony; but she found his company less desirable than loneliness. She dropped off the horse, the rancher threw her bag after her and left her sobbing in the sand beside the trail.

CHAPTER II—Continued

UNDER the blue, starry dome, alone, sat Margaret again, this time with no friendly water tank for her defense, and took counsel with herself. The howling coyotes seemed to be silenced for the time; at least they had become a minor quantity in her equation of trouble. She felt now that man was her greatest menace, and to get away safely from him, back to that friendly water tank and the dear old railroad track, she would have pledged her next year's salary. She stole softly to the place where she had heard the suit case fall, and picking it up started on the weary road back to the tank. Could she ever find the way? The trail seemed an intangible thing; her sense of direction confused. Yet there was nothing else to do. She shuddered whenever she thought of the man who had been her companion on horseback.

When the man reached camp he set his horse loose, and stumbled into the door of the log bunk house, calling loudly for something to eat.

The men were sitting around the room on the rough benches and bunks, smoking their pipes or stolidly staring into the dying fire. Two smoky kerosene lanterns that hung from spikes driven high in the logs cast a weird light over the company, eight men in all, rough and hardened with exposure to stormy life and weather. They were men with unkempt beards and uncombed hair, their coarse cotton shirts open at the neck, their brawny arms bare above the elbow; with crimes and sorrows and hard living written large across their faces.

There was one, a boy in looks, with smooth face and white skin healthily flushed in places like a baby's. His face, too, was hard and set in sternness like a mask, as if life had used him badly; but behind it was a fineness of feature and spirit that could not be utterly hidden. They called him the Kid, and thought it was his youth that made him different from them all, for he was only twenty-four, and not one of the rest was under forty. They were doing their best to help him get over that innate fineness that was his natural inheritance, but although he stopped at nothing, and played his part always with the ease of one old in the ways of the world, yet he kept a quiet reserve about him always, a kind of charm beyond which they had not been able to go.

He was playing cards with three others at the table when the man came in, and did not look up at the entrance. The woman, white and hopeless, appeared at the door of the shed-room when the man came, and obediently set about getting his supper, but her lifeless face never changed expression.

"Brung a gal 'long of me part way," boasted the man as he flung himself into a seat by the table. "Thought you fellers might like t' see 'er, but she got too high an' mighty fer me, wouldn't take a pull at th' bottle 'ith me, 'n shrieked like a catamount when I wanted to kiss 'er. Found 'er hangin on th' water tank. Got off 't th' wrong place. One o' yer highbrows out o' th' parlor car! Good lesson fer 'er!"

The boy looked up from his cards sternly, his keen eyes boring through the man.

"Where is she now?" he asked quietly, and all the men in the room looked up uneasily. There was that tone and accent again that made the boy alien from them. What was it?

The man felt it and snarled his answer angrily.

"Dropped 'er on th' trail, an' threw her fine-lady b'longin's after 'er. Ain't got no use fer thet kind. Wonder what they was created fer. Ain't no good to nobody, not even 'emselves." And he laughed a harsh cackle that was not pleasant to hear.

The boy threw down his cards and went out, shutting the door. In a few minutes the men heard two horses pass the end of the bunk house toward the trail, but no one looked up nor spoke. You could not have told by the flicker of an eyelash that they knew where the boy had gone.

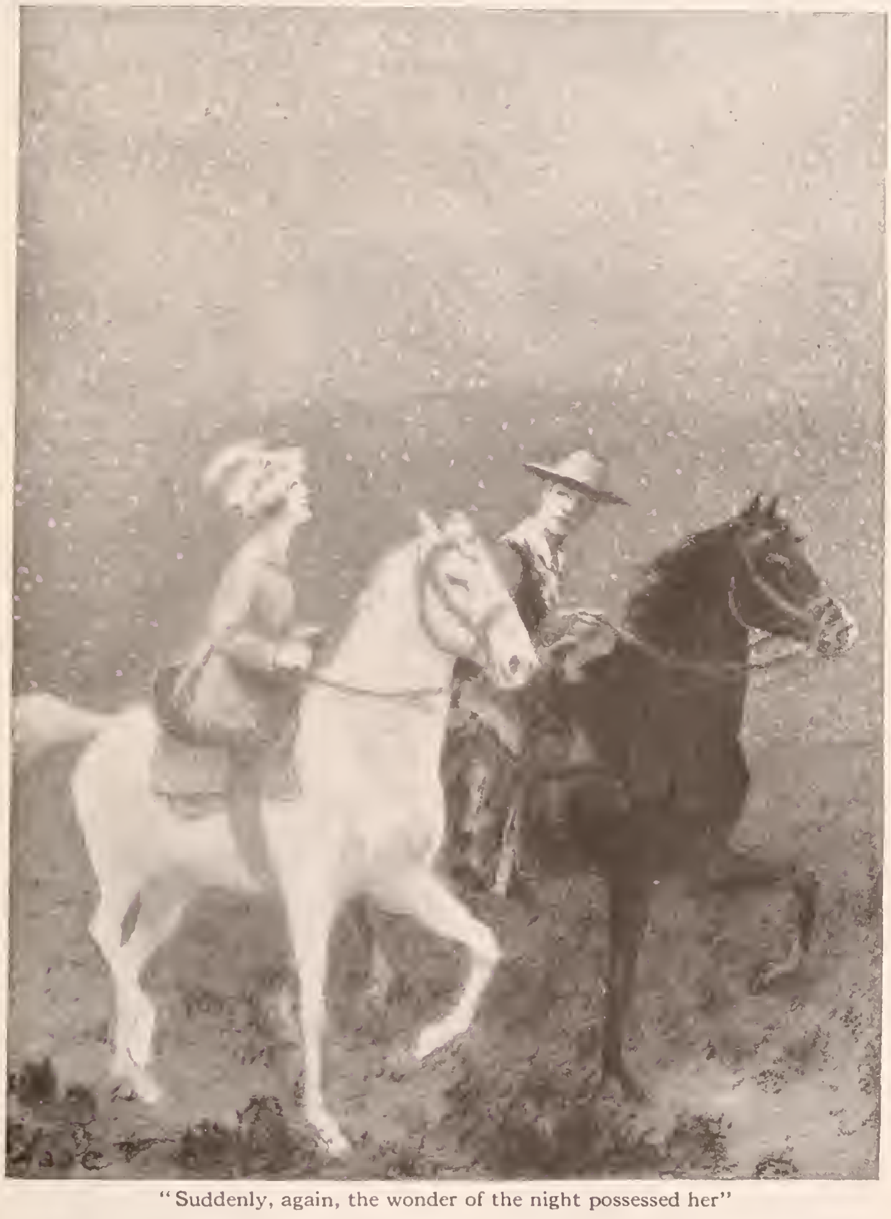
She was sitting in the deep shadow of a sage-bush that lay on the edge of the trail like a great blot, her suit case beside her, her breath coming short with exertion and excitement, when she heard a cheery whistle in the distance. Just an old love song dating back a dozen years and discarded now as hackneyed even by the street pianos at home, but oh! how good it sounded:

"From the desert I come to thee."

The ground was cold and struck a chill through her garments as she sat there alone in the night. On came the clear musical whistle, and she peered out of the shadow with eager eyes and frightened heart. Dared she risk it again? Should she call, or should she hold her breath and keep quiet, still hoping he would pass her by unnoticed? Before she could decide two horses stopped almost in front of her and a rider swung himself down.

He stood before her as if it were day and he could see her quite plainly.

"You needn't be afraid," he explained calmly. "I thought I had better look you up after the old man got home and gave his report. He was pretty well tanked up, and not exactly a fit escort for ladies. What's the trouble?"



"Suddenly, again, the wonder of the night possessed her"

Like an angel of deliverance he looked to her as he stood in the starlight, outlined in silhouette against the wide, wonderful sky; broad shoulders, well-set head, close-cropped curls, handsome contour even in the darkness. There was abont him an air of quiet strength which gave her confidence.

"Oh, thank you!" she gasped with a quick little relieved sob in her voice. "I am so glad you have come. I was—just a little—frightened, I think!" She attempted to rise, but her foot caught in her skirt and she sank wearily back to the sand again.

The boy stooped over and lifted her to her feet.

"You certainly are some plucky girl!" he commented, looking down at her slender height as she stood beside him. "'A little frightened,' were you? Well, I should say you had a right to be."

"Well, not exactly frightened, you know," said Margaret, taking a deep breath and trying to steady her voice. "I think perhaps I was more mortified than frightened, to think I made such a blunder as to get off the train before I reached my station. You see I'd made up my mind not to be frightened, but when I heard that awful howl of some beast . . . ! And then that terrible man!" She shuddered and put her hands suddenly over her eyes as if to shut out all memory of it.

"More than one kind of beast!" commented the boy briefly. "Well, you needn't worry about him; he's having his supper and he'll be sound asleep by the time we get back."

"Oh, have we got to go where he is?" gasped Margaret. "Isn't there some other place? Is Ashland very far away? That is where I am going."

"No other place where you could go tonight. Ashland's a good twenty-five miles from here. But you'll be all right. Mom Wallis'll look out for you. She isn't much of a looker, but she has a kind heart. She pulled me through once when I was just about flickering out. Come on, you'll be pretty tired. We better be getting back. Mom Wallis'll make you comfortable and then you can get off good and early in the morning."

Without any apology, and as if it were the common courtesy of the desert, he stooped and lifted her easily to the saddle of the second horse, placed the bridle in her hands, then swung the suit case up on his own horse and sprang into the saddle.

CHAPTER III

HE turned the horses about and took charge of her just as if he were accustomed to managing stray ladies in the wilderness every day of his life and understood the situation perfectly; and Margaret settled wearily into her saddle, and looked about her with content.

Suddenly, again, the wide wonder of the night possessed her. Involuntarily she breathed a soft little exclamation of awe and delight. Her companion turned to her questioningly.

"Does it always seem so big here—so—limitless?" she asked in explanation. "It is so far to everywhere it takes one's breath away, and yet the stars hang close, like a protection. It gives one the feeling of being alone in the great universe with God. Does it always seem so out here?"

He looked at her curiously, her pure profile turned up to the wide dome of luminous blue above. His voice was strangely low and wondering as he answered after a moment's silence:

"No, it is not always so," he said, "I have seen it when it was more like being alone in the great universe with the devil!" There was a tremendous earnestness in his tone that the girl felt meant more than was on the surface. She turned to look at the fine young face beside her. In the starlight she could not make out the bitter hardness of lines that were beginning to be carved about his sensitive mouth. But there was so much sadness in his voice that her heart went out to him in pity.

"Oh," she said gently, "it would be awful that way. Yes, I can understand. I felt so, a little, while that terrible man was with me," and she shuddered again at the remembrance.

Again he gave her that curious look.

"There are worse things than Pop Wallis out here," he said gravely. "But I'll grant you there's some class to the skies. It's a case of 'where every prospect pleases and only man is vile,'" and with the words his tone grew almost flippant. It hurt her sensitive nature and without knowing it she half

Continued on page 57

A Week in the World's News

NO BREAK WITH AUSTRIA. The full text of the Austrian reply to the second note of the United States in the matter of the Ancona was made public at Washington on December 31. The note complies fully with the spirit of the American requests. The Austrian government assures the American government that it has disciplined the commander of the submarine for exceeding instructions, and that no similar incident will again occur. The Austrian government agrees with the American cabinet that "the sacred commandments of humanity must be observed also in war." The note refers to the fact that a short time ago the Austro-Hungarian government and the Washington cabinet were not in harmony on a question which the entire public opinion in Austria-Hungary regarded principally a question of humanity. The tone and temper of the note, coupled with the feeling which has been growing in Congress against any assertion by this country of demands which might lead to an impossible situation, make it reasonably certain there will be no breach either in diplomatic relations or otherwise between the United States and Austria, and it is felt that the settlement of the Austrian case makes even more certain the complete and satisfactory settlement of the Lusitania case.

HENRY FORD RETURNS HOME. Leaving the members of the Oscar II peace expedition at Stockholm to perfect their plans under delegated leadership, Mr. Ford has returned to America not necessarily a sadder, but certainly a wiser, man; but more assured than ever that the bringing about of peace lies very largely in the hands of neutral nations. He landed at Brooklyn on Sunday, January 2, and was soon thereafter in conference with William J. Bryan. Mr. Ford declared that up to date the expedition is worth the cost, and that he will continue with his plans here and will rejoin the party abroad if necessary. He has revised his ideas as to the cause of war, and now shifts the blame from militarists and makers of munitions to the masses of people themselves in having neglected to select the proper heads for their governments. "In the great majority of cases," he said to the newspaper men, "people select their rulers and then are afraid of them. They don't write enough letters to them and let them know their views." As to the expedition itself, the members will proceed to Copenhagen, and after delegates to the Hague Conference are elected, the remainder of the party will probably return to America.

DEATH DEPLETES SUPREME COURT BENCH. On January 2 Justice Joseph Rucker Lamar, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, died at his home in Washington as the result of a severe cold, following a period of illness extending over several months. Justice Lamar has occupied a distinguished position on the bench since his appointment in 1910 by President Taft. It is pointed out that he was one of the three members of the Supreme Court who had been appointed by a President of the opposite political party. He was born October 14, 1857, in Elbert County, Md., his father, James S. Lamar, being pastor in the Disciples denomination. His education all tended toward the law, and he became the legal representative of railroads and other large corporations. His opinions on the bench were held in high respect. His wife was Miss Clarendon Pendleton, daughter of the late Dr. W. K. Pendleton, president of Bethany College; she, with his two sons, Philip Rucker and William Pendleton Lamar, survives him.

FOR A UNITED CHURCH. A conference of several days' length, and attended by selected representatives of the Protestant churches of all North America, was begun at Garden City, Long Island, on January 4, in the Episcopal Cathedral of the Incarnation, for the purpose of considering a basis on which Christians of every name may agree as the first concrete move toward the visible realization of unity for which Christ prayed. Rev. Dr. Junius B. Remensnyder, a former president of the Lutheran General Synod, was selected to deliver the principal address, the discussion to follow under the leadership of prominent members of the Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, Episcopal, Disciples, and other denominations.

WARDEN OSBORNE REMOVED. Thomas Mott Osborne, who has been reform warden of Sing Sing for a little over a year and whose reforms have been the center of a considerable controversy, was indicted by the grand jury after nearly three months' investigation on the charge of dereliction of duty. Mr. Osborne demanded an immediate trial, but meanwhile, Dr. George W. Kirchwey, formerly dean of the Columbia Law School, an ardent supporter of Mr. Osborne, has been appointed warden.

WIRELESS TO JAPAN. The Japanese government has just completed a 300-kilowatt wireless plant at Funabashi, near Tokio. The station will send and receive messages via Honolulu, the distance being about 3,400 miles. Signals sent out from the Funabashi station have been caught at San Francisco, which is 5,600 miles away, and have been heard clearly at Honolulu.

KING ROSS IS DEAD. In 1827 a Scotchman by the name of Ross was shipwrecked on Cocos Island, the island near which the Australian cruiser Sydney sunk the German cruiser Emden last year. The islanders had never seen a white man and thought he was a god. Had they thought otherwise they would have eaten him, and Mr. Ross was willing to continue their misapprehension and became their king. He taught them the ways of civilization and became a very worthy king. In 1886 the British government formally an ced the twenty islands of the group and iss l a grant to George Clunies Ross under whi he Ross family has since governed the island nd the latest occupant of the "throne," A ew Ross, died on December 29.

COLD STORAGE IN THE TREET S. Sunrise of December 30 showed the c ge groves near Los Angeles, Calif., mant in snow, the first time in many years. The m- perature did not fall below freezing an he trees suffered little damage.

1916 WILL PAY WELL. Increases he pay of many workers became effective nu- ary 1. Through New England, cotton ra- tors granted advances which affect more an 75,000 mill workers. Employees of s ice transit lines in many cities were grant in- creases in pay, and throughout the ast nearly all the building trades received a ht increase in their daily wage. Even Pu an porters and conductors were included i he increased rates.

SEVEN STATES GO DRY JANUA 1. The states of Iowa, Colorado, Oregon, sh- ington, Idaho, Arkansas and South Ca na came under state-wide prohibition la on January 1, making the total number o o- hibition states in the Union nineteen. ore than 3,000 saloons were put out of busin in the seven states.

PETROLEUM AT A NEW REC D. There were 291,400,000 barrels of petr um produced in the United States in 1915, a d- ing to the estimates of the United States o- logical Survey. Of this production, 267,40 00 barrels were marketed, the other 24 0,- 000 barrels being held in storage. Thi as about 2,000,000 more barrels than were r- keted in 1914.

Continued on next page

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Indépendance Belge

DURING the whole of the past week, with the exception of Christmas day, the attention of the United Kingdom has been steadfastly fixed on the British cabinet and the efforts which were being made to prevent a complete split of that body on the question of conscription.

During the latter part of the period when Lord Derby's recruiting scheme was being tried out, Premier Asquith made a definite pledge that the unmarried men of the kingdom should be compelled to perform military duty before the married men would be called on. As a result of this pledge, the married men of military age came forward in very large numbers, knowing that any call to them for actual service with the colors would be postponed till practically all the unmarried were actually in active service, and during the last few days it can be said that all the married men have registered for service under the Derby plan. But the unmarried men have not registered themselves in anything like the same proportions. Indeed, from what little we know, it hardly seems probable that much more than half the unmarried men have come forward.

Under these circumstances it became necessary for Mr. Asquith and the cabinet to plan some measures to present to Parliament on its reassembling on January 6, which would provide the supply of men for the army which is imperative, redeem his pledge to the married men, and at the same time antagonize as few elements of the British electorate and of Parliament as possible.

In a general sense many important elements of the British electorate are on record as absolutely opposed to conscription under any name and form. Most prominent among these are the Labor party and the Irish party, which, between them, have over a hundred votes in the House of Commons. Besides these two there are many of the radical elements of the Liberal party as well as a section of the conservatives led by Balfour, formerly premier and at present First Lord of the Admiralty in the existing coalition cabinet. The opponents of conscription have the active support of a large section of the British press.

To obtain the needed men and to do so without antagonizing these sections of the British people and the British parties has been the difficult task with which the cabinet has been occupied. Finally, in principle at least, a scheme of action has, according to report, been resolved on. This scheme will take the form of a bill to be presented to Parliament, which will provide that all unmarried men who by a given date, to be fixed in the bill, have not volunteered for immediate military service shall on the arrival of such date be compelled to serve. But Ireland is to be exempt.

Now, as no unmarried men of military age have been for some time allowed to leave the kingdom, and as the time which these will be given to volunteer will be very short, before compulsion is applied, it does not seem as though the unmarried men had much chance to escape.

This plan is expected to pass Parliament with comparatively little opposition and to become law, but as a result even of this modified form of compulsory service, two and perhaps more resignations from the cabinet are expected. The Labor party meets the end of the present week to consider the whole subject.

There appears to be a feeling in the British public and press that Mr. Asquith has nearly reached the limit of his usefulness in his present position, and that a change will shortly take place in the premiership. Three names are being discussed as his possible successor—Lloyd George, Sir Edward Carson, and Lord Curzon.

The class of 1917 will be incorporated in the active French army just after the New Year, some sixteen months before the time at which under normal conditions these 350,000 young men would have joined the colors.

Bulgaria, which has taken over the administration of the "former kingdom of Serbia," is having difficulty with the question of the money issued by that former kingdom. The paper money, of which there is approximately 380,000,000 dinars in circulation (a dinar is 19.6 cents), was secured by a metallic reserve of 61,000,000 dinars in the possession of the Serbian National Bank. This reserve was carried off at the time of the Serbian retreat. The result is that the Bulgarian administration refuses to recognize this paper money at all, and has forbidden its use. This demonetization has, of course, caused great misery among the population. The Serbian silver and nickel minor coinage is to continue to circulate temporarily.

The Russian government has refused to allow the Duma to meet. For more than three weeks the censorship on news of any kind from Russia has been more severe than at any period heretofore during the war.

Berlin has informed us several times during this period that there have been acute internal disorders in the land of the Czar, and this refusal to allow the Duma to meet, coupled with the extraordinarily severe censorship, gives some color to the report. Russia is undoubtedly in a very difficult situation financially, industrially and commercially today, owing largely to the impossibility in which she stands of free communication with the outside world. These troubles are only temporary, as Russia is potentially the richest country in the world and only needs a scientific development of her enormous resources to become so in fact.

There have been reports from a variety of sources of food riots in B in and Vienna, and it is said that th a- tions in both Austria and German re being steadily reduced. To what e- gree this is the truth, which it is n- doubtedly to some degree, canno be said.

Unlike last year, Christmas day as not in a general way marked by a re or less understood truce along a of the lines, nor were there, accordi to the reports, any of the scenes bet en the trenches which took place last r, when foes for a time laid aside ir weapons and met in a non-h ile manner.

Artillery fighting in Champ ne culminated in a German attack on ill 193, so often fought over in the st, which the French repulsed. In he Vosges very hard fighting conti ed to rage on the Hartmannsweiler of, spreading toward the end of the ek to Hirzstein to the southwest. is fighting has been largely of the h d- to-hand order, and has resulted in ry heavy losses to both sides. The r ilt is still in doubt.

Considerable interest was arc ed during the week by the announce nt by the British that they had withd vn one army corps (40,000 men) of I an troops from the western front or another field of action." No cl to the identity of this other field was g n, which omission gave rise to conside ble animated but fruitless specula n. Most probably these troops were t s- ferred to Egypt or Mesopota ia, where the climate will be more ada ed to them. The Indian troops hav ot been a remarkable success on the st- ern line for this very reason of cli te. Then, too, their provisioning has en rise to considerable difficulty.

In Mesopotamia the British h a week of hard fighting at Kut-el-Ar ra. The Turks, after artillery prepara n, rushed a fort on the British line o le-

Continued on page 55

BYING BACK AMERICAN SECURI-TIE Following the announcement of the prosed mobilization of American securities by t British government, L. F. Loree, presiden of the Delaware and Hudson Railway Conany, issued an estimate of the amount of merican securities held abrl and the amount of these secuies which had been repurased during the first six mous of 1915. According to his timate, $621,289,772 worth of led railway securities were sold the American market on fore account in the first six mous of 1915, and on July 31 estimated that there were still foreign hands American raily securities of a par value of 223,510,229 and a market valu of $1,751,437,912. The holgs of American stocks and bon abroad are by no means coned to listed securities, there beia great deal of foreign capital nvested in American dusal and mining corporations, and state, county and municipal onds, in which there has beelmost as much trading as in e listed securities since the war egan. It is therefore estimat that we have repurchased with the past year more than $1,0,000,000 of our securities whi were held abroad at the begning of the war.

© International Film Service, Inc.

Delegates to the Pan-American Scientific Congress in Front of the Pan-American Union Building. Vice-President Marshall, Secretary of State Lansing, Ambassadors from Brazil and Chile in the Center Group

TPHUS CROSSES THE RIGRANDE. The typhus epidemic has bece more than serious in Mexico. The Pul Health Service is maintaining a strict quantine against typhus along the border, andet in spite of the most vigilant care three cas have developed in the town of Laredo, Tex.

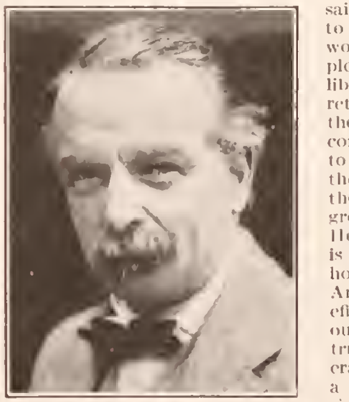
FOM AIR TO SOIL. Nitrogen is absolut necessary to growing plants, and when exhsted from the soil must be replaced. Theorld has been dependent upon the nitrate bedof Chile for this most important element of tilizer. Some years ago it was found thahe electric furnace could be made to devp nitrogen in large quantities from the air, t to be commercially feasible the electric curt used must be produced more cheaply tha t can be produced in any plant burning coa The Southern Electro-Chemical Compan with a plant using water power from the Catha River in South Carolina, announced on cember 28 that it was prepared to supply nitres for commercial purposes at a price less han the market price for imported nitres. The company fixes the nitrogen of air through the Pauling process, patent in Austria several years ago. This pross is now said to be employed in making nites for ammunition for the Teutonic alli which by the exigencies of war are cut off om the South American supply. The anncement of the Southern Electro-Chical Company followed only a day or twhe recommendation of Brigadier General Crer, chief of ordnance of the United States arn, who called attention to the possibility of e United States itself becoming independent of foreign supply by the development of electric process.

VLL EUROPE GO BANKRUPT? How lonwill the governments of Europe be able to ep up the war without going bankrupt is a qstion that is being asked in many quarter Even with thrift and economy enforced to last notch among the various population and with business stimulated to the higst productive point compatible with existi trade conditions, the outlook is still unpmising. One year more of war it is estiated would increase the national debt of gland to something over $17,000,000,000. Thixed annual charges, including interest, arn and navy, etc., would be something like1,400,000,000. If to this are added increed armament, old age pensions and the likhe budget would be over $2,000,000,000 as ainst an average of $900,000,000 before thevar. This tremendous burden, to be bor by 45,000,000 population—more than doue that of the United States with 100,000,000 population—would seem intolerable, espially when it is realized that it would last at lst a full generation. And when we consid that the other warring powers, France, Gerany, Austria and Russia, would be loaded wit debt in the same proportion, some of he far less able to stand the burden, we get npse of a cause that may operate to shon the war when all other arguments may ail the specter of financial exhaustion.

UR CHARACTER, PLEASE. The Higway Safety League of Massachusetts hasad introduced into the senate of the Maehusetts legislature a bill which provid that a license to operate a motor vehicle sha be granted only after an investigation nthe mental, moral and physical qualificaior of the applicant.

IERICA SECOND ON THE SEA. Acding to a recent tabulation by the Deparent of Commerce, the commercial fleet of United States ranks second to that of re Britain. The British have 3,063 ocean-going steamers of over three thousand gross tons. The United States has 315, France 228, and Japan 225. The German commercial fleet includes 544 vessels of this class and would be second in time of peace. Since the passage of the Registry Act on August 18, 1914, 148 vessels have been transferred to the American flag, the tonnage being very nearly identical with that lost to the flag on account of the activities of the Confederate fleet in 1863 and 1864.

PAN-AMERICA: AN IDEA OR AN ALLIANCE? The sessions of the Pan-American Scientific Congress at Washington have shown a considerable intensifying and unifying of the feeling of Pan-Americanism, in which has been included a restatement of America's understanding of the Monroe Doctrine. According to a Buenos Aires cablegram, Ambassador Naon is commissioned by Argentina to arrange a quadruple entente between Argentina, Brazil, Chile and the United States, an alliance whose object should be the upholding of this new statement of the Monroe Doctrine, and united action against any aggression upon the Western Continent. In addressing the American Congress at the beginning of the present session, President Wilson said that the countries of the new world 'mean always to make a common cause of national independence," and that "all the governments of America stand upon a footing of genuine equality." This sentiment was further supported by the Chilean Ambassador Eduarado Suarez Mujica, President of the Pan-American Congress, who said of the Monroe Doctrine that "generalized as a derivation from the Pan-American policy supported by the republics in the continent as a common force and a common defense, it has become a solid tie of union, a guarantee, a bulwark for our democracies." Señor Ignacio Calderon of the Bolivian delegation said: "America is destined to lead the world. Let us work together for the principle of right and justice, liberty and happiness." Secretary Lansing, addressing the opening meeting of the congress, gave a new impetus to this wider statement of the Monroe Doctrine and to the movement toward a greater pan-Americanism. He said: "The present epoch is one which must bring home to every thinking American the wonderful benefits to be gained by trusting our neighbors and by being trusted by them, by cooperation and helpfulness, by a dignified regard for the rights of all, and by living our national lives in harmony and good will." . . . "Never before have our people so fully realized the significance of the words 'peace' and 'fraternity.' Never have the need and benefit of international cooperation in every form of human activity been so evident as they are today."



© American Press Association

David Lloyd George

British Minister of Munitions

ARMY RECRUITING OFFICE

© International Film Service, Inc.

Enlistment Scenes Under the Lord Derby Scheme of Recruiting in England

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE $1.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The congress was divided into nine sections and forty-five subsections for the consideration of separate scientific and commercial questions.

TO FINANCE SOUTH AMERICA. Until the present year millions of dollars in European capital found welcome opportunity for investment in Argentina and the other South American states. This source of new capital is closed today, but the developing life of these growing nations continues to need more capital than it can create itself. In a recent interview in the New York Times, Amos L. Post, a retired capitalist living in Buenos Aires, called attention to the opportunities for investment in the South American field, but with it sounded a warning against any investment which was not made with a definite purpose and with sufficient financial support.

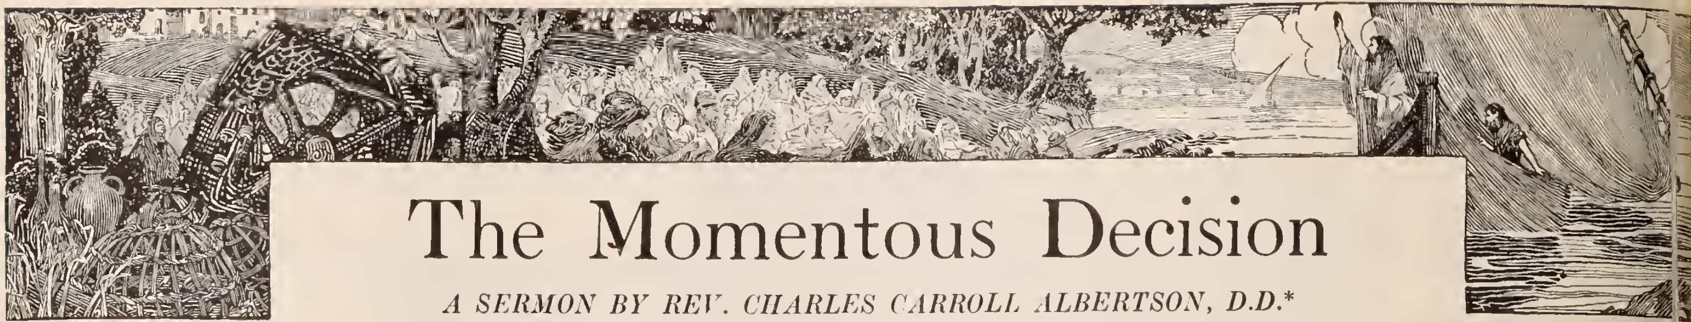
ANGLO-FRENCH LOAN NOT "LEGAL" INVESTMENT. The Bank Commissioner in Massachusetts has ruled that under the law trust companies may not invest in the bonds of any foreign government. The ruling was brought about by the purchase by Boston trust companies of the five per cent. bonds of the recent Anglo-French loan.

CHINESE IN REVOLT. That the new Chinese monarchy under Emperor Yuan Shi Kai was not to have plain sailing became manifest on December 25 when dispatches were received from Peking and Shanghai to the effect that the provinces of Yunnan, Szechuen, Hupeh, and Kwangsi had declared their independence from the monarchy, and that the armies under the governors of these provinces had joined the revolutionists, refusing to execute orders from Peking. The revolutionists are led by Tsai Ao and the revolt is reported as spreading rapidly throughout the southern provinces which were the center of the rebellion under Sun Yat Sen.

FOR UNITED PEACE FORCES. The New York Peace Society, of which Andrew Carnegie is president, and the American branch of the League to Enforce Peace, of which William H. Taft is president, have united and have opened joint headquarters at 70 Fifth Avenue, New York. The League to Enforce Peace is working for certain definite ends which are expressed in the following proposals: 1. The establishment of an international tribunal or world court which shall pass on all justiciable questions arising between nations. 2. The establishment of an international tribunal to be known as a council of conciliation, which shall pass on all other questions. 3. The signatory powers to use forthwith their joint economic and military forces against any nation which, having joined the league, goes to war or begins acts of hostility against another of the signatories without first submitting its quarrel to a court or board of arbitrators as provided in Sections 1 or 2. 4. The adoption of a code of international law through a series of international conferences.

SANTA CLAUS TO 41,000. For several years past, the Pittsburg Bank for Savings and the Pittsburg public schools have been cooperating in a plan to encourage thrift on the part of the children in the schools. Collectors representing the bank visited each of the 132 schools weekly, collecting the deposits of the children. The bank recently closed its doors, the failure being due to the depreciation of securities in its hands. It held deposits amounting to $167,136.68 belonging to 41,000 children depositors, and it was announced that the assets of the bank could not pay more than fifty per cent. upon its liabilities. The failure came just before Christmas, and hung as a black cloud over the holiday pleasures of these 41,000 small depositors and their families. On December 24, the cloud was dispelled by the announcement of Henry C. Frick that he would pay in full as a Christmas gift all the accounts of the youthful financiers. Mr. Frick had no connection with the bank.

INDICTED AS INCITERS OF STRIKES. The Federal Grand Jury in New York, which has been investigating, since September, alleged operations of Labor's National Peace Council in connection with strikes in various munition plants, returned indictments against eight persons on December 28. The indictments charged conspiracy to restrain trade contrary to the provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law. The men indicted are Representative Frank Buchanan of the Seventh District of Illinois, who was President of Labor's National Peace Council until July 27; Franz Rintelen, a captain in the German navy; H. Robert Fowler, former congressman from Illinois; David Lamar, known as the Wolf of Wall Street; Jacob C. Taylor, now president of Labor's National Peace Council; Henry B. Martin, Secretary of the Council, and Herman Schulteis, also a member of the Council. The government will proceed to prosecute these cases.



The Momentous Decision

*A SERMON BY REV. CHARLES CARROLL ALBERTSON, D.D.

TEXT—Matt. 19: 22. "But when the young man heard the saying, he went away sorrowful; for he was one that had great possessions."

THE young man of this incident is one of the most pleasing figures in all the New Testament. He charms us with his character, with his gracious manner of approach, and with his words. He is clean of hand and pure of heart. It is much for any youth to have lived honorably. It is more that one of great wealth, to whom temptations must have been both numerous and alluring, had kept his record stainless.

Virtue and praise belong of right to one who, arrived at manhood, has observed the code of ethics touching things that are pure and lovely and of good report. This youth had obeyed the physical code. A modern poet states it thus:

Cherish thy body well;
'Tis holy citadel
Whereon—wherein—doth dwell,
  Above the sod,
More than the spirit bright
Or soul's refulgent light;
Read, as my fingers write—
  "Within is God."

He had observed the social code, had respected the social hedges. This is the law that says, "Honor the wife, the sister, the daughter of another as you would have your own honored."

He had observed the ethics of trade. There is a code of commerce. It teaches that absolute truth and justice between man and man are the only guarantee of permanent prosperity. Having kept these laws, what had he failed in? He was conscious of some deficiency, else he had not come to Christ. Was he proud? Not so; for he came humbly to the Master. Was he profane, rebellious? There is nothing but reverence in his attitude toward Jesus as a religious authority. What then is the secret of his discontent? He did not know. His "What lack I yet?" proceeded from the depths of a restless spirit.

Whatever it was this young man lacked, and whatever it was he expected when he came to Jesus, he went away sorrowful. And so far as we have any definite knowledge, he never came again. There was no need for him to come again. There was a definiteness, a conclusiveness, about the Master's dealing with him that called for no further light or leading. (This was characteristic of all Jesus' conversations with inquirers; he left no question unanswered.) So far as we know, when the young man went away he went away into darkness; not the darkness of immoral living, which is both darkness and slime, but into the darkness of indecision, of reluctance to pay the price of supreme opportunity, of unwillingness to suffer the loss of what he had learned to love more than he loved perfection. We have no warrant for believing that his refusal was an absolute turning away from God. But it was a turning away from the highest standard. Jesus said, "If thou wouldst be perfect," and by going away the young man virtually said, "I will not accept the terms; I will content myself with something less perfect than this Teacher holds before me."

THIS is the tragedy of it. Here is a youth ambitious to excel in the fine art of living. Jesus gives him to see what he might be and do. He sees in one glorious moment of revealment the future under Christ's guidance, considers the conditions and turns away. Jesus takes him at his word, and does not call him back to suggest that the thing is any less difficult than the young man thinks it is. But the Master follows him with his eyes until he disappears at the turn in the road; follows him in thought still longer, and says to his disciples, with sadness in his voice, "How hard it is for those that have abundance to enter my kingdom!" This is neither a dark saying nor a hard saying. It is hard for those who have riches to enter any kingdom, entrance to which involves the sacrifice of ease and pleasure; the kingdom of athletics, or of music, or of art, or of literature. This young man refused to enter a kingdom which at that moment demanded the utter abandonment of all things else; a kingdom which at all times requires the dethronement of self.

Self is a great inclusive word, and comprehends all that panders to our pride, all that ministers to our vanity, all that feeds our gross desires, and all that stands closest to us in the secret places of desire. In effect, Jesus said, "I can not take you into my discipleship until you have separated yourself from that which would otherwise occupy the chief place in your affections." He could not do otherwise. "Forsaking all other, keep thee only unto her so long as you both shall live," are the words of the marriage ceremony. "Forsaking all other, wilt thou come after me?" said Jesus to this inquirer. "Not all others," he replies, and turns away. This was the great refusal, the foolish and fatal refusal.

Consider what the great refusal included. It was a refusal of friendship. What would it not have meant to this young man to be the friend of Jesus, the close friend and comrade of the warmest heart that ever beat! Strength of affection, loving fellowship, endless inspiration, an impulse to goodness and to greatness—all this he forfeited as if it were a little thing.

MOREOVER, it was a refusal of instruction. This is the commonest mistake of men, and especially of young men—the refusal to learn. Books which contain the golden thoughts of noble minds lie unopened on our shelves while we pore over pages of cheap talk in cheap papers. Lectures in which scholars and statesmen discuss the world's greatest themes are deserted for plays which merely amuse us for an hour. Education in this land is free, yet truant officers are frequently defeated in their efforts to induce children to attend school, by the indifference, and even the hostility, of parents. Superintendent Maxwell says that 40,000 boys and girls in New York City leave the public schools every year before they finish their course, most of them at the end of the sixth year. Think of taking a child out of school at fourteen because he can earn a pittance, and dooming him for life to incompetency! The chances are that such a child will never rise above the crowded ranks of the unskilled.

He who neglects his Bible is refusing instruction. There is one book in the Holy Scriptures which, if it were mastered by every man who aspires to worldly success, were worth its weight in platinum—the book of Proverbs—yet the world is lamentably ignorant of it. Poor Richard's Almanac is good for a young man to "read, learn and inwardly digest," but it is a primer compared with the Book of Proverbs. There are three chapters in Matthew which contain the indispensable conditions of happiness; yet the Sermon on the Mount is discarded for the vulgar wit of books with alluring titles. There are three chapters in John which contain more comfort for the troubled soul than all the other writings on earth combined; yet the dust gathers on the Gospels while we run after strange gods labeled "Spiritualism," "Theosophy" or "New Thought." We refuse to be instructed, and the deepest shadows are made when we turn our faces away from the light. He who turns away from Christ turns away from the Light of all worlds.

Then the rich young ruler's refusal was the refusal not alone of friendship and of instruction, but of distinction. Jesus needed men like him to be his apostles. He needs them now. He never needed them more. The world is hungry for spiritual leadership. The air is full of messages from the unseen which need vision to read and skilful tongues to interpret. Commerce calls us, and we quench he spirit of prophecy. There are multitudes of m in business and in politics whom God called to pr ch, and they refused. An American statesman of gh renown, still living, confessed not long ago in per al conversation with a friend that he was conscio of a call to the ministry when he was nineteen ye of age. He has not been without his rewards in pol al life; but the same capacities would have been emp ed in largest measure had he yielded to that ly voice. It may be true that there are men in the n- istry who were better engaged in business, but at only makes more painful the refusal of the ly called. The rich young ruler might have bee ot only the friend of Jesus, the companion of Joh nd Paul, an apostle of the Master of all truth, a builder of empires, a spiritual world-ruler under d.

Your Servant for Jesus' Sake

THIS is the dynamic of Christianity.

This sent Saul of Tarsus over sea and land, amid perils uncounted—and made him St. Paul.

This sent the Saxon Wilfrid through summer's heat and over winter's snow, through the pathless forests and across the wide rivers of Germany, to win its savage tribes—and made him St. Boniface.

This sent Carey and Judson over seas; Wesley and Whitefield through England; Finney and Moody through America.

Your task may not seem comparable to these, but it is the work that He has given you to do today.

Otherwise it is not your work at all, and you have no business with it.

Do it for Jesus' sake.

FEW names have come to us out of that an nt world, but the names that stand for vital er in history are, for the most part, the names of se who left their all and followed Christ. Some of m had not much to leave; but the little of the poor as much to them as the abundance of the rich. er sacrificed as much when he left his boats and ne as this rich young ruler would have sacrificed had h ft his houses and lands and titles and income. ul sacrificed as much as this youth was called up to sacrifice—scholarship, reputation, friends, h e, health, comfort, life itself. And Paul made a od bargain at that!

Are we sometimes tempted to pity the mission es in Africa, or India, or China, or Korea? I think ey pity us. They have meat to eat that we know n of. They drink of satisfactions that we do not taste. ur God is a jealous God the less we have of other goo he better he proves to us; the fewer other friends he better friend is he. Moreover, it is no mean hon to be the Lord's foreign ambassador. He is the er or of new social and moral orders, and neither Colu us nor Cortez is surer of earthly immortality tha ne. He is a discoverer of new dominions on whic he plants the banner of the conquering Name.

The rich young ruler's refusal was a turning ay from friendship and instruction and the distincti of heroic service. All this is involved in the rejecti of Jesus by the modern man. Life on the highest el is life in league with Christ. The only power that n- etrates our elemental life is the power of God. he only law that covers our vital relationships is th w of God. The only institution worthy of our utter st loyalty is the Church of God. The most of us ha et God into our lives superficially. But the shallow re not what he wants. Where do we live? In our es and hates; in our desires and imaginations; i ur pleasures and treasures; in these and not alone i ur emotions and devotions God demands the thron If he is asking entrance into any sphere or realm o ur lives now, and if we shut him out, we are going ay into the sorrowful company of the rich young ler who made the great refusal.

Emerson once said, "America is only another ne for Opportunity." In a deeper sense than the n- cord philosopher used the term, the same is tr of Christianity. From the first day of our allegian to Christ, his Spirit speaks to us, saying, "Behold, I ve set before thee an open door." He is blind who es not see in an earnest Christian life innumerable hs leading to glory and honor and immortality. lk about the investment of influence! No one of u as any gift of speech or song, of friendship and le er- ship, of exhortation or instruction, no one of us ha ny personal or social power, no one of us has any stre th of body or grace of mind, which may not be inv ed in the august and immovable kingdom of God. he deepest and keenest regret of many a life is that ke the rich young ruler, it turned back from the sup ne investment at a time when heaven and earth were ll- ing, and when the Christ of God was saying, "I er now."

We may meet with reverses in business. We ay suffer losses in commercial investments. The fai ul follower of Jesus Christ finds life all gain. Eve is losses become profitable. The bitter turns to s et, and adversities prove blessings in disguise. Fai is the true philosopher's stone that turns everythi it touches to gold. Viewed under the aspect of eter y, Jesus gave the young man of the text not a task, a chance; a great and certain chance to lay hol on eternal life. Turning away from it, though he ay not have chosen evil, he chose the inferior good. "The inferior good is the fatal enemy of the best." Pe ect obedience to the perfect will of God—this alo is earth's and heaven's best.

---

*Pastor Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Daily Meditation

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY

J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

Hard-Headed

SUNDAY, January 16. I Cor. 14 : 20. "In understanding be men." In some things we are to remain as children. We are not to grow away from their simplicity. Here the struggle is t to win new fields, but to keep hold of land ori ally possessed. In these things retention is our no st conquest. "In malice be children." We are no o grow into the personal knowledge of the evil thi, and become experts in its deadly ministry. We are o seek our greatness in our ignorance. Or, if we ave "advanced" into the dark experience, we are o renew our royal mastery by a wise retreat. In rel ion to some holy attainments it is the simple tr to say that going backwards is the only progress. "E ept ye turn again, and become as little children, ye all not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

t in understanding we are to be men! Indeed, on of our surest defenses against belittling feelings is e cultivation of a more spacious mind—a mind wh h moves reverently but freely in the realm of tr, revealed to us in Jesus Christ our Lord. Bitte ss is always the product of narrowness. A man ma be proud of his largeness of mind, he may boast of e roominess of his creed, but if he be bitter and ma cious, it is a sure sign that his vital thought is co racted and that he has not found the glorious lib ty of the children of God. If the atmosphere in th berth is pestilential it is because the port-hole is cl d.

r. Roosevelt said some time ago that he did not kn w which quality is most productive of evil to manki in the long run, hardness of heart or softness of he . That is a very suggestive word; but may we no add that softness of head produces hardness of he t? No man can be so cruel as the man of loose an undecisive thought. Soft thinking is allied to ha feeling. It is not the water which springs from so limestone that is the sweetest and healthiest to dr k: it is the water that comes from the hidden fo esses and strongholds of granite hills. If in ur erstanding we are truly men, our emotional st ams shall be like unto the river "which maketh gl the city of God." J. H. J.

Trials that Strengthen and Glorify

MONDAY, January 17. Isa. 55 : 10-13. "Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree." One of th necessary results of the depopulation of Palestine du ng the captivity of the people was that vast tr ts should pass out of cultivation. Terraces reared la riously on the slopes of the hills would become he s of stones. Wild nature would resume her ar ent sway. But on the forgiveness and restoration of he repentant people there would be a complete re rsal of the results of former backsliding. This w ld be "for an everlasting sign"—a phrase which su ly indicates that sacred lessons of permanent im ortance are hidden under this prediction.

mong the thorns and briars of life we may reckon ill ealth, strong predispositions toward evil, compulsc association with uncongenial companions, the pe etual worry of our business career, or some thorn in he flesh. Each life has experiences like these. M ssengers of Satan come to buffet us all, causing us o ask, not once or twice, that we be delivered. S ly, we argue, we could live more useful and happy li s, if only we were free. But God does better. He tr sforms these things through the grace of our L d. It is remarkable that he was crowned with th ns. The lesson is obvious that he can transform th curse into a blessing and make thorns yield the in gnia of royalty. It is through your thorns and b rs, borne in the spirit of Jesus, that you may atta to a true royalty of character. F. B. M.

The Glory of Work

TUESDAY, January 18. II Thes. 3 : 10. "If any will not work, neither let him eat." There seems to e ample Bible warrant for work, and certainly B le warnings and woes are waged against laziness a sluggishness.

Thou, O God," said Leonardo da Vinci, "hast gi n all good things to man at the price of labor."

Work is a necessity to keep the body, soul and mind al e. Parasites degenerate, according to a natural la . There is within human beings something demanding active struggle as the price of growth and of the development of new organic powers. To really live means to be active. To die, to degenerate, is to stop striving. Man is ascending or descending the ladder of life in accordance as he works or stops and despairs.

It is a favorable sign that men are less loath to retire from business, for retirement to most men means stoppage of the powers by which success has been won.

Labor has been dignified and made sacred by Jesus, who was a carpenter and went about doing good. It is synonymous with happiness to most human beings. Without it there is little pleasure or satisfaction in rest. When the days of toil are long, and the yoke seems galling, and the burdens bow the shoulders, it may help to remember that no greatness ever has been dreamed or done without it, and that its opposite would entail worse misfortune.

There is no short and easy road to Paradise. The point is to learn to sing as we work, to see the shining goal through the mists of sorrow or service, to realize that we are in line with the infiniteness of the universe and God. "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." C. S. C.

What the Kingdom of Christ Is

WEDNESDAY, January 19. John 18 : 25-38. "My kingdom is not of this world." Men have misread these words and said: "See, the religion of Jesus is quite unworldly; it has nothing to do with the institutions and arrangements of human life; it deals with the spiritual, not with the secular." But it was not in that sense that our Lord uttered these words, and the mistake has arisen from the misunderstanding of the word of. It has not the meaning of belonging to, but translates the Greek preposition which means springing from, or originating in. We might freely translate our Lord's words thus: "My kingdom does not originate from this world; it comes from another; I bring the principles, methods, and inspirations of heaven to bear on all the provinces of human thought and activity."

Our Lord claims the whole of man and all that man does as subject to his rule. He cannot spare one relationship of human life, one art, one industry, one interest, one joy, one hope, from the sway of his scepter. He has a word about the weight in the peddler's bag, the dealings of the merchant, the justice or injustice of every case tried in the courts.

But the kingdom of Christ is the reversal of all precedents that hold in our earthly and human kingdoms. The highest rank there is given to meekness, humility, and lowly service. The last are first. They who stoop the lowest sit on its thrones; they who suffer most rise to its inner circles. Its steed is not the war-horse, but the foal of an ass. The virtues that are blazoned on its rolls are not those of the warrior or plutocrat, but forgiveness, gentleness, goodness, meekness, faith. F. B. M.

The Ability to Pity

THURSDAY, January 20. Matt. 14 : 14. "And he had compassion on them." Bacon said, "The more noble a soul, the more it compassion hath."

Compassion is something great and often harder than strict justice. The Master was not to blame for the condition of the people upon whom he had compassion. He might have said, as we sometimes say, that it is not our business if people are not far-sighted enough to prepare against disease or hunger. He might have passed by on the other side, as we do frequently, saying, "It was their own fault." But the fact remains that "he had compassion on them."

The existence of pity is the test of a really great soul. It is the fruit of a big heart, rather than a big head. It is spontaneous with a large personality, but it can be cultivated by a small one. Its secret is love—and love makes allowances; "it suffereth long and is kind"; it never faileth.

The other day, as we were riding in a street car, a baby in a mother's arms began to cry vigorously. On one side a man, scowling, said: "People with babies should stay at home." On the other side of us sat a fatherly-looking man, who said, "That child is in pain; see the poor mother's face!" The first man only heard a baby's scream; the second felt with a pitying heart.

To keep the heart open for kindness' sake, to struggle against the callousness that takes others' sorrow and pain for granted—that is the mark of a Christian. Great nobility is great caring. The compassionate Christ is the Son of God in his divinest rôle. C. S. C.

The Call for the Last Voyage

FRIDAY, January 21. II Tim. 4 : 1-8. "The time of my departure is come." The Greek word translated "departure" really means "of my embarking." Sometimes the end of life has been depicted as the return of a vessel to the harbor whence it started, with rent sails, strained timbers, and every symptom of dilapidation. The suggestion is that it has only just escaped becoming a total wreck. The apostle's thought is far otherwise. It seems to him as though the morning is breaking over sea and land, and he is coming down to the beach to put off for the yacht which is straining at her anchor like a live thing that wants to be off on her native element.

We all know the exhilaration of a voyage, especially if we are to depend largely on the sails, as was always the case in Paul's time. The ship was, in his judgment, a winged thing, which was sped by the winds of God on its way to the desired haven. Death is not a state, but an act, a stepping on board, a leaving of the land that holds and restrains you to venture forth on a new element, somewhat unfamiliar but kindly.

The same thought animated Tennyson's immortal ode on the "Crossing of the Bar." Surely death will be beautiful when it comes, if only we have learnt to trust the great Pilot, whom we shall see face to face when we have crossed the bar, and the morning breaks over the face of the ocean of eternity. Let us fill our present life with labor for God and man; counting nothing our own, but all as a precious trust, to be employed for the coming of the Kingdom. Let us work up to the very end of time and strength. Let us eagerly reach out our hands to greet "our sister Death" when she comes to break the mooring cable and set us free. F. B. M.

The Cry of the Penitent Heart

SATURDAY, January 22. Luke 18 : 13. "God be merciful to me a sinner." Two men went up into the temple to pray; the Pharisee was proud; the publican, humble. One trusted in himself; the other in God. One despised his fallen fellow men; the other felt he was the chief of sinners. One thanked God he was not an extortioner, an adulterer, a poor, wretched sinner like this publican; while the other cried out the shortest but most comprehensive prayer ever uttered: "God be merciful to me a sinner." Only one returned to his home from the house of God justified, "for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

He who is satisfied with himself, ever repeating the egotistical "I," has only himself for his blessing. But the soul, in the depths of its sinfulness, with its knees in the dust of penitence, who hungers and thirsts for the living God, shall be filled and satisfied with the fulness of heavenly loving-kindness.

Jesus delighted to be styled an associate with publicans and sinners, for he came not to save the righteous but to bring sinners to repentance. How much better it is to own that we are a race of prodigals, living on husks and hogs, self and sin, in the far country, but now are coming home, crying out, "Be merciful; wash me; cleanse me; renew a right spirit within me and cast me not away from thy presence, that I may dwell in the Father's house forever."

E. W. C.

◆

Anvil Sparks

When God makes a man feel that he must preach the gospel or be lost, it is up to that man to make others feel that they must hear the gospel or be lost.

A rural minister had a habit of counting his congregations before getting up to preach. "There are always about thirty," he said, "and this smallness of numbers has such a depressing effect upon me that I cannot preach well." The friend who was listening suggested, "Suppose you quit counting them." He did, and immediately the crowds got larger. His sermons were better. There was less depression and more expression.

Through Gates of Pearl

Augusta Albertson

AUTHOR'S FOREWORD

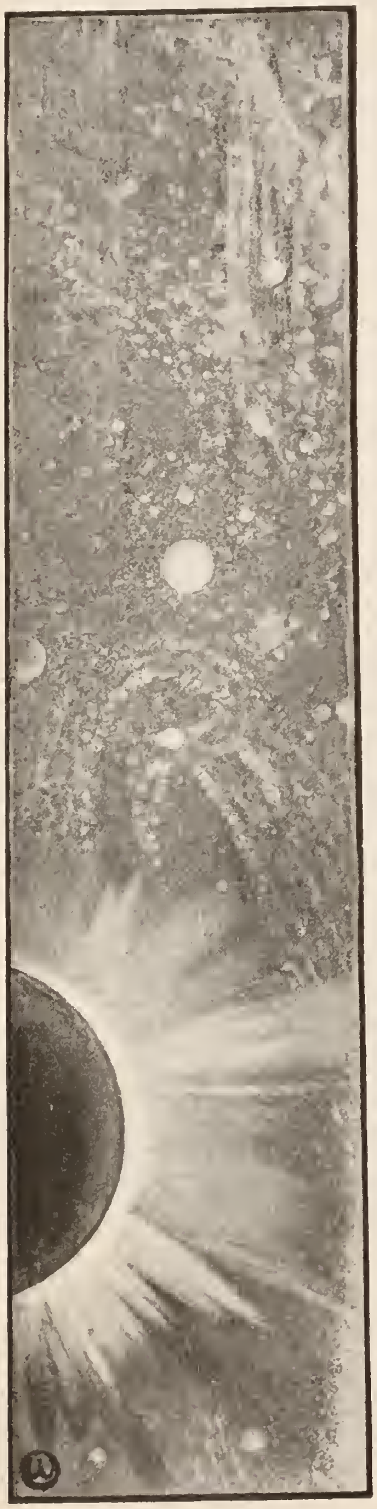
THE author distinctly disclaims any purpose or intention to set forth a new "revelation" as to the character of the world to come. The journey "Through Gotes of Pearl" was purely mental. The beginning of it was a dream, much more complex and continuous than most dreams are. Indeed, the dream grew into a series of dreams or visions, following a protracted illness. During a long period of convalescence, in which the physical senses were dull and the spiritual senses of prayer and faith (the latter "a religious use of the imagination") were acute, with little of earthly care to occupy the thought, it is not strange that the mind wandered far into the realm of what may be.

The author is not unacquainted with books which purport to describe similar dreams or visions. She believes, however, that she is not indebted to any one of them for any suggestion as to what may lie beyond the hawthorn hedge of death. Rather, she is indebted first of all to Scriptural symbols by which inspired writers have sought to convey to human minds, without satisfying mere curiosity, some concrete notion of the reality and the beauty of the Father's many-mansioned Home. Next, she has borrowed freely from the hymnology and poetry of the Future Life such figures of speech as lend themselves to synthetic expansion. Finally, she has taken counsel of her musings in those sacred hours of grace-sustained sorrow in which the Spirit of God, the blessed Comforter, leads the submissive mind by streams of healing and into pastures of rest.

It is no violent act of the imagination to see pictures in the fire-light, castles and palaces in the sunset clouds, and cities on the mirage-haunted rim of the desert. The author does not mean to say that all that she has here described has no more solid foundation than in mere fancy. Heaven is no mirage of a fevered brain. The City of God, which we are bidden to seek, exists os certainly as New York or Paris or Peking. The Apostle John saw it, and a good portion of the last Book of the Canon is devoted to word-pictures of the place.

Augustine, amidst the wreck of an old civilization, dreamed his dream of the City of God. As earth grew dim before his eyes, its treasures turning to dust, its golden fruit to ashes, God comforted him with thoughts of the City immovable and eternal. As years go by, and age comes on, and the worn garment of the flesh, already threadbare at the fringes, rests more lightly upon the spirit, the soul, forever asking "What lies beyond this rim of silence ond of dark?" is not without light and leading.

Of one thing we may be sure: that though our imagination may fail in attempting to put into words the visions of our most nearly inspired moments, the Spirit World, the Other Room, where the ascended Christ sitteth at the right hand of the Father, and where our Beloved are, "until the day break and the shadows flee away," is not less beautiful than human minds have pictured it. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." A. A.



CHAPTER I

I HAVE been on a long journey. I seemed to hear through an open window, at evening, the voice of One I knew, though I could not call his Name, saying, "Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away." I cried, "Tell me, O thou whom my soul loveth, where thou feedest; where thou makest thy flock to rest at noon; for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely." But there was silence. At last there came a time of darkness. It lasted many days. Neither sun nor stars appeared to illumine my sky. The darkness was so dense I could feel it; it was blackness. Storms raged. Within my heart there was a tempest. One day, or night—I know not which—I fell into a slumber, and while I slept I journeyed far, but not without a guide. One came, angel or archangel, seraph or cherub, and, enfolding me in wings of wondrous softness, white as virgin snow, bore me to the edge of a river, on which I stood while fear filled my heart at the sight of a stream so wide and apparently so deep.

I have been afraid of deep waters since an experience in my childhood in which a sister of mine was in imminent peril of drowning. Perhaps the mystery of the river I now saw, and awe as I looked at my unearthly guide, caused me to tremble. I had no words to speak my fear. but the guide seemed to read my mind and, as if answering a question, he spoke with comforting tenderness and reassuring confidence, "This river is not what it once was; One passed over it not long ago, the touch of whose feet calmed its turbulence and cleared its current. This is his fording-place. It is quite safe for those who follow him."

Taking my hand, my guide led me across. On the other side I glanced down at my feet, and apparently the water had not touched them. I looked back at the river, and it was not so wide as it had appeared. In truth it was no more than a brook. I heard its musical murmur, and ere long that sound, sweetest of all earthly sounds, except, it may be, the tones of the human voice, seemed to be articulate. I heard words as if from a far-off invisible choir. The music of the brook was as the faint accompaniment of harps. The words were familiar, though the melody was not: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

The music died away upon my ears, and in its stead I became aware of fragrance. The fragrance grew faint and in its place was radiance. "Is it possible," I said to myself, "that sight and sound and fragrance are only different forms of the same force, just as electricity may manifest itself as light or power or heat?" While I was wondering, the radiance dissolved, or, I should say, resolved itself into a number of luminous clouds, and these in turn revealed themselves to me as vehicles. I must not call them chariots, or cars. They were winged rather than with wheels, and I had at once an impression of vast power and almost inconceivable rapidity.

MY guide led me to one of these vehicles—whether car, chariot or ship, I know not what name to give it—and we began to move through space. The motion was not unlike that of flight. Aeronauts speak of a feeling of elation as they mount into the upper air. Something of this I felt, victory over space and time, strange freedom from the limitations of weight. The ease of the motion most impressed me. It was as effortless as light or thought. Upward we sped through pathless blue, past the blazing furnaces of a thousand suns, across the orbits of gleaming comets which left in their wake trails of silvery dust. I marked a burning world, and many, many globes in which the fires had become extinct; they looked like our moon seen through a telescope, a charred and shadowy mass. My guide said, "These worlds have fulfilled their mission; once they were peopled with intelligences; their inhabitants now occupy another sphere. In ages yet to come these stars may be inhabited again, but not until after unimaginable changes. Star will clash against star, and sun will kindle sun, and life will have its beginning again on renewed planets, which in turn will run their course and die."

Familiar to my mind was the phrase, "The music of the spheres." The Psalmist has said, "Thou makest the outgoings of the morning and the evening to rejoice." I have always understood this to mean that light in its swift flight from star to star makes music of its own, and I have believed that if our senses were sufficiently acute, we might hear the music of the spheres. Now I heard music; it was the harmony of heavenly bodies, keeping stately step on their appointed march through the sky. It was the symphony of the universe. Every constellation was like a group of instruments in an infinite orchestra. This music was both harmony and melody, and it was not without its words. I heard with great distinctness, and the music that accompanied the song had all the sweetness and the volume of innumerable harps, "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork."

I LOOKED for familiar constellations, stars I had grown to love. There were the Pleiades, not "glistening in mellow shade," but vastly more brilliant than I had ever seen them from the earth, yet occupying the same relations to one another. Yonder shone Perseus. The variations in Algol were much more obvious than I had ever observed before. The double stars in the Lyre were plainly double, the Twins being at a considerable distance apart from each other, the one light red, the other pale blue. I knew, apparently by intuition, the Southern Cross and other constellations of the celestial hemisphere with which I was unfamiliar. "How many of these countless worlds," I asked my guide, "are like the earth, inhabited by intelligent and self-conscious beings?" And yet I did not ask the question aloud. My lips uttered no words. I simply thought the interrogation, and by some strange faculty of thought-reading my guide knew the working of my mind, and addressed himself to my inquiry. "Every solar system," he said, "has its planets. These are in various states of development. Some are in process of preparation for life. Others are worn out." Pointing to an orb that hung suspended in that quarter of the heavens in which Arcturus was the most brilliant visible object, evidently a satellite of that great sun, he said, "Yonder is a planet peopled by a race still in its infancy." I looked toward Sirius, and my guide followed my glance. Pointing in that direction, he continued, "Yonder lies one of the oldest of inhabited worlds. The race on that ancient planet, which derives its light from Sirius, is near its end."

I know not how long our flight lasted. It may have been an hour, a day, or a week. Time seemed not to exist for me, nor did the vastness of the universe through which we passed impress me then as my memory of it has impressed me since. In dreams, we seem to lose the sense of wonder. The strangest phenomena are commonplace. I do not now recall that the method of my flight struck me as at all unusual.

WE paused. I thought, "Is this the end? Have we reached our destination?" Multitudinous rainbows overarched the sky. Luminous clouds on every side melted away and in their stead I saw groups of white-robed angels. Far as my eye could reach were fields of soft yet shimmering green. In the distance, above the green, rose gleaming many-colored towers. "What world is this?" I asked. From unseen heights there fell a flood of melody. I heard, "Welcome, O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest and not comforted; behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and thy foundations with sapphires, and I will make thy windows of agates, and all thy borders of pleasant stones."

Even while the song continued, I became aware of multitudes of people, not disembodied, but of the most ethereal substance, hastening toward the place where I stood. Suddenly, just before me, and in the path of the multitude, I perceived what must have been there before, but had escaped my notice—a door ajar, very wide and very white. It was the lustrous whiteness of pearl. Beyond the open doors rose a great stairway, of innumerable steps. Their color was that of alabaster or rock crystal, not transparent, but translucent. Light did not shine through them, but from them, as sunlight is reflected from a mirror or a placid lake. The throng passed through the gates, and up the steps, and seemed unending. The invisible chorus ceased to sing, and the multitude began to chant: "The ransomed of the Lord have come to Zion with songs, and everlasting joy upon their heads: they have obtained joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing have fled away."

SUDDENLY the movement of the multitude ceased. I heard the sound of gates opening. Lifting my eyes I saw that the stairway led to another portal at the top. Another entrance was there, and the opening of this revealed an infinitely brighter light beyond. If the light I had seen here, which appeared to come from no particular direction, but to be a quality of the air, could be described as radiant, the light I now saw was something so much more glorious as to be unnamable. And yet it did not blind me, nor did it dazzle those who approached it more closely. From beyond the upper portal, a chorus of immeasurable volume sang, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates; even lift them up, ye everlasting doors; swing open wide, ye portals, and enter in, ye ransomed of the Lord!" The approaching hosts sang, in antiphony, "Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ!" One word seemed to echo and re-echo through all the sky. That word was "victory."

I have seen some superb processions on earth, at the enthronement of kings and at the burial of martyred presidents. Nothing, however, that it has been given to me to see of earthly pageantry even faintly approaches the splendor of that great procession which swept past me and up the stairway through the gate of pearl and the inner entrance, whose color I afterward perceived was yellow, as of gold. For my guide touched me and said, as a group of pilgrims passed, "Let us also go up," and we joined the procession.

The ascent of the stairway, though prolonged, was without weariness. I studied the faces of my fellow pilgrims, and they had come, apparently, as easily as I. My guide spoke, as if in answer to an unuttered question: "These too are from afar, but not all are from your earth. Some are; but others are from other worlds which you have seen as objects bright or dim with naked eye or telescope." I glanced from left to right to see if it were possible for me to recognize any from the planet I had called my home. I saw a group whose faces reminded me of faces I had seen on earth. "You are right," my companion said; "they are also from the sorrowful planet." I asked, "Do none of these need change of raiment before they enter here?" "Not so," was the reply, "for even in the world their spiritual bodies were robed in white." So I perceived that, with all the blots and stains of earth, our mortal life is the dressing-room of eternity. There is no other. If we do not walk in white while in the world, there is no antechamber of heaven in which raiment may be obtained. I observed that the vesture of many of the white-clad pilgrims was interwoven with jewels. Knowing my thoughts, my companion explained: "These are the fruits of patience and of love; the graces of the Holy Spirit in the lives of the saints assume the similitude of precious gems; the pearls are tears which fell in days and nights of sorrow; the rubies are drops of blood shed by martyrs of faith and conscience and duty." Not a few of those who pressed up the steps of light wore ornaments, of what rare metal I could not make out. My teacher spoke: "These are the symbols that were fashioned in pain's furnace heat."

I have found myself reflecting, since my return from my dream-journey, how true it must be that spiritual treasures and spiritual beauty are not discerned by earthly eyes. And I often wonder how many there are whom we call fools and failures, how many whose poverty we pity and attempt to relieve, who in the light of eternity are vastly wiser, more successful, and richer than we. Ah, if we could only see!

THERE was nothing in the appearance of these pilgrims, newly entered upon their celestial residence, to indicate which of them had been accustomed, during his planetary life, to beautiful apparel; but somehow I had the impression as certain ones passed me that they had not always been beautifully attired. Not that they wore their robes awkwardly; neither did they seem self-conscious, or even surprised at being clad with unaccustomed splendor. This impression was due to my recognition of one of the newcomers. He was a familiar figure in a city in which I once lived. I did not know him well, but often saw him. He was a mission-worker, a sort of lay evangelist, and he had a wide reputation for tact in dealing with the erring, and for kindness in ministry to the outcast. As he passed me, I suddenly recalled that on earth I had never seen him except in a faded suit of gray. Once, late in the autumn, he still wore a straw hat that bore evidence of several seasons' use. I pitied him in my heart at the time, and wondered if he had in what must have been a very slender purse the wherewithal to purchase a felt hat or a derby. Strange, was it not, that all these memories were awakened by the sight of his face among these pilgrims? I felt no pity for him now, but rather for myself, that I had not understood long ago how little it mattered what he wore along life's crowded and dusty thoroughfares, since he was clad with salvation as with a garment.

So thinking, I ventured to look down at my own garments, and lo, I too was spotlessly arrayed. "In passing through the river my robes were made pure," I thought. "Not so," my guide declared; "death has no power to purify the spirit; as you are here, so were you there; else you could not have passed unchallenged through the gates."

(To be continued)

Our Editorial Forum

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

The New Pan-Americanism

IN his address at the second Pan-American Congress in Washington, Secretary of State Lansing outlined in explicit language what may be regarded as the policy of the administration toward the South American republics. He defined Pan-Americanism as the expression of the idea of internationalism—an idea which, he predicted, will rule the world at some future day. Its value has been emphasized by recent events abroad. If ever the sovereignty of any one of the sisterhood of American republics should be menaced from overseas, the united power of all the republics would be a guarantee of protection.

It has been claimed by those who take the partisan view of the proceedings of the Congress that the Monroe Doctrine has been lost sight of or submerged in the new Pan-Americanism. This, however, is not in accordance with the facts. The Monroe Doctrine has lost none of its ancient force, nor has it ceased to be a characteristic national policy of this government. It is, however, no longer merely a discipline. The Southern republics feel that they are no longer children in tutelage; they have grown to the full stature of manhood, and constitute with ourselves a circle of states united by the Pan-American spirit into one great family of democratic governments, each sovereign in itself, all possessing equal privileges, and all welded together by common sympathies and interests, so that they may act as one in all that relates to their mutual protection and development.

Perhaps the situation could not have been better expressed than in the address of the president of the Congress, Señor Eduardo Suarez Mujica, ambassador of Chile, who, voicing the sentiment of the assembled delegates, designated the Monroe Doctrine as "a common defense, a tie of union, a guarantee and a bulwark of democracy." Closer unity among the powers of the Western Hemisphere was the keynote of the gathering, and was emphasized by all the leading speakers so clearly as to be unmistakable. The Monroe Doctrine, which for over one hundred years has been a national policy of the United States, is not superseded but supplemented by the New Pan-Americanism, which is the international policy of all the republics of the Western world—the corollary and broader development of the other.

"One for all and all for one," was the motto which Secretary Lansing suggested as expressive of the spirit of the new Pan-Americanism. Nothing could have been more felicitous. All the republics have their ideals and aspirations in common, and a common tie binds them. Our own ambition does not point to conquest, but to the paths of peace and justice. So with the other republics; unselfish mutuality of interests dominates the whole. It was an auspicious opportunity for laying the foundations of an understanding among the republics, which will grow wider and deeper with the coming years.

These evidences of the growing spirit of Pan-Americanism are especially significant at the present time. Europe's distractions should lead us to a closer community of interests, and a stronger appreciation of the advantages to be derived from the friendly cooperation of all the Western republics. Their general adoption of such a policy will be a triumph of wise and far-seeing statesmanship that will bear fruits of the most important character.

Watch Your Sneeze

THERE is trouble enough in the world without sneezing more trouble into it. Every time you sneeze while you have the grip or a cold, several million cold or grip microbes are sent flying out into the air which other people must breathe. So the New York health authorities are circulating a card bearing this easily remembered couplet:

"Cover up your cough and sneeze;
If you don't, you'll spread disease."

If it is easy to remember that couplet; it ought to be still easier to remember to "cover up" the coughs and sneezes. The old idea was to teach this little act of decent thoughtfulness as a simple matter of good breeding. But now the health experts want everybody to know that it is more than that. It means preventing the spread of discomfort, disease, possible death. For grip and colds in America are almost, if not quite, our deadliest plague.

This is why school children, passengers on elevated trains and others have been receiving wholesale this little bit of practical poetry. Don't forget it. When that mischievous titillation begins back of your nose, reach for your handkerchief. And instead of scattering microbes scatter this advice both by word and example:

"Cover up your cough and sneeze;
If you don't, you'll spread disease."

In the prevalent epidemic of influenza, there is hardly a community that is free from its attacks. Fortunately its assaults can be guarded against and its virulence modified. In these changeful wintry days, with a jumping temperature and alternate wet and dry weather, sufficiently warm clothing is a first necessity. Doctors suggest care in keeping the feet dry, the avoidance of over-heated rooms, a moderate diet, and absolute abstinence from alcoholic drinks. Perhaps one of the best safeguards against grip is not to worry about it. A case of "nerves" is more likely to invite it than not, all other things being equal. Keep your head cool, your feet warm and dry, and go about your business as cheerfully as you can, and the danger will be reduced to a minimum.

America's Most Precious Product

IN a steel-making or a coal-mining town, 134 babies out of every 1,000 die yearly. In a residential suburb, 84 out of 1,000 die. That is, fifty more babies die in one locality than the other. These figures are found in the annual report of the Children's Bureau, conducted at Washington by the Federal Government under the direction of Miss Julia Lathrop. This and various similar comparisons are summed up as follows: "The more favorable the civic and family surroundings and the better the general conditions of life, the more clearly they are reflected in a lessened infant mortality."

One item of the report is of striking significance. It appears that the work of the Children's Bureau is hindered by the incomplete publication of the Census reports. The Bureau would like to know what is the connection between some other social problems and infant mortality. How many babies die because their mothers have to work? That is a practical and serious question. How many of the people of the United States work for wages? How many babies are orphans? How many have been deserted? Answers to these questions would help solve the problem why these babies die. But, owing to the expense, these statistics are not published. There is one specially significant sentence in Miss Lathrop's report: "For 1890, 1900 and 1910 this information was secured (by the Census Bureau), but the material has not been tabulated, because there has been thus far no public demand for it such as secures, for example, the comprehensive information regarding manufactures furnished by the Bureau of the Census every five years."

Can this mean that the influential forces that control legislation and federal expenditures care more about the nation's industrial products than about its babies? Can it mean that the people themselves are not awake to the perils that confront infant life, and do not insist that nothing shall be left undone that would protect it? If there were no babies there would soon be no nation. It may be that people tire of hearing passionate appeals for the saving of these thousands of lives needlessly sacrificed every year. If they are not moved by the tears and moans of these dying babies and the anguish of their desolate mothers, perhaps they will think that by the coldest and hardest kind of calculation babies are worth saving. If the Children's Bureau needs certain statistics and tables to guide its work, they must be provided.

"If God Be for Us—"

TO those advocates of national preparedness who have been industriously gleaning texts of encouragement from the Bible, we would submit a passage of Scripture which they seem to have overlooked. It is more directly to the point than any that has yet been adduced—not even excepting the famous passage in Ezekiel which President Wilson and Theodore Roosevelt both flung into the controversy with boomerang effect. The neglected passage to which we refer is to be found in I Sam. 7:3—"If you do return unto the Lord with all your hearts, then put away the strange gods from among you, and prepare your hearts unto the Lord; and he will deliver you out of the hands of the Philistines." The result of such preparedness was complete victory, the restoration of all the captured cities, and a lasting peace.

When Ezra led the returning Israelites back to Jerusalem from Babylon, they carried with them a rich treasure of silver and gold and the vessels of the Lord's house. They had to pass through a wild country, infested by robbers, and Ezra was urged to accept a strong armed guard. "You should prepare," said his friends, "to defend your expedition with a convoy." This was Ezra's answer: "I was ashamed to ask of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen to help us against the enemy in the way: because we had spoken unto the king saying: 'The hand of our God is upon all them that seek him, for good; but his power and his wrath are against all them that forsake him.' . . . So we fasted and besought God for this; and he was intreated of us." Further on in his narrative, he tells of the results of this policy: "The hand of our God was upon us and he delivered us from the hands of the enemy," who never even ventured to make an attack, and the whole treasure, together with the entire company, reached the destination in safety.

Moral Courage

NOTHING succeeds like success. If Henry Ford, who set out with a sincere desire to do good to mankind, had been even moderately successful in his "Peace Ship" venture, he would have been acclaimed as one of the great reformers of our day, and as setting a new example of international brotherhood. Even those who are now criticizing him and accusing him of megalomania, ever since he was invited by the President to help "interpret the view of the nation," would be now singing his praises with the rest. But let us be just to him; he made a good "try," and he was the one man among a hundred million Americans who had the moral courage to do it. We believe that he interpreted rightly the longings of the people of both Europe and America for peace, but he had no practical plan nor was the time auspicious for the attempt he made. It is premature to judge, however, for the peace mission is not yet ended. It has already made friends in Europe and no one can foresee what may take place at The Hague. Every man who works bravely and self-sacrificingly for an ideal is liable to be called a "fool" by that class of critics who think on short lines, and who are so constituted intellectually and morally that they cannot understand the vision that moved a man like Henry Ford to do what he did. If the rulers of Europe and the statesmen who are their advisers could be inoculated with a little of the Ford spirit, the world would be better and happier.

Education Gone Wrong

TRULY a wonderful thing is the curriculum at some of our American colleges. Our contemporary, the Nation, prints an account from a professor in a university of the Middle West, of an edifying experience with a section of his freshman class. They were conning the story of Hero and Leander, when the mention of the Hellespont naturally suggested Gallipoli to the professor, and he asked if any member could locate it, believing that all must be familiar with it as an important war area in the Near East. He even wrote the name on the blackboard. Not a single student knew the word, or what it meant. The whole class confessed that they had never seen the name of Gallipoli anywhere until that moment. Amazed, the professor repeated the experiment with three other sections of freshmen and the result was the same. None had ever heard of the place where thousands had perished in the great war. In a higher class he found two men who knew of Gallipoli.

One may imagine that professor's immediate revision of his estimate of the practical value of modern education which produced such surprising results. He persevered, however, and resolved to find out what the students knew of the war itself. An examination paper on the subject was given out and the result was a revelation of ignorance and misstatement that would have been laughable if it were not so pitiful. It is difficult to understand such conditions in an educational system which professes to train the mind, and yet altogether omits the great world movements of our own time, preferring to dwell in the past. If our medical and scientific institutions taught on the models of centuries ago, instead of recognizing the supreme value of modern research, their graduate product would be professionally useless. How then can colleges which are training our youth for the battle of life hope to turn out reasonably well equipped men and women if they teach on the principle that modern development is unimportant, and that Actium and Thermopylæ should still obscure the vaster panorama of world-history that unrolls with constant changes before our eyes today?

The Bible and Newspaper

CONDUCTED BY

FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Grip Epidemic Sweeps Westward

THE worst epidemic of grip since its first appearance in this country in 1873 is now sweeping from East to West across the continent, increasing in severity and danger as it moves. A ne time there were over 10,000 persons in Philade hia laid up from it. Thirty-six deaths there were re rted for one day. All the hospitals were full. In C den, N. J., sixty-four deaths from grip and pneum ia were reported in one day. In Chicago over 8 00 school children and fifteen per cent. of the cl ks in stores were laid up with the disease. In Milw kee there were 20,000 persons down with the ep emic, and in St. Paul one school child out of every fi was prostrated with it. Thousands of cases are re rted in Wisconsin, Indiana, Iowa and other states. T re is a possibility the disease may go on to the m ntains and the coast, though it is to be hoped it w spend itself before then. The epidemic in its c rse left New York City practically untouched. D Rucker, assistant surgeon general of the United St es, sent out this warning: "There are 12,200 de hs due to the grip annually in this country. We ar now in the midst of the grip season, which begins in ovember when windows and doors are closed and th furnaces are started. Kissing games spread the di ase to children and should be avoided. Affected p ons should be segregated and the towels and other ar les used by the victims should be avoided." T re is mortality in the epidemic, to be sure, but m ical science knows better now how to treat and c the disease than formerly. In the average case th e should be no cause of alarm, only promptness in medical care and nursing. The epidemics that af t the body are a type of the disease of sin that af ts the soul, which is incurable except by the Great P sician himself, who "went about all the cities and vi ges, teaching in their synagogues and preaching the g pel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness and e y disease among the people." (Matt. 9: 35.)

Captain Clad in Feathers

WHEN a sea captain stepped from the gangplank of his vessel in New Orleans the other day, he w accosted in a friendly manner by a customs insp tor. Then, noticing what seemed to be a small fe her sticking to the captain's wrist, the Federal o er attempted to brush it off. The movement disc ed a long aigret. "Why," the captain stammered, " at is only a feather I was bringing to my wife." " rip off that vest," the inspector replied, "and we'll s how many feathers you have." The vest was taken o and swung by a cord about the man's neck and s rounding his body were 200 aigrets tied in bundles o 5 each, valued at between $3,000 and $5,000. The m was arrested, the importation of aigrets being p hibited by Federal law. How many devices there a for cheating! The tendency in crime is self-reveali ; how often the tip end of a feather points to the fi d! "Be sure your sin will find you out." (Num. 3 23.)

Wolf Chased into House

HOUNDS chased a wolf into a home yard near Summerfield, Kan., the other day, and when th housewife opened the door to see why the dogs w e barking, the big beast jumped in and ran under a ed. The bed was pulled out a little from the wall, w n the wolf raised his head between the wall and t bed. Then the bed was jammed back to hold the a mal until an ax could be obtained. Meanwhile t re was some motion and noise in the room with t e children in the bed, the wolf back of the bed and t hounds under the bed all lifting their voices in l d howlings. There were wolves in Palestine. C ist thus refers to them as a type of the enemy and d troyer of souls: "But he that is an hireling, and not th shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf c ing, and leaveth the sheep, and fleeth; and the wolf c heth them, and scattereth the sheep." (John 10: 12.)

Switzerland's Soldiers' Homes

MERICANS in Switzerland contributed $6,000 for three portable soldiers' homes for the Swiss s liers who are guarding the long line of boundary u ler rigorous mountain conditions. The first home w named George Washington, the second Abraham L coln, and the third Woodrow Wilson. Elaborate s vices of dedication of the Wilson Home were held i Berne, Switzerland, on December 21. Mr. P. A. S ral, American minister, made the presentation speech. President Wilson sent this peculiarly appropriate inscription for the home: "This home was erected by citizens of the United States as an evidence of their admiration for the Swiss republic, of their gratitude for its hospitality and protection, and for the cordial, sincere friendship which has always existed between that ancient republic and the government and people of the United States of America, a friendship based upon common principles of life, common ideals, and common aspirations." Now if these two and other neutral nations could bring about peace, how glorious it would be! The highest democracy can only be reached under Christianity. Switzerland and the United States are both Christian republics, and verify this statement of Christ: "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." (John 8: 36.)

© Underwood & Underwood

Statues for Library Building

THREE of the six statues which are to adorn the low story above the cornice of the main entrance on Fifth Avenue of the Public Library in New York are now ready. These, representing Philosophy, Romance and Religion, are now being set, while statues of Poetry, Drama and History are to come. All three were carefully taken up the library steps on rollers over a bridge of planks. The figures are being placed on the building to make the main entrance appear lower. Each is twelve feet in height. What a superb institution is the Metropolitan Library, feeding the minds and souls of hundreds of thousands of persons! What a magnificent material home it has for the books, magazines and papers! How proper to decorate the structure with these lovely and appropriate marble figures! Art and Literature are food for the soul and it was the soul of which Christ spoke when he said: "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." (Matt. 4: 4.)

Club's Remarkable Meeting

AT a banquet at the Hotel Manhattan in New York the other night two hundred members and friends of the Quill Club with telephone receivers in their hands listened to an after-dinner speech of ten minutes on peace, by David Starr Jordan, president of Leland Stanford, Jr. University, 3,900 miles away, at Palo Alto, Calif. Every word of the speech was distinctly heard. In it he said: "Three duties confront us. First, we must keep the United States out of this hideous brawl. Second, we must try our best to stop the slaughter in Europe. Third, we must see to it that such a war can never happen again." Then the members of the club applauded, and Dr. Jordan thanked them for their applause. Rev. Dr. Charles L. Goodell, the president, spoke to friends in Los Angeles, and the conversation could be clearly heard by the diners. Alma Gluck and Caruso (on phonograph records) sent their voices over the mountains and across the plains by the wires and were distinctly heard. While the motion pictures of the Golden Gate and the Pacific Ocean were being shown, the members of the club heard the roaring of the ocean itself over the wire. How fitting that the talk of Dr. Jordan to the Knights of the Quill should be of peace! In the midst of these miracles of modern invention and scientific progress we are compelled to blush with shame and cry with sorrow at the terrible war, and are impelled to offer the prayer of the universal heart that God may speedily end the conflict and that the wires may carry to the ends of the world this message to be echoed by the hosts of heaven: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." (Luke 2: 14.)

Help for War-Stricken Jews

A MOST intensely dramatic scene occurred the night of December 21, at a meeting of the Jewish Relief Committee at Carnegie Hall, New York. Within the short space of half an hour the sum of $715,000 was collected to alleviate the suffering of war-stricken Jews. Four subscriptions of $100,000 each and two of $50,000 were announced from the audience. Four huge piles of envelopes filled with checks and bills occupied the front of the stage. There were two large wicker baskets filled to the top with rings, watch fobs and other jewelry. The demonstration followed an impassioned appeal by Dr. J. L. Magnes, who had described in detail the suffering of the Jews in the war-stricken countries. At times the crying of men and women in that audience of 3,000 people was so loud that the speaker's voice was drowned. The crowd, wild with the impulse of charity, would not wait for the ushers and baskets, but rushed up to the stage and threw money, furs and jewelry upon it. Richly clad women and push-cart peddlers were shoulder to shoulder on their knees, or pressing to the stage with their donations. A woman with a Fifth Avenue modiste's gown and expensive furs tore a diamond lavalliere from her, and, crying like a child, handed it to Dr. Magnes. Just next to her was a shop girl who threw down on the stage $3.50, as much in proportion as the $100,000 gifts; it was the half of her week's pay. What a lovely silver lining is this charity to the black cloud of war! The Jews the world over have always been good to their poor and suffering. Their widespread persecutions and strong national instinct have drawn them closer together. Their religion requires provision for the poor and suffering. It is to be hoped that these Jews in caring for their war-smitten brothers may realize the truth of the Hebrew poet and king: "Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble." (Ps. 41 : 1.)

Horse Meat for Food

THE sale of horse meat as a commodity was made legal in Greater New York on January 1. As a necessity of life, the horse will be placed upon the same footing with cows, sheep and poultry. This sweeping action was taken by the Board of Health of the city, making New York the first place in the country, so far as known, in which the legal restriction against horse flesh has been removed. Dr. Haven Emerson, health commissioner, said that the prohibition of the sale of horse meat or the slaughter of horses for food is not based on sound or scientific grounds; that many of the nations of Europe use horse flesh for food; that in Brussels it brought a higher price than Argentine beef; that many people could have an inexpensive and clean meat, and that the old horses that now go to the "bone yard" and bring a trifling price will be fattened and sold for food in the market. The health commissioner said: "While the Health Department does not exactly recommend the eating of horse meat, we can see no harm in its use. The horse never has tuberculosis. It practically never communicates a malignant disease to human beings. We shall take special care to prevent its being sold as veal or beef. If horse slaughter-houses are established they will receive the same careful inspection as others." It is likely that some foreigners who were accustomed to use horse meat in their fatherland may hail the opportunity to use it here, but the average American will have to take some time to come up to the scientific ideas of the New York health board, and buy in the market as a substitute for a fat steer, or tender lamb, a rib roast of the record racer, or a sirloin steak of the coach horse of the millionaire, of Old Faithful tired out at the ash cart, or of the hero who ran himself to death going to the fires. The law is not compulsory; it only allows those who prefer that kind of meat to have it. The horse was not allowed as an article of diet with the Jews. John in his vision makes this reference to the eating of horse flesh: "That ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them." (Rev. 19 : 18.)

Ketchikan: the Rainiest Town in America

Continuing Frank G. Carpenter's Travel Story of Alaska

Copyright, 1916, by Frank G. Carpenter

I AM in Ketchikan, the first port at which our steamers call in entering Alaska. It is at the southern end of the Panhandle, that strip of islands and mainland at the lower end of our territory that seems to be cut, as it were, out of British Columbia. The Panhandle begins just above Skagway near the pass over the mountains to the Klondike and Dawson, and it extends for more than 300 miles. It consists of many large islands and a strip of mainland about thirty miles wide which runs from the Pacific Ocean to the crest of the coast mountain range, the whole making a territory as big as South Carolina. This district is known as Southeastern Alaska. It has its own climate, its own vegetation and its own peculiar products and resources. It is covered with green from one year's end to the other and it differs from the great interior as much as Maine differs from Florida. I shall be traveling within it for some weeks to come.

In a Marine Paradise

THE town of Ketchikan lies not far from the international boundary. It is only forty miles north of the Portland Canal and within six hours' sail of Prince Rupert, the terminus of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, and the port which the Canadians expect to make the gateway to the shortest route to Japan and the Orient.

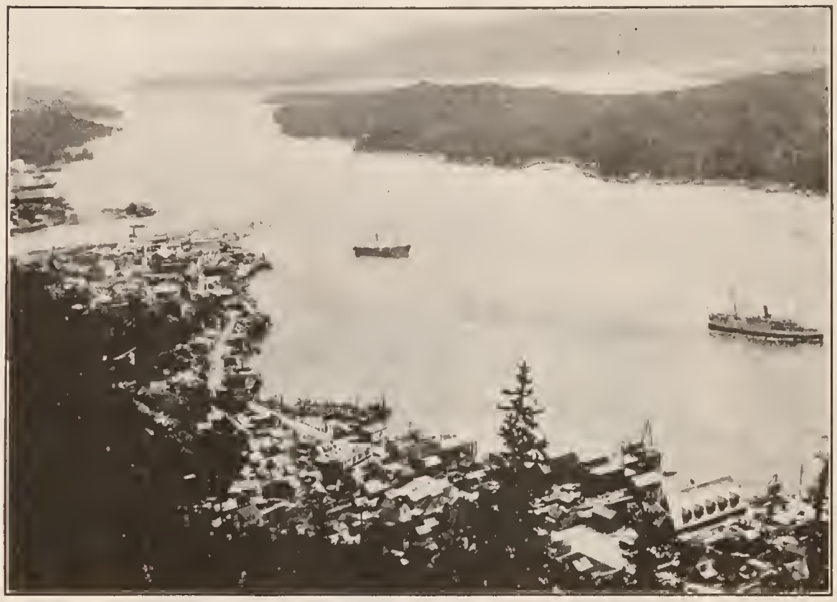
Ketchikan is as far north of Seattle as the distance between New York and Toledo. I sailed for more than 500 miles through Canadian waters before I came to the boundary of Alaska, and from there made my way in and out among the islands to Revillagigedo, on the shores of which Ketchikan lies. The trip took me more than two days and the fare was $22.

Leaving Seattle, I crossed Puget Sound, the Mediterranean of the Pacific, and then went northward past the city of Vancouver for more than 200 miles through the Strait of Georgia, which flows between British Columbia and Vancouver Island. Vancouver Island is half as large as Ireland and it lies so close to the mainland that the trip seemed like going through a great river. At the end of the strait we crossed Queen Charlotte Sound, and then wound our way on among islands, some of which had mountains more than a mile high, until we reached Dixon Entrance, on the line of the boundary between our country and Canada. The whole way was through inland waters and the steamer moved as smoothly as those which ply the Ohio from Pittsburg to Cincinnati or the Mississippi from St. Louis to New Orleans.

I despair of giving you any idea of the beauties of this voyage. They are so many and so varied. The route from Seattle to Skagway is known as the Inside Passage, and has often been compared to a trip on a great river. It is more. It is a winding in and ont among half-submerged mountains. It is floating through great lakes studded with islands. It is traveling along and within fiords like those of west Norway. Now you have the wonders of the Swiss lakes, now those of the inland Sea of Japan, and now beauties like those on the coasts of New Zealand. There are all sorts of combinations of sea and sky, of evergreen slopes and snow-capped mountains. The color effects are beyond description, and the sunsets indescribable in the changes and beauties.

These are the characteristics of Southeastern Alaska. The whole district between the Portland and the Lynn Canals is composed of islands covered with evergreen trees. The whole country is timbered and some of the trees are four or five feet in thickness. Many of the islands have snow-capped mountains that rise in green walls almost straight up from the water and their heads are often crested with silver. The most of the mainland is also one mighty wall of green.

The islands are of all shapes and sizes and they float upon sapphire seas. When the tide is low—and the tide here rises and falls to the height of a two-story house—these islands seem like floating gardens. There is no vegetation below the mark of high tide. The islands are bedded upon the rocks and as the water falls the living earth seems to be lifted. Then the forests are seated on rocky pedestals of stone, and mountains of green and white rise high above their rocky foundations. Then the vegetation does not begin until fifteen or twenty feet above the water, and there are only steep walls of black rock below. As you sail it is easy to believe that the earth is made of rock. The rock shows out through the trees. Here bold cliffs, brown and gray walls several hundred feet high, rise straight up from the blue waves; there the rocks show out of the thin growth of pines on the hillsides, and everywhere you have the rising and falling black rock foundation.



"The Harbor of Ketchikan Is Protected by Islands"

The channels vary as you sail on to the northward. Now they widen into great lakes, now they are rivers as narrow as the Hudson or Rhine. At times you pass through gorges walled by islands and the mainland, and at times are in fiords like those formed by the half-sunken Andes along western Patagonia near the Strait of Magellan. This part of our territory is made up of the heads of submerged monntains and in places the waters are a thousand feet deep. In other places there are great rocks as steep, as high and as sharp as the Washington Monument, which come within twenty or thirty feet of the surface. These are the terrible pinnacle rocks that rip open the hulls of the steamers. They are now being searched for and marked with buoys by the wire drag of our Coast and Geodetic Survey. But that is another story.

An American Town on Piles

LET us go back to Ketchikan. The town is situated on the southern shore of Revillagigedo Island, in a region where the salmon come in great hordes every summer and near banks from which are taken most of the halibut that go from Alaska to the United States and to Canada. Revillag do is about as large as Porto Rico. It is fifty miles ng and twenty miles wide and is made up of moun ins which for much of the time have their heads i he clouds.

On the Steamer's Deck, Skirting the Southeastern Coast

Ketchikan lies right on the water. The moun ins rise in green walls behind it. Their tops are spri led with snow, and great rocks shov out through the evergreen trees that ver their sides. The houses are built o he rocks. The harbor is the shape a halfmoon protected by islands. It has no beach to speak of and he business part of the town rests on piles. The streets are planked d- ways upon posts, and much of he freight is carried about on t ks and carts pushed by men. Ther re several drays hauled by horses, ut horses are unpopular, for their es roughen the planks, and they shak he town as they trot through the st ts. Of late automobiles and motor del ry trucks have come in and these will b- ably be the future traffic conveyo

The residence section of the ci is located on the sides of the cliff h er up. It is so steep that you ha to climb stairways to reach certain st ts, while other streets have winding d- ways of boards upon which slats ve been nailed to the planks to kee ne from slipping. The Ketchikaners ke you think of the tree dwellers, ho have to climb ladders to get to eir homes.

The best houses are high on the fs, far above the harbor. They see to grow out of the rocks. Neverth ss, some have little patches of garden, although th oil has to be sprinkled with gold dust to make th .

In this connection the captain on my ste ner coming up told me a story of a Ketchikan man ho sailed with him last month. This man was si ng at the captain's right hand at dinner. During ne meal he was in a brown study. Course after c rse passed and he ate but little. At last he burs out in an agonized soliloquy:

"I knew I'd forget it! I knew I'd forget I knew I'd forget it!"

"What?" said the captain. "Have you forg en something your wife told you to bring back om outside?"

"Yes, I have," was the reply. "And I kne I'd forget it. She made me promise to bring seven ks of good soil to lay on the rocks and make her a ga en. And now I've forgot it."

This is the character of a great part of Southea rn Alaska. The hills are so steep that the soil ru off with the rains.

Every One Wears Oilskins

NEVERTHELESS, Ketchikan has some bea ful gardens. The most of the homes are f ne cottages, and nearly every one has its little wn with bushes and flowers. Some of the citizens ise vegetables and berries. In the garden of H C. Strong I saw raspberry bushes as high as my sho ler which give him all of that fruit he can eat for ore than two months during the m- mer. The berries are large a of a fine flavor, and they never be me mushy when ripe. Ketchikan lso grows currants and salmon be es, and it has as many beautiful fl ers as a section the same size in S tle or Portland. It is a wet city nd the moisture is such that the p ats will grow on the rocks wit no soil to speak of. It has been in- ing steadily ever since I ar ed, and today during a downp I asked one of the citizens:

"Does it never stop raini in Ketchikan?"

He replied, with a laugh "I hardly know. I have lived ere only fifteen years."

The city really has rain for ore than two-thirds of the year, nd over eleven feet of water fa in that time. It is this that n kes the vegetation so green, the l ves of the trees dripping almo as steadily as those of the famou ain forest which is sprinkled by the mist of the Zambesi Falls in Ce ral Africa.

Indeed, the southern coa of Alaska is one of the rainiest pa s of in Business Street of the Town: the Roads are Made of Boards Resting on Piles

th world. Juneau, the capital, is much li Ketchikan, and on some of the Atian islands a day of sunshine is rarity. Here the people go about rerdless of the rain. They wear rub-be coats or slickers, and if they tramp n the mountains they put on rubber bts that reach to the waist. They wr oilskin hats, and some of the laes have slicker suits, consisting of skts and jackets. No one thinks of sting away from a party or tea on aount of the weather, and women gevisiting clad in oilskins that cover dsses that would not be out of place a party in New York or Washington.
thers tell me that Ketchikan
h many bright days and that its clime is unsurpassed by any other part oour country. The people are healthy.
T children have bright eyes and r cheeks. They play about everywre, notwithstanding the rain. In t winter they coast down the board rls, which in places run for more tn a mile up and down hills. The tn has but little snow at any time
o the year, but in winter the frosts a so heavy that there is splendid slding until 9 or 10 o'clock in the nrning, at which time the sun melts
t frost. If there is not enough frost, t roads can be sprinkled at night and ty will be covered with ice in the nrning.

lany people of the United States tk of all Alaska as bitterly cold in the wter.

Where the short-legged Eskimo Waddles in the ice and snow,
And the playful polar bear
Nips the hunter unaware.

Ketchikan has no Eskimos or polar bears and there is little ice and snow in the winter. The thermometer seldom falls to near zero, and the climate is as mild as that of Atlanta or Richmond. A slight difference in altitude, however, makes a great difference, and it is much colder on the tops of the mountains.

Ketchikan has excellent stores. The most of them are on the water front, built upon piles that rest on the rocks. Several concrete buildings are now going up, and there is a concrete department store that has a stock that would be considered large in any New England town five times as big as Ketchikan. The city has jewelry stores, grocery stores, hardware stores, plumbing establishments and machine shops. The stores have plate glass windows and the goods are well displayed. In one window I saw a full line of electrical apparatus, including electric irons, toasters and heaters. Another shows a large supply of thermos bottles and baby carriages. The butcher shops have quarters of red beef just in from Seattle, and the fruit stores sell raspberries and strawberries from Alaska, oranges and figs from California and apples from Oregon and British Columbia. The supply of eatables is quite as good as that of the provision stores in the States, and the prices are not much higher. Indeed, I believe one can live almost as cheaply in Ketchikan as in Cleveland or Kansas City.

I am stopping here at the Revilla Hotel. This is one of the two leading taverns, although there are others much less pretentious. The Revilla is a three-story frame building, within a stone's throw of the sea. The hotel office is a loafing place and poolroom as well, and the guests and outsiders are knocking the billiard balls over the tables at all hours of the night. I have a room with a bath on the second floor, and the charge is $2.50 per day. When I asked as to meals, I was told that the hotel served none, and that I should have to go out to the restaurants. The result is I am eating at the Poodle Dog Grill, where I sit on a stool at the lunch counter and where my ham and eggs or other meat comes to me on a great oval platter such as we use for a family. There is no other plate, and I eat from the platter. The Poodle Dog advertises as its specialty the serving of food on hot platters. The food is good and the service is excellent.

I find Ketchikan up-to-date. It has only 2,000 inhabitants, but it has daily newspapers, with telegrams from all parts of the world. It has a sawmill and iron works. It has seven salmon canneries, and is a mining center for silver, copper and gold. It has a public library, a board of trade, several moving picture shows and a half dozen well attended churches. The people look about the same as those you see in the States, save that there are many Indians and some Chinese and Japanese. The Indians, Chinese and Japanese dress like the whites, and about the only difference is in the faces, which have the racial features of their owners.

Ketchikan has an excellent water supply. It comes from a lake high up in the mountains, and is so piped that the town has all it can use and can still keep its sanitary drinking fountains made of porcelain perpetually bubbling. There are such places scattered throughout the city. Ketchikan has fourteen saloons, but the man or child who wants a drink of pure mountain water has only to fit his mouth over the little china bowl at any street corner and take in all he will.

In addition to the lake, Ketchikan has a rushing stream that flows in cascades and rapids right through the town. In the salmon season this stream is one mass of fish, and its color from bank to bank is all pink and silver. The fish come by the thousands and swim up the stream to spawn, toiling their way through the rapids and jumping the falls. At that season any one may have fish for the taking, and vast quantities are saved for the canneries.

The stream I have referred to furnishes the city its electric power, and it runs the street lights and telephones. It gives electric heat to some of the houses. During my stay I have had dinner with one of the leading citizens. His home is a beautiful house of ten rooms, lighted and heated by electricity. He has a hot-water plant, but the water is kept hot by the electric heat from the central power plant, and the same plant supplies his cook stove. He tells me that his bills for lighting and heating even in midwinter are not more than $18 a month.

To be continued

Among the Residences, to Say Nothing of Ketchikan's Gardens

Love Lights the Way

IT is only in our loves that we really live. What we hate is dead to us; and the wider the range of our hes, the narrower our lives.

magine a rose that would say to itlf, "I cannot afford to give away all n beauty and sweetness; I must keep it for myself. I will keep my petals csed up and withhold this fragrance."

And behold! The moment the rose ts to store up its treasures of color al fragrance, to withhold them from oers, they vanish. The fragrance al color do not exist in the unopened bl.

t is only when the rose begins to on itself, to give out its sweetness, i love, to others, that its beauty and fgrance develop.

le who refuses to give of himself for oers, who closes the petals of his crity and withholds the fragrance of h sympathy and love, finds that he les the very thing he tries to keep.

So selfishness defeats its own ends.

The founts of his manhood dry up.
Is finer nature becomes atrophied.
I grows deaf to the cries for help from h fellow men. Tears that never are sd for others' woes sour to stinging ads in his own heart.

But the moment you open wider the dor of your life and, like the rose, send o without stint your fragrance and buty of character upon every passerby,
a let the sunshine into your soul.

Sydney Smith said that it was his idea of hell to hate somebody.

Malice, envy, hard thoughts of any sort poison first the heart in which they originate. They make a brackish, unhealthy pool, where all sorts of noisome mental conditions generate.

EVERY kindly act, word, thought or impulse continues in its influence forever, brightening and sweetening the world, and every evil deed or thought permanently destroys a part of the sum total of human happiness.

Kindness involves denial. Sympathy carries sacrifice. Affection or aid of any sort is to some degree costly.

But it costs far more to be rude, ill-natured and mean. Spite and ill-nature are, as Dr. Johnson said, "among the most expensive luxuries of life." It costs immeasurably to give way to unrestrained anger, to harbor spite and bad feeling.

"Getting even" is a hazardous undertaking. A Philadelphia lawsuit, originally involving less than $60, has ended a long course through the courts with costs aggregating over $13,000. The plaintiff got the $60 sued for, but his lawyer's bill was $1,700. He is $1,640 to the bad, but he has "got even," for the other fellow had a lot more to pay.

Revenge is a poor investment. It pays small dividends and calls for big assessments. Look at it rationally from any standpoint and you must see that it pays poorly.

It is all right to insist upon one's rights—to the limit. No man should tamely submit to injustice. But justice comes more readily when asked with a smile than when demanded with a frown.

Obtuse, indeed, is he who has not learned from his own experience and observation that one little drop of kindness holds more of the real nectar of life than does a whole ocean of spite.

Hate hurts the hater more than the one hated.

YOU may search the whole world of philosophy through and find no truer truth than this—that hate, pride, jealousy, revenge, malice, and all the other evil passions the heart is heir to work their first and worst injury to their possessor; they corrode, render wretched and destroy the heart in which they originate.

The one you hate and plot against may not know or care. If he gives any thought to your attitude it may be only to return your hatred. Is it worth while to steep your soul in poison for no better result than this?

We must expend much of our life forces on others. Is it not better to expend them in kindness that uplifts than in spite that debases?

Is it wise to sulk gloomily in the bogs of spite, when a step will take you out into the genial sunshine of kindness?

Is it sensible to dwarf your soul in efforts to make some one recognize that you are his enemy and can hurt him, when you can ennoble yourself by the lesser effort necessary to make him see that you are his friend and can help him?

What we give we get back in kind. Is it better to have the respect of others than their hatred?

Yes, your own feeling is reflected back to you from others. If you give love you get love.

Love is one of the things the more of which you give the more you have.

Love was born a twin and cannot exist without its counterpart.

The human heart, like the rose, only as it opens to the sunshine generates fragrance that sweetens its atmosphere.

It is your own attitude—your own thought—that attracts or repels others. According as you love or hate, you surround yourself with an atmosphere of inviting sweetness or you hedge yourself in thorns, with worms working where roses should bloom.

People are lovely to you or hateful, just as you love them or hate them. This is not mere seeming, but actuality.

Love is the light in which we see and live.

Hates are malarial mists in which we blindly grope and miserably die.

CHARLES GRANT MILLER.

Readers' Views on "Preparedness"

Prayer Mightier Than Armies and Navies

IF God does dispose, why not look to him in the first place, and do those things which we know would meet with his approval, and not bring a travesty on our religion, as the nations now at war are doing, by asking God to bless their efforts at destruction, each of the other?

No, "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds." The poet has truly said, "There are more things wrought by prayer than this world dreams of," and the protection afforded our country by the prayers of the friends of peace are of infinitely more efficacy than are the grandest armies and navies a helpless people may be tempted to build and forced to supply. MRS. LIZZIE AVERITT.
El Paso, Texas.

A German-American Pastor Answers Dr. Sheldon

Dear Doctor: I read your open letter to the President in the Christian Herald of November 24. You say in your letter: "I have lived in the West over twenty-seven years and within the last year have been in every Western state, and faced over one million and a half of the people, and your program of militarism will meet with earnest and intelligent opposition from this part of the country." Now, the writer does not know, and very likely you do not know, how many of these million and a half people in the Western states are of the same opinion as yourself regarding this question. Neither do I know how many Western people, or any other people, agree with my view, but I do know that many agree with me if I say that the President is right when he thinks we ought to be better prepared to defend our country and all that is dear to us as a nation. That you feel more safe in Topeka, Kan., than we do in Salem, Ore., and along the Pacific Coast, is natural, but many of us real Westerners have felt for years, and never more than now, that we ought to have not only a fleet, but a very strong fleet, on the Pacific Coast.

You also quote in your letter these words of the President: "No thoughtful man feels any panic haste in this matter. The country is not threatened from any quarter. She stands in friendly relation with all the world." And you add: "If that is true, why all this military program for an enemy we do not possess? . . . You do not name one nation in the world that has any design to threaten or invade our country." We answer: that we are at peace now, is no sign that we have no enemy, and if we have no enemy now, that is no sign that we may not have one tomorrow, next month or in a few years. And if any nation should look to us with a jealous eye and a desire to rob us of a part of our possessions and take things which we hold dear, do you think that such a party would tell us long before the conflict, so that we might get ready to defend ourselves? If we are not properly prepared, we can not prepare overnight. The great struggle in Europe has taught the world, among other things, that it is well to be prepared to defend yourself, your rights, your family and your country. You advise the President and his advisers to spend the money that would be necessary for preparedness "to educate the people and Christianize the world." Education alone does not make any one good; some of the biggest rascals in the world are well educated. And as far as the Christianizing of the world is concerned, that process is very slow and I for one (and I do not consider myself a pessimist) do not believe in that slogan: "The World for Christ in this generation!"

Again you ask in your letter: "What would Jesus do? Can we imagine him, at this crisis in the world's history, calling on a nation to spend vast sums preparing itself for war by creating a great army and navy? It is not thinkable." I will also ask: What would Jesus do? Can we imagine him at this crisis telling a nation like ours (for which I believe he has yet a great work to do in this world) not to prepare for defense, and say: "If an enemy or enemies come, let them run all over you"? And enemies may come sooner or later, from the north and from the south, from the west and from the east, and they that may come from the east don't need to be Germans. You may say: "God can protect us." That is true; but he may want to use an army and navy to do it with. This is equally true: God will not do for us what we can do ourselves. You may tell some one who is after your or some one else's property, in a good and loving way, to "be good," but what if he does not heed your kind words or follow your good example? If he does not it is well to back up your words and your good will by showing him that you are prepared to defend yourself and your property and that he will have to take the consequences. If he changes his mind and God changes his heart, and you love one another with the love with which Christ loved us, then you both can lay your weapons aside; but until then it is a wise thing to be prepared for an attack, and that is what the President and millions of our citizens want.

You close your letter by quoting the following words of Scripture: "They that use the sword shall perish by the sword." But these words can not be applied to all nations under all circumstances. If so, then all the nations I know of would either be dead or near death. The fact is, Dr. Sheldon, and you know it as well as others, that we can see in the Bible, and in general history, that God sometimes used the sword to punish nations, and more than once the sword cut a way through which led to free citizenship and to the free use of a free and glorious Gospel.

Permit me, in closing, to remind you only of a little history of our own country. When in the eighteenth century the American colonies used their swords against English oppression, they did not only not perish, but as a result the "United States of America" were born, which is one of the greatest events in human history. When during the Civil War the Northern states took up the sword against slavery, these states not only did not perish, but the colored race became a free race. And as a result of the Spanish-American War, Uncle Sam did not perish, but the sword and the Stars and Stripes brought freedom to millions of people who had borne the Roman yoke for 400 years.

I, as one American citizen, will uphold the President in this program of "preparedness," so that no foe may catch us unprepared. A. J. WEIGLE, Pastor German M. E. Church, Salem, Ore.

In this Cartoon, "Preparedness," Published in the San Francisco Chronicle, the Artist, Bronstrup, Must Have Been Wondering If It Will Be Possible to Hold Back the American Dog of War

Military Preparedness and What It Will Lead To

THERE seems to be now in this country a widespread demand for "military preparedness." Our President has stated his policy in regard to it and he asks us—the people of this country—to consider it and say candidly what we think about it. It is our duty as well as privilege in this free country to do this, not necessarily to him directly, but to our congressmen, who are now in session.

One hundred and twenty-nine years we have lived under a policy which has been a mission and example of peaceful development, as well as a source of wonder and admiration to the whole world. Throughout this period, our policy has withstood the crucial test of international friction with the military govern nts of the old world; passed through the Civil Var period, the trying period of reconstruction foll ing it, survived with a solidarity never before poss sed, and has gone on to greater and better things.

Now, when the whole world is sick of wai and seeking for a way out of this one which will b g a peace that will never again be broken, shall we opt the military policy of the war-worn and wa orn nations of Europe and issue a challenge to morc ar? Whatever we as a nation may do, our decision full of potentialities for good or evil, not only to u but to all mankind.

I believe that a "military program"—a prepa ion for war at this time, on a scale unheard of b our people before—would tend to paralyze any orts we might make toward bringing about agreemer for disarmament and a system of international cont of the situation that would insure world-peace i the future. If an international agreement hat will insure peace cannot be reached, ai the exhausted and battle-scarred nations i irn to their wrecked homes with their bitt ess and hate reinforced, and begin to prepa for a renewal of the struggle, it should be nc ult of ours. We will be in no immediate da ger, as we are in absolutely none now.

To the student of events in this wa and leading up to it, three things are ver vi-dent: 1. That preparation for war do not insure peace, but on the contrary pro tes suspicion, rivalry in armaments, and vi-tably war. 2. It causes private indiv als to build colossal plants to meet the der nds of the government for war muni ns. Their interest is to promote "war scare or magnify any that may exist. 3. Tha he owners of the munition factories in the different countries, when any frictio be-tween their respective governments es, play into each other's hands and aggra te. by mutual agreement and intrigue ny causes of friction, that they may ha a market for their wares—deliberately ro-moting war, that they may have a m ket for implements of murder and desol on. The inside facts of this war and t ngs leading up to it prove conclusively at these statements are true.

Heretofore, immense fortunes have en made by the munition manufacture of Europe, and a market is made for their ods by keeping up the war propaganda. The demand is beyond their ability to su ly, and this country is convulsed in an ort to meet it. Immense amounts of money ve been invested, great plants erected, nd unheard-of profits are being reaped by eir owners. Knowing that human natu is the same everywhere, and judging by at has gone before, is it too much to b ve that these men will do all they can to ree this country into "militarism"? That ey, in conjunction with the Navy League re already using their efforts to this er is more than a suspicion, and is so gra a matter that Congress will probably be c led on to investigate this whole situation.

And what of Canada, our neighbor o he north, between us and whom relation re almost as familiar and pacific as betwee he inhabitants of our own states? Will th in-ternational boundary line between of nearly 4,000 miles' extent remain wi out defenses, as at present, if we adopt mi ar-ism? On the contrary, the probability is th it would soon be bristling with forts and cannon nd all the paraphernalia of war on both sides.

I am not a Quaker; I do not believe in the doc ne of "non-resistance." So long as there is evil in he world, conditions will arise which it is our du to oppose. But I do believe in the doctrine of pat ice and forbearance that has been so wisely follow in these troublous times by our President. Now, all times—when there is no nation in a position to a ck us, nor likely to be for years to come—for the on-tinued peace and prosperity of our own country for the hope of peace to a world now war-sick and blee ng to death—this of all times is the most uncalle or and inopportune for military "preparedness."
Magnolia, Ark. JOHN C. MURPI

A Denominational Protest

THE administration's national defense program was on-demned in resolutions adopted at the concluding sess of the North Carolina-Virginia Christian Conference, ich declared that the idea of "preparedness" was ill-founc in facts, since it was unscriptural throughout. President A. Harper of Eton College was authorized to protest in the me of the Christian denominations of the two states.

It is the duty of every Christian to protest against re-paredness," even as Christ protested against using the s rd. Matt. 26:52. Christ, when asked how to gain eterna ife, answered: "Obey the command, Thou shalt do no mu r." Matt. 19:18.

Let us stick to Christ in the New Testament, instead of ing to the Old Testament as seemingly the preparedness preache do.
Lackawanna, N. Y.. ALFRED KrEI

The Three "Nesses"

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

ONCE upon a time, long, long ago, before there were dictionaries, or grammars, or even the very simple of printed books, numbers of little wo s roamed the earth in a hopeless, me ingless, unattached way.

I was almost in the beginning of this tim that there lived a family of three wo s. Because they were a family they all ad the same name or meaning (wh h at that time was almost no me ing). The name was Ness. Because the three words were just exactly alil in size and length and sound, folk nev paused to give them an individualit or character of their own. Folk jus gnored them and they were really ver nice little words.

last one morning, after a particular uninteresting period of existence, on f these Nesses grew cross and in its croness spoke out from the depths of its nall and unhappy heart.

"Brothers," said the little Ness, "we mu travel together no longer. No one eve knows either of you from me. If we ere in different parts of the world we ight be loved for the meaning we br ght; but here we have no special me ing. People never even say us wh they're talking. People never wr us when they're writing. People jus don't see us when we're in plain vie !" The first Ness paused for bre h.

e second Ness was just about as ba y hurt by the neglect of the spe king public as the first Ness.

" have heard," said the second Ness, "t t humans have a way of earning for ames. I have heard how a cave ma who kills a tiger is called 'The St ng Man'; how an Indian who kills a l r is called 'Grisly'; how a boy who sh ts his first eagle is called, perhaps, 'T Black Feather.' Maybe, if we go in arch of adventure, we, too, may ea names that will bring us the respect an love and recognition of all people."

e third Ness had been listening qu ly but attentively to the speakers. N its little face lighted up with a rare sm .

"et us go at once," said the third lit Ness, and his heart lost some of its sa ess as he spoke. "Let us go at once, an perhaps we may find names and pe onalities and different meanings. Le us go at once, and in a year let us ret n again to this place and report on ou new names."

a year the Nesses came back to th meeting place. They came buoyan , gaily dressed, happily. They a cheerfully and sweetly and—dif ently. They came with different ex essions and different souls and different forenames. And after they had gr ed each other affectionately, they to different stories.

After I left you," said the first Ness as e folded his capable, characteristic ha ls in his lap, "after I left you, I flew a way, due north. I passed mounta s. I flew over rivers, I left settlem ts and towns and cities behind me. I w over barren plains and snowy o ts and sparkling glaciers. And then at st, one day, when I was well-nigh tir , I came to a resting-place."

e two other Nesses were listening nt estedly. "Where was that restingpl ?" they asked as the first Ness pa ed.

hat resting-place," was the answer, " ld hardly be called a place of rest. It as a little village built of snowy ice an icy snow—a little village where men an women fought for their existence— o ht against blizzards and wild beasts an snow slides. But the spirit of the pl made me linger on, near the men w tried to find food in the teeth of the st ing blast, near the women who st ggled with numb fingers, to fashion w n clothing for their husbands and ch ren. I lingered near the camp—so times helping dig through a drift—so times pulling a hard needle through a rsh bit of hide. And as I absorbed the spirit of the camp, I disco red that I had a name. Before on that name was the watchword of h amp."

The two other Nesses started to their feet.

"What is that name?" they questioned eagerly.

"That name—the name they call me by," answered the first Ness, and there was pride in his voice—"that name is Helpful Ness."

AFTER a moment the second Ness began his story.

"After I left you," he began, "I flew far away, due south. I flew over mountains and hills. I flew over oceans and valleys and strange turbid streams. I flew over wild jungles and wilder deserts and at last I came to a little village built of sticks and dried leaves and sun-baked mud. It was a restless little village where folk prayed for an existence under the burning rays of an angry sun, with a pitifully small supply of cool water and refreshing breezes. And, though the village was a drowsy, uninspiring place, I stayed on in the home of a woman with a dying baby.

"Every morning and every evening the woman would creep to the thatched door of her hut and look long at the sky. It was blood-red in the morning with the flush of the crimson sunrise, blood-red in the evening with the glow of the sunset. And, as each calm day rolled into each calm night, the woman would say, 'Tomorrow it will rain. Tomorrow the heat will break. Tomorrow my baby will get well.'"

The second Ness paused for a moment and he brushed a tear drop from his eyes with a tired hand. "When the baby died," he continued, "I left. But the spirit of the woman had given me my name."

"And what is your name?" chorused the two other Nesses. "What is your name?" they questioned.

"My name and my meaning," the second Ness told them, and his voice was as gentle as the south wind, "is Hopeful Ness!"

THERE was a pause for the space of four golden, sympathetic moments. And then the third Ness began his story.

"After you left me," began the third Ness, "I lingered here in my little home town. I felt contented and happy and loth to leave a place where I had lived all my life. And then at last one day, because I felt that I had not been ambitious, I started on my quest. I traveled up the side of the tall mountain in front of us, and I traveled slowly, for the day was fair and beautiful. When I was half way up, I came to a little cottage. And there I stayed.

"The cottage was a tiny one, but it was very neat. Flowers grew in the dooryard and vines clambered over the windows. Many tiny sunbeams danced on the hard earthen floor. And the owner of the cottage, a girl with a crooked back, smiled and sang as she did her household tasks.

"If a dish was broken in the course of the day, the smile never left the girl's face. She would say, 'I never liked it—very much, anyway.' If her best dress was torn she would say, 'Well, there's still enough left to make a frock for some poorer child!' If there was no food in the cupboard to eat (and oftentimes there was not) she would say, 'Well, too much to eat makes one lazy.' If her back pained her she would say, 'How fortunate that my arms and legs are whole!' And then she would brush the mistiness from her eyes and hum a snatch of song During my whole year I stayed with her. And there, from her smiling face, I learned my meaning and my name."

"And what is that name?" questioned the brothers. "What is that name?"

"That name is Happy Ness!" answered the third Ness.

This is the story of how the three Nesses, faring off, alone, into the world, found names and meanings. And, if you don't believe it, remember that it all happened ages ago before there were grammars, or dictionaries, or even the very simplest of printed books. And no one can be sure of what happened then!

Campbell's
CONDENSED
VEGETABLE
C

"This will keep him warm!"

Yes keep—that is the right word, and no doubt this sturdy youngster speaks from his own experience. There is something more than a mere temporary glow of enjoyment in

Campbell's Vegetable Soup

Its warming, invigorating effect stays by you.

The rich meaty stock—made from choice beef, is in itself strengthening and sustaining. It also contains selected white potatoes, sweet potatoes, carrots, tender corn, "baby" lima beans, small peas, green okra and a suggestion of red peppers, beside a sprinkling of "alphabet" macaroni. And all is delightfully flavored with celery and parsley.

The regular use of this nourishing soup tends to build up and fortify the body permanently against all kinds of weather and all kinds of wearing work. Hadn't you better order half-a-dozen from your grocer today?

Your money back if not satisfied.

21 kinds 10c a can

Campbell's
CONDENSED
VEGETABLE
SOUP
JOSEPH CAMPBELL COMPANY

Campbell's SOUPS

LOOK FOR THE RED-AND-WHITE LABEL

Helping Mother

But They Couldn't Do It Without Fels-Naptha Soap

Mrs. Sensible believes in children learning to be helpful and practical. "And we love to help mother," say the twins. "We love to wash the dishes in nice sudsy water with Fels-Naptha Soap because they look so shiny and clean afterwards."

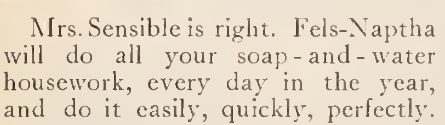
"I even let them wash the pots and pans for me," says Mrs. Sensible. "It really isn't 'dirty work' as so many people think, if you only use Fels-Naptha Soap.

"On washday after breakfast, I put my clothes to soak with Fels-Naptha Soap. After I've done my clearing up I wash the clothes. It's easy work, because Fels-Naptha gets the dirt ready to lightly rub and rinse right out. I always have my wash on the line long before noon.

"In vacation time they always beg to help me wash—and I let them because after soaking the clothes with Fels-Naptha, it don't tire them. Then, they love to help me sprinkle down the clothes for next day's ironing. So washday has no terrors for our family. It's a very pleasant day.

"Of course, I don't let them do heavy work, but they do love to keep the tubs and bowls clean, and wash off the paint for me. Fels-Naptha is the best thing I know of to keep a whole house clean and a whole family happy and contented."

Mrs. Sensible is right. Fels-Naptha will do all your soap-and-water housework, every day in the year, and do it easily, quickly, perfectly. Fels-Naptha is a perfect combination of soap with naptha and other wonderful cleansers that make dirt disappear. Mrs. Sensible always keeps a carton of Fels-Naptha Soap on hand.



Fels & Co., Philadelphia

The Spirit of Life

International Sunday School Lesson for January 23. Rom. 8:12-30

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By REV. F. B. MEYER, D.D.

"As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are sons of God." Rom. 8: 14.

Jesus was led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. Do not doubt the Spirit's leading, when you find yourself amid the loneliness and desolation of the wilderness. This is the training-ground of the sons of God. If here they meet with wild beasts, they will also be ministered to by angels; and if here they have to fight with wicked spirits in the heavenlies, it is that their muscles may become strong by use and their thews supple and elastic. Fear not to follow God's Spirit into the darkness and the storm; it is only there that you test and discover the reality of Christ and the living truth of his word. When the soldiers and sailors come back from the great war, do you suppose that they will need to listen to sermons to prove that Christ is really alive and the Bible true? They have seen his face, have eaten of tho Word and found it nutritious. This is what tho battle does for us! These are the lessons of the wilderness. Sons of God test their sonship. They discover that men do not live by bread alone, but by every word of God. They make the supreme choice of the Cross. The world's attractions, as they look back on them from that vantage-ground, lose their attractiveness, and they become possessed with the one consuming passion—to do the will of God.

The Law of the Spirit

By Arthur H. Howland

WE study today the greatest letter of the world's greatest letter-writer. It would be hard to challenge the statement that the letters of Paul have had a greater influence upon the minds of men than the letters of any other man who ever lived.

If you have been to the Library of Congress at Washington, you noticed on the gallery of the rotunda the statues of twelve men. These men were evidently selected by the committee as the twelve who had done the most to influence the thought of mankind. Among these twelve leaders of the world's thought throughout the ages stands the apostle Paul. And critics rank Paul's epistle to the Romans as the greatest product of his pen. Many Bible-lovers have felt that the eighth chapter is the greatest of this great letter. So you see, our study today is of intense interest and of first importance.

Glancing through the schedule of this year's Sunday school studies, you notice that the narrative of the Book of Acts is interspersed with lessons from the epistles. The epistles thus studied are not selected in their chronological order, but are placed in relation to the general narrative and argument of the Acts. We have been studying about the Pentecostal gift of the Holy Spirit and its results. So it should be a great help to our understanding of this subject to stop to consider what Paul had to say about it in his letter to the Romans. He was not present with the disciples on the day of Pentecost. At that time he was not a follower but a persecutor of the Christ they worshiped. Paul had his Pentecost, however, a little later in the house of Judas at Damascus. It is interesting to note in passing that while the presence of others is a help in praying for the Holy Spirit, it is not a necessity. Paul did his praying alone. He had made his consecration, had won his victory, and his faith was ready to answer the knock of Ananias at the door; his soul ready to receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

The class will be interested in studying some of the incident details of the writing of this letter to the Romans. It was written while Paul was in Corinth, stopping at the house of his friend Gaius (chapter 16: 23). Paul's companion, Tertius, acted as secretary or amanuensis in the correspondence (16: 22). Paul was on his way to Jerusalem to take to the church there contributions which had been raised by the Christians of Macedonia and Achaia (15: 25, 26). He hopes that his journey will lead him all the way to Rome, and sends this letter forward to his friends there by the hand of his fellow worker Phœbe.

PAUL'S connection with the city of Rome is extremely interesting. He was long imprisoned there. Some scholars think that both his terms of imprisonment were spent in this great city. His last imprisonment was surely here. From his dungeon in the Mamertine Prison he was taken out along the Appian Way to the place where now stands the Church of the Three Fountains, and there offered up by the enemies of his Saviour as a martyr to the truth of the Christ he proclaimed. The beautiful basilica of St. Paul, standing just outside the city walls, contains what is believed to be his tomb, upon which are inscribed these words, which were the motto of his life: "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."

An expression in the second verse of this eighth chapter of Romans gives us the key—"The law of the Spirit." Just as there are laws of physical life, just as there are laws of music, of electricity, of art, just so there is a law of the Spirit. People wonder why they are not richly blessed; why they do not have peace and power and purity in their lives. It is because they fail to conform to the Law of the Spirit. Paul's argument throughout this epistle, which reaches its climax in this chapter, is that there are two distinct laws, the law of commandments, and the law of life or the law of the Spirit. He says he tried to keep the commandments and failed. Bible students and teachers have gotten into all sorts of trouble by trying to fit that gloomy picture in the seventh chapter of Romans, that picture of defeat and darkness and defilement, with the triumphant words of Paul throughout all the rest of his writings. There is only one possible answer, and this is accepted by the best commentators, both of the present and of earlier times; namely, that Paul in describing his past life falls into the frequently used "historical present"—that is, using for the sake of vividness the present tense instead of the past. The whole argument of the epistle falls to the ground if we fail to recognize this. What he is telling these Roman Christians is that the law of the commandments has no power to make a man do right, but that the law of the Spirit has.

Sitting in Dr. Denny's classroom at Glasgow, I heard him say, as he seemed to visualize the tables of stone upon which the ten commandments were written: "A man might look at the ten commandments forever and never receive the power to keep them." The commandments have brought death, but the Spirit brings life. The commandments brought defeat; the Spirit brings victory. It seems strange to notice throughout Paul's writings that his chief quarrel with men was not that they were not trying to be good, but that they were trying too hard, trying in the wrong direction, trying with the wrong means. The Jewish Christians found it hard to break away from their confidence in the law. They could not conceive, for instance, that a Gentile convert could really live a holy life without becoming circumcised. They were constantly getting back under the bondage of the law, and so Paul had to say again and again as he wrote to the Galatians: "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you? . . . Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage." The writings of Paul are, first and last, an amplification of the promise of Jehovah voiced by Ezekiel: "I will put my "Promise me that you will try Sanatogen—"

AND at last he does promise He tries Sanatogen, he takes it three times a day. Skeptica at first, his doubts soon vanish for gradually but surely there is wrought a change which spells better health, a new happiness t himself and those dearest to him

The kindly, tonic effect of Sanatogen arouses the nervous system, but by falsely stimulating it, but by persistently feeding cell and tissue with its own concentrated pure nourishment.

Sanatogen
THE FOOD-TO IC

Now, also a relish for food returns, digestion is wonderfully improved—for remember, nerves and digestion depend on each other, and Sanatogen by aiding digestion and strengthening the nerve centres, restores harmony to both.

Such is the action of Sanatogen, well known to thousands and thousands of grateful people to whom Sanatogen has brought better health, stronger nerves, improved digestion, renewed efficiency of body and mind.

The world's most famous people know Sanatogen's effects from personal experience—the medical profession of five continents know them—and no less than 21,000 physicians have so testified in writing.

When will you know and feel the good Sanatogen is capable of doing?

Sanatogen is sold by good druggists everywhere in three sizes, from $1.00 up

Grand Prize, International Congress of Medicine, London, 1913

Hon. Wm. E. Chandler
Former Secretary of the Navy, ex-Senator from New Hampshire writes: "Sanatogen is a pleasant nutriment for cases of impaired digestion. It strengthens without irritating and promotes vitality in feeble folks."

Sir Gilbert Parker, M. P.
the eminent novelist-statesman, writes from London: "Sanatogen is to my mind a true-food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy and giving fresh vigor to the overworked body and mind."

Send for a free copy of "Nerve Health Reg
If you wish to learn more about Sanatoge you use it, write for a copy of this booklet, fully illustrated and comprising facts and inform the greatest interest. Tear off this as a reminder to piri within you, and I will cause you wa in my statutes." Paul has much sa about the atonement, but the real alue f the atonement is that it makes ossi e the gift of the Holy Spirit, who ill c anse and strengthen the believer's eart Salvation by faith in a crucified avio r; salvation by the indwelling piri of God, who comes in answer tl t faith—this is the message of aul.

THE BAUER CHEMICAL COMPANY
26F Irving Place New York

TA ING up, now, the detail study of e verses assigned for our lesson: aul eclares in verse twelve that we are nde no obligation to live "after the esh. By the fl h he means the imulse and tendencies of the body, which e sfish and ungodlike. Much consio has resulted from the conviction at e flesh itself is essentially sinful. aul owhere says this. By being "in e fl h" (verse 8) he means being in the ent and moral condition of following e i pulses of the flesh even when they ad contrary to our duty toward God d an. But there is a deeper and ore ibtle meaning in Paul's use of the ord 'the flesh" and the "fleshly" or ear l" mind. He declares in verse 7 at e carnal mind is enmity against od. That is the secret of the whole ob n. The unawakened, unenlighted unregenerate man does not like od. He is an alien; he is an enemy of od d needs the quickening Spirit to an his heart's affection.

Nc, Paul says, if you keep on followg t fleshly mind, if you follow the cta s of your fleshly desires without bn ting them to the tests of God, you all lie. But if you, through the piri put to death the deeds of the dy you shall live. Then comes our old Text: "For as many as are led tl Spirit of God, they are the sons G ." We are to conquer the sinful d fish inclinations of the body, not rou h our own will, but by trust in hri not by confidence in our own we, but by confidence in the Spirit G , the electricity of heaven. "The w the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus," e ostle declares at the beginning of is apter, "hath made me free from e l of sin and death. For what the w uld not do because it was weak on co t of the weakness of our flesh, od mself did by sending his own Son, at the righteousness of the law igh be fulfilled in us who walk not after e f h but after the Spirit." Can we t l the thrill as we touch again is e wire of Pentecostal promise and lfil ent? Here is the thing toward hic the prophets have been looking rw d. God was to come by this iri overmatching their weakness th is strength, purging their defileen by his fires, causing them to walk hi tatutes! We are not free from the sh or its impulses till death. Paul id at he buffeted his body and kept un r (1 Cor. 9: 27). He longed to be e om the body of his humiliation hi 3: 21, R. V.). But while living in e dy he did not follow the dictates tl body, but allowed the Spirit of od control and move him and to conter hatever tendencies to wrong reai l in his physical nature.

He follow the beautiful verses about ns . We are no longer enemies of od we are no longer strangers to God; a not merely servants of God. We e t sons of God. The spirit we have cei d is not the spirit of bondage and ar, ut the spirit of love, a sense of vi been adopted by the Deity, e irit which makes us cry "Abba, tl ." Here is an echo of the beautil rse in Paul's letter to Timothy: o od hath not given us the spirit of ar; ut of power, and of love, and of so d mind" (II Tim. 1: 7). There is o of the sweet words of Jesus: He eforth I call you not servants, but ha called you friends." We do his ll t because we must, but because l e him. We do his will not beus we try, but because we are trustg omnipotence.

N Paul takes up the mystery of ffe g. He does not deny that ri ians suffer; in fact, his very call t service of Christ was a call to fle Acts 9: 16). Paul does not dodge e oblem of pain. The whole cream in an agony, he declares, a strugward toward some divine conm ation. And we share in this agony of the universe. But the universe is to be delivered, although it is now groaning and travailing in pain, and we who have the Spirit are getting now the first gleams of that ultimate redemption. We know that some day all the pain and misery and gloom will have an end and with patience we are waiting for this while the Spirit helps us in our infirmities and aids us in our prayers.

Bad as things are, they cannot harm the children of God. "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God."

THE lesson study should not close without a glimpse of those wonderful verses at the end of the chapter. There can be found in all literature nothing more noble and glorious than the exultant words with which Paul closes this inspired homily on the Holy Spirit: "What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us? He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things? . . . What shall separate us from the love of Christ?" He names frankly all the fierce things that try to drag us down and cries, "Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

The How Column

Conducted by Frank L. Brown, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association

How to Obtain Class Interest in Lesson Teaching

These teachers have told how they keep their pupils interested while teaching the lesson. More will follow.

From a teacher of eight-year-old boys comes this: "I tell the story slowly and every little while leave out a word and wait for some one to fill it in. In this way they pay attention, as they do not want any one to get ahead of them."

An Ohio teacher of twelve fifteen-year-old girls gives this: "In preparing the lesson I usually think which parts will appeal to certain girls. Then I usually ask for the girl's opinion on the part that I feel will most appeal to her type. Knowing my girls very well, I find this easy to do. We, of course, often get into lengthy discussions from which we gain much."

Junior boys are dealt with by a Kansas teacher as follows: "I vary the presentation. Sometimes the lesson is written out, a copy for each, with blanks to be filled. Sometimes I question them or ask them to see if I know my lesson. Always I try to make them think of the character as if he were alive."

A Kansas teacher with thirty-nine young men says: "I often assign certain topics to individuals and try to cluster lessons around some general truth."

A Pennsylvania teacher of ladies twenty to forty years of age has this experience: "I ask individual questions. I do not think it a good plan to make the questions general, for some will do all the answering and the rest feel they do not need to study. I prepare my lesson so that I do not even take notes; ask questions from memory. Always take my Bible for reference."

A Connecticut teacher of twelve-year-old girls says: "I try to find out first of all how much they have done on their note books, explaining anything they do not understand, then develop the lesson by finding out how much they know about it, and explaining difficult parts."

A Georgia teacher of twenty-two boys from fifteen to eighteen years has this plan: "I outline the lesson, then close with a personal application, and, if possible, an illustration of everyday events."

A New York teacher of twelve-year-old boys says: "I try to vary the presentation. Sometimes I use the blackboard. Sometimes I have one or two individuals look up some item of interest in connection with the lesson."

A Colorado teacher says: "I try to draw out questions and ask questions and sometimes use chiefly the lecture method."

A teacher of a mixed class from eight to ten: "By asking the questions and sometimes allowing one pupil to ask them. At other times each pupil will ask one pupil two questions by previous arrangement. This is fine."

A Colorado teacher of twenty-five young ladies writes: "I change my plan of teaching often. If the interest is not good I bring in some incident, not always in the lesson, but with a close connection."

"Don't be discouraged! Resinol Soap will improve your skin"

Many and many a girl has a clear, healthy complexion today because some friend came to her with this sound advice, based on her own experience.

Resinol Soap not only is delightfully cleansing and refreshing, but its daily use reduces the tendency to pimples, offsets many ill-effects of cosmetics, and gives nature the chance she needs to make red, rough skins white and soft.

Hands protected by Resinol Soap rarely chap or roughen in winter. Used for the shampoo, Resinol Soap helps to keep the hair rich, glossy and free from dandruff.

If the skin or scalp is in bad shape, through neglect or improper treatment, a little Resinol Ointment should at first be used with the Resinol Soap, to hasten the return to normal conditions.

Surprise "him" by sending for a free trial size of Resinol Shaving Stick. He will like the way it soothes his face and prevents most shaving discomforts.

Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers in toilet goods everywhere. For a sample of each, free, write to Dept. 1-B, Resinol, Baltimore, Md.

RESINOL SOAP
FOR THE SKIN AND COMPLEXION

MICHIGAN STATE AUTO SC
AUTO SCHOOL

Come to Detroit
The Automobile Center
And
LEARN THE AUTOMOBILE BUSINESS

Big opportunities everywhere for Detroit trained automobile men. Interesting, pleasant and money making business. Ambitious men needed to start garage and repair shops everywhere. Learn how. Chauffeurs, garage and repair men, testers, etc., have more than they can do. Plenty of room for you.

EARN A BIG SALARY

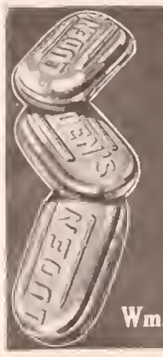
Students have experience of building new cars from start to finish—factory training in block testing, etc. —all the leading types of starting, lighting and ignition systems in operation. New 6-cyl. Losier Touring Car and 8-cyl. King Car used for road instruction. Just purchased—new 8-cylinder Motor for block test dept. solely for students instruction. Just added 1916 Delco System as used in Buick, Hudson and Packard 12.

DETROIT IS THE PLACE TO LEARN

44 Automobile Factories. They all know and endorse our school. Students can go through them, including Detroit Electric Service Department, without extra charge. Remember, ours is the Old Reliable School, in the heart of the Automobile Industry. Start course anytime. Write for full particulars, guarantee and copy of "Auto School News" and new pictorial catalog—just out—ALL FREE. Or better still, jump on a train and come to Detroit, as hundreds have done.

Learn the automobile business in Detroit and learn it right.

MICHIGAN STATE AUTO SCHOOL, 4401 Auto Bldg., 11-19 Selden Ave., DETROIT, MICH.



LUDEN'S MENTHOL CANDY COUGH DROPS
The Outdoors "Health Guard"
Throat and nose protection against dust or dampness. Quick relief from coughs and colds. Have many uses.
In the "yellow box"—the world over 5c
Wm. H. Luden, Manufacturing Confectioner Reading, Pa.

Delightful Bran Foods

Bran dainties help foster bran habits. And that means proper regulation.

Everybody every day should eat some form of bran food. It is Nature's laxative, to aid good cheer, good health. Doctors all advise it.

Pettijohn's Food is a wheat-flake dainty with 25 per cent of bran. The bran is hidden in delicious flakes. It is unground bran, the kind that brings effect.

No morning cereal was ever more appealing.

Alternate with Pettijohn's Flour in bread, muffins, pancakes, etc. Then every breakfast will bring its supply of bran.

Try it one week and you'll never go without it.

Pettijohn's
Breakfast Food
Rolled Wheat with Bran Flakes

Soft wheat in luscious flake form, hiding 25 per cent unground bran. A morning delicacy. Price, 15 cents per package.

Pettijohn's Flour—This is 75 per cent fine white flour mixed with special bran flakes. Use like Graham flour. New recipes on the label. Price, 25 cents per large package

Order both of them today from your grocer.

The Quaker Oats Company
Makers—Chicago (1147)

Get Your Range At Wholesale

—direct from manufacturers. Save big money in price—get the best that's made—work saving features—latest styles—fuel saving. Cash or easy payments. 30 days' trial—360 days' approval test.

Stove and Range Book FREE

500 styles and sizes. $100,000 guaranty. We pay the freight and ship within 24 hours. We also make Malleable Steel Ranges.

Write today
Ask for catalog No. 103

KALAMAZOO STOVE CO.
Mfrs.
Kalamazoo, Mich.

Stoves, Ranges, Gas Stoves, Furnaces, Metal Kitchen Kabinets and Tables

"A Kalamazoo Direct to You"
Trade Mark Registered

FARMS IN VIRGINIA $15.00 acre and up. Easy payments. Mild climate—no long cold or hot spells. Social life, fertile soil, good markets—high prices—on railroad—convenient to trains. Write for free magazine and other information. F. H. LaBAUME, Agrl. Agt., Norfolk & Western Rwy., Room 327, N. & W. Bldg., Roanoke, Va.

YOU CAN AFFORD Familiar Songs of the Gospel (No. 1 or 2). Round or shape notes. $3 per hundred; samples, 5c each. 83 songs, words and music. E. A. K. HACKETT, FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen patents. Send for 3 free books; inventions wanted, etc. I get patent or no fee. Manufacturing facilities
RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Bldg., Washington, D. C.

Young People's Topics for January 23

Forgiving Enemies

Epworth League Topic. Matt. 5: 43-48; 18: 21-35

WHAT to do with an enemy has long been one of life's biggest problems. The old idea was to kill him. That is what lions and tigers do with their enemies. But that is not what real men and women are supposed to do with theirs, and when men and women have taken the name of Christ, it is still more preposterous to think of their dealing with enemies in this fashion.

But even if the requirements of civilization keep us from killing our enemies, we have still considered ourselves free to hate them. Yet Jesus said we must not even do that: "I say unto you, love your enemies; bless them that curse you; do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you."

That is the one universal, absolutely binding rule about enemies that must be adopted by all of Christ's followers. We must love them.

So we see that after two thousand years of study in the school of Christ, the Christian nations still abound in 1A grade.

It will be perhaps well worth while to spend considerable time at this meeting discussing the reasons why America should keep on with her determination to stay out of the world-war and why it is bad policy for us to undertake a great program for naval and military preparedness.

The business of forgiving enemies is a mere detail in the bigger business of loving. If we love people, we will forgive everything. The world's supreme example of that sort of forgiveness is in the dying Christ: "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do."

Emphasize the point that loving one's neighbor is not only Christian but scientific. A civilization built upon strife will wreck itself; the civilization that shall endure will be built upon love, brotherhood, helpfulness.

But the lesson has personal, every-day application. What are you yourself, in your personal life, going to do with your enemies? What are you going to do about their affronts and their grievances and injuries? Some people make the quibble the Bible does not teach that we must forgive those who wrong us until they have acknowledged their wrong and asked forgiveness. But that is like trying to make a little bit of fog remain in the midst of blazing sunshine. The law of love makes all these problems thrill with light. When people wrong you, you are at once sorry for them as well as for yourself. You are sorry that they are wrong; you are sorry that they are unjust; you must realize that they have done themselves a vaster injury than they have done you, and because you love them you are anxious that they shall become right.

We have to be very careful right here. It is easy for us to become self-righteous. It is easy for us to like to set a standard for others and cherish a silent condemnation for them because they do not adopt it. So humility must be coupled with love. We must not only love others, but we must be willing to acknowledge that they may be right and we wrong.

But the Christian program does not rule out protests against wrong. It does not even rule out a contest against wrong, when that wrong is hindering our work for God. But here again there must be the most earnest and prayerful caution. Christian history has been marred with acrimonious debates and controversies. Splendid as was the great Reformation, and magnificent as were its achievements, it is distressing to read of the bitter words, the sharp condemnations, as well as of the bloody struggles that accompanied this great world rebirth.

We cannot think too often nor speak too often nor insist too strenuously upon that great word and that great fact—Love. We cannot always admire our enemies. We cannot always like them, but we can and we must have a hearty desire to help them; we can and we must regard them as Jesus regards them; we can and we must forgive them their wrongs against us, and be ready at all costs to help them whenever and wherever and however we can.

Amusement That Is Worth While

Christian Endeavor and B.Y.P.U. Topic, Eccles. 3:1-15

THE amusement problem is one of the toughest that confront young people. For generation after generation they have been advised and taught and warned and scolded with all sorts of results. Many young people have flown in the face of advice and warnings and have come to grief and wreck; many have taken the advice, but instead of being glad and triumphant about it have been rebellious and troubled; many have become confused, not really knowing what they should do; others have really come to a satisfactory plan and have lived happily, without compromise, without condemnation.

Both the world and the church have made definite progress in understanding young people during the last hundred years or so. Some of the good people of the old days thought it was wrong for young people to have any fun at all. But the best studies of human nature show that it is better for a man never to lose his capacity for play. A young life without fun is terrible. An old life without fun is deplorable.

Now what kinds of fun are worth while? You remember the keen, quick, intense play of childhood. How we ran and jumped and skated; how we played ball and shinny; how we camped and tramped and swam! Now that same kind of fun can be carried on through life, with only mild modifications as the years creep on, and with this fundamental difference: in childhood our play was our business, in grown-up life our play must be only incidental, except in so far as we can make our work a pleasure. This is, of course, the real secret of living: we must find our actual pleasure in the work that we have to do. And this is possible if we can get the consciousness that our work is helping others and glorifying Christ. Because we love him and because we love others, our work will be a delight if it is truly helpful work.

But even then we must have our play time; we must forget our work and give ourselves to recreation, so that we can come back to it with a mind freed of its frets and a body freed from the poison of fatigue.

The best standards of wholesome amusement are those set by the Young Men's and the Young Women's Christian Associations. They have made amusement a science. Their physical directors and game leaders know how to provide and direct the kind of amusement that sends young people back to work with clear heads, refreshed bodies, and, best of all, untroubled consciences.

Any amusement that leaves us in a spiritual cloud is not amusement that is worth while.

Any amusement that hinders our power to help others is not worth while.

Any amusement that leaves memories which we may regret when home-making time comes is not worth while.

Any amusement that may deflect the life of another from the things that are purest and best is not worth while.

Any amusement that cannot be squared up with the principles of love and helpfulness and real loyalty to Christ is not worth while.

Furthermore, think during the meeting of the myriads of little children and young people who are deprived year after year of their rightful heritage of play. The pressure of poverty, of toil, of wretchedness fills day and night. That poison of fatigue is never eliminated; minds and bodies and souls are ground to pieces in the terrific pressure of to-day's industrialism. Study up the work of the American Playground Association; the welfare work of the social settlements; if your church is in a neighborhood where these things can be done get your organizations busy at it. Wherever your home or your church may be, find some people who need the blessing of play and help them to find it.

Physical Victory!

What Does It Mean to You?

It means that you can be Strong Vigorous — full of Life and Energy—Realize The Best Within Yourself for yourself, your family and friends.

You can be free from Chronic Ailn
You can have a Clear Skin.
You can have a Good Figure.

You Can Weigh What Yo Should Weigh

I no longer need to say what "I do," but what "I HAVE DONE" I have helped 75,000 of the most cultu intelligent women of America to ar their very best—why not you?

No Drugs—No Medicines

My pupils simply comply with Nature's Laws

I think I do not exaggerate when I say I built up the vitality and strength of women during the past eleven years than a physicians—the most progressive physicians a friends—their wives and daughters are my pupil medical magazine vertise my work.

I am at my desk 8 A. M. to 5 P. M sonally supervisi work. When in Ch come to see me.

My work has g in favor because r are quick, natural permanent, and be they are scientific appeal to com sense. Fully one of my pupils are s me by those who finished my work.

I have publish free booklet sho how to stand and correctly, and g other informatio vital interest to wo You can judge w can do for you by I have done for ot

If you are perf well and your fig just what you wish may be able to h dear friend—at leas will help me by yo terest in this g movement for p health, greater cul refinement and b in woman. Won't join us?

Expressing Poise—Balance—Ease

Sit down and write to me NOW. D wait—you may forget it. I have had a derful experience, and I should like to tell you abo

SUSANNA COCROFT
Dept. 18, 624 Michigan Avenue, Chic

The fact that Miss Cocroft has advertised in this ma zine for 14 years is evidence that she accomplishe she claims. Rand McNally & Co. have just pul her new book, "Beauty a Duty." For sale at al sellers. Beautifully bound.

ADLER'S PLAN SAVES HALF

Before you decide on an organ for Church, Sunday School or Young Peoples' Society, you should get my big FREE ORGAN BOOK and details of my direct-from-factory selling plan. I will save you big money.

CHURCH ORGAN

Any size or style shipped freight prepaid for 3 absolutely free trial. Price so low and terms s that no Church, Sunday School or Young Pe Society need be without a sweet-toned, resonant able, highest grade organ. My organs won hi prize at St. Louis World's Fair and National C vation Exposition. Fifty year guarantee. Send for big, free book of all styles of organs for h Churches, Sunday Schools, etc.

C. L. ADLER, Pres., ADLER ORGAN
8009 W. Chestnut Street, Louisville,

50 Mends for 50 Cents

Pri
50

Genuine Solde

With an ordinary match it easily mends solders metals permanently. Used by the hou wife, farmer, electrician, automobilist, mov picture operator, jeweler, merchant and mecha

AGENTS WANTED

Show what it will do and it sells itself. Eve body wants SOLDERALL. Send 50c for la tube. Your money back if dissatisfied.

EMENAR CO.
47 E. 23rd Street NEW YORK CI

The Christian Herald Prayer League

AL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in dai prayer at the noon hour. Also anyone s at liberty to send a request for pra r or an acknowledgment of answered pra r, thereby becoming enrolled as a mer er of the Prayer League.

A head of the Bowery Mission, Dr. J. G. Hallimond is well known to the members of the Pra r League. Every week at the mis on hundreds of requests for prayer are ad in the Brotherhood gatherings. Dr. nd Mrs. Hallimond sent to their frie ls the past Christmas season the foll ving sad and beautiful message, whi we know will stir the sympathy an enlist the prayers of every member of r League.

That Boy o' Mine

By J. G. Hallimond.

T se lines were written in August, 1912. Exa ly two years later, on war being declar between Great Britain and Germany, "T Boy o' Mine" was one of the first to enli He went with the First Canadian Co gent to Flanders, and in the Battle of Lan mark, on April 24, 1915, he fell, and was officially reported as "wounded and mis g." His commanding officer said: "H vas the best man I had, intelligent, cool, fear ss, and with plenty of common sense, and is name was about to be sent in for pro tion."

I. HIS COMING

He me to me from out that mystic realm,
 Vere mercies generate, and love divine;
A g from God, my heart to overwhelm,
 V h gratitude and awe, that boy o' mine.

II. HIS BABYHOOD

His ny fingers held me in a clasp
 A soft and gentle as the clinging vine;
His aby touch the adamantine grasp
 T t naught could sunder; oh, that boy o' mine.

III. HIS YOUTH

Th gh happy golden days of care-free youth
 C which the sun seemed evermore to shine,
I w ched him grow in strength, and grace, and truth;
 heart exulted o'er that boy o' mine.

IV. HIS FIGHT

 ut n the world's broad battlefield of life,
 F l-panoplied upon the firing line,
He ent; he fought, he won, though in the strife eager heart ached for that boy o' mine.

V. CONCLUSION

No in my age I lean upon his arm,
 I strength my constant stay in life's decline;
Wh final shadows fall, and evening calm
 S rounds me, then I'll bless that boy o' mine.

I the belief that he still lives, and is a pri ner of war, we ask you to remember him in ur prayers.

nnot the members of the Prayer Le ue cheer the hearts of Dr. and Mrs. Ha mond by joining their prayer and fai to theirs that their son may come saf home again?

M B., Tyner, Sask., writes: "Some weeks ago I wrote asking for pra ers for a sister that she might rec ve more light, and I am glad to say th she has been baptized with the Ho Spirit. A year ago I asked for pr er for a brother at school. He was co erted, sanctified and called to pr ch. During the holidays he started pra r meetings and about twenty were co erted in his own community. The Lo has worked in a wonderful way." L. . writes from Watauga Falls, N. C.: "S ne time ago I wrote for your prayers th my health might be restored, and als that my sins might be forgiven. Si e then I feel that I have been greatly hel d and strengthened, for all of wh h I am very thankful to the Lord." M G. N. McG. writes from Dallas, Te : "Some time during the past su ner I wrote asking you to unite wi me in prayer for my two daughters, wl were sick all the time. One at that tin had been in bed for more than five m ths. I am thankful to say they are bo able to be up all the time now, for wl h they also give God the glory." Mrs. F. McQ., Smithfield, Ont., writes: "In one of my times of special trouble, when my oldest son was hurt badly and had to go to the hospital, during the operation I was in sore trouble and Jesus gave me such peace I knew he would be all right." Mrs. A. E. B., New Mexico, writes to tell how her children were reconciled through the power of prayer. M. M. writes from Woodruff, S. C.: "More than a year ago I asked prayer for a sister who was in very bad health, and for whom the doctors said there was no chance. She was the mother of ten children and I felt we could not give her up. She was given back to us well and strong through direct answer to prayer." L. W., Mount Hope, Kan., writes: "In answer to prayer one of the members of my family has been successful in a business affair."

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS of answered prayer have also been received from E. and S. B., Gloversville, N. Y.; Mrs. C. E. W., Protection, Kan.; Mrs. O. C. S., Magnolia, Iowa; Mrs. R. L., Trenton, Ky.; A. L., Ia., S. B., Pacific Grove, Calif.; Mrs. W. D; Perry, Cuba, N. Y.; Mrs. M. H. H., Lynn, Mass.; Mrs. A. G., Binghamton, N. Y.; Reader, Pittsburg, Pa.; Mrs. F., Andes, N. Y.; Mr. E. K., Paterson, N. J.; Mrs. B. S., Curtiss, Wis.; L. D., Sacramento, Calif.; Mrs. E. D., Lyle, Wash.; A Subscriber, New Virginia, Iowa; Miss M. M., Fortuna, Mo.; S. A. W., Emporia, Kan.; A Friend, Jackson, Miss.; Mrs. O. S., Andes, N. Y.; A Constant Reader, Nashville, Tenn.; Mrs. S. B. S., Spokane, Wash.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Canal Dover, Ohio; Xenia, Ohio; Bourbon, Ill.; Newberg, Ore.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Andes, N. Y.; Thorndike, Mass.; Freeport, Pa.; Monroe, Wis.; Olympia, Wash.; Amistad, N. M.; Atwood, Colo.; Chestertown, Md.; Protection, Kan.; Tyner, Canada; Eagle, Idaho; Sanger, Calif.; Beacon, Iowa; Glendale, Calif. (for the Sailor's Rest at San Pedro, Calif.); Oakdale, Tenn.; Henniker, N. H.; Lundgren, Iowa; Danville, Ky.; Lena, Ill.; Chino, Calif. (that the young people of the neighborhood may be united); Shenandoah, Pa.; Faribault, Minn.; Byron, Ill. (that all people who are not Christians may become so).

Mrs. K. B. asks prayer that son's mind may be restored; Mrs. L. B. and Mrs. H. F., their daughters'; J. H. Z., mother's; L. A. M., that her mother's mind may be strengthened; Mrs. W. L. W., her sister's, sister-in-law's, husband's and own minds may be strengthened. Nine other friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for relatives or friends or for themselves.

E. S. asks prayer that daughter's sight may be restored; Mrs. N. D. D. and Miss M., their brothers'; L. B. B., that father's sight may be strengthened. Eight other friends ask prayer for restoration or strengthening of sight for themselves or other friends or relatives.

Sixty-one friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace and assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

M. M. asks prayer that husband and two sons may be saved from the liquor habit; eleven parents, their sons; four wives, their husbands; E. B., a brother; Reader and Miss M. I., dear friends; and Anxious One, that he may be cured of this habit.

Mrs. A. C. asks prayer that her husband may be cured of the morphine habit; Mrs. A. B. S., that sister may be cured of the drug habit; A Reader, that friend may be cured of the drug habit.

Mrs. C. B. and A. H. G. each ask that three sons may be converted; thirty-four other parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; nineteen wives, of their husbands. Sixty-seven other readers ask prayer that friends or relatives may be converted.

Eighteen friends ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for relatives or friends.

One hundred nineteen friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be healed, including Mrs. T. O. G., that daughter may regain use of arms and limbs; and H. G., that mother may regain use of right arm. Seventy-six friends ask prayer for the healing of self, including C. O. B. that speech may be restored; four, who ask that they may regain the use of limbs; and one that she may be cured of spinal weakness.

H. E. D. asks prayer that daughter's hearing may be restored; Miss M., that the hearing of two sisters and a brother may be healed; E. S. and H. G., their sisters'. Twelve other friends ask prayer for healing of hearing for other relatives or friends, or for themselves.

Forty-two friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Sixty-one friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs, including one who asks that his home may be filled with Christianity and love.

Can You?

CAN YOU work 14 hours a day and feel as fresh and strong as when you started?

CAN YOU eat what you want, whenever you want?

CAN YOU put enthusiasm and optimism in every task you undertake?

CAN YOU laugh and sing and shout from the mere joy of living?

Bernarr Macfadden can—and tells YOU how in his new book

VITALITY SUPREME
—FOR MEN AND WOMEN

Sent Free on Trial—No Money in Advance—Just Mail Coupon

What is it that makes men and women fail in business or social life? What is it that makes people old beyond their years? What is it that keeps you from earning more money—more power—greater happiness? The reason, as Bernarr Macfadden clearly points out, is largely caused by nothing else than lack of vitality.

It takes more than ordinary health—more than ordinary vitality—to come out ahead in the crush of modern competition. Never before was it more true that life is a struggle in which the "fittest" win. And of what does fitness consist? What brings these success qualities? Vitality Supreme! Analyze the men and women who have risen to positions of affluence and wealth and almost invariably you will find them endowed with a type of super-health, super-vitality that gives them the power to plan correctly and the strength and stamina to smash all opposition. Without Vitality Supreme, without this dreadnaught Force they would be "nobodys." With it they command and demand the world's best of everything. And they get it!

Partial Contents

Superb Energies that Throb and Thrill Stimulating the Source of Stamina
Cleansing and Stimulating the Alimentary Canal Pressure Exercises for Inner Strength
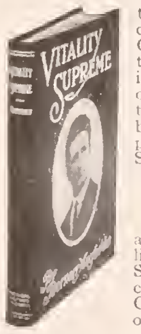
Functional Activity the Secret of Power
Straightening and Strengthening the Spine
How to Breathe Correctly
Strengthening the Stomach
How to Eat, What to Eat
Foods in the Cure of Constipation
Hints on Bathing. Facts about Clothing
Suggestions about Sleep
The Laugh Cure



The Work of 30 Years

Bernarr Macfadden has already shown thousands upon thousands of men and women how to develop, attain and maintain this Vital Force. In his own case he has seen it bring him from the point of death to a degree of physical perfection that millions of people have admired. He has seen it build scores upon scores of run down, worn out, sickly men and women into human dynamos of health and energy. In his new book, Vitality Supreme, he writes not from theory, but from the rich fund of knowledge he has gained in his 30 years of study and practice. He now tells for the first time, and in plain language, the secrets of super-health that have completely revolutionized the lives of people who have heard him lecture, who have read his writings or who have been under his personal care.

Develop Hidden Forces

In Vitality Supreme Bernarr Macfadden shows you how to develop, expand and bring out your latent powers—hidden forces. He tells you how to walk, how to stand, how to eat. He shows you how to strengthen the stomach, how to rejuvenate the source of stamina and virility, gives a new and startling way to thoroughly, naturally, druglessly cleanse the alimentary canal (the source of 90 per cent. of disease). He gives simple little exercises which can be practiced anywhere, at office, home or outdoors, for building inner strength. He tells you how to purify the blood, how to bathe properly, how to dress correctly, how to sleep right, soundly, restfully. He shows you how the buoyancy, energy, ambition and force of youth can be maintained through middle age and in some cases to old age. And the wonderful part of this book is that by following the methods Mr. Macfadden suggests you begin to feel better, happier the first day, with almost no effort at all!

Our Offer

"Vitality Supreme," with its 259 pages, profusely illustrated and handsomely bound in cloth, contains as much material as many books selling for $3.00 or more. By special arrangement with the publishers of Physical Culture, the leading and most practical health magazine of the day, it is now possible for you to secure a year's subscription to Physical Culture—12 big numbers—each copy containing over 100 pages of interesting and instructive information akin to the development of health, strength and vitality, together with Bernarr Macfadden's new book, for only $2.00. The subscription price of Physical Culture alone is $1.50. So you are getting a rare bargain.

Send No Money

Before committing yourself in any way, however, the publishers will send you "Vitality Supreme," together with the current issue of Physical Culture, on approval without deposit. Then, if after examination in your own home you feel you can afford to be without this library of vital, practical youth and health-achieving knowledge, send the book back within five days after its receipt and you will owe nothing. If you decide to keep the book, send us $2.00, and you will receive the magazine regularly for a year. There are no strings to this offer. No money is required in advance. Merely fill out and mail the coupon. But it is advisable to mail the coupon today because this unusual no-risk offer is liable to be withdrawn any moment

MAIL THIS TODAY NO MONEY REQUIRED

Send me Bernarr Macfadden's book—"Vitality Supreme" and the current number of Physical Culture, prepaid. I will either remail the book within five days after receipt and owe you nothing or will send $2.00 in payment for the book, and a full year's subscription to Physical Culture.

Name..................
Address..................
City............State.........

Mail to PHYSICAL CULTURE PUBLISHING CO.
3901 Flatiron Building New York City

PHYSICAL CULTURE PUB. CO., 3901 Flatiron Bldg., New York City

The "BEST" LIGHT

Positively the cheapest and strongest light on earth. Used in every country on the globe. Makes and burns its own gas. Casts no shadows. Clean and odorless. Absolutely safe. Over 200 styles. 100 to 2000 Candle Power. Fully Guaranteed. Write for catalog. AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE.
THE BEST LIGHT CO.
470 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

25 Times World's Champion

402,000 in Use

Get all facts, proofs, particulars—my low prices—money-back guaranty—also my $1300.00 Gold Offers—all come with my big illustrated Free Book "Hatching Facts," in colors. Write me today. Jim Rohan, Pres.

Freight Prepaid. 1, 2 or 3 Months' Home Test

Belle City Incubators and Brooders

Belle City Incubator Co., Box 127, Racine, Wis.

Make Money for Your Church

Sell New Collapsible Tube Shoe Polish. Different. Mrs. McPheeter sold 62 one hour. Good repeater. Big profits. Complete outfit, consisting of Polish, Mitt and Metal Case, 42c. Particulars and big catalog free.
HAMILTON CO. Dept. 25 Toledo, Ohio

Don't Throw It Away

MENDETS
A PATENT PATCH

Mend leaks instantly in all utensils, graniteware, aluminum, tin, brass, hot water bags, etc. No solder, cement or rivet. Any one can use them. Send for sample box, 10c; large box, all sizes, 25c, postpaid. Agents Wanted. Collette Mfg. Co., Box 302 Amsterdam, N. Y.

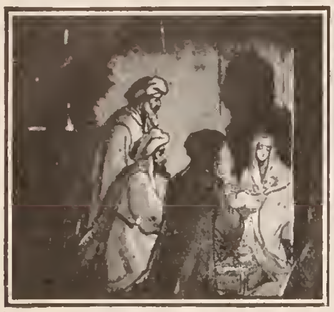
SHEERIN'S FRESH DUG FRUIT TREES

Buy At One-Half Agent's Prices

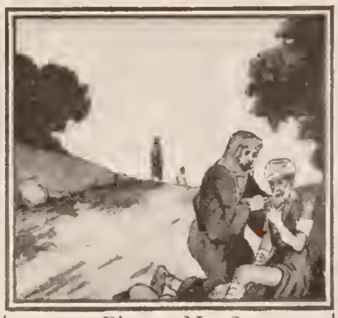
Let me send you my catalogue—it's free to everybody—it's different. It tells you facts about my fresh dug trees and how you can save money and receive a guaranteed SQUARE DEAL. Write today and see the difference in buying direct from grower than through agents.

Apple, 4½-6 ft., $14.00 per 100.
Peach, 3½-4½ ft., $9.00 per 100.

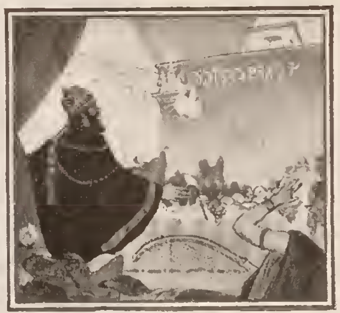
SHEERIN'S WHOLESALE NURSERIES, 35 Seward St., Dansville, N. Y.



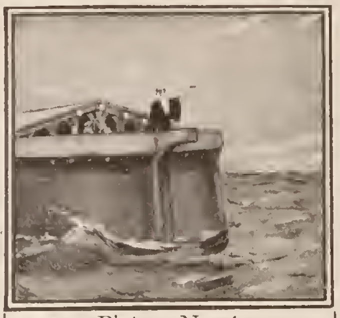
Picture No. 1



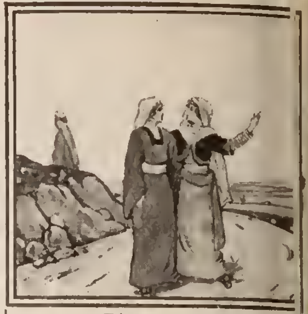
Picture No. 2



Picture No. 3



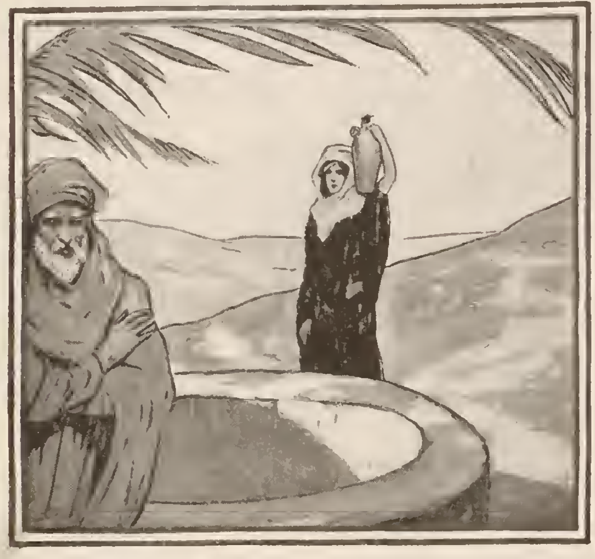
Picture No. 4



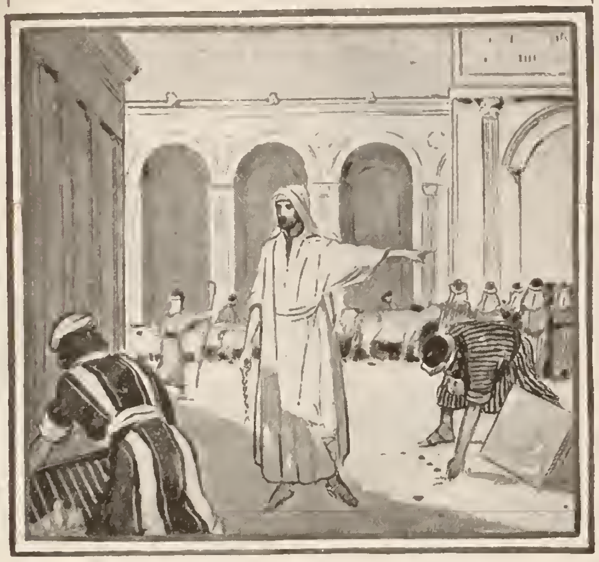
Picture No. 5

This Is the Answer

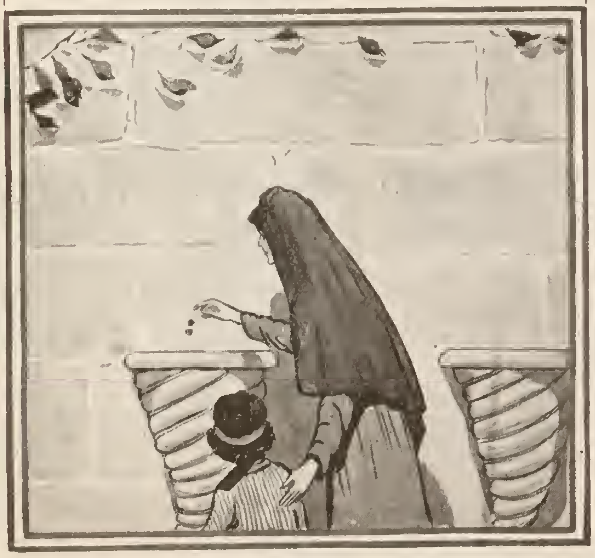
Picture No. 10



Picture No. 11



Picture No. 12



OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
TO YOUR QUESTION

MR. AND MRS. READER AND FAMILY

What shall we do to-night, and to-morrow night, and next Saturday afternoon?

TURN YOUR SPARE MOMENTS INTO ENJOYMENT, INSTRUCTION AND MONEY

IN OUR

Bible Picture Contest

WHICH IS

Freely Open to Everybody with Equal Opportunity to Win

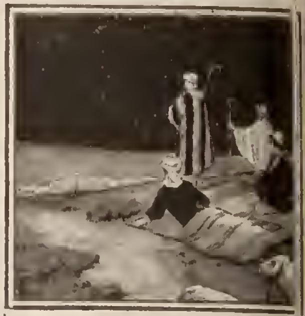
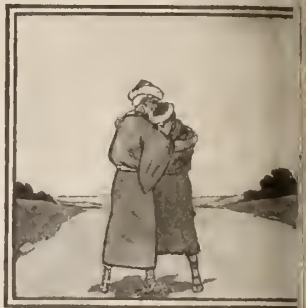
$1,250 Cash, 1st Reward	2nd Reward, $625 Cash
$350 Cash, 3rd Reward	4th Reward, $250 Cash
$150 Cash, 5th Reward	6th Reward, $100 Cash
$75 Cash, 7th Reward	8th Reward, $50 Cash

9th Reward, $20 Cash
10th to 24th Rewards, Each $2.50 Cash
25th to 419th Rewards, Each $1.50 Cash

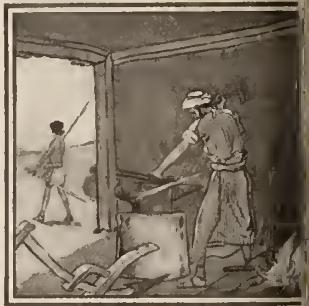
419 Rewards in All, Aggregating $3,500.00 Cash



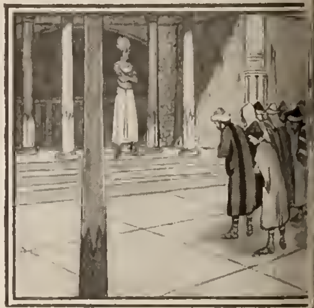
Picture No. 6



Picture No. 7



Picture No. 8



Picture No. 9

INFORMATION ABOUT THE CONTEST

You can begin right now to take part.

The three large pictures on this page (No. 10, No. 11 and No. 12) are the kind we shall continue to publish, at the rate of three a week, until the complete series of sixty Contest pictures have been shown to you

The Contest consists of your looking at these pictures and labelling them, so to speak, with the most suitable texts contained in a standard list available to you. Those submitting the best answers for the pictures will receive the rewards

The nine little pictures also shown herewith are miniatures of those already printed since the beginning of the Contest, Dec. 22, 1915. You should have kept the issue of the Christian Herald of that date and succeeding issues, as you should do from now on—or at least the pictures which you may cut out. But if by any chance you find yourself unprepared, you see before you today the whole first dozen; and you should make up your mind to delay no further The pictures Nos 1 through 9, full size, will be sent to you free of charge- if you need them—as explained in the next column

The Contest is simple and easy, because choice of answers for the pictures (Bible verses to describe them) is limited to an interesting list of 2,000 texts conveniently arranged in a newly published volume called Gems from the Bible.

Don't send in your answers until the end of the Contest.

You can obtain Gems from the Bible and the handy Reply Book (into which to write your answers) together with it, as also the back pictures if you want them, this complete Bible Picture Contest OUTFIT, as a premium, if you will renew your subscription to the Christian Herald for one year (or, you who are not a subscriber, let us enter up your subscription) sending us two dollars. Or, if you, being a subscriber, will send us $1.50 to pay for a new subscription for some other person (by making it $2.00, that other person can likewise receive a Bible Picture Contest Outfit), we shall send you your Outfit of Gems from the Bible, Reply Book and pictures ABSOLUTELY FREE.

Watch for next week's pictures, but get ready to solve them by procuring the Gems from the Bible.

Address: The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City

PUZZLED

Har, Sometimes, to Raise Children

Chlren's taste is ofttimes more accute, selecting the right kind of food to thody, than that of adults. Nature rks nore accurately through the chilen.

A ooklyn lady says: "Our little boy d lg been troubled with weak digesn. We could never persuade him to ke ore than one taste of any kind of rea ood. He was a weak little chap d were puzzled to know what to d n on.

"O lucky day we tried Grape-Nuts. ell, ou never saw a child eat with such reli, and it did me good to see him. om hat day on it seemed as though we uld lmost see him grow. He would t Gpe-Nuts for breakfast and supper, d Ihink he would have liked the food dner.

"T difference in his appearance is me ing wonderful.

"M husband had never fancied cereal ods f any kind, but he became very nd Grape-Nuts and has been much pr ed in health since using it.

"W are now a healthy family and tu ly believe in Grape-Nuts.

"A riend has two children who were my afflicted with rickets. I was isf l that the disease was caused by k proper nourishment. The children ow it. So I urged her to use Grapeits an experiment and the result was no magical.

"Tey continued the food and today th ildren are as well and strong as any ild n in this city, and of course, my end s a firm believer in Grape-Nuts s has the evidence before her eyes ery ay." Name given by Postum Co., ttl Creek, Mich.

Ev read the above letter? A new e pears from time to time. They e uine, true, and full of human ter t.

The War in Europe

Continued from page 38

fenses and captured the same, thus piercing the British line. The British, however, counter-attacked and drove the Turks out. These latter reattacked a day later and retook the fort, only after a couple of days' hand-to-hand struggle, to be again driven out. The last day or so of the fighting has been less animated. The losses appear to have been heavy on both sides.

The Russians continue to advance southward in Central Persia with considerable speed, their evident object being to come to the relief of this British force at Kut-el-Amara, if possible, and thereby save this vital position.

During the past week there has been some fighting on a new field between the British and the Turks and their auxiliaries, the Arabs. This field is the northwest border of Egypt toward Tripoli. The accounts of this fighting from London and Constantinople differ as to results, but in any event the fighting does not rise above the level of skirmishes. The significant thing is, however, that there has been any fighting at all in this region.

Persistent and detailed rumors from a number of sources have come to us concerning preparations stated to be going on in Asia Minor for an attack on the Suez Canal and Egypt by a composite force of Germans and Turks. That such an invasion may ultimately be undertaken is quite possible, but that it will be launched for some weeks yet seems inprobable.

The southeastern front has been absolutely calm all the week. The Germans and Bulgars have contented themselves with fortifying their positions on the Serbian side of the Greek border, and the Allies have remained quiet in and around Salonica. Little also has taken place in the Austrian campaign in Montenegro.

The British Admiralty announced on December 31 that the armored cruiser Natal had been sunk by an internal explosion while in a harbor. This is the third similar loss to the British navy since the beginning of the war. The British battleship Bulwark and the British steamer Princess Irene suffered a similar fate. It is probable that 300 lives were lost with the Natal.

The satisfactory news of the practical compliance of Austria with the demands of the American government regarding submarine warfare had scarcely been given to the public, when the cables brought word of the sinking of a British passenger ship, Persia, belonging to the Peninsular and Oriental Line and operating in the Mediterranean. The vessel was about 300 miles northwest of Alexandria, Egypt. It was evidently sunk without warning, presumably by an Austrian submarine early in the afternoon of December 30. She went down in five minutes carrying about 250 persons including, so far as present information shows, an American consul, Robert N. McNeely, recently appointed to Aden and on his way to his post. Out of 400 passengers and crew 150 were saved and were landed at Alexandria. These included one American, Charles H. Grant of Boston. Among the saved were a number of military officers. The report from the American Consul at Alexandria, Arthur Garrels, stated that the liner carried a 4.7 inch gun. The Administration at Washington is awaiting complete particulars, and meanwhile the presumption is that the Persia was carrying troops and supplies, and was armed and therefore not exempt from attack without warning.

Commenting on this disaster to the Persia, the press points out that Austrian and German submarines operating in the Mediterranean, destroyed 8 troop-ships, 25 transports and 34 merchantmen during October and November, with a loss of life estimated at 5,000 men.

New Light on Belshazzar

Continued from page 36

on the banks of the river Zalzallat, with the soldiers of Akkad, conquered the inhabitants of Akkad. When they assembled, the people were killed. On the 14th, Sippara was taken without a battle. Nabonidus fled. On the 16th, Gobryas, the governor of the land of Gutium, and the soldiers of Cyrus, entered Babylon without a battle. Later, Nabonidus was captured because he tarried in Babylon. To the end of the month, the shield-bearers of Gutium guarded the gates of Esagila. No arms of any kind were taken into Esagila, or into the shrines; nor was the standard carried in. On the third day of Marchesvan, Cyrus entered Babylon. Difficulties were cleared (?) Peace was established for the city. Cyrus proclaimed peace to all Babylonia, and from the month Kislev unto Adar, the gods of Akkad, whom Nabonidus had brought to Babylon, returned to their cities. In Marchesvan, by night, on the 11th, Gobryas in . . . and the son of the king was killed. From the 27th of Adar, until the 3d of Nisen, there was lamentation in Akkad. All the people bowed their heads. On the 4th day, Cambyses, the son of Cyrus, went to Eshapakalamma summu," etc.

Cyrus captured Sippar without a battle. Two days later, the gates of Babylon were thrown open to the army of Cyrus and the king was imprisoned. About three and a half months later, Cyrus entered the city. A week later the army entered . . . [unfortunately the tablet is injured here] by night, as related in the Book of Daniel, and Belshazzar the son of the king was slain.

While Belshazzar was not officially recognized as king, it is reasonable to assume that after his father was imprisoned he was recognized as king, perhaps in the fortress which had been built by Nebuchadnezzar, where the feast recorded in Daniel took place.

These facts are mentioned, not that it appears to the writer that all the historical difficulties of the book of Daniel are going to be solved, but that at least some important new light has been thrown upon the situation by recent discoveries, which gives us a much better appreciation of it.

Recently, there has been secured for the Yale collection an archive of tablets belonging to this period, which had been excavated at Erech. In one of the tablets, belonging to the reign of Nergal-shar-usur (a year or so before Nabonidus began to reign) there is mentioned a certain Belshazzar who was a shaknu-sharri—"prefect of the king." While it is not absolutely certain that this is the well-known Biblical character, the fact that very shortly afterwards he is so prominently identified with his father in governmental affairs, makes it appear highly reasonable that such may be the case.

There was found also in the same archive a small tablet of unbaked clay, still more interesting, which reads as follows: "In the month Tebet, day 15th, year 7th of Nabonidus, king of Babylon, Shum-ukin says as follows: 'The great star Dilbat, Kaksidi, the moon, and the sun in my dream I saw. It means favor for Nabonidus, king of Babylon, my lord, and favor for Belshazzar, the son of the king, my lord. May my ear attend to them!' On the 17th day of Tebet, year 7th of Nabonidus, king of Babylon, Shum-ukin says as follows: 'The great star I saw. It means favor for Nabonidus, king of Babylon, my lord, and favor for Belshazzar, the son of the king, my lord; may my ear attend.'"

This serves as an interesting commentary on certain passages in the Old Testament, particularly in the books of Genesis and Daniel, concerning dreams. In the little tablet, the seer, named Shum-ukin, reports that he saw in his dream on the 15th of the month the stars Dilbat (Venus) and Kaksidi, the moon and the sun. Two days later he saw "the great star." Both dreams are interpreted as portending favor for Nabonidus the king and Belshazzar, the son of the king.

HOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE

tr yoor own home 80 days free, no matter where li Show yoor friends. Send it back at our expense you do not want to keep it. Hundreds of thouands daily use. Perfect bakers, efficient heaters, made hig rade material, beautifully finished, smooth design, guaranteed for years by our Two Million Dollar Bond.

Ask your dealers to show you Hoosier Stoves. Write for our big free book showing photographs, describing large assortment of sizes and designs to select from, explaioing our free trial. Send postal today. Write your name and address plainly. No obligations.

HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, Ind.

ICK'S
AREN FRAL GUIDE FOR 1916

F E Several new features. Contains valuable practical information on planting, etc., what you need to know about the garden. Age number of splendid new varieties. For 67 rs the leading authority on Vegetable, Flower and rm Seeds, Plants, Bulbs and Trees. This book, the t we have issued, the result of our experience as oldest mail order seed concern in America, is yours, absolutely free. WRITE TODAY k for your copy today, before you forget it.

JAMES VICK'S SONS
13 Stone Street, Rochester, N. Y.
The Flower City

APANESE ROSE BUSHES

Five for 10cts.

The Wonder of the World

Rose Bushes with roses on them in 8 weeks from the time the seed was planted. It may not seem possible but we Guarantee it to be so. They will BLOOM EVERY TEN WEEKS Winter or Summer, and when 3 years old will have 5 or 6 hundred roses on each bush. Will grow in the house the inters well as in the ground in summer. ll The Year Around. Package of seed h guarantee by mail, only Ten Cents.
pa Seed Co. Box 202 South Norwalk, Conn.

AI ED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT Protect your ideas, they b you wealth Write for "Needed Invsotions." "I to Get Your Patent."
RA OLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

GREIDER'S FINE CATALOGUE
of pure bred poultry: 70 breeds illustrated and described, many in color. Perfect poultry guide—all facts. Low prices on stock and hatching eggs. Incubators and brooders. 23 years in business. You need this book. Send 10c for it—today.
B. H. GREIDER, Box 14 Rheems, Pa.

VET SOMETHING—It May Bring Wealth F Book tells what to invent and how to obtain a ent rough Our New Credit System. Waters & Co., 00 arder Building, Washington, D. C.

BLUE STREAKS

ONE standard tire—the best we can make.

One standard price the country over—$2.50 each—the lowest figure for a good single tube tire guaranteed to you and to the dealer.

Any one of 7000 dealers can supply you with Blue Streaks. Any dealer can easily get them for you.

Don't pay more than $2.50 for bicycle tires. That price buys the Goodyear Blue Streak.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company
AKRON, OHIO

GOODYEAR
AKR
Bicycle Tires

Paint Without Oil

Remarkable Discovery That Cuts Down the Cost of Paint Seventy-Five Per Cent.

A Free Trial Package is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.

A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. Y., has discovered a process of making a new kind of paint without the use of oil. He calls it Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powder and all that is required is cold water to make a paint weather proof, fire proof and as durable as oil paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and costs about one-fourth as much.

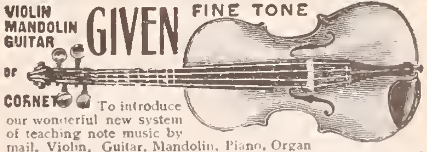
Write to Mr. A. L. Rice, Manuf'r., 109 North St., Adams, N. Y., and he will send you a free trial package, also color card and full information showing you how you can save a good many dollars. Write to-day.

POMPEIAN OLIVE OIL
ALWAYS FRESH

There is the same marked difference between fresh Olive Oil and Olive Oil packed months ago as there is betweeo a newly-laid egg and so egg months old. Insist on POMPEIAN

THE STANDARD IMPORTED OLIVE OIL

VIOLIN MANDOLIN GUITAR or CORNET GIVEN FINE TONE



To introduce our wonderful new system of teaching note music by mail, Violin, Guitar, Mandolin, Piano, Organ or Cornet, will give you a dandy instrument without cost and guarantee to make you a player or no charge; complete outfit given. Write at once. Special offer to first pupils. No obligation.
SLINGERLAND'S CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Dept. 142, Chicago, Ill.

Individual Communion Cups
Convenient, Noiseless and Sanitary
List of thousands of churches using oor cups and FREE CATALOG with quotations sent upon request.
SANITARY COMMUNION OUTFIT CO. 67th ST., ROCHESTER, N. Y.

HOT BED SASH
80c CYPRESS, wellmade with cross bar, blind tenons, whiteleaded in joints, Glass, $1.50 per Box.
C. N. ROBINSON & BRO. Dept. 8 Baltimore, Md.

Christian Herald Features for 1916

How Do You Picture Heaven?

IN our quieter moments, thoughts of the future life come to all of us, and we find ourselves wondering what it will be. "In my Father's house are many mansions," said Jesus. Imagination pictures those celestial abodes, investing them with a beauty and charm unknown in worldly habitations.

But while no mortal who ever lived could give us that knowledge of heaven for which the human heart hungers, there are pure-souled saints who even in this life have been privileged at times to pitch their tents on the borderland and to catch stray gleams of that blessed country beyond. To such souls there often comes a wonderful "light at eventide." There are among them those who might almost be said to have gleams of heaven itself, and whose spirits in moments of exaltation have been lifted up far above the earth and have seemed to comrade with the dwellers in the "Morning Land."

A very remarkable manuscript has come to the Christian Herald which relates the spiritual experience of a California lady, Miss Augusta Albertson. It has been read by a number of persons, among them several competent critics, and they have unitedly urged that it be printed in the Christian Herald in order that the message it conveys should be spread as widely as possible. The opening chapter is in the present issue. The author has chosen for her book the felicitous title "Through Gates of Pearl." She describes her experiences during intervals of physical unconsciousness, when the soul seemed to be absent from the body and when, under the guidance of a spiritual messenger, she seemed to be led into heavenly places. She writes in the most reverent manner and in the entire narrative there is nothing that can jar or offend the most sensitive Christian mind.

"Through Gates of Pearl" will awaken in the hearts of all who read it a deep and earnest desire for a pure, unselfish, faithful Christian life.

"A Voice in the Wilderness"

A young Eastern lady alone on an Arizona desert in the night, with coyotes howling near, having to climb for safety to the top of a railway water tank, then trying to ride with her suit-case on horseback with a drunken cowman, fleeing from him, rescued again by a fine, brave fellow, who has gone wrong but is still chivalrous—that is the beginning of Grace Livingston Hill Lutz's story, "A Voice in the Wilderness." How she fares at teaching school, how a bunch of cowboys turn a heretic preacher back to orthodoxy, how the simple gospel on Margaret's lips and in her life transforms a school and a camp and blesses a whole community, incidentally how the chivalrous young man fares in his wooing as he finds the way back to the right life—all this, in fascinating, compelling language, makes a story rarely beautiful, helpful and delightful. The first chapter of "A Voice in the Wilderness" appears in the issue of January 5th.

Fifty-two Sermons by Famous Pastors

You hear a sermon by a noted preacher; it greatly impresses you. But afterward, how much of it can you remember? Each of the fifty-two sermons by famous pastors which will appear in the Christian Herald in 1916 you can read at your leisure, and read and read again, and most of them you will read and read again. Among the many eminent pastors who contribute are Dr. J. H. Jowett, F. B. Meyer, D.D., Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, Pastor Charles Wagner, Rev. David J. Burrell, Prof, J. M. Gray and Rev. S. Parkes Cadman. They will be meat and drink to your spiritual life.

Daily Meditations

Thoughts that turn us away from sordid things; words that set us thinking better thoughts; impulses toward nobler living; heart's-ease and soul's rest and hopes of heaven—such are the meditations, one for each day in the year, prepared especially for the Christian Herald Family by four of the most spiritual-minded men in the ministry today: Dr. J. H. Jowett, F. B. Meyer, D. D., Clayton Sedgwick Cooper, and Rev. E. W. Caswell.

A War-Chastened Church

Christianity with Christ not left out. What a day for the world will that be in which Christianity, purged of the dross of ages, stands forth as the only hope of the world! "The dross of the ages"—of what does that consist? The Church refined and purified by the fire of war, what would such a church be like? We think you will find the stimulating answer in a special article on "Christianity After the War."

A New Chapter to the Book of The Acts

This chapter will be written out of the real experiences of Christians of today. These Christians may be apostles in the quality of their services, or they may be hitherto unheard-of disciples. But in any case, the stories of how they have been transformed by the indwelling spirit of Christ, and how they have been able to "overcome," and "stand fast," and win other souls to Christ, will constitute one of the most helpful of all the special features in the Christian Herald.

Shall Church or State Educate Your Child?

The question of giving religious instruction in the public schools has suddenly come to the front, and is arousing the keenest interest in all religious and educational circles. We are glad to be able to announce papers from authorities treating this serious question from all points of view.

What Is the Matter with the Panama Canal?

Some say that perpetual motion has been discovered in the slides of the canal. Some say they are not slides at all, but—well, right here comes the question: "What is the matter with the canal?" A truly astonishing revelation has been made to the Christian Herald, and the special articles dealing with this serious question are bound to cause a sensation.

Prof. James M. Gray on Prophecy

Prof. James M. Gray, Dean of the Chicago Bible Institute, will give Christian Herald readers the benefit of his scholarship in four special articles of the utmost interest to all Christians. The subjects of these articles are: "The Battle of Armageddon, Where it Will be Fought, and What it Means"; "The Psalms in the Light of the War"; "The Angels at Mons, or Satan and Satanism at the End of the Age"; "The Second Coming of Christ—Is It to Be Visible or Spiritual?"

With Archæologists in Bible Lands

The war has greatly interrupted this ever interesting department of scientific research, and has postponed some important undertakings, but nevertheless enthusiasts have been able to continue their explorations in the ruins of ancient cities, and have made many finds that throw a helpful light upon the Scriptures. Prof. Edgar James Banks and Albert T. Clay will describe what has been done in this department of Bible knowledge.

Getting Results in Church Work

We hear a good deal about decline in church efficiency—why not take note of the other kind of church—there are a great many of them—the successful kind? How do churches situated exactly as yours is achieve the success that your church, possibly, does not have? We shall tell you how small churches in isolated spots and big churches in crowded communities are making the most of their opportunities today.

What You Don't Know About Alaska

What you don't know about Alaska will simply astonish you, when you find it out. There is just one man in the world who can tell you about Alaska in a way that will make you wonder, if you know anything at all about any part of the world. That is Frank G. Carpenter, famous as a traveler and writer. He has spent a year in that great unknown region, and has come back with a wealth of pictures and a wonder book of facts. We have arranged to print his story from week to week.

Will the Movies Invade the Church?

And if they do, will they be resisted or welcomed? Is the Church overlooking a tremendous new force, which can be directed into evangelistic channels? Let us talk this over together during the year, and find out what others think, and what others are doing, and perhaps we shall discover that this is a very important subject to look into.

A New Kind of Career

Ambition usually fixes upon a definite goal. For most, that goal has to do wholly with success in this world. A new movement is on foot to stir the ambition of young folks to set their goal beyond the confines of this world and within the portals of heaven itself. This is called the ambition of "The Unselfish Career." It is not general ambition, such as every Christian has, but a specific one.

Helps from a Great Bible Authority

There is no more satisfying Bible authority on the two hemispheres than Professor David Smith, the famous author of "The Days of His Flesh." Professor Smith has consented to write for the Christian Herald, during 1916, a department in which he will discuss fully and luminously a single Bible question every week. They began with the January 5th issue.

In the Footsteps of Dr. Clark

Dr. Francis E. Clark, President of the Christian Endeavor Society, who has but recently recovered from a serious illness, will spend many months in a tour through strange places in the world. Few travelers have powers of observation equal to Dr. Clark's ar still fewer can tell with his charm and clearness what they see. V are to be privileged to give our readers his own story of the scen he will visit, in Hawaii and the Far East, well illustrated.

A Century with the Bible

The 100th anniversary of the American Bible Society, whi will be celebrated in 1916, furnishes an excellent opportunity f a review of the activities of the various agencies which have be so splendidly at work during that period translating the Bib into all languages and dialects, and distributing it over the fa of the whole earth and wherever ships sail the seas. This story is mighty romance, packed with human interest and spiritual uplif

Art in the Christian Herald

We are bending every effort to make the appearance of tl Christian Herald a delight to the eye. The pictorial wo during the coming year will be in charge of experts, and we wi especially to mention that we have secured a large number most beautiful colored photographs of Holy Land Scenes. The will be liberally interspersed with other subjects as front cove during the year. We know that our readers will be charmed wi these Holy Land pictures.

Teaching War in the Sunday Schoo

That is, does the Bible teach that war is right? Sunday Scho workers especially are agitated upon this question, because of a seeming conflict between Jewish history and New Testament theolog and it is certainly a subject well worth our readers' attentio Shall the Church Enter Politics?

Just what part, if any, the Church should take in shaping th civic policies of the country has never been definitely settle But with the world at war with itself, the course of the one grea neutral nation in its national politics becomes of extraordinar importance, and to many it seems that the time—or a time, at an rate—has arrived when the Church must have something to say o national issues.

Real Secret of Health and Wealth

Scientists have been exploring anew the human mind, an have discovered amazing secrets concerning the sources of healt the laws of religion, and the problems of society. What they hav to say is well worth your serious consideration, and we shall te you these things in succeeding issues.

What Will Your Child Become?

There seems to be a startling number of misfits in the worl Too many, by far, if sociologists are to be believed. The explanation most generally given is that there is something wrong i the school system. The remedy that is being offered is vocationa training. Vocational training is rapidly finding a place for itsel Do you think it will help your child? Perhaps our articles on th subject will help you decide.

Popular Departments

A canvass of Christian Herald readers year by year enabl us to judge the relative value of the different departments of th magazine, and those which are in high favor will be continue throughout the year. Foremost among these is the Sermon pag to which reference has already been made.

The Meditations, also mentioned above, will be of a high orde of helpfulness. Rev. F. C. Iglehart, D.D., has long since prove his mastership in linking up news with the Bible, and his always interesting Bible and newspaper page will be continued.

We shall bring the teaching ability of selected leaders in Sunda School work to bear upon the weekly lessons, and many practica problems of the Sunday School will be answered through tha department.

The topics for the Young People's Meetings, Christian Endeavor, Baptist Young People's, Epworth League, will be helpfully treated, and the Prayer League will continue to carry forward its great mission of encouragement and blessing.

We count the weekly contributions by Miss Margaret E. Sangster Jr., as among our departments, although as a matter of fact these ar really special articles in themselves upon a wide range of subjects

You will have noticed of late that we have been devoting th best part of two pages to a condensed review of the News of th World for the Week. This illustrated department, including th story of the progress of the war by the military expert, Anthony Arnoux, will receive especial attention during the year.

The popularity of our Mail Bag page continues unabated, and the monthly bints to investors will be retained.

The whole policy of the Christian Herald will continue t be reflected through that foremost of its departments (excepting possibly, the Sermon page), the Editorial Forum. Great questions of the day in Church and State will be treated here in the light o the teachings of Jesus Christ, fearlessly, kindly, helpfully.

STRAWBERRIES
give the Quickest, Biggest and Surest Profits of Anything You Can Grow

he work is so easy and simple at even beginners make big profits om the start. Our free book tells how.

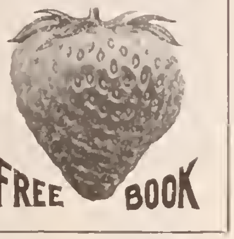
Kellogg's Everbearers
oduce big crops of big, fancy berries om June until November. Light freezg does not affect their fruiting. e berries are in great demand. Price ranges om 30 to 45 cents per quart. Three months er plants are set, your profits begin. Our e book tells the rest.

A Kellogg Strawberry Garden
ll add beauty, pleasure and profit to your me. Get our free book and learn how to pply your entire family with delicious strawrries the year round without cost.

reat Crops of Strawberries and How Grow Them, the best and most complete strawberry book ever written lly explains the Kellogg Way. 64 pages of common se, actual experience, awberry facts, pices galore. Kellogg's e book. Kellogg's e ervice and Kellz Pedigree Plants ure your success. r book is worth its ight in gold—costs u nothing. Send for y t day. A postal l do.

M. KELLOGG CO.
Box 670
ree Rivers, Michigan

FREE BOOK



eafness lastered

e day of imperfect ring is past. Science rivals nature in the marous new 1916 Mears Ear Phone, thin receiver model he world's greatest hearing device. It transmits nd without blur. Write today for our 15 days' free trial offer.

Perfect Aid to Hearing
e Mears is the only scientific instrument for e deaf. It marvelously covers 96 degrees sound, every range of tone of the human ear.

rite for Free Book Our free book is a highly valuable treatise on deafness. Write for it today—learn all about our 15 days' free trial offer and low direct laboratory price. If convenient to New York call for demonstration.

FREE Book

MEARS EAR PHONE CO.
Desk 2491 45 W. 34th St., N.Y.

ashes Clothes
Without Rubbing

e time and hard work in washing. Make hes cleaner and whiter. No strong chemi or hard rubbing. Washing simplified. "blue Mondays," if you have and use wonderful compound that washes and whitens clothes, out boiling, rubbing or blueing. Absolutely harmless inest fabrics or hands. Full sized can sent prepaid on ipt of price, 25c. (enough for ten weeks) with money back rantee.

DOZONE Washing Paste

EO. H. DONAH CO., Hemlock Street, UTICA, N. Y.
GENTS-- Send 10c. at once for sample and agents' proposition. Quick profits. Permanent business. No competition.

pewrite the New Way to 100 Words a Minute Guaranteed

y new system. Based on Gymnastic Finger Training! s amazing speed—perfect accuracy—BIG SALARIES for anyone. First day shows results. Learn while working.

Page Book Free illustrates and explains all. Gives letters from hundreds with salaries ed and trebled. A revelation as to speed and salary le to typists. Postal will do, but write today—NOW.

SS SCHOOL OF TYPEWRITING, 5301 College Hill, Springfield, Ohio

irst Aid to Poultry Keepers"

ee ok st ut

Written by man who has devoted his life to poultry—book teems with pointers and real secrets on how to raise more and better chicks, get 100% hatches, produce prize winners. Tells how to save money on incubators and brooders—illustrates many with very latest improvements. Needed by beginners, farmers and others. Write today—edition limited. Model Incubator Co., 28 Henry St., Buffalo, N.Y. Also 39 Barclay Street, N. Y. C.

Going Fast-Write To-day

hy Hens Stop Laying

. J. REEFER, the poultry expert, is giving way, FREE, a valuable book explaining how ery farm and backyard hen can be made to proce 200 eggs per year. The book contains scientific ets of vital interest to every poultry raiser. Write today r one of the valuable books—FREE.

. J. Reefer Dept 2491 Reefer Bldg. Kansas City, Mo.

NVENTORS Do Not Sacrifice Your Inventions et full money value. RELIABLE Book Free. Write S.& A.B.Lacey, 610 Barrister Bldg., Washington, D.C.

58 BREEDS Fine pure-bred chickens, ducks, geese and turkeys. Northern bred, very hardy, vigorous and beautiful. Fowls, eggs and Incubators at low prices. America's pioneer poultry farm. 22 years exp. Large fine catalog free. F. A. Neubert, Box 654, Mankato, Minn.

A Voice in the Wilderness

Continued from page 37

drew away a little farther from him and murmured sadly:

"Oh!" as if he had classed himself with the "man" he had been describing. Instantly he felt her withdrawal and grew grave again as if he would atone.

"Wait till you see this sky at the dawn," he said. "It will burn red fire off there in the east like a hearth in a palace, and all this dome will glow like a great pink jewel set in gold. If you want a classy sky there you have it! Nothing like it in the East!"

There was a strange mingling of culture and roughness in his speech. The girl could not make him out; yet there had been a palpitating earnestness in his description that showed he had felt the dawn in his very soul.

"You are—a—poet, perhaps?" she asked half shyly; "or—an artist?" she hazarded.

He laughed roughly and seemed embarrassed.

"No, I'm just a—bum! A sort of roughneck out of a job."

She was silent, watching him against the starlight, a kind of embarrassment upon her after his last remark.

"You—have been here long?" she asked at last.

"Three years." He said it almost curtly and turned his head away as if there were something in his face he would hide. She knew there was something unhappy in his life. Unconsciously her tone took on a sympathetic sound.

"And do you get homesick and want to go back ever?" she asked.

His tone was fairly savage now.

"No!"

THE silence which followed became almost oppressive before the Boy finally turned and in his kindly tone began to question her about the happenings which had stranded her in the desert alone at night.

So she came to tell him briefly and frankly about herself, as he questioned, and how she came to be in Arizona all alone.

"My father is a minister in a small town in New York state. When I finished college I had to do something, and I had an offer of this Ashland school through a friend of ours who had a brother out here. Father and mother would rather have kept me nearer home, of course, but everybody says the best opportunities are in the West, and this was a good opening, so they finally consented. They would send post-haste for me to come back if they knew what a mess I have made of things right at the start—getting out of the train in the desert."

"But you're not discouraged!" said her companion half wonderingly. "Some nerve you have with you. I guess you'll manage to hit it off in Ashland. It's the limit as far as discipline is concerned, I understand, but I guess you'll put one over on them. I'll bank on you after tonight, sure thing!"

She turned a laughing face toward him.

"Thank you!" she said. "But I don't see how you know all that. I'm sure I didn't do anything particularly nervy. There wasn't anything else to do but what I did if I'd tried."

"Most girls would have fainted and screamed, and fainted again when they were rescued," stated the Boy out of a vast experience.

"I never fainted in my life," said Margaret Earle with disdain. "I don't think I should care to faint out in the vast universe like this. It would be rather inopportune, I should think."

Then, because she suddenly realized that she was growing very chummy with this stranger in the dark, she asked the first question that came into her head.

"What was your college?"

That he had not been to college never entered her head. There was something in his speech and manner that made it a foregone conclusion.

It was as if she had struck him forcibly in his face, so sudden and sharp a silence ensued for a second. Then he answered gruffly, "Yale," and plunged into an elaborate account of Arizona in its early ages, including a detailed description of the cliff-dwellers and their homes, which were still to be seen high in the rocks of the canyons not many miles to the west of where they were riding.

Margaret was keen to hear it all and asked many questions, declaring her intention of visiting those cliff-caves at her earliest opportunity. It was so wonderful to her to be actually out here where were all sorts of queer things about which she had read and wondered. It did not occur to her until the next day to realize that her companion had of intention led her off the topic of himself and kept her from asking any more personal questions.

He told her of the petrified forest just over some low hills off to the left; acres of agatized chips and trunks of great trees all turned to eternal stone, called by the Indians "Yeitso's bones" after the great giant of that name whom an ancient Indian hero killed. He described the coloring of the brilliant days in Arizona where you stand on the edge of some flat-topped mesa and look off through the clear air to mountains that seem quite near by but are in reality more than two hundred miles away. He pictured the strange colors and lights of the place; ledges of rock, yellow, white and green, drab and maroon, and tumbled piles of red boulders; shadowy buttes in the distance; serrated cliffs against the horizon, not blue, but rosy pink in the heated haze of the air, and perhaps a great lonely eagle poised above the silent, brilliant waste.

He told it not in book language with turn of phrase and smoothly flowing sentences, but in simple, frank words, as a boy might describe a picture to one he knew would appreciate it for her sake, and not because he loved to put it into words; but in a new, stumbling way letting out the beauty that had somehow crept into his heart in spite of all the rough attempts to keep all gentle things out of his nature.

The girl, as she listened, marveled more and more what manner of youth this might be who had come to her out of the desert night.

She forgot her weariness as she listened, in the thrill of wonder over the new mysterious country to which she had come. She forgot that she was riding through the great darkness with an utter stranger, to a place she knew not like what, and to experiences most dubious. Her fears had fled and she was actually enjoying herself, and responding to the wonderful story of the place with soft murmured exclamations of delight and wonder.

FROM time to time in the distance there sounded forth those blood-curdling howls of wild beasts that she had heard when she sat alone by the water tank, and each time she heard, a shudder passed through her, and instinctively she swerved a trifle toward her companion, then straightened up again and tried to seem not to notice. The Boy saw and watched her brave attempts at self-control with deep appreciation. But suddenly, as they rode and talked, a dark form appeared across their way a little ahead, lithe and stealthy and furry, and two awful eyes like green lamps glared for an instant, then disappeared silently among the mesquite bushes.

She did not cry out nor start. Her veins seemed frozen with horror, and she could not have spoken if she had tried. It was all over in a second and the creature gone, so that she almost doubted her senses and wondered if she had seen aright. Then one hand went swiftly to her throat and she shrank toward her companion.

"There is nothing to fear," he said reassuringly, and laid a strong hand comfortingly across the neck of her horse. "The pussy cat was as unwilling for our company as we for hers. Besides, look here!" and he raised his hand and shot into the air—"she'll not come near us now."

"I am not afraid!" said the girl bravely. "At least I don't think I am

Supreme Satisfaction

In your locality there is a SAN∞TOX druggist with whom, because of his established reputation for reliability and progressiveness, it will always pay you to trade. You will recognize his store by the sign of the Nurse in the window.

There you will find a Tooth Paste, Face Cream, Talcum Powder, Hair Tonic, Salve, Laxative and many other toilet and household preparations bearing the trade-mark—

The Sign of the Nurse points out the SAN∞TOX Druggists

San-Tox

The Public Service Line
any of which are positively guaranteed by the SAN∞TOX druggist to give you the utmost in quality and quantity. He will cheerfully refund your money if after using any SAN∞TOX preparation it does not more than fulfill your highest expectations.

You can appreciate the meaning of this SAN∞TOX Public Service only by actually making a test of one of the 125 or more SAN∞TOX preparations.

THE DEPREE CHEMICAL CO.,
Chicago, Ill.

PEROXIDIZED CREAM
San-Tox TOOTH PASTE
HAIR TONIC
San-Tox Baby Talcum

If Your Children
are delicate or frail, if they catch cold easily or are backward in studies, give them the pure medicinal nourishment in Scott's Emulsion. It is rich, strength-making growing-food.
FREE FROM ALCOHOL
14-89
SCOTT & BOWNE, BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

Start a Friendship-Maid-Link-Bracelet
LINKS ONLY 12¢
STERLING SILVER ROLLED GOLD
We start yours by giving you one Link absolutely Free engraved with 3 Initials. Friends give or exchange others. Links only 12c each. Initials engraved FREE. Send to-day for one or more, stating whether Rolled Gold, Sterling Silver, beaded or plain design. Black Velvet Ribbon FREE so you can start wearing Links. Start with Link we give you FREE with first 12c order or more.
Friendship Jewelry Co., 83 Chambers St., Dept. 35 New York

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D. C.

KIDDER'S PASTILLES For 50 yrs. Standard Relief for (Inhalation) Asthma
All Druggists; or by mail, 35c.
STOWELL & CO., Manufacturers, Charlestown, Mass.

MAGAZINE READING FOR 1916

If you have not ordered your magazines for this year, now is the time to do so. The Christian Herald Magazine Bureau has made arrangements with the publishers of other magazines whereby readers of the Christian Herald can obtain two or more magazines at a considerable saving over the price if ordered singly. The prices given here are for one year (new or renewal) and can go to different addresses, excepting in a few cases noted otherwise. No one can fill your order for these magazines at any lower price.

The cost of any combination can be obtained by referring to the periodical list below. Canadian postage 50 cents additional; foreign postage, $1.00 additional.

WE WANT YOUR ORDER WHETHER CHRISTIAN HERALD IS INCLUDED OR NOT

BIBLE PICTURE CONTEST

Magazines	Price
Christian Herald Gems from Bible and Reply Book	$2.00
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Gems from Bible and Reply Book	$2.50
Christian Herald American Messenger Gems from Bible and Reply Book	$2.10

GEMS FROM THE BIBLE and REPLY BOOK are supplied only with these magazines. See full details of Bible Picture Contest on page 54.

SPECIAL COMBINATIONS

Magazines	Price	Saving
Christian Herald Housewife	$1.55	Save 45c
Christian Herald McCall's (free pattern) Housewife To-day's (free pattern)	$1.90	Save $1.10
Christian Herald Pictorial Review	$2.40	Save 60c
Christian Herald Woman's Home Companion	$2.40	Save 60c
Christian Herald Home Needlework	$1.75	Save 50c
Christian Herald Mother's Magazine	$2.00	Save $1.00
Christian Herald Etude (Music)	$2.00	Save $1.00
Christian Herald *Mother's Magazine *Ladies' World *McCall's (free pattern)	$2.40	Save $2.10
Christian Herald People's Home Jnl	$1.55	Save 45c
Christian Herald Little Folks	$1.90	Save 60c
Christian Herald Ladies' World Housewife	$2.00	Save $1.00
Christian Herald American Poultry Advocate Book—200 Eggs a Year per Hen	$2.00	Save 50c
Christian Herald American	$2.40	Save 60c
Christian Herald *Woman's Home Companion *American	$3.15	Save $1.35
Christian Herald *Delineator *Everybody's	$3.15	Save $1.35
Christian Herald Youth's Companion McCall's (pattern)	$3.25	Save 75c
Christian Herald Everybody's Woman's Home Companion	$3.65	Save 85c
Christian Herald Woman's Home Companion Review of Revs.	$4.40	Save $1.60
Christian Herald McCall's (pattern)	$1.65	Save 35c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla	$2.00	Save 50c
Christian Herald Housewife People's Home Jnl.	$2.15	Save 35c
Christian Herald McCall's (pattern) Woman's Home Companion	$2.90	Save 60c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Pictorial Review	$3.05	Save 95c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Woman's Home Companion	$3.25	Save 75c
Christian Herald American Boy Woman's Home Companion	$3.25	Save 75c
Christian Herald Pictorial Review Woman's Home Companion	$3.65	Save 85c
Christian Herald Woman's Home Companion World's Work	$4.40	Save $1.60
Christian Herald Everybody's Review of Revs.	$4.40	Save $1.60
Christian Herald Ladies' World	$1.90	Save 60c
Christian Herald McClure's Mag.	$2.15	Save 35c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Home Needlework	$2.40	Save 85c
Christian Herald Boys' Magazine Housewife Illustrated World	$3.15	Save $1.35
Christian Herald Pictorial Review Metropolitan	$3.15	Save $1.35
Christian Herald Delineator Woman's Home Companion	$3.55	Save 95c
Christian Herald Current Opinion	$3.65	Save 85c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Pictorial Review Ladies' World	$3.65	Save $1.35
Christian Herald Collier's Woman's Home Companion	$4.15	Save $1.35
Christian Herald Youth's Comp'n Woman's Home Companion	$4.40	Save 60c

* Must go to the same address.

Send All Orders and Make All Remittances Payable to

CHRISTIAN HERALD MAGAZINE BUREAU

Bible House, New York, N. Y.

—very! But it's all so new and unexpected, you know. Do people around here always shoot in that—well, unpremeditated fashion?"

They laughed together.

"Excuse me," he said. "I didn't realize the shot might startle you even more than the wildcat. It seems I'm not fit to have charge of a lady. I told you I was a roughneck."

"You're taking care of me beautifully," said Margaret Earle, loyally, "and I'm glad to get used to shots if that's the thing to be expected often."

Just then they came to the top of a low rolling hill, and ahead in the darkness there gleamed a tiny wizened light set in a blotch of blackness. Under the great white stars it burned a sickly red and seemed out of harmony with the night.

"There we are!" said the Boy, pointing toward it. "That's the bunk house. You needn't be afraid. Pop Wallis'll be snoring by this time, and we'll come away before he's about in the morning. He always sleeps late after he's been off on a bout. He's been gone three days selling some cattle, and he'll have a pretty good top on."

The girl caught her breath, gave one wistful look up at the wide starry sky, a furtive look at the strong face of her protector, and submitted to be lifted down to the ground.

Before her loomed the bunk house. It was small and mean and built of logs. The yellow glow of a lantern shone fitfully through one narrow window, and that glow, instead of cheering her tired heart, seemed to threaten new terrors and unknown trials.

To be continued

◆

Do You Know Your Bible?

Honor Roll for List No. 9

Half-year contest (1915), List No. 4.

Miss Ethel Barber, M. S. Boyden, Mrs. Arthur DuBois, Richard Galley, Mrs. Susan A. Glover, Dena Katte, Mrs. Lydia E. Martin, Mrs. Lizzie Morse, Mrs. G. L. Snyder, Mrs. Jennie Wiley, Elizabeth Wilson.

The attention of all our Bible students is directed to the new Bible Picture Contest just beginning. The questions in the "Do You Know Your Bible" series will be discontinued during the progress of this contest. The Honor Roll for the last list of questions and award of prizes for the 1915 "Do You Know Your Bible" contest will be announced shortly. All those who have been engaged in this study are urged to enter the Picture Contest.

Correct Answers

1. (a) "In my bonds," Phil. 1: 7; 1: 13, 14, 17. (b) "So that my bonds became manifest in Christ throughout the whole palace (prætorian guard, R. V.)" 1: 13; "All the saints salute you, especially they that are of Caesar's household," 4: 22.

2. (a) Epaphroditus, Phil. 2: 25. (b) "For indeed he was sick nigh unto death," 2: 27. (c) "Because for the work of Christ he came nigh unto death, hazarding his life to supply that which was lacking in your service toward me," 2: 20.

3. (a) "Your messenger," 2: 25 (also "having received from Epaphroditus" 4: 18). (b) A gift from the Philippians, 4: 18.

4. (a) When Paul departed from Macedonia, and when he was in Thessalonica, 4: 15, 16. (b) Twice. Acts 16: 12 and 20: 6. (c) Lydia's Acts, 16: 15. 40. (d) To all the saints, 1: 1; 4: 21, and especially Euodia, Syntyche and Clement, 4: 2, 3.

5. (a) No. Phil. 1: 12. Because he had been able to declare Christ in the palace (or guard) and his example had made others bold. (b) Phil. 1: 13, 14.

6. "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." Phil. 1: 21.

7. (a) Christ's humility, 2: 3-10. (b) Everything, 3: 8. (c) The righteousness of God, 3: 9. (d) By faith in Christ, 3: 9.

8. (a) Perfection, 3: 15. (b) "Forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus," 3: 13, 14.

9. (a) Joy, 1: 4, 18, 26; 2: 16, 17, 18, 28; 3: 1, 3, 4; 4: 10. (b) "In nothing be anxious; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God," 4: 6. (c) "The peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds in Christ Jesus," 4: 7. (d) Things that are true, honorable, just, pure, lovely, of good report, 4: 8.

10. (a) "I can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth me," 4: 13. (b) "My God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus," 4: 19.

Crooked Spine
Made Straigh
Thousands of Remarkable Cas
An old lady, 72 years age, who suffered for ma years and was absolute helpless, found relief. A m who was helpless, unable rise from his chair, was r ing horseback and playi tennis within a year. A litt child, paralyzed, was playi about the house after weari
a Philo Burt Appliance weeks. We have successful treated more than 25,000 cases the past 15 year

30 Days' Trial

We will prove its value in your own case. There is no reason why you should not accept our offer. The photographs show how light, cool, elastic and easily adjusted the Philo Burt Appliance is—how different from the old torturous plaster, leather or steel jackets.

Every sufferer with a weakened or deformed spine owes it to himself to investigate thoroughly. Price within reach of all.

Send For Our Free Book

If you will describe the case it will aid us in giving you definate information at once.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO.
A 207 Odd Fellows Temple, Jamestown, N. Y.

Factory
Price
Save $5 to $

Freight Paid—A Year's Trial

Save from $5 to $23 by buying direct from factory. 55 years' reputation back of every stove. Our long experience and big output gives you a better stove or range at less cost.

Gold Coin Stoves and Ranges

Use one for a year—money refunded if it doesn't prove absolutely satisfactory. We pay freight, guarantee safe delivery and send every stove ready to set up. BIG FREE CATALOG—Send for it now. See why improved features of Gold Coin Stoves help you save fuel and bake better. Write today.

GOLD COIN STOVE CO., 11 Oak St., Troy, N. Y.

FREE!

1916 Nursery Catalog—America's Authority
SEND TODAY! PLANT EARLY!

Seeds, Roses, Plants

Shrubs, Trees, etc., fully described, beautifully illus trated. No agents. Save money—buy direct from America's leading nurserymen Hardy, Lake Erie grown stock, 7 kind of soil, over 1200 acres, 48 greenhouses Experts for 62 years. 25 bargain collections of choice Roses, Begonias, Cannas, Bedding Plants, Shrubs, Vines, etc. Hardy Perennials. Fruit Trees, Ornamentals, Hedge, etc. Safe arrival and satisfaction guaranteed. Low prices, how and when to plant, etc., all told in free catalog No. 2. Write today!

THE STORRS & HARRISON CO.
Dept. 119 Painesville, Ohio

WANTED in every town in the Unite States, an intelligent man woman, boy or girl to represent The Christia Herald. This is an opportunity to build u a business of your own, which should grow mor and more profitable year after year. Address:
Agency Dept., THE CHRISTIAN HERAL
Bible House, New York City

LADIES! Ease your feet. Sen for free catalog telli
all about our Neat, Noiseless, Flexible, Com fortable, unlined Vici Kid O'Sullivanize PILLOW SHOE. New shoes easy as ol ones. No breaking in required. Fit an feel like a kid glove. O'Sullivan's Rubbe -Heels on all styles.
$3.25 Postpaid
PILLOW SHOE CO., Dept 3
184 Summer Street Boston, Mas

Army and Navy Liquid Glu
Odorless, Clean, Mighty to Mend
The ONLY liquid hide and sinew glue. Send 10 Cent and we will send you at once anywhere, postpaid, a larg self-sealing container of this REAL glue.
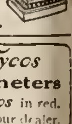
Name of your dealer appreciated
STANDARD GLUE CO., Dept. C. Baltimore, Md

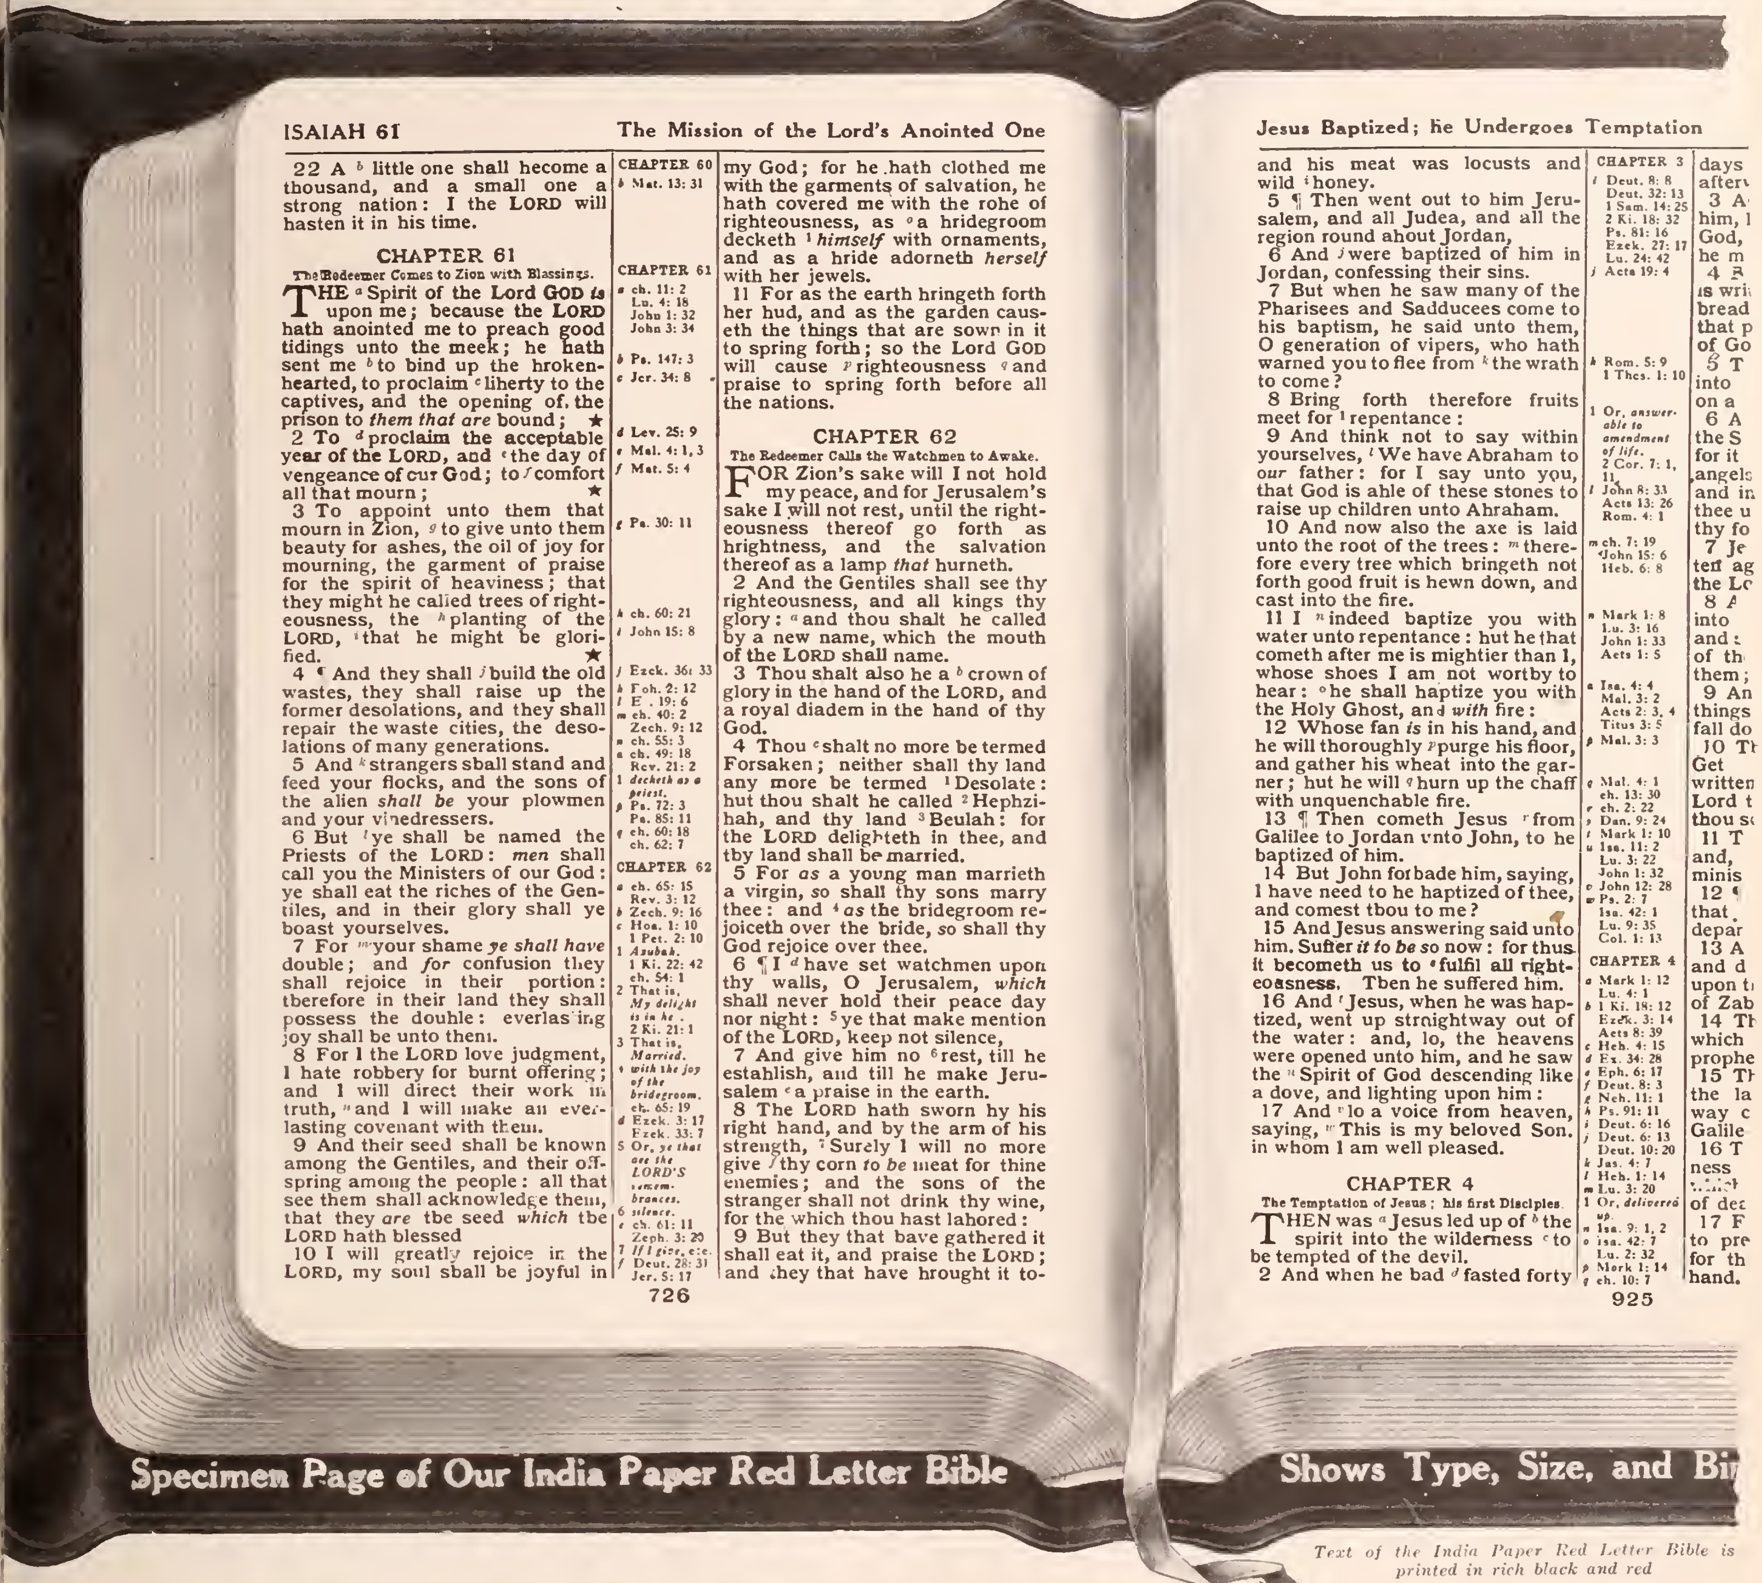
CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Desks—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.
DeMoulin Bros. & Co. Dept. 54. Greenville, Ill.



Tycos THERMOMETERS
The Genuine Tycos Fever Thermometers always bear the name Tycos in red. It's your protection. Ask your dealer.
Taylor Instrument Companies · Rochester, N.Y

TABLE GRACES For DAILY USE SPECIAL DAYS and OCCASIONS
All Will Welcome This New Book of Graces. Postpaid. Paper, 25c. Cloth, 50c. M. E. MUNSON, 77 Bible House, New York, N.Y.

Only India Paper Red Letter Bible in the World



ISAIAH 61 The Mission of the Lord's Anointed One

22 A [b] little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation: I the LORD will hasten it in his time.

CHAPTER 61

The Redeemer Comes to Zion with Blessings.

THE [a] Spirit of the Lord GOD is upon me; because the LORD hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me [b] to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim [c] liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; ★

2 To [d] proclaim the acceptable year of the LORD, and [e] the day of vengeance of our God; to [f] comfort all that mourn; ★

3 To appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, [g] to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called trees of righteousness, the [h] planting of the LORD, [i] that he might be glorified. ★

4 ¶ And they shall [j] build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations.

5 And [k] strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your plowmen and your vinedressers.

6 But [l] ye shall be named the Priests of the LORD: men shall call you the Ministers of our God: ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory shall ye boast yourselves.

7 For [m] your shame ye shall have double; and for confusion they shall rejoice in their portion: therefore in their land they shall possess the double: everlasting joy shall be unto them.

8 For I the LORD love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt offering; and I will direct their work in truth, [n] and I will make an everlasting covenant with them.

9 And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people: all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the LORD hath blessed

10 I will greatly rejoice in the LORD, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as [o] a bridegroom decketh [1] himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels.

11 For as the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth; so the Lord GOD will cause [p] righteousness [q] and praise to spring forth before all the nations.

CHAPTER 62

The Redeemer Calls the Watchmen to Awake.

FOR Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth.

2 And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory: [a] and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the LORD shall name.

3 Thou shalt also be a [b] crown of glory in the hand of the LORD, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God.

4 Thou [c] shalt no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed [1] Desolate: but thou shalt be called [2] Hephzibah, and thy land [3] Beulah: for the LORD delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married.

5 For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee: and [4] as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee.

6 ¶ I [d] have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night: [5] ye that make mention of the LORD, keep not silence,

7 And give him no [6] rest, till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem [e] a praise in the earth.

8 The LORD hath sworn by his right hand, and by the arm of his strength, [7] Surely I will no more give [f] thy corn to be meat for thine enemies; and the sons of the stranger shall not drink thy wine, for the which thou hast labored:

9 But they that have gathered it shall eat it, and praise the LORD; and they that have brought it to-

CHAPTER 60
[b] Mat. 13: 31

CHAPTER 61
[a] ch. 11: 2
Lu. 4: 18
John 1: 32
John 3: 34
[b] Ps. 147: 3
[c] Jer. 34: 8
[d] Lev. 25: 9
[e] Mal. 4: 1, 3
[f] Mat. 5: 4
[g] Ps. 30: 11
[h] ch. 60: 21
[i] John 15: 8
[j] Ezek. 36: 33
[k] Eph. 2: 12
[l] E . 19: 6
[m] ch. 40: 2
Zech. 9: 12
[n] ch. 55: 3
[o] ch. 49: 18
Rev. 21: 2
[1] decketh as a priest.
[p] Ps. 72: 3
Ps. 85: 11
[q] ch. 60: 18
ch. 62: 7

CHAPTER 62
[a] ch. 65: 15
Rev. 3: 12
[b] Zech. 9: 16
[c] Hos. 1: 10
1 Pet. 2: 10
[1] Azubah.
1 Ki. 22: 42
ch. 54: 1
[2] That is, My delight is in her.
2 Ki. 21: 1
[3] That is, Married.
[4] with the joy of the bridegroom.
ch. 65: 19
[d] Ezek. 3: 17
Ezek. 33: 7
[5] Or, ye that are the LORD'S remembrances.
[6] silence.
[e] ch. 61: 11
Zeph. 3: 20
[7] If I give, etc.
[f] Deut. 28: 31
Jer. 5: 17

726

Jesus Baptized; he Undergoes Temptation

and his meat was locusts and wild [i] honey.

5 ¶ Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan,

6 And [j] were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins.

7 But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from [k] the wrath to come?

8 Bring forth therefore fruits meet for [1] repentance:

9 And think not to say within yourselves, [l] We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham.

10 And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: [m] therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

11 I [n] indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: [o] he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire:

12 Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly [p] purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will [q] burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.

13 ¶ Then cometh Jesus [r] from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him.

14 But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?

15 And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to [s] fulfil all righteousness. Then he suffered him.

16 And [t] Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the [u] Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him:

17 And [v] lo a voice from heaven, saying, [w] This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

CHAPTER 4

The Temptation of Jesus; his first Disciples.

THEN was [a] Jesus led up of [b] the spirit into the wilderness [c] to be tempted of the devil.

2 And when he had [d] fasted forty

CHAPTER 3
[i] Deut. 8: 8
Deut. 32: 13
1 Sam. 14: 25
2 Ki. 18: 32
Ps. 81: 16
Ezek. 27: 17
Lu. 24: 42
[j] Acts 19: 4
[k] Rom. 5: 9
1 Thes. 1: 10
[1] Or, answerable to amendment of life.
2 Cor. 7: 1, 11
[l] John 8: 33
Acts 13: 26
Rom. 4: 1
[m] ch. 7: 19
John 15: 6
Heb. 6: 8
[n] Mark 1: 8
Lu. 3: 16
John 1: 33
Acts 1: 5
[o] Isa. 4: 4
Mal. 3: 2
Acts 2: 3, 4
Titus 3: 5
[p] Mal. 3: 3
[q] Mal. 4: 1
ch. 13: 30
[r] ch. 2: 22
[s] Dan. 9: 24
[t] Mark 1: 10
[u] Isa. 11: 2
Lu. 3: 22
John 1: 32
[v] John 12: 28
[w] Ps. 2: 7
Isa. 42: 1
Lu. 9: 35
Col. 1: 13

CHAPTER 4
[a] Mark 1: 12
Lu. 4: 1
[b] 1 Ki. 18: 12
Ezek. 3: 14
Acts 8: 39
[c] Heb. 4: 15
[d] Ex. 34: 28
[e] Eph. 6: 17
[f] Deut. 8: 3
[g] Neh. 11: 1
[h] Ps. 91: 11
[i] Deut. 6: 16
[j] Deut. 6: 13
Deut. 10: 20
[k] Jas. 4: 7
[l] Heb. 1: 14
[m] Lu. 3: 20
[1] Or, delivered up.
[n] Isa. 9: 1, 2
[o] Isa. 42: 7
Lu. 2: 32
[p] Mark 1: 14
[q] ch. 10: 7

days afterw
3 A
him, I
God,
he m
4 B is wri bread that p of Go
5 T
into on a 6 A
the S for it angels and in thee u thy fo
7 Je ten ag
the Lo
8 A
into and s of th them;
9 An things fall do
10 Th
Get written
Lord t
thou s
11 T
and, minis 12 ¶ that depar
13 A
and d upon t of Zab
14 Th which prophe
15 Th
the la way c Galile
16 T ness which of dea
17 F
to pre for th hand.

925

Text of the India Paper Red Letter Bible is printed in rich black and red

Our Red Letter Bibles and Testaments

Our Red Letter Bible ONLY GENUINE EDITION

The only genuine edition of the Red Letter Bible is the Authorized or King James' Version, unchanged save for the variation of the color in the type. Two colors (Red and Black) are employed, in accordance with the simple plan devised by the late Dr. Louis Klopsch, the Originator of the Red Letter principle applied to the Holy Scriptures.

What Is a Red Letter Bible?

1 { In the Old Testament the passages quoted by our Lord, or directly related to incidents to which he referred, are Printed in Red.

2 { In the New Testament, the words universally accepted as those of the Saviour are Printed in Red.

3 { A Red Star (★) immediately following a verse in the Old Testament indicates that the verse embodies a prophetic reference to Christ as the coming Messiah.

Our Red Letter Bible, illustrated above, Contains Full References; also a Concordance, Subject Index, and Dictionary—all under One Alphabetical Arrangement—together with Helps, Maps, and Numerous Illustrations.

The text of this Bible is set in Bold-Face Minion, especially designed for this work. There are 268 pages of Helps or Concordance and 17 superb Maps. This gem of a Bible, small in bulk, light in weight, very legible and very durable, weighs only 20 ounces. It is bound in American Levant, overlapping edges, red-under-gold, and makes altogether the handiest and most satisfactory Bible now on the market. For size of type, size of page and appearance, see above illustration. We send this superb Bible, together with The Christian Herald for one whole year, for $3.00

OR: We will send it to old subscribers Free as a reward for sending us two NEW yearly subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD with $1.50 each.

Something Still Better

Genuine Morocco, Calf Lined

If you can afford to pay $1 more, ask for the same Bible bound in Genuine Morocco, Calf Finish, Leather Lining, Silk Sewed, which will wear a Lifetime. This Bible is Equal to Any $10.00 Bible. It is Sent with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one Year FOR ONLY $4.00

OR: We will send it to old subscribers Free as a reward for sending us three NEW yearly subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD with $1.50 each.

All Charges Prepaid in Every Instance

Our Red Letter Testament

This beautiful volume is the ONLY NEW TESTAMENT which contains ALL THE WORDS SPOKEN BY OUR LORD PRINTED IN RED. The Type is Very Clear, and the Alignment of the Red and Black Lettering Absolutely Perfect. The Red Letter New Testament is Exquisitely Bound in American Levant, Soft and Flexible, with Overlapping Edges—Red Under Gold—with Book-mark—a Compact Volume that may be Conveniently Carried in the Pocket.

The Red Letter New Testament is Issued in Both the Authorized and Revised Versions, and is Sent, All Charges Prepaid, Together with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for One Year FOR ONLY $2.00

OR: We will send it to old subscribers Free as a reward for sending us one NEW yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD with $1.50.

When ordering, state whether you want Authorized or Revised Version. All charges prepaid in every instance.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Add ten cents to your subscription for the Christian Herald Almanac for 1916, containing 100 pages of interesting facts and figures

All for only 10c

We make this offer because we want you to know Henderson's Seeds and Henderson's Service, and to obtain a complete distribution of our new catalog among those interested.

The Henderson Garden Plans
Peter Henderson & Co.
35-37 Cortlandt Street
New York City
1916
EVERYTHING FOR THE GARDEN
Henderson's Collection
Vegetable and Flower Seeds
25c
Henderson's Mammoth Butterfly Pansies
Henderson's Big Boston Lettuce
Sweet Peas Spencer and Eckford Varieties
Henderson's Genuine Ponderosa Tomato
Henderson's Invincible Asters
Henderson's White Tipped Scarlet Radish
Peter Henderson & Co.

Henderson's Remarkable Seed Offer for 1916

TO demonstrate the superiority of Henderson's Tested Seeds, and to quickly obtain a large distribution for our mammoth annual catalog, "Everything for the Garden," we have made up a collection of six of our best specialties, which we will send for 10c, along with our catalog and our "Garden Plans." This is beyond question one of the most liberal introductory offers we or anyone else has ever made.

HERE IS THE OFFER

1. "Everything for the Garden"—our 206-page 1916 catalog. It is handsomely bound with a beautifully lithographed and embossed cover. Contains 16 colored plates and over 1000 illustrations. It is a library of everything worth while for farmer and gardener.
2. Henderson's Garden Plans. These are a series of suggested layouts for your garden, and will be found to be unusually interesting and helpful.
3. Henderson's White Tipped Scarlet Radish. Of quick growth, small top, flesh white, mild and crisp.
4. Henderson's Big Boston Lettuce. A grand large head lettuce. Compact, tender, crisp.
5. Henderson's Genuine Ponderosa Tomato. The grandest tomato on earth. Magnificent size, solid and meaty, with but few seeds.
6. Henderson's Invincible Asters. Mixed Colors. The highest development in Asters. Immense double flowers, on large stems.
7. Spencer and Eckford's Large Flowering Sweet Peas. Mixed Colors. A glorified new race, surpassingly superior to the older sorts.
8. Henderson's Butterfly Pansies. Mixed Colors. Largest flowers and a magnificent variety of colorings.
9. Coupon envelope, accepted by us as 25c toward any order of not less than $1.00 for our seeds, plants and bulbs.

Every empty envelope counts as cash

When you receive Henderson's Collection of Specialties keep the coupon envelope in which the collection is enclosed. This coupon envelope will be accepted as 25c cash payment on any order of one dollar or over.

Send us 10c with the coupon below and you will receive our catalog, our Garden Plans, 6 packets of Henderson's Tested Seeds and the coupon envelope, worth 25c.

Your Own Garden

—earns 1000% profit, cuts down your living expenses and keeps you outdoors.

1000% profit and 100% pleasure is a conservative estimate of the returns from your garden. A plot of ground 25x40 will grow all the vegetables required by a family of six or seven, i planted with seeds of a recognized quality. Every packet of Henderson's Seeds has behind it the knowledge and experience of 69 years of successful seed growing and selling. Most of the best methods of seed trials and testing originated with the founder of our house, and these have been improved from year to year through three generations of seedsmen and are today still the best. The cost of the seeds in your garden is really the smallest portion of your investment, and yet it is of the greatest importance. Henderson's Seeds are tested seeds.

Everything for the Garden

We want to send you our beautiful new 1916 catalog—206 pages, 16 color plates, over 1000 illustrations—the most complete gardening catalog ever printed. We also want you to have our valuable "Garden Plans" of which one of our customers says, "I found them of immense value in laying out my garden," containing suggested layouts for your garden, made up by men who are thoroughly capable. We also want you to know and try Henderson's Seeds. So we have made up a package to include six packets of seeds, our new catalog, and the 1916 edition of "Garden Plans," all of which we will send you for 10c. Read complete details of offer at top of page—then send 10c with or without coupon. It is a condition of this special offer that you mention this publication.

Peter Henderson & Co.
35 and 37 Cortlandt Street
New York

Now!

Send in the coupon or a letter, enclosing 10c, coin or stamps. You will be pleased with what we send you, we are sure. It is the best introductory offer we have ever made.

1916 Offer Coupon

Peter Henderson & Co.
35 and 37 Cortlandt Street
New York

I enclose 10c for which send me your catalog, "Everything for the Garden," your 1916 "Garden Plans," and the 6 packets of seeds enclosed in coupon envelope good for 25c as explained in your advertisement published in the CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Name...

Address...

....

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1916, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

UBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
UBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, JANUARY 19, 1916

VOL. 39—NO. 3. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

© Underwood & Underwood

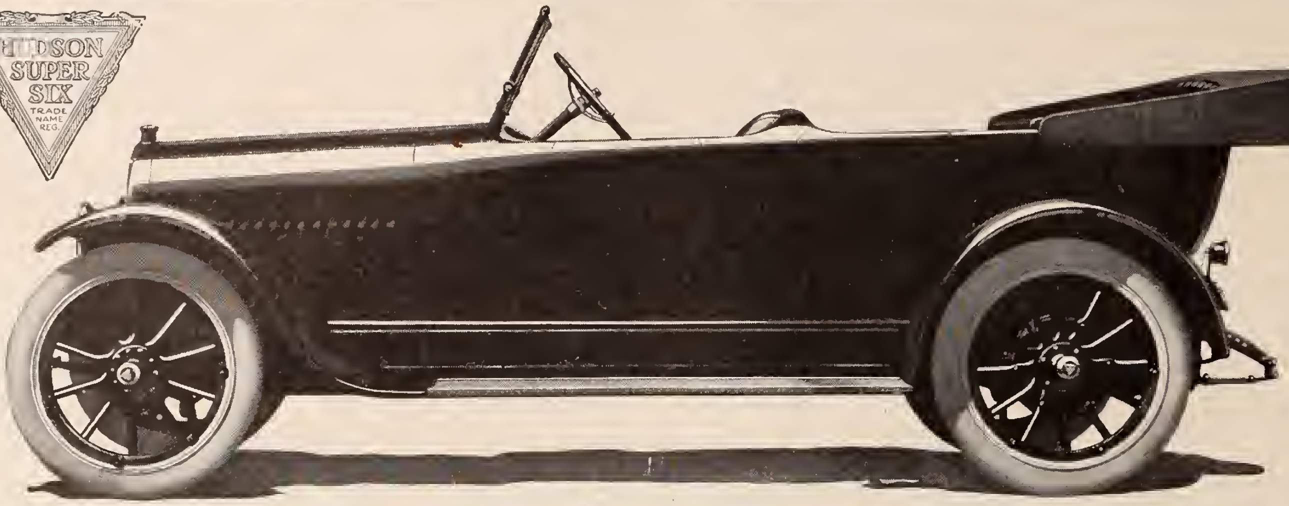
A SCENE ON THE EUPHRATES



7-Passenger Phaeton, $1375 at Detroit. Five other body styles.

We Now Present the

Hudson Super-Six

Patented by Hudson
December 28, 1915

76 Horsepower—An Added 80%, Without Any Added Size

Officially Breaking All Stock Car Records Up to 100 Miles Also All Stock Car Records for Quick Acceleration

100 miles in 80 min., 21.4 sec., averaging 74.67 miles per hour, with driver and passenger.

The previous best record of 72.49 was made by a car with more cylinders, more cylinder capacity and driver only.

75.69 miles in one hour with driver and passenger.

During this speed trial laps were made at 76.75 miles per hour.

From standing start to 50 miles per hour in 16.2 seconds.

All these records made with same stock car, using same motor, at Sheepshead Bay Speedway in November, under American Automobile Association supervision.

The most powerful stock motor per cubic inch displacement which the world has ever known.

Mark what those records mean.

No other stock car in history has done what this car has done. No other like-size motor has developed such power.

A car almost twice better than the best of former Sixes. Which has outrivaled Eights and Twelves.

That is what Hudson engineers present in this marvelous Super-Six. And, because of Hudson patents, we control it.

EXCELS BY 80 PER CENT

The Hudson Six-40 of last year stood first among Sixes. Its matchless performance made it the pattern type. It quadrupled Hudson sales in two years.

But the Super-Six excels it by 50 per cent in high motor speed capacity. It excels it 80 per cent in power. Yet the cylinder size is identical. Lightness and economy are retained. All this increase—this 80 per cent—comes through wiping out vibration.

AN ENORMOUS RESERVE

The Hudson Super-Six develops 76 horsepower. That means an enormous reserve. It enables you to creep on high gear, to pick up quickly, to mount hills without effort, to avoid changing gears.

And it all comes through lack of vibration. So it brings with it bird-like motion. The motor is so quiet that one almost forgets it. The car seems to move by magic.

OLD TYPES DISCARDED

This Super-Six invention led us to stop production on the former Hudson at the zenith of our success. We lost thousands of sales in consequence.

It led us to cease experiments with Eights and Twelves, because the Super-Six excelled them.

It led us to double our factory to meet a doubled demand, at a cost of $1,500,000. And to buy materials for $42,000,000 worth of these new cars before the first Super-Six appeared.

For this car means Hudson supremacy, over all other cars and types. Any man who knows it will choose it if he buys a high-grade car. Also many a man who would buy a cheap car were it not for this marvelous motor.

The Super-Six is resistless. Its performance will alter all your ideas of motoring. And now, for the first time, a master feature is controlled for one car by a patent.

MOST LUXURIOUS CARS

The Super-Six looks its supremacy. The body lines are perfect. The finish is superb. In the upholstery we use a rare grade of grain leather. Each compartment of the Phaeton has a rounded, finished dash.

In every detail we attain luxury's limit, regardless of the cost.

Yet our mammoth production brings the price to $1375. That for the finest motor ever built in the finest car that's possible. Go now and see this new car at your local Hudson showroom.

7-Passenger Phaeton, $1375 at Detroit
Five Other Styles of Bodies Ask for Our Super-Six Catalog

HUDSON MOTOR CAR CO., Detroit, Michigan

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

An Illustrated News Weekly for the Home

My Sojourn in Rainbow Land

By REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D., LL.D., Founder and President of the Christian Endeavor *

WOULD you find the end of the rainbow? Then you must come to Honolulu. Indeed, you might find it in almost any one of the Hawaiian Islands.

will not warrant that you will also find the pot of old that is said to lie buried under the foot of the rainbow; but almost any day during the rainy season (the late fall and winter months) you will see the bow of promise, and very likely, if you are among the hills, you will find yourself right in the rainbow, or the its seven ribbons of color are such a very little way off that you could almost stretch out your hand and pluck them.

am writing from Honolulu, and, as I look off toward the hills of the Pali, that wonderful ridge of sharp, green-clad peaks that separates sea from sea, or up the beautiful Manoa Valley, or over to the Tantalus Hills, I often see the rainbow, the same yet ever new harbinger of hope. Sometimes it is in the sky, sometimes lying low and hugging the foothills; and if I walk or ride in that direction, I can go right through it and come out on the other side. The little showers so frequent during the rainy season are often scarcely wet enough to make you furl your umbrella if it is tightly rolled up, and every little downpour, if the other conditions are right, brings out just as glorious an arch as old Noah himself ever saw.

ut this isn't the only reason why I call Hawaii "Rainbow Land," for men and women (especially women), boys and girls (especially girls), flowers and fruits, trees and shrubs, clouds and sunset skies, seem to catch the prismatic colors of Noah's bow and reflect them back again.

he men and boys, it is true, are scarcely rainbows, though our bovine somber blacks and grays and browns are often, and, in summer generally, relieved by white cotton, duck or Palm Beach suits, made of the fibre of the palm. Even ministers in the stateliest pulpits dare to preach in spotless white instead of immaculate black. The multitude of soldiers in gray-green khaki, the sailors in baggy white blouses and trousers, and the German middies from the interned warships the sprucest and trimmest of all the many young warriors I see upon the streets—all add their touch of color to the scene.

But the women and girls! "Ma word!" as my Scotch friends say, aren't they rainbows? There go two Chinese families of the richer class, two mothers, two older sisters, and four little girls, and I counted seven colors among them, though each wore but one. Dark blue and light blue, lavender, orange, pink, green, and yellow, all in one little bunch on the sidewalk, and all clad in beautiful silks.

And there, on the other sidewalk, is a Japanese servant girl no less brilliant, only all seven colors, and more too, are in the big figures of her cotton dress and her gorgeous obi. Yet she doesn't look barbaric or loud, as she goes clattering along on her wooden clogs, but perfectly in harmony with rainbow land. Some Orientals go to the other extreme, however, and three little schoolgirls whom I frequently meet in the morning interest me because of their immaculate long white trousers and jackets, their hair and eyes as black as their dresses are white, while the old duenna who follows behind is black all over—eyes, hair, coat, trousers and shoes. But these no-colors only accentuate the general color scheme, to which Koreans, Portuguese, Malays, Filipinos, Americans and Europeans, and last the Hawaiians, who should be mentioned first, all add their full quota.

One of the Almost Daily Sunsets in Rainbow Land

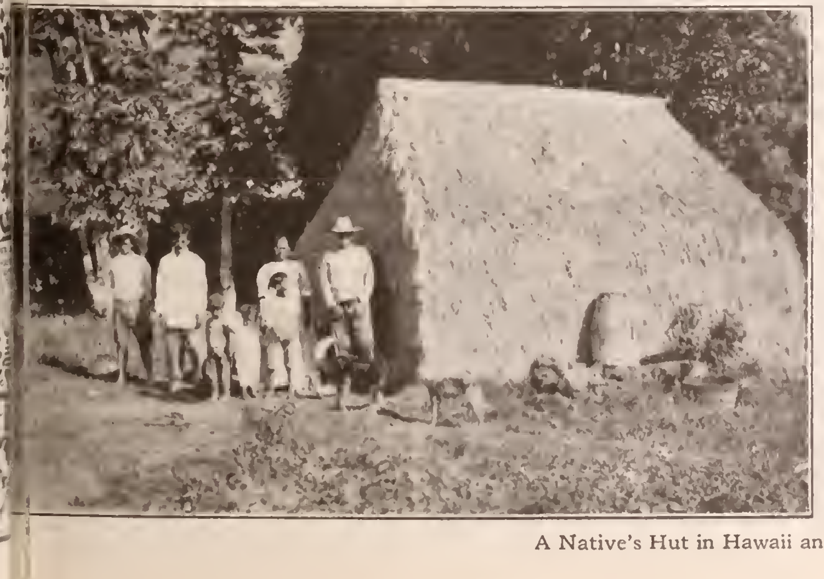
INTERMARRIAGES of all the races have made almost as many hues in the faces as we find in the garments. The leis, or flower wreaths, and the bands of peacock feathers which many of all races wear around their hats also add to the outward gaiety.

And then the fish! Nowhere in this wide world are there such rainbow fish as in Hawaii, of every color and shade and hue. If there is any tint or gradation of tints in the prism that is not reflected in the scales of the finny tribes of the waters around the islands, I should like to see it. A visit to the Honolulu Aquarium (far superior as it is to the world-famous one in Naples) or to the "Coral Gardens" where we see the fish through a glass-bottomed boat, disporting themselves in their own front yards, so to speak, are excursions one never forgets. That God in his infinite love should paint the lily seems wonderful; but that he should paint the fish of the sea as gorgeously and as delicately as the petal of a flower is surpassingly wonderful. The flowers of Hawaii declare the glory of God, and the fish showeth his handiwork!

I might expatiate on the rainbow glories of the sunrise and sunset, for I never saw anything more gorgeous than the sunsets from Waikiki, the bathing beach of Honolulu; not occasionally, not half a dozen times a year, as we see them in northern climes, but evening after evening, for almost three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, the sun sets in resplendent effulgence, and in the morning, trailing clouds of glory, goes forth as a strong man to run a race. There are some Scripture phrases which one can better understand in the tropics than when one approaches the poles.

And these fair islands are as glorious an example of the work of the Sun of Righteousness as of the sun in the heavens. Less than a hundred years ago, their people were sunk in ignorance and superstition, not to speak of more unnamable faults. Now, the islands are not only evangelized, but their churches have formed a strong missionary society to evangelize other islands of the Pacific and more distant lands. A new center of righteousness has thus been created.

No city in the world is more beautiful than Honolulu, a city filled with elegant homes, beautiful



A Native's Hut in Hawaii and One of the Many Beautiful Homes lawns and flower gardens on every street, stately churches, substantial public buildings, numerous hospitals and charities—all this where the naked barbarians built their straw huts a century ago. These former barbarians are themselves fine specimens of what God can make of a man, and their blood flows freely in the veins of some of the best families of the islands.

---

*This is the first of a new series of illustrated travel articles by Dr. Clark, which he has undertaken to write for the readers of the Christian Herald, being the first literary work he has done since his recent serious illness. He is now thoroughly recovered. His later articles will deal with China, Japan and Korea, which he will visit during his present tour. With this initial article he sends a kindly New Year's greeting to the readers of this journal.

The missionary element, down to the third and fourth generations, is still predominant, intellectually, socially, commercially, and spiritually. How this transformation came about and what a hundred years of Christianity not only can do, but has done, is in itself a wonderful story.

It is a singular and interesting fact that most of this brightness and color did not come to these islands until the missionaries from America, nearly a hundred years ago, made their slow and toilsome way around Cape Horn to this present "Paradise of the Pacific."

I SUPPOSE I shall be called upon to prove the remarkable statement that the present color scheme of Hawaii came with the missionaries, or was introduced by them. An aged and honored missionary—the son of a missionary who was born in Honolulu—tells me that eighty years ago Honolulu was a windswept village, with the red dust of the soil flying in choking clouds along every street; that there were very few flowers or trees or shrubs, and that the general appearance of the mud-dried brick and thatched cottages and native huts was somber and depressing.

For miles we rode together in a trolley car, past magnificent estates fronted by smooth, velvety lawns and brilliant flower gardens; past miles of hibiscus hedges, glorious with their enormous red flowers peeping through the glossy green; past great avenues of stately royal palms and beneath the shade of great algaroba, poinciana and banyan trees. "All these," said my friend, "are foreign trees; none of them were here when I was a boy." He peered eagerly to right and left to find a native tree indigenous to the soil. "There, there," he said, "that little palm is a native," but the swift trolley car swept by before I could get my eye on it. "Four-fifths of all the trees and plants, if not nine-tenths of all," he went on to say, "have been introduced from abroad, and most of them by the missionaries or their descendants. Some have come from California, some from Brazil, some from the West Indies and some from the East Indies."

It is the same with the fruits. Papayas, breadfruit, bananas and cocoanuts the missionaries found here; but the gorgeous displays of the fruit stalls in gold and purple and orange and crimson, representing a score of delicious fruits, were unknown for years.

And, as to the people, instead of the gorgeous mixture of costumes of Chinese and Japanese, Filipinos and Portuguese, Koreans, Americans and Hawaiians, the latter constituted the whole population, and as they wore no clothing to speak of, a rather somber brown must have been the predominating human color.

Here is the graphic account which one of the early missionaries gave of her first glimpse of Honolulu as the ship approached the harbor:

"March 30, 1828. The island of Oahu, our Ultima Thule, looms up in the distance, displaying gray and red rocky hills unrelieved by a single shade of green, forbidding enough in aspect.

Please give me the glass for a moment. There, I see the town of Honolulu, a mass of brown huts, looking precisely like so many haystacks in the country; not one white cottage, no church spire, not a garden or a tree to be seen, save the grove of cocoanuts."

An Avenue of Palms

Now, what do the thousands of travelers see, who every year on mighty ships steam into the harbor of Honolulu? A beautiful city, embowered in trees of scores of varieties; a city of splendid schools, of churches that would do credit to any great metropolis; and above all, a city of such lovely and hospitable homes as challenge any town in the world of five times its size to equal.

Such is the city founded by the missionaries ninety-six years ago. Here their influence and that of their descendants is still predominant in many respects. But the moral change! This is the brightest end of the rainbow after all.

They found a nation of drunkards, and in spite of the efforts of unscrupulous traders in New England rum to debauch the natives still further, temperance sentiment has steadily risen, until now a very stringent territory-wide prohibition law is the confident expectation of the people.

They found a nation where the king married his own sisters with no thought that he was disobeying the laws of God or man; where the common language was so vile that every effort was made by the missionaries to keep their children from learning a word of it.

Infanticide in those days was not considered a crime. Mrs. Laura Fish Judd, an early missionary, tells us of a remarkable meeting held about the year 1830 when the native women who had become church members were present in large numbers. Those who had no living children were asked to rise. "The scene that followed," said Mrs. Judd, "I can never forget. 'Why are you childless?' was inquired. Very few had lost children by natural death. One woman replied in tears holding out her hands: 'These must answer the question. I have been the mother of eight children; but with these hands I buried them alive, one after the other, that I might follow my pleasures and avoid growing old. Oh! if I had but one of them back to comfort me now! If tears and penitence could restore the dead!' She was followed by others, making the same sad confessions of burying alive, of strangling, of smothering, until sobs and tears filled the house."

Now, what do we find in the islan then called after old Lord Sa wich? We find a people as fully Ch tianized and civilized as any on mainland; hundreds of churches; scho that afford every child a free edu tion; Sunday schools, Christian deavor Societies, missionary societ Y. M. C. A.'s and Y. W. C. A.'s; inde every "means of grace" that you in any part of the world, you will today in "Rainbow Land."

Not to draw too rosy a picture, I m add that some evil things have b introduced from abroad, as well much good. The saloons (which soon be abolished), militarism with advent of twelve thousand soldiers, red light district of Honolulu, ma
tained largely by military influe
Sunday baseball games, etc.—e which would make the good old sionaries turn over in their coff
Yet, compared with the universal and degradation of olden times, th evils afflict but a portion of the po lation, and only prove that Satan, old serpent, is sure to wriggle his into Paradise.

The rainbows, spiritual and mate
(if there is such a thing as a mate rainbow), span the Hawaiian heav
The old drab, dim-colored life of barbarians is forever a thing of the p Brightness, color, good cheer, kindlin love and care for children have larg taken the place of drunkenness, and infanticide in this the fairest loveliest of all Uncle Sam's domini
As the descendants of the old Ha ians come in troops to the wharf welcome their Christian friends hang garlands of many-colored flov around their necks—a custom foun its perfection only in Hawaii—I h felt more than once that these flov are but the symbol of the color brightness, the fragrance and joy love, which the missionaries brou with them nearly a hundred years
If among my readers there is such anomaly as a Christian who does believe in missions, let him cons the Hawaiian Islands as they were as they are.

A CENTURY, in God's scheme years, is not a long period; but long enough to transform a nation, to hang his bow of promise across dark clouds of ignorance, supersti and debauchery.

"For Girls—Not for Gain"

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

"THE buildings are so high and wide and mysterious, and the streets are so full of people whom I don't know, and I've come all the way from the Middle West to answer an advertisement from an agency in Union Square, and there isn't any such place. What shall I do?" sobbed the Girl.

The policeman looked at her; looked speculatively. She was a very pretty girl, he thought. Then, with eyes still speculative, he glanced out over the city. Perhaps as he looked at the buildings beginning to be dotted with lights, at the stores in their final flurry of closing time, at the throngs of people surging toward homes that lay somewhere in the crowded maze of architecture, he thought that it was a lonely—just a bit cruel—city. His gaze came slowly, thoughtfully, back to the Girl.

"Why," he began hesitatingly, and then, as he glanced across Union Square, "why,"—he told her with a pleased rush of words,—"you better go to the 'Young Women's' here on Fifteenth Street. They'll help!"

The girl look puzzled—just a bit—but out of the blackness of the abyss of despair there sprang a ray of hope. That hope was reflected in her eyes.

"'Young Women's'?" she questioned wearily. "'Young Women's'—what?"

"I mean th' Y. W. C. A.—the Young Women's Christian Association." He pointed a stubby forefinger in the direction of a large brownstone building. "Understand?" he questioned kindly, though gruffly.

The Girl understood, and with head once again held high, she started toward the brownstone building.

FIFTY years ago, if the girl had come to the city (and fifty years ago girls did come to the city very much as they come now), she would not have found any such place to go to. Almost anything might have happened to her. For at that time there wasn't any such organization as the "Y. W. C. A."

The Young Women's Christian Association started in 1870 as an auxiliary to the Ladies' Christian Union. In those days it was primly called "The Young Ladies' Christian A ciation," and the aim-set d briefly in its first annual re was "to give help, entert and show Christian kindnes young girls who have left n est country homes to find w in the city."

Y. W. C. A. Art Class Designing Costumes, Wall Papers and Cretonnes

Mrs. Caroline D. Roberts was at t time the president of the Ladies' Cl tian Union. The women who belon to that circle were young matrons middle-aged women. Suddenly in 1 a whole group of schoolgirls decided t they would like to join in with the o women. Mrs. Roberts, who was enough to know that the young would be more enthusiastic over organization entirely their own, hel them to found the "Young Lac Christian Association." One of charter members (now a stately wh haired woman) admits that the Asso tion was started more to keep the yo girls occupied than to do any of great and lasting good that it has d
The first home of the Young Wom
Christian Association was a not large room on University Place.
the girls worked over that room! T made it attractive with rugs and ha ings and pictures—they filled it books and magazines and music.
then they waited for the young wo to come and enjoy themselves.

Folk are more or less inclined to skeptical about new things. The ea to-help young ladies had announced t they were opening a room for the en tainment of lonely girls. They prom social evenings and parties and plec of friendship—for nothing; and shopgirls and stenographers and lo little schoolgirls who had discovered t

Continued on page 91

A Voice in the Wilderness

By GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL LUTZ

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

MARGARET EARLE, school teacher, "tenderfoot," mistaking a water stop for her station and discovering her mistake just too late, was left behind on the desert plain of Arizona and saw her train disappear into the night. Alarmed by the calls of coyotes she climbed laboriously to the top of the water tank where visions of her parents, reading comfortably at home, alternated with fear at her predicament and with wonder at the glory of the star-lit sky. A passing half-drunken rancher told her that her station was twenty miles away. She climbed down from her point of vantage on the tank and started to go to the rancher's camp, first on foot and then riding behind on the pony; but she found his company less desirable than loneliness. She dropped off the horse, the rancher threw her bag after her and left her sobbing in the sand beside the trail. The sodden rancher went on and reported his erstwhile passenger to his wife and the eight men in the bunk house. One of them was young and "different." It was a subtle difference that they all felt unconsciously and that kept them in some awe of "the Boy," as they called him. The Boy saddled two horses and went in search of the girl. He found her, reassured her, set her on a horse and returned with her to the ranchhouse. She promptly became a new star in the firmament of each man there. On the way, Margaret and the Boy talked of the wonders of the Arizona night, and she discovered in him a fine something that she could not penetrate. The first sight of the bunk house was not very reassuring but the Boy had told her that "Mom" Wallis would look after her and there was no alternative but the desert.

CHAPTER IV

WHEN Margaret Earle dawned upon that bunk room the men sat up with one accord, ran their rough, red hands through their rough, tousled hair, smoothed their beards, and took down their feet from the benches where they were resting. That was as far as their etiquette led them. Most of them continued to smoke their pipes, and all of them stared at her unreservedly. Such a sight of exquisite feminine beauty had not come to their eyes in many a long day. Even in the dim light of the smoky lanterns, and with the dust and weariness of travel upon her, Margaret Earle was a beautiful girl.

Yet withal theirs was a kindly admiration, not unmixed with awe. For there was about her beauty a touch of the spiritual which set her above the common run of women, made men feel her purity and sweetness, and inclined their hearts to worship rather than be bold.

The Boy had been right. Pop Wallis was asleep and out of the way. From the little shed room at one end his snoring marked time in the silence that the advent of the girl made in the place.

In the doorway of the kitchen offset Mom Wallis stood with her passionless face—a face from which all emotions had long ago been burned by cruel fires—and looked at the girl whose expression was vivid with her opening life, all haloed in a rosy glow. A kind of awful contortion passed over Mom Wallis's hopeless countenance, as if she saw before her in all its possibility of perfection the life that she herself had lost. Perhaps it was no longer possible for her features to show tenderness, but a glow of something like it burned in her eyes, though she only turned away with the same old apathetic air, and without a word went about preparing a meal for the stranger.

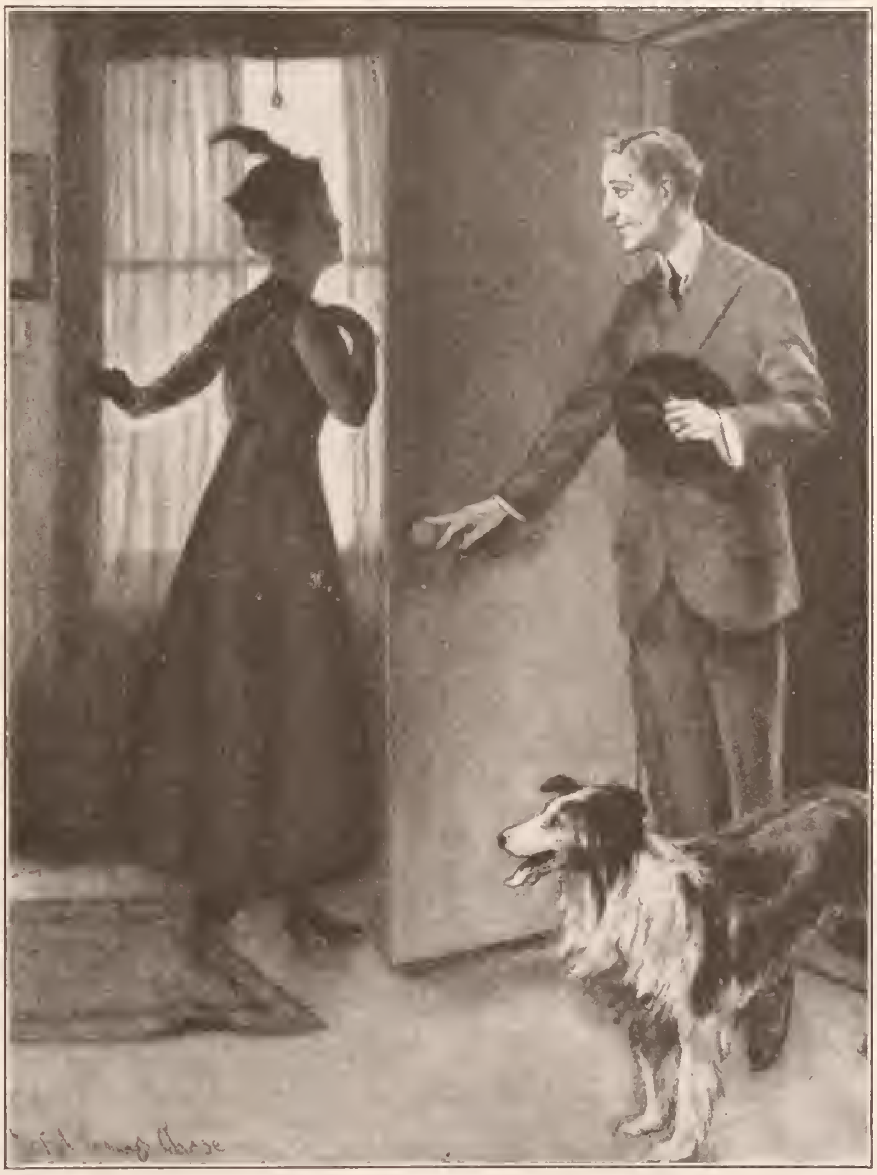
Margaret looked wildly, fearfully, around upon the rough assemblage when she first entered the long low room, but instantly the Boy introduced her as "the new teacher for the Ridge School, beyond the Junction," and these were "Long Bill, Big Jim, the Fiddling Boss, Jasper Kemp, Fade-Away Forbes, Stocky, Croaker, and Fudge." An inspiration fell upon the frightened girl, and she acknowledged the introduction by a radiant smile, followed by the offering of her small gloved hand. Each man in dumb bewilderment instantly became her slave and accepted the offered hand with more or less pleasure and embarrassment. The girl proved her right to be called tactful, and seeing her advantage followed it up quickly by a few, bright words. These men were of an utterly different type from any she had ever met before, but they had in their eyes a kind of homage which Pop Wallis had not shown, and they were not repulsive to her. Besides, the Boy was in the background, and her nerve had returned. The Boy knew how a lady should be treated. She was quite ready to "play up" to his lead.

It was the Boy who brought the only chair the bunk house afforded, a rude, homemade affair, and helped her off with her coat and hat in his easy friendly way, as if he had known her all his life; while the men, to whom such gallant ways were foreign, sat awkwardly by and watched in wonder and amaze.

Most of all they were astonished at "the Kid," that he could fall so naturally into intimate talk with this delicate, beautiful woman. She was another of his kind, a creature not made in the same mold as theirs. They saw it now, and watched the fairy play with almost childish interest. Just to hear her call him "Mr. Gardley"! Lance Gardley—that was what he had told them was his name the day he came among them. They had not heard it since. The Kid! Mr. Gardley!

There it was, the difference between them! They looked at the girl half jealously, yet proudly at the Boy. He was theirs—yes, in a way he was theirs—had they not found him in the wilderness sick and nigh to death, and nursed him back to life again? He was theirs—but he knew how to drop into her world, too, and not be ashamed. They were glad that he could, even while it struck them with a pang that some day he would go back to the world in which he belonged—and where they could never be at home.

It was a marvel to watch her eat the coarse corn bread and pork that Mom Wallis brought her. It might have been a banquet, the pleasant way she seemed to look at it. Just like a bird she tasted it daintily, and smiled, showing her white teeth. There was nothing of the idea of greediness that each man knew he himself felt after a fast. It was all beautiful, the way she handled the two-tined fork and the old steel knife. They watched and dropped their eyes abashed as at a lovely sacrament. They had not felt before that eating could be an art. They did not know what art meant.



Drawing by Joseph Cummings Chase

In the doorway stood a man and a dog.

Such strange talk, too! But the Kid seemed to understand. About the sky—their old common sky with stars that they saw every night—making such a fuss about that. Each man went furtively out that night before he slept and took a new look at the sky.

THE Boy was planning so the night would be but brief. He knew the girl was afraid. He kept the talk going enthusiastically, drawing in one or two of the men now and again. Long Bill forgot himself and laughed out a hoarse guffaw, then stopped as if he had been choked. Stocky, red in the face, told a funny story when commanded by the Boy, and then dissolved in mortification over his blunders. The Fiddling Boss obediently got down his fiddle from the smoky corner beside the fireplace, and played a weird old tune or two, and then they sang. First the men with hoarse, quavering approach and final roar of wild sweetness; then Margaret and the Boy in duet, and finally Margaret alone, with a few bashful chords on the fiddle, feeling their way as accompaniment.

Mom Wallis had long ago stopped her work, and was sitting huddled in the doorway on a nail-keg with weary folded hands, and a strange wistfulness on her apathetic face. A fine silence had settled over the group as the girl, recognizing her power, and the pleasure she was giving, sang on. Now and then the Boy when he knew the song would join in with his rich tenor.

It was a strange night, and when she finally lay down to rest on a hard cot with a questionable-looking blanket for covering and Mom Wallis as her roommate, Margaret Earle could not help wondering what her mother and father would think now if they could see her. Would they not, perhaps, almost prefer the water tank and the lonely desert for her, to her present surroundings?

Nevertheless, she slept soundly after her terrible excitement and woke with a start of wonder in the early morning, to hear the men outside splashing water, and humming, or whistling bits of the tunes she had sung to them the night before.

Mom Wallis was standing over her, looking down with a hunger in her eyes at the bright waves of Margaret's hair, and the soft, sleep-flushed cheeks.

"You got dretful purty hair," said Mom Wallis wistfully.

Margaret looked up and smiled in acknowledgment of the compliment.

"You wouldn't b'leeve it, but I was young an' purty oncet. Beats all how much it counts to be young—an' purty! But, land! It don't last long. Make the most of it while you got it."

Browning's immortal words came to Margaret's lips:

> "Grow old along with me.
> The best is yet to be,
> The last of life for which the first was made."

but she checked them just in time and could only smile mutely. How could she speak such thoughts amid these intolerable surroundings? Then with sudden impulse she reached up to the astonished woman and, drawing her down, kissed her sallow cheek.

"Oh!" said Mom Wallis, starting back and laying her bony hands upon the place where she had been kissed as if it hurt her, while a dull red stole up from her neck over her cheeks and high forehead to the roots of her hay-colored hair. All at once she turned her back upon her visitor and the tears of the years streamed down her impassive face.

"Don't mind me," she choked after a minute. "I liked it real good, only it kind of give me a turn."

Then after a second:

"It's time t' eat. You can wash outside after the men is done."

That, thought Margaret, had been the scheme of this woman's whole life, "After the men is done!"

So, after all, the night was passed in safety, and a wonderful dawning had come. The blue of the morning, so different from the blue of the night sky, was nevertheless just as unfathomable; the air seemed filled with straying starbeams, so sparkling was the clearness of the light.

BUT now a mountain rose in the distance with heliotrope-and-purple bounds to stand across the vision and dispel the illusion that the sky came down to the earth all around like a close

Continued on page 85

A Week in the World's News

CONGRESS is exercising its prerogative of free discussion of the war and the international situation generally. Many of the members of both houses are eagerly awaiting an opportunity to express their views on the submarine situation, the rights of Americans on the high seas, the proposition for an arms and munitions embargo, and other phases of the situation. On January 5 a spirited debate was precipitated by Senator Jones of Washington, a strong peace advocate, who requested that the clerk read an editorial in a local morning newspaper which argued that Americans could best help their country by keeping off belligerent vessels. The senator said that those Americans who traveled on such vessels displayed an extraordinary lack of patriotism. Here Senator Nelson interposed the question whether the California senator meant that those who traveled in such vessels were not good Americans.

"I think," was Senator Jones' reply, "Consul McNeely had better have hunted up a neutral ship as a representative of this government, rather than got on a belligerent ship." Senator Owen of Oklahoma suggested that where we have need to send our representatives under such difficult conditions as those that now exist, it would be better to send them on an American ship under the protection of the American flag.

"The senator is entirely right," said Mr. Jones in approval.

Senator O'Gorman of New York here took part in the discussion. "There was a neutral ship," he said, "that would have carried Consul McNeely safely to his post in Aden. He was advised by one of our consular representatives to continue his journey from England on a Dutch vessel."

"During the Russo-Japanese War," said Mr. Owen, "Great Britain warned its citizens against going on belligerent vessels. I think the United States should take some steps to advise its citizens in a formal way to keep them from endangering themselves and the peace of the United States." Here Senator Borah of Idaho interposed to observe that those people had an unquestioned right to go on those boats if they were unarmed—just as much as though they were neutral vessels. They were protected by the laws of nations.

Senator Owen agreed that all nations ought to protect their citizens, but unfortunately the fact was that such protection was very difficult of accomplishment. "The Persia," he said, "is alleged to have carried a gun capable of sinking a submarine, and was therefore regarded as an armed vessel and not within the safeguards of international law. We cannot tell to what dangers our citizens may be subjected. Therefore the common good requires that we should act for their protection, and caution ought to be given to them."

Senator Works of California here took a hand in the debate. "I have in mind," said he, "the case of a prominent citizen of my own state who lost his life on the Lusitania. He was warned by public notice not to take passage on the boat. In addition to that, he was privately warned not to travel in that way. He disregarded these warnings, made light of them and lost his life. Officers of the government were perfectly aware that this ship was loaded with munitions of war for the belligerent nations. Passengers were permitted to travel upon that boat with that knowledge existing upon the part of the government. Not only were the passengers themselves at fault, but the government, in permitting passengers to take passage upon a ship practically carrying death and destruction to the subjects of one of the contending nations, is itself morally responsible. The government placed itself in a false position which must have embarrassed the Administration in dealing with that question. We did not come to it with clean hands. We contributed to the disaster by permitting the passage of our own people."

Senator Reed of Missouri asked "Under what authority of law the government officers could prohibit American citizens from taking passage on a ship where munitions were carried?"

"It would only have been necessary," replied Senator Works, "for the government to notify them that they should not take passage on a ship of that kind. It would not have been necessary to resort to force."

"It is not an unusual thing," said Senator O'Gorman, "for a great and powerful government to caution its citizens in time of war and great danger to avoid the zone of hazard and peril."

"It may be conceded," said Senator Works, "as a mere question of law, that an American citizen has a perfect right to travel upon one of these ships. But there is a moral responsibility resting not only upon the government, but upon every American citizen, to do everything possible to be done properly to avoid conflict with the nations at war. I have from the very beginning been opposed to the shipment of munitions of war to any belligerent nation. I particularly objected to it, after Great Britain had practically blockaded Germany. If we had said to Britain at that time: 'If you prevent the shipment of our goods to Germany, we will furnish you no more munitions of war,' we might have brought England to terms. But aside from that, we have practically made ourselves a party to the war by supplying munitions and money to one side, while neither is being furnished to the other. We are not neutral; we are hypocritical in claiming that we are neutral."

Senator Reed asked: "Did the Senator not know that Germany procured arms in this country as long as she could possibly get them to her own country?"

"That may be," replied Senator Works, "but still it does not alter the question. I have no doubt but the citizens of this country who have been supplying arms to England would gladly have furnished them to Germany for money, because they are growing rich upon the trade. That is not the question. It is a moral responsibility that is resting not only upon the people who are supplying these arms, but, as I think, upon the government as permitting it to be done. My position is that we should not furnish them to any of these belligerents at any time."

"Then," said Senator Reed, "the senator does not believe that we should sell cannon, rifles, or munitions to any; that neither should we sell to them food, or clothing, or shoes, or horses, or mules, or automobiles, or anything used upon the field of battle?"

"That is my position precisely," was Senator Works' reply.

Senator Reed said that logically the California senator must go one step further. "No army," he said, "can be kept in the field, however well clothed or fed, unless the people at home are also clothed and fed; so I think that the senator (Mr. Works) would logically reach the conclusion that no goods of any character should be sent to a belligerent power."

"Not at all," said Senator Works.

Continuing, Senator Reed said: "And this being true, it would follow that our entire foreign trade would be wiped out at once. This country would suffer all the disasters of war for which it was in no way responsible, except the loss of lives of its citizens, and all the products of our farm, mine and factory would go to about fifty per cent. of their value, and this country would be involved in a financial and industrial catastrophe."

"Mr. President," said Senator Works in reply, "the difference between the senator from Missouri and myself is that I value human life above property, which he does not. The trouble about our responsibility for prolonging this war is that so many people of this country place it upon the basis of dollars and cents. It is a terrible responsibility that we have taken upon ourselves to furnish the material and the means to take the lives of the citizens of a friendly nation. I hope the time may soon come when either the Administration itself or Congress will reach that point where they will put an end to this traffic, which I think should have been prevented long since. We are professing to be neutral. When we make that profession, and supply munitions of war to one of the nations as against the other, we are no longer neutral, but we become an ally of that nation. That is precisely what has come about."

Senator Lodge here remarked that our markets are open to all the world to buy. "A condition has been created by this war, and by the war alone, which prevents one or more belligerents from buying in this market. If we undertake to reverse the condition created by the war, we at once to that extent enter into the war and endeavor to restore a condition existing before the war, and this is an act of unneutrality."

Senator O'Gorman of New York asked Senator Lodge whether he thought that we are under any obligation to sell our munitions to any belligerents, to which Senator Lodge replied that it was not a question of obligation at all. Any government can put an embargo on anything it chooses. There is no question about the power.

"Then," said Senator O'Gorman, "does the senator think that, in the exercise of this conceded right, if this government placed an embargo, that act would be unneutral?"

Senator Lodge said that such an embargo now would be a grossly unneutral act, and would make us to that extent the ally of the other belligerent. "In my judgment," rejoined Senator O'Gorman, "if it were deemed best for the welfare of the American nation, this government could place an embargo against the shipment of any munitions to any belligerent, without exposing itself to the imputation of an unneutral act."

"I should like to ask the senator from Massachusetts," interposed Senator Hitchcock of Nebraska, "whether he thinks that Norway, Denmark, Sweden and Holland were gu of unneutral acts when they placed an bargo on the export of arms and munit after the war began?"

"No," replied Senator Lodge, "for the s ple reason——"

"Then," interrupted Senator Hitchc impressively, "America is the only great tion of the world forbidden, according to senator's theory, from exercising the so eign right of placing an embargo?"

"Not the least in the world," rejoi
Senator Lodge. "They did not change conditions by their actions. The Un States would change the conditions by s an action."

"I think," said Senator Hitchcock, " senator is wrong."

"The day we put an embargo on," c tinued Senator Lodge, "all the world kn that would be worth more to Germany t a million men."

Mr. Hitchcock continued reviewing effect of the embargo by the neutral Europ countries and closed with these words: " position of the senator (from Massachus is virtually this: that the United States sta today as the only neutral nation in the w prohibited, according to his theory, from ercising this sovereign right of governme exercising it for moral reasons, exercisin because the failure to exercise it makes participant in the war."

Then the question arose as to the imp tion of an embargo as a measure of ret tion against Britain. Senator O'Gorn asked whether in Senator Lodge's opinion would be justified in placing such an emba as a retaliatory measure, because of con on the part of a belligerent nation disregar and violating our rights as a neutral. Sen Lodge replied that we have a right to d if we want to. It might very well be neutral.

Here Senator Stone of Missouri ca the attention of the chair to the fact the debate, which had proceeded by un mous consent, was taking a wide ra and it was accordingly closed for the being.

◆

THE ONE CENT POSTAGE PE
Stirred by the prospects of a swamped p office service and the persistent promo of the "one-cent postage fad among busi organizations, chambers of commerce boards of trade, in which we are sorry to some newspapers have been misled to sist," Leslie's Illustrated Weekly has ca attention to some unanswerable object to the one-cent postage rate on first-matter. Cheap circular matter from m order and other houses is said to pour into Postoffice department in such quantitie to make it impossible at times for the dep ment to furnish sufficient mail bags to ha the business of some newspapers and per icals—a sinister condition which would be relieved if postage rates were lowered.
is questioned, too, if the Postoffice dep ment, which annually reports a deficit, w show a profit by cutting in half its source of income, the two-cent first-class p age rate. Doubling the rates on newspa and magazines would scarcely offset a per cent. cut in first-class rates, since n papers and magazines are productive of a

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Indépendance Belge

FOR the whole of the past week Russia has been making an attack on the Austro-German lines from the Pripet marshes in the north to the point where the Austrian, Rumanian and Russian frontiers meet in the south, with all the forces she was able to bring to bear effectively. This attack, besides its military objective—the forcing back of the Teutons on this line—had a political object even more important than any minor gain of territory, viz., the impressing of Rumania to a sufficient extent, if possible, to induce that country to throw in her lot with the Allies, or if this definite action could not be induced on her part, at least to cause her to continue neutral.

The heaviest portion of this attack has been made in east Galicia from a point east of Tarnopol to the Bessarabian frontier, and particularly on that portion of this front directly to the northeast and east of Czernowitz, the capital of the Austrian crown land Bukowina. This town of Czernowitz, which lies in a sort of bowl surrounded by mountains, is not in itself strategically important, but becomes so from the fact that its control carries with it the control of the head of the system of railroads which radiate from it, northwest toward Lemberg, west toward central Galicia, and southwest through Bukowina to Transylvania.

Consequently, on the narrow front opposite this town the Russians concentrated some three army corps and 400 pieces of artillery, and after a fifty-hour artillery preparation began an infantry attack. The fighting was of a most desperate nature, mostly of a hand-to-hand character, and lasted three days, at the end of which time the Russians found themselves masters of about 700 yards of the Austrian first-line trenches to the northeast of the town.

The second Austrian line had been pierced at no point; owing to this line being protected by wire entanglements charged with electricity the Russians had been afraid to attack with infantry, and had contented themselves with endeavoring to cut up these entanglements with artillery, which efforts did not succeed. At the very end of the week the Austrians made a counter-attack to recapture their lost trenches, but as the struggle is still going on we are unable to say with what result. There was also hard fighting on the east bank of the Styrpa River from its junction with Dniester as far north as to the east
Tarnopol, but this also was indecis

North of this in southern Pol there was all the week hard and bi fighting in the region near Czarstory
This resulted in the Russians captur the town itself, which they had l about six weeks ago, and therea pushing their advantage by advanc westward and storming the heights co manding the town on that side, ab a mile and a half from the place. S sequently, however, a German coun attack succeeded in wresting th heights from the Russians and in ob ing the latter to retrace their steps as as the town. The week's fighting fr Czarstorysk to Bessarabia was v costly to both sides in casualties, th of the Russians being estimated at o
50,000, and the Teutons as about 30,0
The troops engaged in this fighting h also suffered greatly from the cold,

Continued on page 87

d of first-class postage m ter, and to curtail their o ations would to a corre- s nding extent affect the i me of the department fr first - class mail. The p ent untimeliness of the a ation sponsored by Sen- a Weeks of Massachusetts f one-cent postage for local d very letters is pointed o inasmuch as the Govern- n t is seeking by every n ns to increase its income, e n to extending the oper- a n of the income tax law, a renewing the special w tax, which falls particu- la upon business insti- t ons.

AR FURTHER HIN- RS OUR TRADE. The f that our growing com- n ce is dependent upon ships flying other fl s was brought home to Americans very f ibly by a recent announcement of the tish admiralty that British ships might b requisitioned "to supply such additional t nage as the national requirements may n ssitate from time to time in the trade now i question (the trans-Atlantic traffic) or in a other for which similar action may be r uired." There have been a good many tish ships in the trade between American s ports and South America which have c tinued in this trade throughout the war n il the present time. The American- zilian coffee business is almost entirely d endent upon these ships, and the trade in n rchandise of various sorts to Rio Janeiro a Buenos Aires and the whole eastern coast o South America will be practically halted b the withdrawal of these British ships.

AST UNION CORPS COMMANDER. eral Grenville M. Dodge, soldier and r road builder, died at Council Bluffs, I a, January 3. General Dodge entered t civil war as colonel of the Fourth Iowa antry and became a Major General while s ving under General Grant at Vicksburg. was later placed in command of the Army the Tennessee. Prior to the war General dge had charge of the construction of the ion Pacific railroad, and the reputation he t n gained made him sought after wherever t re was a difficult piece of railway engineer- i . He was a consulting engineer on the erian railroad for three years, and for many rs was president of the Colorado and thern railway. General Dodge was 84 rs old and had been president of the iety of the Army of the Tennessee s e 1911.

RANCE FREES TEUTONS. The Amer- i n protest against the seizure of German l Austrian subjects from American steam- ps by the French cruiser Descartes brought mpt action by the French government, ich ordered the men released.

TO FINANCE SOUTH AMERICA. Ref- nce was recently made on s page to the need for erican capital to replace ropean capital in South erica. On January 5 the sident of Peru asked the ruvian Congress to author- a contract for a fifteen llion dollar loan in the ited States.

BETTER BUSINESS OSPECTS. The United tes Chamber of Com- rce predicts an almost un- cedented boom in business ring the first four months 1916, basing the prediction statistics reported to the ganization. The boom, wever, appears to be ex- cted most strongly in se lines of activity which most affected by the ab- rmal situation abroad, al- ough general manufactur- g is showing a steady im- ovement.

TO UNIFY THE PARKS. bill has been introduced Congress providing for a national park rvice under the charge of a director, to be pointed by the Secretary of the Interior, o shall manage all of the national parks one great system, in the interest of the eatest possible use by all the people. It ll be the business of the director to make cessary preparations for the comfort and nvenience of visitors to the parks, to see at leases of bungalow sites and other ivileges do not interfere with the larger rposes for which the parks are intended, and take care that the natural scenery and table wonders of the parks are preserved d made accessible, thus making it possible see America first with the same ease and easure which has in the past attracted so any Americans abroad.

CATTLE MAY SURVIVE PLAGUE. estimony taken before Senator W. S. Kenyon of Iowa in a hearing on the foot and mouth disease indicates that it is possible for cattle to be afflicted with this disease and to survive and still be good cattle. The veterinarians, however, insist that there is no cure for the disease, but that the disease must run its course, even though mature animals may be able to live through it. The evidence presented also indicated a considerable lack of harmony between the dairy interests and the packing interests, some of the dairymen seeming to believe that the packers have conspired to destroy the dairy herds.

Rev. Paul De Schweinitz, D.D.
Moravian Church

RELIGION GAINS IN 1915. According to the New York Times of December 24, statistics at hand from the principal religious bodies in the United States show an increase of 780,000 members in the nine large denominations, which were credited with 33,800,000 members out of the total of 38,725,000 reported last year. The Presbyterian church has gained a larger number of new members than in any year of its history, and the Baptist, Methodist, Lutheran, Disciples, Episcopalian and also the Catholic Church have made gains. It is probable that of the 100,000,000 people in the United States, 40,000,000 are members of some Christian church. Gains made by the Protestant denominations are credited in part to the various movements which are being actively promoted by the denominations individually and working together, but there is evidence that a large part of the total gain is due to a deepening conviction of religious truth which is worldwide. The increase in contributions to the various funds of the churches, as well as to charitable purposes not directly connected with the church, has shown the same increase which has been marked in regard to membership.

Robert H. Gardiner
Sec'y of the Advisory Committee

Photos © International Film Service, Inc.

Delegates to the Garden City Conference on Church Unity

Left to right standing: Mr. George Zabriskie, of New York; Bishop Anderson, Rev. L. H. Baldwin. Rev. Francis J Hall, Bishop Vincent, Rev. Dr. William T. Manning.

PUTTING THE FATHER OF WATERS TO WORK. For many years we have been peculiarly blind to the value of our inland waterways. Sixty years ago the Mississippi River carried a tremendous traffic of persons and goods, which has become almost negligible when the present tonnage is considered in relation to the traffic carried by competing railways. For a number of years the question of re-establishing regular freight service on the Mississippi has been agitated all the way from St Paul to New Orleans. It has recently been announced that a nine million dollar corporation the Inland Navigation Company, had been chartered and that this company was having built thirty-six power barges, varying in capacity from 1,600 to 5,000 tons, which will travel on regular schedules between Minneapolis and New Orleans, serving all of the important towns en route. Each barge will be equipped with wireless apparatus. The company will carry freight at rates lower than the present rates of the railroads, and there will be two classes of barges: express barges which will make eighteen miles an hour upstream and twenty-two miles an hour down, and slower barges which will go eight miles an hour upstream and twelve miles down.

© Underwood & Underwood

Is the canal in Panama or is Panama in the canal? Picture shows General Goethals and the Commission of scientists recently appointed by President Wilson to investigate the slides at the canal looking over the situation. The Rochester Post-Express accepts the following explanation of the slides: "due to super-saturated soil slipping through unstable equilibrium to ultimate stability, transmitting the strain to weak underlying strata as it travels." Which is doubtless correct.

CHOKING THE FIRE DEMON. The Safety First campaign of the New York Fire Department, coupled with more rigid inspections and more widespread compliance with the building laws, resulted in 1,004 fewer fires in the city of New York in 1915 than occurred in 1914. The average money loss per fire was also reduced.

CONVICTS MAKE ROADS. Between 50 and 60 per cent. of the able-bodied prisoners committed to the state prison in Colorado are now employed in building roads. The prisoners live in camps without guards, the honor system being depended upon to prevent desertions. One convict gang has just completed, after two years of blasting of solid granite, an automobile highway from Kansas up the Arkansas River to its source, over the Continental Divide and to the Utah line. Another gang of men is building a road in Eagle River Canyon. In addition to the road work the prisoners are working three large ranches. In the last seven years, 1,000 miles of roadway have been constructed by Colorado convicts.

MONUMENT TO A PIONEER. The Interior Department announces the completion at Sentinel Point, overlooking the Grand Canyon of the Colorado in Arizona, of a monument to the memory of the intrepid work of Major John Wesley Powell, who first explored the canyon. The memorial is in the form of an altar resting on a pyramidal base of rough-hewn stone and supporting a bronze tablet with the following inscription: "Erected by the Congress of the United States to Major John Wesley Powell, first explorer of the Grand Canyon, who descended the river with his party in rowboats, traversing the gorge beneath this point August 17, 1869, and again September 1, 1872."

THE YEAR IN THE MINES. The Department of the Interior made public on January 1 a Geological Survey estimate of the mineral production of 1915. There was a great increase in the production of both copper and iron, about 18 per cent. in copper, about 38 per cent. in iron, a small increase in the production of zinc and of lead, and an increase of about $7,000,000 in the production of gold, the total production being nearly $100,000,000. Twenty-five per cent. more mercury was mined. There were small increases in the production of coal as well as in the production of petroleum. The Portland cement output reached more than $65,000,000 barrels.

WOULD INCREASE INCOME TAX. The Association for An Equitable Federal Income Tax has recently sent a memorial to congress calling attention to the present excessive burden of local, state and national budgets and to the fact that revenue for local and state purposes comes largely from the workers of the country, and that the greater proportion of the tax falls upon those with the smallest income. They state that the most fundamental measure of preparedness which our nation can adopt is the establishment of better economic and industrial conditions, and to that end they recommend a rapidly progressive income tax as a source of revenue for the Federal Government, which they believe will yield at least $300,000,000 each year.

"H. I. M." YUAN. Telegraphic despatches from Peking on January 3 announced that on New Year's Day at the reception given for Chinese officials, Yuan Shi Kai entered the palace in the imperial yellow chair, sat on the throne, and was announced as "His Imperial Majesty" though still considered President by diplomats.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE $1.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Our Editorial Forum

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

The Preacher and the Message

EVERY true orator must have a message—some great truth or principle which he is bound to proclaim—and this is especially true of the preacher. Not a few of our churches suffer from miscellaneous preaching—pulpit utterances that have hardly the remotest relation to the Gospel message. These are lame and unprofitable substitutes for that divine message of hope and comfort for which hearts have hungered in all ages.

The greatest need in the world today is the need of God's grace in the hearts and lives of men and women, to guide and cheer them at a time when, more than ever before, spiritual vision is in danger of being obscured and faith shaken at its foundations. To whom are they to look for help, if not to God's ministers in the churches—for help to lead them to the Source of all faith and hope and consolation? Soul-life needs constant renewing and refreshing, as surely as the life of the body needs daily reinvigoration through material channels. It is a time when a preacher without a message is an anomaly.

Blessed is the shepherd who leads the flock in pleasant pastures (writes one minister of long spiritual experience) whose own heart is filled with the Christ-Spirit, and who makes the church a place where worshipers love to gather; who has the message of the Good Shepherd ever on his lips, and by whose life and teaching the ever-open church door is made a gateway that leads to Gospel opportunity, to loving service, and to redeemed lives.

Prepare for Peace, Not War

THOSE who are promoting the big plans for national preparedness are finding that the opposition to their efforts is more solid and forceful than they had contemplated. The American people do not want to be transformed into a military nation. The suggestion recently made that we should develop our navy till it was equal in strength to that of any two nations strikes the rank and file of the American people as preposterous.

General Isaac R. Sherwood, representative in Congress from Ohio, made a brave speech before the House the other day. He is now eighty-one years old, the only surviving Union general in the House of Representatives. He fought in forty-two battles of the Civil War and was rewarded by President Lincoln for conspicuous gallantry. General Sherwood said:

> War is the greatest crime of the human race. It is not in my philosophy that if the murder of one man makes a villain, murder of thousands makes a hero. A standing army means waste, depression, moral decay. A nation cannot be moving toward peace while definitely preparing for war.
>
> It is proposed to tax a patient and tolerant people that an overpowering army of idlers may be endowed to consume the savings of the industrial classes, increasing the already high cost of living and producing nothing but discontent and trouble. It is a crime against the republic, without sanity and without excuse.
>
> How utterly idiotic is the idea that any European nation, exhausted in fighting men, with business and industry paralyzed, loaded down with a debt that staggers belief and cannot be paid, with its land filled with millions of widows and five times as many fatherless children, with six million maimed and crippled soldiers—legless, armless, insane and sightless—who have escaped from the damp horror of the trenches and the lurid hell of battle, all dependent on the empire, is going to make an impossible crossing of 3,000 miles of ocean, with an army that is impossible to equip or transport, and attack 100,000,000 people of the United States between whom and them there is no quarrel.

But more than all else, we must remember that if this nation is to fulfil its destiny in the world, its reliance must be, not upon arms, but upon God. "Unless the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it; unless the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." "They that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Thank God, we have no enemies; but even if we are in danger of having them we may, if we are truly watchful and honest and worshipful, win the fulfilment of the promise that "when a man's ways please the Lord he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him."

The Vatican Advocating Church Union

THE North American preparatory committee which is arranging the preliminaries to a world conference for the purpose of combining Christian churches of all denominations was cheered at its meeting at Garden City, Long Island, on January 4, by receiving a letter from Cardinal Gasparri, the papal Secretary of State. The letter is said to have raised "strong hopes that the greatest division of Christianity might eventually be represented in the international gathering." Here is the letter, as published in the St. Louis Globe Democrat January 5:

> The Vatican:
>
> Your project of an international convention of all who believe in Jesus Christ as God and Saviour to accomplish the speedy fulfilment of the final prayer of the Lord that all may be one, I have, in obedience to your request, submitted to the most blessed father.
>
> I need not here describe the affection with which I saw the august pontiff kindled for you.
>
> For you well know that the plans of the Roman pontiffs, their cares and their labors, have always been specially directed to the end that the sole and unique church which Jesus Christ ordained and sanctioned with his divine blood should be most zealously guarded and maintained, whole, pure and ever abounding in love, and that it should both let its light shine and open wide its door for all who rejoice in the name of man and who desire to gain holiness upon earth and eternal happiness in heaven.
>
> The august pontiff, therefore, was pleased with your project of examining in a sincere spirit and without prejudice the essential form of the church, or the inner essence of the church.
>
> He earnestly hopes that under the spell of its native beauty you may settle all disputes and work with prosperous issue to the end that the mystical body of Christ be no longer suffered to be rent and torn, but that by harmony and cooperation of minds, and likewise by the concord of their wills, unity of faith and communion may at last prevail throughout the world of men.
>
> Thanking you, then, that you have thought well to request the aid and support of the Roman pontiff in expediting your worthy project, his holiness expresses his earnest desire that the end may answer your expectation.
>
> He asks the same of Jesus Christ with fervent prayers, all the more because, with the voice of Christ himself sounding before and bidding him, he knows that he himself, as the one to whom all men have been given over to be fed, is the source and cause of the unity of the church.

How this letter can have raised hopes of Vatican cooperation in the plans pursued by the preparatory conference, it is not easy to understand. The letter is a fine diplomatic document, courteous, almost cordial, in tone, and dexterous in statement. The writer appeals to the knowledge which, he says, the preparatory conference must have, of the plans of the Roman pontiffs, and their cares and labors for the unity of the Church. This remark can be taken as a papal approval of the object of the conference. But if the Pope meant to say nothing more than this, "I am with you," it was not necessary to refer to the cares and labors of his predecessors. Since he has mentioned these, the conference, in order to understand fully the Pope's mind on the issue of church unity, will have to examine the said "cares and labors of the Roman pontiffs." For the present Pope is not going to disregard or sacrifice those labors, but means to continue them. This means that Benedict XV does not consider the debate closed on such documents as Leo XIII's Encyclical on Christian Unity of June 29, 1896, or on the same Pope's previous encyclical on reunion, of November 30, 1894. Yea, since he speaks of pontiffs in the plural, he evidently embraces in his view of the "cares and labors" of former popes also the Syllabus of Pius IX and every pertinent ex cathedra definition on church unity down to the bull "Unam Sanctam" of Boniface VIII. The gist of all these papal declarations is well known: unity with Rome is possible only on condition that the other party accept every article of faith set up authoritatively by the Roman Church, and bow to the jurisdiction of the Roman pontiff as his superior by divine right.

The letter of Cardinal Gasparri, furthermore, suggests in a polite manner that the preliminary conference "examine in a sincere spirit and without prejudice the essential form of the church," and expresses the earnest hope that it may "settle all disputes," and that "by harmony and cooperation of minds, and likewise by the concord of their wills, unity of faith and communion may at last prevail throughout the world of men." This is saying, in effect: "You started the trouble; now end it. We always were, and are today, the Church. The schism was caused by you, and you must remove it." The interest and prayers of Benedict XV, then, that the endeavor of the preparatory conference may reach a satisfactory conclusion, means nothing else than this: that he expects the schismatics to come back to the bosom of "holy mother church." Rome has nothing to arbitrate, but Rome is sincerely wishing that the bodies whom it considers heretical may penitently consider and undo their errors in the past.

Efforts at unifying the divided parts of the Christian Church must be regarded by all Christians as a most holy endeavor. Just for that reason, however, the issues to be settled must be stated with the utmost frankness and fully grasped by both sides. Otherwise every such effort becomes nugatory, and it pains intelligent Christians to see how the desire for unity is supposed to make Christians gullible. Dr. McKim was right when he said to Rome: "The reunion of Christendom is a consummation devoutly to be wished and prayed for, and for which Christian men Christian churches ought to be prepared to m great concessions—to sacrifice everything but t itself. But, as the Bishop of Edinburgh says recent charge to the Synod of Edinburgh (1895 ought to be considered that 'unity in external munion without unity in fundamental truth woul even if it could be obtained, a curse and not a bless Any proposition, therefore, looking to the unio the Anglican Church with the Church of Rome preparatory to the further and larger step of a plete reunion of Christendom, must deal first the problem of unity in fundamental truth betw these two great communions."

Jefferson as a Prophet

THE real beginnings of Pan-Americanism nearly a century old. As early as 1820, Je son in a letter to William Short (as relate Randall in his memoir) made use of passage, which now seems prophetic:

> From many conversations with him (M. Corea, appoi minister to Brazil by the government of Portugal), I hop sees, and will promote in his new situation, the advantag a cordial fraternization among all the American nations, an importance of their coalescing in an American system of p totally independent of and unconnected with that of Eu The day is not distant when we may formally require a meri of partition through the ocean which separates the two h spheres, on the hither side of which no European gun ever be heard, nor an American on the other; and when, du the rage of the eternal wars of Europe, the lion and the la without our regions, shall lie down together in peace. The principles of society there and here, then, are radic different, and I hope no American patriot will ever lose of the essential policy of interdicting in the seas and territ of both Americas the ferocious and sanguinary contest Europe. I wish to see this coalition begun.

This is the thought which, after the lapse of ne a hundred years, has reappeared to dominate Pan-American Congress in Washington. These founders of the Republic were men of wide vis that reached far beyond their own time, and applicability of their ideas to modern condition the best confirmation of their statesmanship. E at that early date, they had views of a broad Ameri policy for securing the united liberties of the World. The Monroe Doctrine came three years la on December 2, 1823.

And now, ninety-six years after Jefferson's vis of a sisterhood of American republics, joined in bonds of common territorial interests, the great h he then expressed is at last to become a real On January 5, 1916, a formal memorandum, har second in importance to the famous Monroe Doctr was presented by Secretary of State Lansing, by President's direction, to the ambassadors and mi ters of the twenty Southern republics, by which t respective governments are asked to subscribe t series of principles, to be embodied later in a gen convention among all the republics. These princi are: 1. All the American republics to mutually ag to guarantee the territorial integrity of the count of this hemisphere. 2. All to agree to maintain republican form of government. 3. All to ple themselves to submit differences that may arise am themselves to arbitration or diplomacy. 4. All agree to prohibit exports of arms and munitions any but the legally constituted governments of hemisphere, and to enact and observe such neutral laws as will make filibustering expeditions or rev tions among the republics practically impossible.

The first of these provisos covers the Jefferson idea. The whole is an expansion of the Monroe D trine to the fullest extent, comprehending all t relates to the territorial integrity and the uni interests of the Western republics.

This new development—the most important t has taken place in many decades—is not to be regar as an alliance. Each republic will be its own mas and responsible for its own acts, even to the ext of making war with a foreign country; but if in a case its independence or territorial integrity sho be threatened, it immediately becomes the comm cause of the entire group of republics. It will "One for all; all for one"—the whole chain of rep lies standing as a unit for this vital principle.

Several months may elapse before the conventi can be framed and presented for the acceptances the various republics. Then will follow in due cou its submission to Congress for ratification by Senate, and by the various chambers of the ot republics in their order. Should the plan be carri through successfully, it will mean the creation of a n bulwark of defense for one and all of the republ against foreign aggression, and a guarantee of th uninterrupted domestic peace and progress.

The Bible and Newspaper

CONDUCTED BY

FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

sks $1,000,000 Endowment

THE Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church in New York City, Rev. Dr. John Henry Jowett, pastor, made a public announcement te last Sunday in the year of the ention of the officers and members to rse an endowment fund of $1,000,000 i the next five years. Two members of te church promised to give one dollar ch for every dollar given during the yr 1916 by any other mber of the congregan up to $100,000. It planned to have $300,- in hand by January 1917. At present the rch has enough to y all bills and a surplus the end of each year. holds the record among e churches of the world the size of its annual ts to the Boards of reign and Home Missns. A circular letter the congregation says, ong other things: "The history of other esbyterian churches d the rapid changes in w York as to residntial districts and conions of living render e future of any city urch uncertain, and one can tell whether the future there will men and women able support our activities, luding our missions, is the case today." here are some handips and perils in enwed churches. But it ks as though the dowment of the downwn churches in the ge cities will be necsary unless much of e field is to be abanned by Protestantism. he Fifth Avenue urch has its multilionaires and millionres, and others who are nerous, and it is doing e wise and practical ing in perpetuating its entity and beneficent rvice down into the nturies. In the march populations and the utations of cities that on which the Church nds remains unmoved, mely: "His kingdom an everlasting kingdom, d his dominion is from neration to generation." (Dan. 4: 3.)

© American Press Association

Stone Mountain, Southern Confederacy Memorial

A MONUMENT one thousand feet high and two miles wide is to be prepared and dedicated as a memorial to the soldiers and sailors of the Southern Confederacy. The whole face of Stone Mountain, sixteen miles from Atlanta, Ga., is to be used. It is said that this is the largest single piece of granite in the world, and that for two miles there is not a single fissure in the rock to interrupt the work of the artist. Gutzon Borglum, the sculptor, says: "Upon the face of this mountain I am going to carve hundreds of colossal figures, representing the Confederate army on the march. There will be three sections of the army, all converging and all facing east. The central group lowest down will be composed of leading generals in full uniform, most of them mounted, Lee, Stonewall Jackson and Jefferson Davis among them. The second group a little higher up the mountain will represent a portion of the main body of the army, cavalry, artillery, infantry. This line of marchers will be 2,000 feet in length. The third group will be a larger body of cavalry, artillery and infantry; higher still, the marching column winding up and over the top. At the bottom of the mountain directly below the figures of Lee, Jackson and others, I am going to cut into the face of the granite hill a colossal colonnade of thirteen columns, eight feet apart, one for each of the Confederate States, each being fifty feet high and eight feet in diameter. Back of these columns we are going to cut out of the solid rock a room reaching sixty feet back into the mountain and running the whole length of the colonnade, as a memorial hall for the use of the United Daughters of the Confederacy.

This monument is to include a public park of eighty acres. The $2,000,000 necessary for the undertaking is to be raised by popular subscription. The monument looks backward with tenderness, affection, and gratitude, its figures are marching toward the east, toward the dawn of a more glorious New South. The monument is within sight, and almost within hearing, of the factories of the metropolis of the New South, with its industry, thrift, moral courage and spiritual consecration. The hates that led to and followed the Civil War are dead. No men respect and love each other more than those who wore the blue and those that wore the grey, and they and their children vie with each other in their loyalty to the Stars and Stripes. Instead of one stone or mountain, the children of Israel made their first national monument of twelve stones, of which it was said: "These stones shall be for a memorial unto the children of Israel forever." (Joshua 4: 7.)

Destroyed by Earthquake

A DESPATCH to the New York Herald reports the destruction by earthake of Gracias, one of the most picresque cities of the Central American public of Honduras. It has a population 4,000 and is situated on one of the ibutaries of the Santiago River in the othills of the Opalaca Mountains. It is e center of a large cattle industry, and great deal of wood, the majority of hich is oak and mahogany, is shipped rough it from the Opalaca forests. racias is one of the oldest cities in onduras, having been founded in out 1536. It is to be hoped that later ws will show that the damage was not complete as first reported. There is is reference to earthquakes in Bible nds: "The words of Amos, who was nong the herdmen of Tekoa, which he w concerning Israel in the days of zziah king of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam, the son of Joash king of Israel, two years before the earthquake." (Amos 1: 1.)

$67,573,818 Wool Production

WOOL production in the United States during 1915 was 288,777,000 pounds, about a million and a half less pounds than 1914, and over seven million pounds less than the year before. The price for 1915, however, was $67,573,818, or $14,000,000 more than the crop for last year. The price of unwashed wool paid to producers averaged 23.4 cents per pound compared with 18.4 in 1914 and 15.7 cents in 1913. Montana led in wool production with 29,940,000 pounds, Wyoming was second with 28,682,000 pounds. Other states producing over 10,000,000 pounds were New Mexico, Oregon, Ohio, Utah, California and Idaho. Wool-raising was an important branch of industry among the Hebrews. "And Mesha, king of Moab, was a sheepmaster, and rendered unto the king of Israel a hundred thousand lambs, and a hundred thousand rams, with the wool." (II Kings 3: 4.)

Dust Microbes from Books

IN these days of "microphobia" there has been sounded the danger of disease from the dust from books. Recent experiments have proven that there is virtually no danger of disease being spread by books in libraries unless, of course, they have been used recently by persons having infectious diseases. While cleaning the library of Yale University the dust from the books was chemically analyzed. About half of it was found to be mineral matter, while the other half was paper fiber, wood fiber, and molds. No bacteria such as are dangerous were found. There is a good deal of dust, and dangerous dust, too, on the inside of many books. The bacteria of moral smallpox, yellow fever, cholera, and bubonic plague are there; some of them easily seen, others concealed in hint and insinuation, all so fascinating and damaging to character, and all so easily and widely disseminated. A number of modern writers have dealt too boldly with the diseased, the lawless side of human life. Fortunately our literature is fuller of truth, beauty and purity, and is elevating in thought, sentiment and character, answering this commendation of the apostle: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." (Phil. 4: 8.)

Boat for Water and Ice

IN order to navigate Lake Pend Oreille during the winter months, when the upper part is frozen and the southern half open, an Idaho boat-builder has constructed a craft which is designed for both water and ice. It is driven by an aerial propeller and is capable of gliding rapidly over smooth ice, taking to open water at full speed and then running back onto the ice when making the return trip to the northern part of the lake. The boat is fourteen feet in length and about four feet wide. Its bottom is shaped like an inverted V, similar to that of the hydroplane, which allows it to ride high in the water. At the stern are two skate-like runners, and at the bow a single one to which a control lever is attached for guiding the craft when it is used as an ice boat. If the device shall do all that is claimed for it, it will render a valuable service in cold seasons and countries. In his mastery of the water, the ice, the air, and the earth, man illustrates the truth of the saying of the psalmist concerning him: "Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet." (Ps. 8: 6.)

Song Writer Dead

DR. William Howard Doane, scores of whose hymns have been sung in Sunday schools and churches all over the English-speaking world for many years, died the other day at the age of 83, leaving a wife and two daughters. Dr. Doane spent most of his life at Cincinnati, Ohio. He was at one time president of the Baptist Publication Society, and was prominently identified with the work of the Young Men's Christian Association. Early in life he became associated with the late Fanny Crosby, the blind poet. She wrote the words and he composed the music of many hymns, among them "Pass Me Not, O Gentle Saviour," "Though Your Sins Be As Scarlet," "Near the Cross," "Rescue the Perishing," "Draw Me Nearer," "Blessed Hour of Prayer," and hundreds more. Dr. Doane made hymns for many others. At the time of his death he was engaged in writing the music to a new hymn the title of which was to be: "At Evening Time It Shall Be Light." (Zech. 14: 7.)

Date Culture in America

THE Department of Agriculture at Washington in a recent report makes mention of date-raising as a new important industry in the southwest district of our country. Nearly every variety raised in any country has been imported and tried here. Whole nations use the date as the chief article of food. The date of our southland is the very same fruit held in such high esteem by the Hebrews, and furnishes this illustration of that which is highest, most fruitful and invigorating in the divine life: "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree." (Ps. 92: 12.)

Through Gates of Pearl

Augusta Albertson

AUTHOR'S FOREWORD

THE author distinctly disclaims any purpose or intention to set forth a new "revelation" as to the character of the world to come. The journey "Through Gates of Pearl" was purely mental. The beginning of it was a dream, much more complex and continuous than most dreams are. Indeed, the dream grew into a series of dreams or visions, following a protracted illness. During a long period of convalescence, in which the physical senses were dull and the spiritual senses of prayer and faith (the latter "a religious use of the imagination") were acute, with little of earthly care to occupy the thought, it is not strange that the mind wandered far into the realm of what may be.

The author is not unacquainted with books which purport to describe similar dreams or visions. She believes, however, that she is not indebted to any one of them for any suggestion as to what may lie beyond the hawthorn hedge of death. Rather, she is indebted first of all to Scriptural symbols by which inspired writers have sought to convey to human minds, without satisfying mere curiosity, some concrete notion of the reality and the beauty of the Father's many-mansioned Home. Next, she has borrowed freely from the hymnology and poetry of the Future Life such figures of speech as lend themselves to synthetic expansion. Finally, she has taken counsel of her musings in those sacred hours of grace-sustained sorrow in which the Spirit of God, the blessed Comforter, leads the submissive mind by streams of healing and into pastures of rest.

It is no violent act of the imagination to see pictures in the fire-light, castles and palaces in the sunset clouds, and cities on the mirage-haunted rim of the desert. The author does not mean to say that all that she has here described has no more solid foundation than in mere fancy. Heaven is no mirage of a fevered brain. The City of God, which we are bidden to seek, exists as certainly as New York or Paris or Peking. The Apostle John saw it, and a good portion of the last Book of the Canon is devoted to word-pictures of the place.

Augustine, amidst the wreck of an old civilization, dreamed his dream of the City of God. As earth grew dim before his eyes, its treasures turning to dust, its golden fruit to ashes, God comforted him with thoughts of the City immovable and eternal. As years go by, and age comes on, and the worn garment of the flesh, already threadbare at the fringes, rests more lightly upon the spirit, the soul, forever asking "What lies beyond this rim of silence and of dark?" is not without light and leading.

Of one thing we may be sure: that though our imagination may fail in attempting to put into words the visions of our most nearly inspired moments, the Spirit World, the Other Room, where the ascended Christ sitteth at the right hand of the Father, and where our Beloved are, "until the day break and the shadows flee away," is not less beautiful than human minds have pictured it. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." A. A.

CHAPTER II

WITHIN the gates, the upper and inner gate—for I had passed through two separate portals, the first of pearl and the second of gold, with the wide crystal stairway between—I knew myself to have entered the City of Light, the Home of the Redeemed.

Notwithstanding the innumerable host that had entered in the procession before me, I had, first of all, an impression of uncrowdedness. I had heard years ago of a saint on earth who exclaimed, in his meditations upon the Future Life, "What bounty, too, in heaven!" Now I knew what he meant. Vast spaces stretched away on every side. Yonder were meadows, through which ran brooks, flower-lined, with willows here and there over-arching the water. Not far from where I stood the brook widened into a lake on which I saw swans, "floating double, swan and shadow." A little distance above the lake, the brook deepened into a pool, at the edges of which children stood looking at their own images in the mirror-like surface. A boy and a girl were on their knees at the margin of the water launching a tiny ship, full-rigged. In the soft air birds of brilliant plumage flew to and fro. In the distance I saw mountain ranges, all clad with verdure save one, the highest, whose summits appeared snow-clad. The lower slopes of the mountains were terraced. Highways crossed the meadows. Perfectly arched bridges spanned the stream at various points. The one nearest me was of coral. Far to my left were hills, and over them hung a mellow haze. Hills rose in the distance at my right, and apparently a vast plateau lay beyond the hills.

The pilgrims who had entered just before me had broken up into smaller companies, and even into groups of three or four or five. Other companies and groups of people who had evidently been here before we entered mingled with the newcomers, and far away on mountain terrace and hillside were countless other companies. None seemed to hurry. Some were singing, though I could not catch their words. The laughter of the children at play was like music to my ears.

Bounty and beauty were here as I could see; immeasurable space, and ease of motion. "But," I wondered, "is liberty a law of life within this realm? Am I free to go whither I will?" My guide made no reply to my unspoken question as he had done before, but left me, and as if impelled by some mysterious power I moved towards a group of children playing by the brook. I stood and watched them for a while, and they did not resent my presence. Indeed, one of them at least seemed to welcome my coming. He approached me, and took my hand in the friendliest way, saying as he did so, "Have you come to stay?" I answered, "I do not know how long I shall stay, but I would like to remain with you a long time." "Are you tired?" he asked. I answered, "Not now; I do not feel weary, though I have been on a long journey; but I was quite worn out a little while ago." "Nobody ever gets tired here," he said, and left me. I wandered towards a tree in bloom. It was a variety of lilac, and filled the air with its characteristic odor. Not far away were two or three very young children who seemed to be under the care of a girl of sixteen. She was weaving wreaths of blossoms for her little charges, and never had I seen so perfect a picture of innocence and delight. Gold-finches, orioles, cardinals and all other sorts of beautiful birds flitted from tree to tree, and some songster I could not see was pouring out such a flood of melody as I have fancied only nightingales or meadow-larks or hermit thrushes are capable of.

MY child-friend presently returned, bearing in his hand a flowercup, brimful of water. He smiled and said, "I have brought it from the brook for you." I thanked him and drank it, and no fabled nectar could have been so satisfying. It was as if a lifelong thirst were quenched. "I plucked this, too, for you," said the child, and offered me a fruit utterly unlike anything I had ever seen. A friend in India has told me of the delightful flavor and taste of the plantain, and says it is impossible to give one who has never tasted it any adequate idea of its quality. There is a tradition that the manna which fell in the wilderness tasted to every Israelite who fed upon it exactly like the food which he liked best. It was so of this fruit. I am sure no grape that ever purpled under the skies of Italy, nor apple that crimsoned in the air of Oregon, nor peach that blushed beneath the kisses of the California sun, had half the lusciousness of this mysterious fruit.

The child left me again, and I wandered over to a tree of stately shape and dense foliage. Under its branches I sat down upon the grass. Looking up, the leaves were trembling in the breeze, and I thought of Sidney Lanier's words to the forest-leaves in his poem, "Sunrise."

"And there, O there,
As ye hang with your myriad palms uptur
in the air,
Pray me a myriad prayer."

The breezes, too, were odorous as though t came from over clover fields. And they w musical. At first I thought the music was p duced by the wind among the leaves, but I p ceived that the air itself, in motion, made in scribably soothing sounds, faint, but distin audible in the mid-meadow.

My child-guide joined me as I left the shac of the tree and we wandered here and there, r beside the brook, and now among great bed flowers; banks of flowers, perhaps I should s irregular in shape as the wild gardens of un tivated lands. I was curious to know m about life in this realm, and from our conve tion together I learned that this was the espe dwelling-place of children; that they were f to go whither they would, but that they ger ally preferred to remain here; elsewhere th were rivers deep and wide, and lakes of v extent, but here were brooks, and tiny wat falls—such things as are dear to childre hearts.

"Were you a country child in your ot life?" I asked. "Oh, no," my little compan replied; "I was born and lived in a crowded ci I played in the hot streets. One day, a lady t me to a park. It was beautiful there, but it v not so beautiful as this." "How long have y been here?" I inquired. He mused, "H long? That means time, doesn't it? There is time here. The sun never rises and never s It is always light except when we want it da I only know I had twelve birthdays in the la I came from, and though it seems to have bee long time ago that I passed through the Gate Pearl, I have had no birthdays since." While was talking a group of children called to him join them in their play, and he said, "I will lea you now; my brothers and sisters want me, a yonder comes the angel who brought you her

HE had scarcely finished speaking before t guide who had accompanied me from ea stood beside me. "Tell me more about tl child," I said; "tell me all you know about hi tell me about the other children here." I m not now recall everything he said; but, for t sake of parents who have lost children, and the sake of children who, like the little boy Annie Trumbull Slosson's story, "The boy tl was Skeert of Dyin'," are afraid of death, I will report the substance of his reply: "The child who has just left you once lived on your earth. His home was a London slum. He met his death —what you call death, by falling under the wheels of an omnibus. When he first came here, he did not say a word. Most children run and leap and cry aloud with joy to find themselves alive and in so fair a place. He really seemed afraid, and shrank from those who first approached him. He must have been accustomed to blows and oaths and evil treatment in his home. Half a century, as you measure time, he has been here. Other children of his parents have long been here, and he has just joined them, as you see. They who enter here as children do not always remain children, but there are always children here. Some who were old on earth soon grow young; age drops from them like a garment, and the scars of all earthly time are washed away in the River of Youth. Whether children grow up to maturity and whether the old grow young again at once depend upon their pleasure and the Father's will. The slum-child does not remember his hardships while he was in his fleshly body, though the effect of them was apparent when he first came here. There is a River of Merciful Oblivion, washing in which all memories of cruelty and crime become as though they had never been. Laws of development prevail, and so there are angelic teachers, heavenly instructors, celestial tutors. There are boundless opportunities for the exercise of gifts of teaching. Childless men and women find their dream-children here. Maidens with hearts of tenderness that fitted them for motherhood which was denied them in other worlds are privileged to minister to little ones who precede their mothers. Nothing necessary to complete the happiness of any soul is missing. The highest happiness comes from the exercise of the highest faculties. The one great word Opportunity might well be written as the law of all this sphere. You shall find artists here who never painted a picture in their earthly lives; sculptors who never put hand to marble; musicians who never touched a key or chord; builders who were never trusted even to lay foundation stones, and orators who never spoke a word before an audience. They find their hopes' fulfilment here. Here their dormant gifts unfold, their 'withheld completions' are fulfilled. If opportunity had been given them, they would have developed their powers in mortal spheres."

As he spoke, I recalled certain lines in Browning's "Christmas Eve and Easter Day," and marveled that I had not before recognized their almost superhuman prevision of the very fact to which my guide now alluded.

"If such his soul's capacities,
Even while he trod the earth,—think now
What pomp in Buonaroti's brow,
With its new palace-brain where dwells
Superb the soul, unvexed by cells
That crumbled with the transient clay!
What visions will his right hand's sway
Still turn to forms as still they burst
Upon him! How will he quench thirst,
Titanically infantine,
Laid at the breast of the divine?"

IMPRESSIVE as was every word my guide had spoken, and suggestive of a thousand thoughts I had not time to follow, nor have I now even to mention, what moved me most was a reference to those who had died on earth with all their dreams of love and life unrealized. Immediately I thought of a sister of my own, a gentle fair-haired girl whose earthly life had ended at seventeen. The thought of her had no sooner entered my mind than there flashed before me a vision more beautiful and soul-satisfying than any other I had seen within the Gates. Her name was on my lips, but something seemed to prevent my speaking it. It was as though the seal of silence must be unbroken here so far as speech concerned a relationship governing souls, one of whom was not yet a resident of this Country. The vision I saw—the form, the face, was no mere phantom; it was no dream-picture. There she stood, so near me I might have touched her. Her eyes were the same, her hair the same, and as I looked at her I thought of Rossetti's "Blessed Damozel."

My sister smiled on me and there was instantaneous exchange of thought without the medium of speech. It were not proper now, even were it possible, for me to say what incidents of our lives together this communication covered, what questions asked and answered, what long unuttered yearnings on my part were satisfied by mute yet intelligently conveyed assurances. She was the same in spirit as in form, and yet it was apparent to me that she had grown; that powers once latent in her had been awakened and exerted. She had been a serene soul on earth, but now there was a poise, a certain consciousness of power, an abundance of life, which on earth is seen only in characters we sometimes speak of as "ripened," and these we see, alas! too rarely. The vision was withdrawn. I recognized that it was given me rather as an earnest of the inheritance upon which I was not yet permitted to enter. The effect of the vision, however, has been incalculably consoling. I am now able to think of a certain mound in the old New London churchyard without a particle of sadness.

THE dream these chapters attempt to relate, the long strange journey I took, and the experiences which befell me in that Otherwhere, occurred at a time when the heart of Christendom was heavy because of famine in the Far East. I said to my guide, "Let me see the children coming in," and presently we stood at the right of another gate on the same side of the city as that through which I had entered, a gate of ivory, and saw throngs of angels entering, newly arrived from distant worlds.

All the angels' pictures I have ever seen represent them as men. These angels were women. Their faces were women's faces, and their arms were women's arms. They were white-robed and white-winged. Yet they did not appear to use their wings in motion. Every one carried in her arms something she covered with her wings. Just inside the gate I beheld innumerable wings unfolding, revealing the burdens they had concealed. The wings were violet-lined, and from each pair of arms there leaped the figure of a child. Spirit figures, I would call them, yet human in appearance. The cherubs in Raphael's "Transfiguration" are marvelously like the spirit-children of my dream. Medieval painters were fond of crowding the upper backgrounds of their pictures of the Holy Family with clouds of child-angels. Their conceptions of the spirit-world, while sometimes crude and sensuous, are not altogether grotesque. I would that I could paint the vision I now beheld. Yet no brush wielded by human hand, however cunning, could transfer to canvas the flowery grace which marked the movements of these messengers from earth, the softness of their pinions, or the beauty of their faces. Their deep eyes gleamed as with unfathomable, motherly tenderness. No mother with empty arms, aching for a touch of her lost darling, could ever weep again if she could see her treasure borne away in such arms, brooded over by such love.

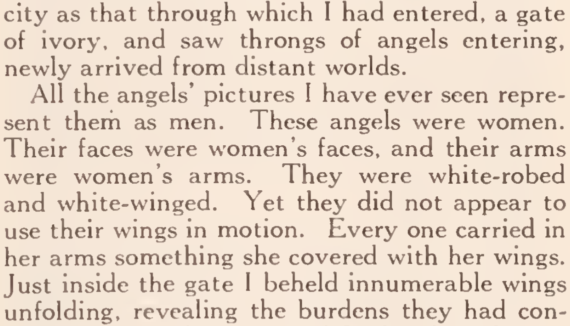
Out from the clasp of soft white arms and from the enfolding shelter of snowy wings, the children seemed not to leap, but rather to float, to fly. Perhaps I should say to flutter, as fledglings flutter from the home nest when they are just trying their wings.

AFTER he had officiated at the funerals of several children, Father Edward Taylor of Boston once said, "There must be a storm brewing, so many doves are flying aloft." The atmosphere about me, balmy as the breath of spring, was filled with sound of beating wings. Countless airy bodies cleft the sky above and around me. "Where are all these children from?" I asked the guide. He answered, "From all worlds where children live and die, and from all parts of your world. You have not yet learned the divinest of all arts—the art of taking care of the lives of your helpless little ones. Some of these who have just come to us are from the sun-baked plains of India; some from devastated villages in Armenia; some are starvelings from city slums; many never saw the light of earth, but perished at the wish of those to whom their birth would have been unwelcome." "Do all the children who come here enter by this gate?" I asked. "Not all," he said; "there are children who enter through the Martyr Gate."

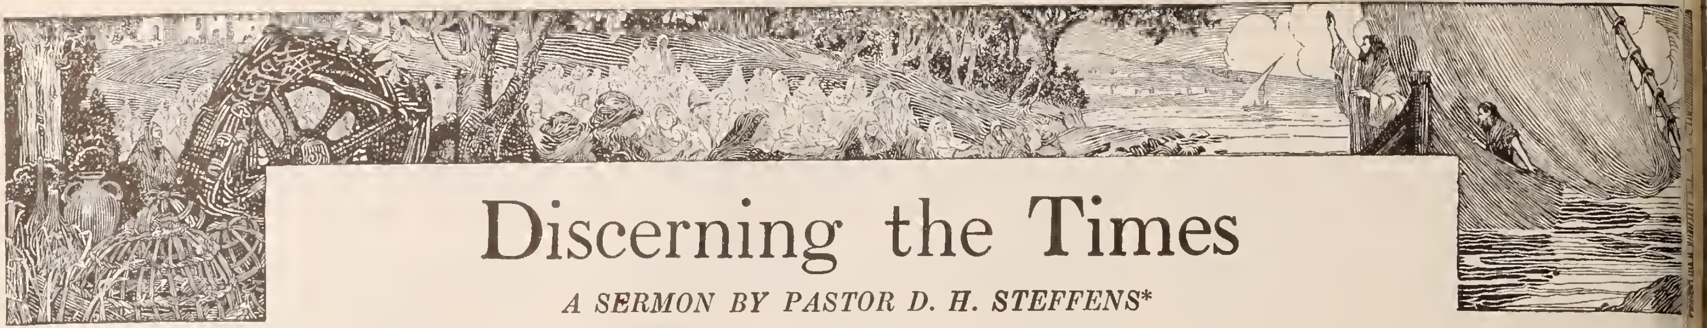
It began to be clear to me that the City had many gates. I hoped I might be permitted to remain until I saw them all, for it was borne in upon me that I was but a visitor in this realm; that I did not belong here permanently, but that I was having some such a vision as Paul had when, for a time, he was "out of the body," or such as Dante's dream of Paradise. My heart prompted me, however, to follow the flight of the countless children whose arrival I had just witnessed. Far away the horizon seemed void of winged figures such as filled the air near me. Were the doves fluttering down? Had the nestlings alighted on the ground? I moved toward the hills, and soon saw that the children had settled down in various places. Some were running and leaping; some had joined hands in circles as in certain old-fashioned games; some were plucking flowers, and others eating fruits from trees whose branches bent so low as almost to touch the ground. A burst of music caused me to look in the direction of a mountain range with purple-tinted slopes and snowy crests, and I saw an approaching company of men and women. They held out their hands beckoningly to the children, and in response the little ones shouted and ran to meet them.

I perceived that the arrival of children in heaven resembles, in some respects, birth into the mortal life. The child of love and tender care is not only looked for when he enters life; gentle hands and solicitous hearts prepare the welcome. So the new arrival in the realm of the immortal life finds waiting friends.

The gentleness and indulgence of grandparents are proverbial. "Surely," I thought, "some of these who have come to welcome the children are those who knew and loved them on earth, and who preceded them here." My guide assured me it was so, and even while he spoke there passed before me a group in which it was quite obvious that a grandmother had taken charge of her own grandchild, and that, whether or not they had ever seen one another in the flesh, both were supremely happy now. My guide pointed to another group, and said, "Yonder is a father who left the earth-life before his child was born. So the child was born an orphan. They are together now. They will await the mother's coming."



(To be continued)



Discerning the Times

*A SERMON BY PASTOR D. H. STEFFENS

TEXT: Luke 12: 56. "Ye hypocrites! ye can discern the face of the sky and of the earth; but how is it that ye do not discern this time?"

GOOD old Matthew Henry says of this text: "Having given his disciples their lesson in the foregoing verses, here Christ turns to the people, and gives them theirs. 'He said also to the people.' He preached ad populum—to the people, as well as ad clerum—to the clergy. In general, he would have them be as wise in the affairs of their souls as they are in their outward affairs."

He is preaching ad populum and ad clerum today. He would have us be as wise in the affairs of our souls as we are in our outward affairs. To that end, it is our supreme duty to try and discern the spiritual import of the present time; to conjecture what will be from what has been; to take notice in order that we may give notice; to learn to discern the way of God toward us, that we may heed its warnings and seize upon the blessings of our time.

Men have always endeavored to discern times and seasons. When the people of Christ's day saw a cloud rise out of the west, they were reasonably sure of a shower; for observation and experience had taught them to look for rain from the winds sweeping toward their country from the Mediterranean Sea. When they felt the south wind blow, they said, "There will be heat," for observation and experience had taught them to look for heat from the winds sweeping toward their country from the hot deserts of Arabia and Africa. An agricultural people, they used these forecasts to govern themselves in their everyday affairs. While they might now and then make a mistake—for nature does not always move in a beaten track—they ordinarily profited by their observations. But they made the great mistake of not applying the same care and diligence in the discernment of spiritual things. Hence our Lord's charge: "Ye hypocrites! ye can discern the face of the sky and the earth; but how is it that ye do not discern this time?" Had they studied the writings of their prophets, they might have known that it was time for their Messiah to come, and that according to the marks given of him, he had actually appeared and stood in the midst of them. Now was their accepted time; now was their day of grace. But they knew him not. They knew not the day of their gracious visitation. They miserably failed to avail themselves of their opportunities. With all their shrewdness and foresight in worldly affairs, they made no effort to discern the spiritual import of their time, and thus were guilty of a folly which wrought irreparable ruin unto their entire generation.

WE have gone far beyond those people in our efforts to discern the face of the sky and the earth. Assisted by the invention of most delicate and exact instruments, as well as by the records of widely extended and long-continued observations, the organization of our meteorological and weather bureaus under governmental direction enables us to publish weather forecasts of surprising accuracy for the benefit of the nation. Storm signals give timely notice to the mariner of impending danger, and daily bulletins assist the farmer in planning his work. Telegraph, telephone and wireless combine to make this exeeedingly valuable information so universally available that we almost unconsciously look up the local weather forecasts of the daily newspaper.

Crop and market reports are handled in the same way. Long before the new crop is harvested accurate estimates of probable yields are published for the benefit of those whose business has to do with these things. We do the same thing in the field of politics. Reading the signs of the times and making political forecasts, men enter into combinations and agreements, frame treaties and foster or annul national and international relations. In all of these things, men today show remarkable shrewdness and energy, and we are prone to point to the success attending our efforts to discern the times in nature, business, or politics as an evidence of increasing civilization, and a consequent improvement of man's lot in this world. But with all of that, it does not appear that we are any wiser than those men of our Lord's day, who were content to discern the face of the sky and the earth without ever making any serious effort to discern the spiritual import of the portentous time in which they were privileged to live, and whose slothful indifference invited the charge of hypocrisy from the lips of him who is eternal Truth.

This time of ours is big with portentous events. Now what are men discussing? As I read our newspapers, I read only of the necessity of increased armament and improved national defense; of new fields for trade, inviting exploitation; of the urgent necessity of our promptly building a large merchant marine; of the advisability of our securing ourselves against industrial competition after the war; of the interest of certain belligerent nations. It may be as wise and innocent that we should discuss these things as it was for the men to whom Christ addressed this rebuke to discuss the weather. But if we stop there as they stopped, how can we hope to escape the scathing rebuke of hypocrisy addressed to them? They concerned themselves only with the time as it affected this present life. They acted as if the finding of an answer to the question: "What shall we eat? What shall we drink? Wherewithal shall we be clothed?" were the great end of all existence. They thus placed themselves on the level of the Gentiles who know not God and ask only after material things. Meanwhile they claimed to be children of God and heirs of his spiritual kingdom, to whose ways and affairs they never gave a thought. Surely, hypocrisy could go no farther.

IS this what we are doing, discerning the time as it may affect our material interests, rather than as it bears upon the great interests of the Church of God? Have you heard any serious discussion of the probable effect of this present time of stress and struggle upon the great world-problem of missions, in the advancement of which the churches of Britain and Germany, with united forces, led the world? Have we asked ourselves how we propose to meet the general religious and moral decline which in the past has been the invariable accompaniment of war, and its dissolution of the bonds which ordinarily hold men in restraint? Have our churches in America given any earnest consideration to the great questions of public morality arising out of our relations with the nations engaged in the frightful conflict? Have we given any sober, earnest thought to the religious problems bound to confront us in connection with the immigration e ing our ports after the war? Above all, have we h bly and prayerfully asked ourselves what may be way of our God toward us at this moment, and these present calamities may tend to advance interests of his kingdom and hasten the final ad of his Son? Have we tried earnestly and sincerel "discern this time?" Or have we permitted ourse to drift, slothfully content to follow the discuss of the people who write impassioned letters for correspondence columns of our newspapers?

But you will ask: "How shall we discern this ti How shall we consider and discuss these great p lems? Who is sufficient for these things?" I k but one answer: In the light of the Word of ("For whatsoever things were written for our learn that we through patience and comfort of the S tures might have hope." The men of our Lord's failed to discern their time and its spiritual im because they knew not Moses and the propl This was Christ's charge against them: "Had believed Moses ye would have believed me, fo wrote of me." Failing in that, they failed to k their Messiah and the time of his coming. T forever lost their opportunity to secure themselves the glorious privileges of his spiri kingdom.

I therefore hold that there can be no true discer of our time, or any other time, save as we use infallible Word of God as the measure and interpr of all time. It is given us for this purpose. "Hea and earth," says our Lord, "shall pass away, but words shall not pass away." They shall abide, imn able in the face of fluctuating human opinion, un tain scientific statement and ever-changing experie No wonder David says: "Thy testimonies are delight and my counselors." To ignore them and to "discern the time" is as futile an effort as the cerning of "the face of the sky and the earth" wit a thermometer and barometer.

LET us, therefore, in our efforts to discern spiritual import of this time, use this stand applying its eternal principles in measurement o perplexing movements and in the solution of baffling problems. Let men talk of "efficien "success," "humanity," "civilization" and "Kult as measures and standards. None of them are in lible. All of them are misleading. But our stan is ever true and ever right, the "impregnable roc Holy Scripture." "For the Word of God is q and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sw piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul spirit, and of joints and marrow, and is a discern the thoughts and intents of the heart." It is G rule of judgment. "The word that I have spoken, same shall judge him in the last day." Should it be ours? As we simply and faithfully apply inspired teachings to all the affairs and relation life, so shall we be enabled to "discern this tin and the gracious designs toward us of our (Then, in the face of his most unsearchable judgm and his inscrutable ways, we shall more and more l to admire the divine wisdom of Him who overr all things for the good of his people, and bow d with adoration to say: "For of him, and thro him, and to him, are all things; to whom be gl forever. Amen."

---

*Pastor, Martini Evangelical Lutheran Church, Baltimore, Md.

Among the Workers

WHEN a committee of five began the selection of an evangelist to lead a campaign in Asheville, N. C., several weeks ago, every member had been on his knees in prayer. After a brief conference, they extended the invitation to Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman and Charles M. Alexander. The revival has been a great success. On the closing day, there were four great meetings. The final messages brought many to the front. Among the converts during the campaign were the sheriff of the county, the chief of police, the captain of police, and many policemen. There were more than 2,000 professed conversions. Hundreds are being taken into the churches.

EVANGELIST A. G. VOIGHT of Cheyenne, Wyo., has just closed two meetings, one at West Hill and the other at Lookingglass Methodist Churches, Neb. Between sixty and seventy made confession of faith at each of these meetings. Both communities were deeply stirred. The evangelist began a four weeks' campaign at Genoa, Neb., November 14.

THE Fife Brothers, evangelists, are now conducting a series of meetings at Eureka, Calif. On the first day of invitation two hundred and eighteen made public confession of faith.

EVANGELIST G. E. FERGUSON, now minister at Broken Bow, Neb., reports a growing work in church and Bible school. At a recent consecration service, twelve young men and women offered themselves for definite Christian service, and were organized into Gospel teams to carry the Gospel message where there are no Sunday schools, and to help the weaker churches in the country.

"MANY of the brethren in the ministry are talking foolishness just now with reference to the European war," said Dean Gray of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, in addressing the ministers of the Federated Churches of Seattle, Wash., last week. "They are trying to relate the awful conflict to the modern view of the world, to the history of civilization, and especially to the preaching of Christianity during the two millenniums, and they are not only talking foolishness, but causing other people to do the same." Dr. Gray was pleading for a more Biblical ministry, and especially that ministers should make the exposition of the Scriptures the staple of their pulpit work.

MRS. ANNA UNDERHILL MEIGHAN, daughter of the late Hon. John Quincy Underhill of New Rochelle, N. Y., was married at New Rochelle on December 20 to Ira Allan Sankey, son of the late well-known evangelist. They are now on an extended trip to the West Indies and South America.

THE series of conventions of the Laymen's Missionary Movement is continuing with growing power; 1,643 men were enrolled as delegates to the Detroit convention, 94 Wheeling, 1,607 at St. Louis, 2,151 at Cl land and 738 at Denver. The Third Ba Church of St. Louis had 115 men in convention. From Cincinnati comes this port: "The convention has shown churches what they can accomplish thr cooperation. It has proven to our lay that they constitute a mighty phalanx. has helped them to realize the enormous ergy which they can develop when joine one body. All of our churches have rece new life. Echo meetings are being h Men's organizations have been revived."

THE Board of Directors and Trustee the Abigail Free School and Kin garten, New York City, during 1915 provi 21,593 meals for the poor children of preparatory department. The officers Major H. B. Smith, president; Captain Jos H. Barker, vice-president; and Mrs. E. Devare, widow of the founder, general m ager.

Daily Meditation

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY

J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

The Life that Has No Morning

SUNDAY, January 23. Isa. 8: 20. "If they speak not according to this word, surely there is no morning for them." If a man build not according to the plumb-line, there cannot dawn upon him the gl y of a finished pile. If a man despise the plumb-li, his work will not issue in a shining temple but in a li al rubbish-heap. Even in architecture there is no n ning for the disobedient: there is only the darkness of utility and disorder. The rebellious builder, who ds as he pleases, is assuredly moving toward chaos ar night. And if a man build not his life according o he divine Word, there will be for him no morning of right and finished achievement. The trend of his la is toward a miserable sunset and not toward the n ning star and the things of the perfect day. When one is well and truly laid it is sealed with the promise of glory; when it is laid in iniquity it is sealed with h assurance of doom.

Light is sown for the righteous!" It is God, who sa , "Let there be light," who still makes all our n nings; and it is only when our wills are buried in will that we become the children of promise, the nise of a wonderful dawn. There are some people v are most evidently and conspicuously people with orning! It is not a matter of wealth or poverty: t a matter of spirit, and attitude, and relation: and can clearly see that they are stepping eastward, and r faces are even now catching the first flush of the n. And there are others who are quite as evitly people without a morning. When we think of m, or look upon them, when we consider their le and manner of life, we think of twilight and ning bell, of sunset and coming night. Their little e will be played out today; quite played out!

he man who builds on falsehood has no morning. nation that builds on falsehood has no morning. truth alone that belongs to the dawn, and has the nise of the day. Falsehood belongs to the dark-, and in darkness and dissolution it will find its pointed end. "For yet a little while, and the wicked l not be." . . . "But he shall make thy righteous- go forth as the light, and thy judgment as the nday." J. H. J.

Members of God's Household

MONDAY, January 24. Isa. 56: 1-12. "The strangers that join themselves to the Lord." Evidently this refers to the Gentiles, who are described in he very terms by the apostle in Eph. 2: 12. He ers to them (i. e., to us) as strangers from the covenants of promise. The one condition with which we n t all comply is union with Christ. Our own movement toward him in repentance and faith is specially phasized: but in Acts 2:47 we learn that the adding e direct act of the Lord himself. But on whichever the emphasis is laid, the result is the same. It is as hgh the partition-wall between the heart of the ever and his Lord was broken down, and the two le one compartment, pervaded by one Spirit—the it of Jesus.

he further description, which ought to apply to us is extremely beautiful. It is fourfold. 1. They ister unto Him, i. e., they live their life and perform varied duties with their faces always toward their d, and everything is done with a Christward aspect, o him. 2. They love His name, i. e., his honor is ious to them, and they would suffer any pain and rather than see it tarnished. 3. They keep the bath, i. e., they observe the rest of God into which enter in this life. Their souls are pervaded by a batic calm, a peace that passeth understanding. hey hold fast the covenant, i. e., they deal with God he assured ground of his eternal purposes of grace. d if this is their character, their portion is painted h immortal colors. They are brought to mountains ision; they are made joyful as constituent mems of God's house of prayer, and they are gathered the family of the saints. These are rare privis. They are ours in Christ, but let us possess and oy them. F. B. M.

The Beauty of Holiness

TUESDAY, January 25. I Chron. 16: 29. "Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness." This is a e out of David's psalm of thanksgiving, his command to the people for the festival of worship and ise. To find out beauty of some kind is to find the clue of life. Some seek it in outward beauty, color, sound, words or form; others in beauty of character, in high-souled and generous living. Arthur Benson has said: "Beauty of every kind is of the nature of a signal to us of some mighty power behind and in the world." Goethe said, "The beautiful is the good."

Beauty that is associated with holiness—what is that? In the Bible, holiness is a word often used interchangeably with health or wholeness. It signifies wide circles; it has a large sweep of meaning. This kind of beauty is not imprisoned in a prayer book; it is not confined to rituals and altar-clothes; it is not a priestly garment merely, nor a pious canticle. The beauty of holiness in which we are told to worship Jehovah is the quality of admiration of and association with all things reflecting the glory of God's creation. Art contributes to it; so does nature. Books and friends of high resolves and kindly hearts, birds and flowers and sweet music and acts of men that cover not a lie—these all weave for us the garment of praise, these all add notes to the great symphony with which we are to hymn the divine praise.

God wants all creatures and all things to praise him. He is unrestricted. My daily task if it is well done is beautiful in his eyes; it is a daily sacrament. My heroism is a fragment of this beauty song. The smiles that shine through my tears, the outstretched hand to the unfortunate, the love that wounds not another's feelings—these clothe me in the radiant robes of beauty. C. S. C.

The Path of Suffering the Road to Glory

WEDNESDAY, January 26. John 18: 39–19: 16. "And Pilate saith unto them, Behold the man." The Roman had watched many men, who had come through the awful ordeal of scourging, when the heavy-weighted leaden scourge had torn the frail body of the victim; but never before had he seen any bear himself as this Sufferer did. In others the humanity seemed crushed out of them by the terrible pain and horror; but in the case of Jesus, not only was he not disgraced, but his manhood shone radiantly through the suffering, ennobling and transfiguring it. Almost involuntarily he cried, Behold the Man, who must be more than man, since his manhood transcends his pain.

Throughout the centuries that have followed, that remark of the Roman judge has expressed the wonder of mankind. What a man is this! He has made the cross of shame the emblem which controls and inspires our loyalty. He has inspired myriads to tread the Via Dolorosa with light upon their faces and deep joy in their hearts. The Via Crucis has become the Via Lucis. The great claims he made before Pilate, so far from being discredited, have been vindicated. We know that he could not have been so much man, unless he had been more. We understand that he need not have suffered, but that he loved us too well not to drink our cup and be baptized with our baptism. He was meek and passive under his suffering not because he was helpless and defenseless, but because there was a voluntary hiding of his power. He was dumb, except when he must vindicate his origin as Son of God. It is his matchless honor to be the crowned king of the empire of suffering that he might make it possible for man to ascend by the cross to his Throne.

F. B. M.

The Encircling Love and Loyalty of Mother

THURSDAY, January 27. Gen. 3: 20. "And the man called his wife's name Eve; because she was the mother of all living." Barrie once described a lady by saying, "She had a mother's face." It is a magic name—Mother! No word in Anglo-Saxon has such power of suggestion; none is so packed with divine emotion. It is not strange that the name is associated with the Bible.

Your own mother may have been a humble workingwoman in a cottage; while now you may be a learned man, dwelling in a palace. It matters not—her power and influence remain. Why did Lincoln say, "All that I am and all that I hope to be, I owe to my angel mother?" Why do we remember the songs she sang? Why are her words still ringing in our ears, as clearly as if they had been spoken but yesterday? Why do we compare all womankind to that early model?

"There's a simple rural cottage that looks out across the sea;
There's a rose-bush by the doorway, and a crooked apple tree;
By the rose-bush, little Mater (so we called her)
always sat;
She called the spot her heaven, so I like to think of that."

It is because she possessed the eternal qualities of the lasting universe—love and goodness. She embodied elements that never die. When others scorned and abandoned us, she remained loyal. She covered our mistakes with a golden cloud of sympathy. She hid our failings in the folds of her long-suffering garments. She taught us that to be truly great is to be simply kind.

He who has known such unfailing affection finds it easier to understand what Jesus meant when he said, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." C. S. C.

When Paul Went to Prison

FRIDAY, January 28. II Tim. 4: 9-22. "Especially the parchments." This verse has been treated by some as unworthy of the high level of this chapter. But that surely is a mistake. We could ill spare it, because of the light it casts on the last sad days of the great apostle. Probably all his earthly belongings are summed up in this inventory. The fact of their having been left at the house of Carpus may point to the suddenness of his arrest. When Rome was burned, and Nero laid the blame on the Christians, his emissaries were only too eager to collect the representatives of the hated sect, and would give Paul short shrift. Winter was coming on. The Mamertine prison, in which he was confined, was a very different place to his own hired house; and he longed for the cloak, which perhaps he had woven for himself out of the goat's hair of Cilicia. It had probably been his companion through many of his long and arduous journeys, and many a time he had slept warm beneath its coverlet.

But even more he missed his books. What were these? The suggestion has been made that they were the precious rolls of Isaiah, the Psalms, or other portions of the Old Testament, which he had carried as a life-long treasure, not only for their intrinsic worth, but because they were the gifts of his converts or friends, procured at great cost. What a joy it would be to have them with him through the long days and nights of his imprisonment! The parchments may have included his own Epistles, or some of those earliest records of our Saviour's life that began to circulate in those days, and laid the basis of the Gospels as we have them. He did not complain, though this was all that remained to him. He once more calls Timothy to catch the torch which falls from his hand, and show himself a good soldier of Christ. Have we ever come within measurable distance of that life of sacrifice for Christ? F. B. M.

The Power that Changes Sorrow to Joy

SATURDAY, January 29. John 16: 20. "Your sorrow shall be turned into joy." Jesus at the last was a great disappointment to his disciples. He was going away when they wanted him to remain. He promised to send the Comforter; but him they did not know and could not see, and therefore they did not wish to change leaders. They longed for a temporal kingdom at Jerusalem, where the disciples could be the chief actors in the government. They could not then understand what he meant by a spiritual kingdom, or about dying on the cross for the world. These things, instead of looking expedient, appeared disastrous; but afterward their sorrow was turned into joy. Then were the disciples glad when the grave could not hold him, when he came forth glorified and triumphant from the grasp of death. When they could not find the body in the grave, they found Christ in their midst, saying, "Peace be unto you!" "Tarry ye in Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." "Go ye into all the world." These once terrified, disappointed disciples surrendered Jesus joyously to the angelic attendants on Mount Olivet, from whence he ascended to glory. On their way back to Jerusalem, they believed that he would come again in brighter glory and bring them into his heavenly kingdom.

On the day of Pentecost prayer was changed to praise, weakness to power, fear to faith, when they were filled with joy unspeakable and full of glory. Should we not consider all our disappointments his appointments, working out for our good and his glory? E. W. C.

The Bible Students of India

THE Bible, which has been touching the life of students through many different agencies, is doing much to destroy the system of caste which for centuries has blocked the progress of India.

A professor in one of the cities which I visited invited a number of Bible students to his home for a social evening. There were present both Hindu and Mohammedan university men. When refreshments were served, the professor prepared two tables, in accordance with the usual custom, since the Hindu students were not expected to touch food which had been offered to those not of their own faith. It chanced that the Hindu students ate all of their cakes, and, being still hungry, inadvertently remarked to their host that they would not object to a second helping. After investigation, the professor found that all the cakes had been served; whereupon the Hindu students, perceiving that there were still refreshments remaining upon the tables where the Mohammedan young men had been eating, suggested that the Mohammedans' cakes would be quite satisfactory. The professor, astonished, said, "But you are Hindus." The answer came from a bright-faced Brahman of high social position: "We have changed our view somewhat in relation to this matter as we have studied together the principles of the Founder of Christianity concerning his social order."

TO learn English is a craze in the East today. It is the open door into government position, the acme of student ambition in India. It is often a surprise to Westerners to find that the lectures in government colleges in India are delivered in English. It was my privilege to speak in most of the great student centers in the Indian Empire, and in no case was I asked to use an interpreter. Indeed, it is an insult to infer that an educated Hindu or Mohammedan does not understand English.

This pride of language was amusingly displayed at one of our student meetings. It is a habit in some cities for men to go out and come in during lectures, according to their own sweet will. The confusion which this moving about occasions is a matter of utter disregard to them. A veteran educator who lectures much in the East had learned how to remedy this annoyance. At the very beginning of the meeting he announced in a bold voice that all students who did not understand English might feel free to go out at any time. The result was gratifying and inevitable. Every student remained steadfastly in his seat, feigning great interest, even if he had it not, until the very end of the lecture.

The Bible is studied in English by Indian university students. This is true of both curriculum Bible study, which usually exists daily in the Christian colleges, and also in the small voluntary classes held in clubs and hostels. While this book has been translated into the majority of the four hundred and five or more separate languages and dialects of India, college men usually choose the English version. Indeed, many students enter the Bible classes with the sole object of learning to read and speak better English.

MEMORABLE among the vivid impressions of a visit which I made to the students of the East is a scene in the large government university in the city of Lahore, in northern India. An audience of five hundred Hindu, Mohammedan, and Parsee students had gathered to debate a critical question in educational circles: "Resolved, that religious education should be inaugurated in the government schools of India." Seated upon the platform were English professors and Brahman teachers, with some adherents of the reform movements of the Arya and Brahmo-Samaji. No one could have looked into the faces of those students, keenly alert and highly intelligent, without feeling that in such men resides the inherent and potential hope of the new India.

I had been asked to join with a Mohammedan student in leading the affirmative side of the debate. It was surprising to note the lack of interest shown in the negative. In short, the high-caste Brahman who led the negative side wh pered to me before rising that he lieved in our side of the question, a was speaking only in order to make t debate possible. When my colleag the Mohammedan student, cried out great earnestness, "We are not satisf to be graduated from these governm schools merely as intellectual exper we demand an education in religio the assembly of students rose to th feet and greeted the sentiment with plause that fairly shook the building

I said to a Hindu professor who by me, "What is the reason for this accountable feeling which seems to sweeping the convictions of these lege men?"

In reply, he explained to me that educated men of India, in their awak ing to new responsibility for individu social and political reform, were gra ing, with almost feverish zeal, every fluence which had helped to shape progressive civilizations of the We Furthermore, he added: "You m remember that the students of In have inherited a religious consciousn They know the Bible as thoroughly not more thoroughly, than any sac book of Hinduism. They need o leadership to make this movement the intelligent study of the English Bi one of the most popular and profita branches of Indian education."

CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPE

Charting Alaskan Seas

How Our Coast Survey Is Exploring Them for Pinnacle Rocks. Continuing Frank G. Carpenter's Story of Alaska.

Copyright, 1916, by Frank G. Carpenter

Death Valley of the Pacific

I ROSE at 4 o'clock this morning to go out with one of the wire drag crews that are exploring the main channels of southern Alaska for pinnacle rocks. Our boat was the steamer Equator, the tiny craft upon which Robert Louis Stevenson made his tour through the South Sea Islands, and we had a second vessel, a little tug called the Roosevelt, to carry the other end of the wire. It takes two boats to operate the wire drag. They move along on each side of the channel, and carry with them, far down under the water, so far that the deepest ship that sails the course could not be caught by it, a taut strand of telephone wire. This wire sweeps the channel. It is so balanced by weights and buoys that it moves through the water as the boats go onward until it catches some rock that reaches above the depth for which it is gauged. The depth we used today was about fifty feet, and our boats steamed slowly along without striking a pinnacle.

But before I describe the wonderful workings of our Coast Survey ships let me give you some idea of the seas of Alaska, which our Department of Commerce is trying to make safe for the hundreds of ships that go north and south every season. These waters are sometimes called the graveyard of the Pacific. They are among the most dangerous parts of the ocean. Within the past sixty years three hundred vessels have gone down upon their rocks, and cargoes and lives are lost every season. I have before me a list of fifty vessels, ranging in value up to $300,000, which have been sunk since we took possession of the territory, and there are many others that have suffered great damage, but have still gone on their way. The California, which was lost in 1913, carried down with her thirty-one men and a cargo of $300,000.

The Tahoma, a revenue cutter lost in 1914, was worth a quarter of a million dollars, and within recent years the losses in property alone are estimated at more than $8,000,000. The loss in lives has been more than five hundred, all told.

Nevertheless, the travelers increase in number every season. Last year they were about 50,000, and they will soon be doubled and trebled. The cargoes are worth more from year to year. There are ships now going by Ketchikan that have each more than a half million dollars' worth of copper ore on board, and single cargoes worth a million dollars are brought down every season. When the new government railroad from Seward to Fairbanks is completed there will be a caravan of tourists moving back and forth from Alaska, and the seas must be made more safe in order that the territory may be opened to traffic.

Alaska's Fringe of Submerged Mountains

The Crew of the McArthur, Captain Quillian at Right

Have you any idea of the extent of the Alaska coast line? The shores of the territory are washed by three great oceans. These are the Arctic Ocean on the north, Bering Sea on the west and the Pacific on the south. The Aleutian Islands, off the Alaska Peninsula, are separated from each other and the mainland by a network of rocky straits, and much of southwestern and southeastern Alaska is made up of mountainous islands that have rocks of all shapes and sizes. The islands are really the tops of mountains half lost in the waters. They rise in spires and cathedrals, some of which are thousands of feet above the water and others hidden beneath it, lying there concealed and ready to rip open the hulls of ships as the iceberg ripped the Titanic.

The extent of the Alaska coast, with its windings, surpasses that of the United States proper. It greater than that of all our states on the Pacific fr Puget Sound to the boundary of Mexico, added that of our states on the Atlantic, including the G All told, it is more than 26,000 miles long, or lon than the distance around the world at the Equat and in proportion to its length it has perhaps m dangers than any other coast line on earth.

Nevertheless, not one-half of it has yet been sounc by the Coast Survey vessels, and more than half of general coast line is not marked lights or by any aids to navigati As to the rivers, there is not a light mark on the great winding Yukon cept at its mouth, and it is the same its many navigable tributaries. was only last year that the Dep ment of Commerce opened up navigable channel of the Kuskokw That river is the second in size of rivers of Alaska. It is nine m wide at the mouth, and is now na gable for 600 miles inland. The co surveyors have spent the past open seasons in charting its wat and the great Kuskokwim Valley now been opened by them to navi tion. In surveying the delta wit an area of 100 square miles someth like 14,000 soundings were taken.

The lighthouse service of Ala leaves a great deal to be desired. first buoy was floated in 1884 and first light erected ten years la There are now on the whole Alas coast line only 329 aids to navigati and these include about one hund and forty lights, of which twenty-ei were established in 1915. There but few lighthouses, and only three the main travel route from Icy St to Nome, a distance as far as fr New York to London.

At the present time the government is awake to dangers of Alaskan navigation. It was only year that President Wilson called attention to necessity of exploring the waters and erecting lig houses, and today Secretary Redfield of the Depa ment of Commerce has a number of new moveme to that effect under way. He is constructing a fi class coast light on Cape St. Elias. This lightho is being erected on the south end of the island Kayak, one of the most important points on the G of Alaska. It is where the boats, after leaving Inside Passage, pass on their way into Prince Willi Sound and Seward, the terminus of our new railro The lighthouse is to cost $115,000. It will rise nin fet above the level and will be eipped with a lamp of 180,000 cdlepower, which can be seen nre than fifteen miles away. · The lit is a double flash which bursts fch every twenty seconds.

Taking Observations from the Bridge of the McArthur

The government is building sevel new vessels for the improvemnt of the Alaskan waters. One othese is to be for the lighthouse svice, and it will be ready for wrk in May, 1916. It is being estructed at Long Beach, Calif. Iis to be called the Cedar. The bt will be a double-bottomed sooner-rigged vessel 200 feet long, trty-six feet wide, and with a dplacement of 1,750 tons. It will dw thirteen feet of water, and hve a speed of twelve knots an hur. It will be constructed of sel throughout. It will be lighted b electricity, and will have a radio ofit of the most modern type.

Secretary Redfield is having a nw Coast Survey vessel built on t Great Lakes especially for the Askan waters. The boat will be tken down the lakes out into the Aantic Ocean, and by way of the Pnama Canal to Alaska. It will be called the Survor, and will take the place of some of the old tubs, kown as the Coast Survey vessels, now in the service.

Another government ship which will be i Alaska next season will be devoted to the ptection of fishing rather than of navigatn. This is the Roosevelt, the vessel nde famous by Peary in his north polar eplorations.

The Coast Survey at Work

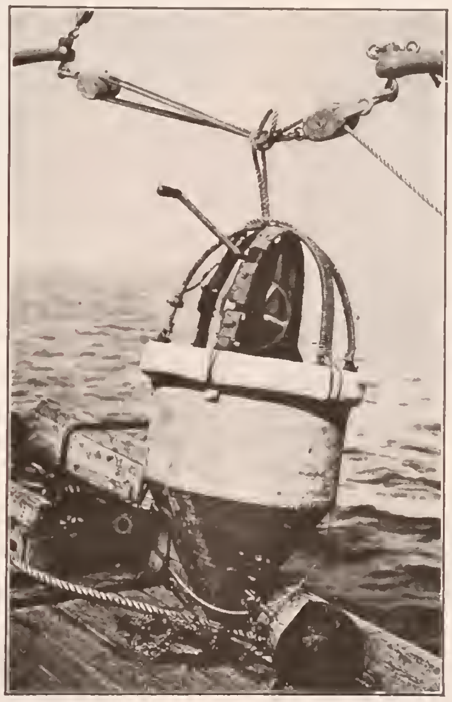
So far, the Coast Survey has charted oy about half of the waters of Alaska. Te area to be surveyed is bigger than the ste of Texas, and the amount already snded is only a little larger than the state o Missouri. I had no idea of the work ruired to explore and mark the waters of t ocean until I came to Ketchikan. This i the headquarters of the Coast Survey svice for Alaska, and there are several sps now engaged in work in the waters nr here. I went out yesterday on the MArthur, which has been making surveys i the Tongass Narrows, and in and about Pnce of Wales Island. The McArthur i one of the older ships in the service. It ws built in 1876 to survey the bar off San Fancisco Bay, and has been in the Coast Survey wrk ever since. Its commander is Captain C. T. Gillian, a native of Georgia, who has been connected wh the Coast Survey since 1902. It was beside ln that I watched them charting the ocean.

In the Coast Survey work it is necessary to ascertn the exact depth and character of every foot of te channel over which the ships are to sail. This i done by dropping heavy pieces of lead, to which pno wire is attached, down to the bottom. The wre runs around a reel or drum on board ship, and is so fine that it moves out like a thread as the lead sks quickly to the bed of the sea. The drum has mchinery connected with the engine, and the lead cn be drawn up and the exact depth automatically rgistered.

The work goes so fast that from ten to twenty sundings are taken in an hour, the lead rising and fling like clockwork. The boat has to stop for two mnutes when each sounding is taken. I took out y watch and timed the lead as it rose and fell. It tok only one minute and a half to go from the boat t the bed of the sea and back. When it returned i brought with it gravel and shells, showing the caracter of the bottom of the ocean, 500 feet below. The lead is smeared with grease in order that it may ctch the gravel.

The depths of the ocean vary greatly, and the Coast Srvey ships make many soundings that are 1,000 ad upward of feet in depth. They often explore wters a mile deep, and just off the shore of our island o Guam they have made deep-sea soundings as far blow the level of the ocean as Mount Everest is hgh above it. All of the soundings taken have to be crrected for the rise and fall of the tides. On board the McArthur the surveyors used sextants and took observations to determine just where they were and to aid them in surveying the waters.

Captain Daniels and Mr. Carpenter on the Wire Drag Steamer Equator



One of the Buoys that Uphold the Wire Drag. The Drag is Raised and Lowered by Windlass

Surveying like this has been already done in the Alaskan waters over a territory as big as the state of Missouri. In some parts of this area the waters have been tested at every few feet, and you can tell the exact depth over which your ship has to sail. In other places the soundings are far apart, it having been taken for granted that there was no change in the bed of the ocean between them. This does very well for the smooth parts of the sea bottom, but it does not do for much of the waters of Alaska. In the Panhandle, where I now am, (I am writing this in Ketchikan), the islands are really half-submerged mountains, and the ships sail in and out above the needle-tipped peaks of a great mountain chain. These mountains have spire and cathedrals of rock, and in places there are rocky obelisks that rise to the height of the Washington Monument or higher. When such a shaft comes out on an island it is covered with green and is a delight to the eye of the tourist. When it rises from the bed of the ocean and its peak is still concealed below the surface, it is the terror of the navigator. It is then one of the deadly swords of old Father Neptune, ready and waiting to cut the heart out of any ship that comes in its path. These rocks are often of such a small area that they escape the soundings of the Coast Survey. They can be detected only by the wire drag, which, sweeping along at a given depth, is sure to strike against them if they rise above the height at which it is gauged.

How the Under-sea Peaks Are Located

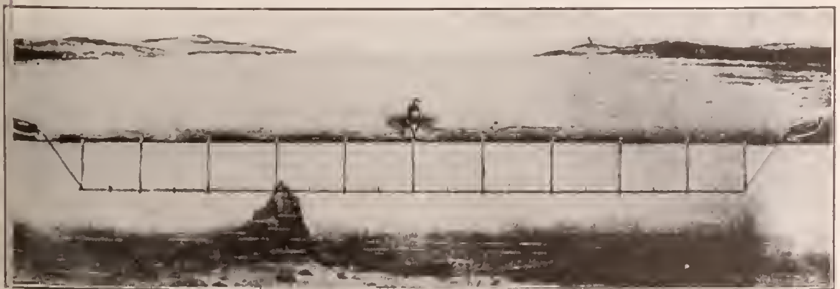
The first wire-drag vessel used in American waters began its work about ten years ago on our Atlantic coast, and the government surveyors have been working there ever since. In this time they have discovered more than 3,000 rocks with less water over them than shown by the charts, and about 1,000 of those are dangerous to navigation. All were in waters that had been previously charted by the Coast Survey.

Here in Alaska a large number of pinnacle rocks have been unearthed by the wire drag. Captain John A. Daniels, the engineer with whom I went out this morning, has located twenty-one great stone spires along forty-two miles of this channel and right in the course of the steamers. One of these rocks is of the shape of a pyramid, and it rises from the bottom of the channel to a height of 600 feet, or almost fifty feet above that of the Washington Monument. It comes within seventeen feet of the surface of the water, and is surrounded by deep water on all sides. The channel had been charted by the Coast Survey, but this rock was not marked. If the lead struck the rock it probably slipped off into deep water, at the side, or it may have come in between two soundings and been missed altogether.

It is interesting to see how the wire drag works. The chief boat has a windlass operated by the engine. About this windlass is the telephone wire which is to be let down and stretched across between the boats far below the depths at which ships sail. This wire is several miles in length, and it is run out according to the width of the channel which is to be tested. The wire used here is stretched across a channel up to two miles in width. The horizontal dragging wire is supported by vertical wires which fall from large buoys, and it is held at the proper depths by sinkers and floats. The buoys are really galvanized iron buckets of perhaps ten gallons' capacity. The buckets are sealed, and, being full of air, they float while supporting the weight of the wire beneath. The floats are of cedar. They look like the rolling-pins with which bread is made. They hang to the wire and aid in keeping it at the right level.

It takes boats of about forty horse-power to move this submerged wire through the sea, the average speed of the drag being about a mile and a half per hour. Notwithstanding this, as many as fifteen

Continued on page 83



Showing the Wire Drag, which is Moved by the Two Boats

The Channel, a Typically Alaskan Bit of Water

Life on the Great River

TIME leaves but a faint trail in Kurdistan and Mesopotamia. Neither fashions nor customs change and things are done today as they have been done for centuries. The land is kind, the sun is warm and the Kurds are content. Progress would be treason.

Photos, © Underwood & Underwood

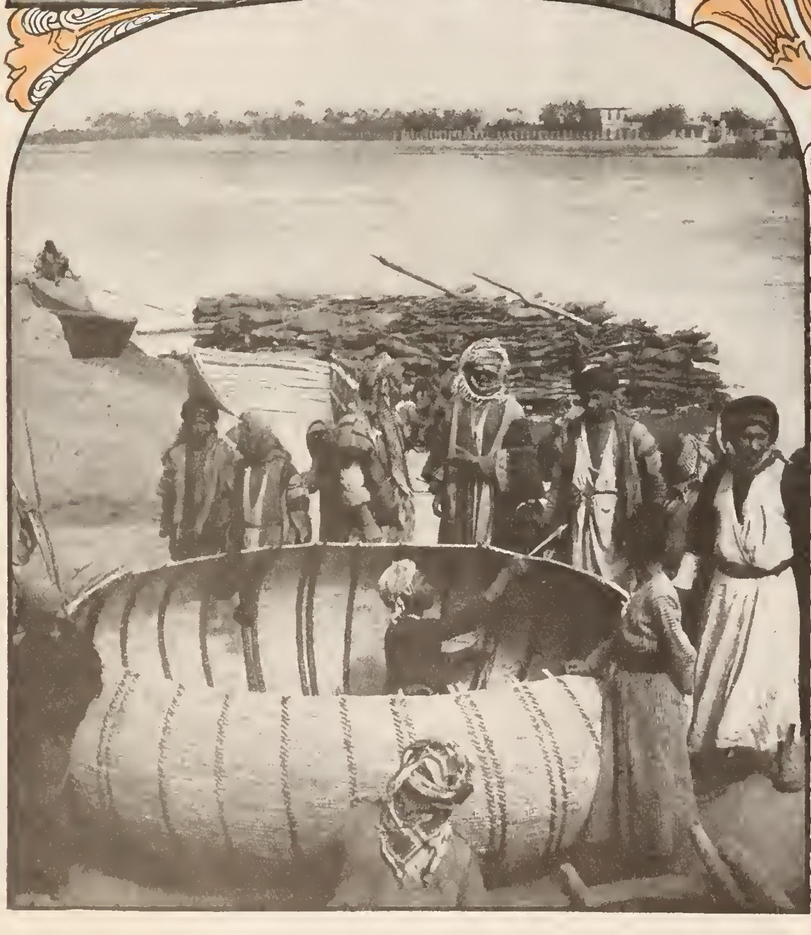
Above: The wool is spun in the open lanes of the suburbs of Bagdad.

At the left: Hungry men will eat most anything; but these are loaves of bread, not mattresses.

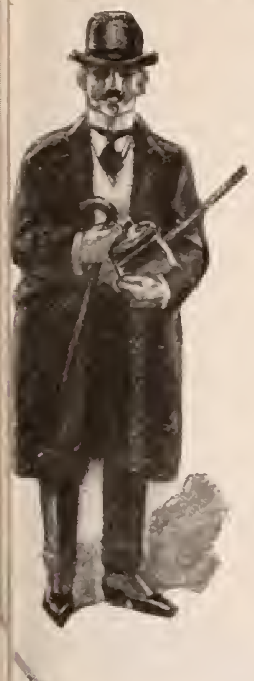
At the right: Supper, sans ceremony and dishes, in a traveler's rest home.

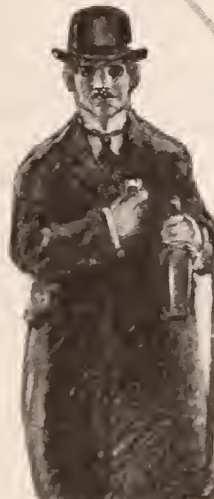
Left-hand corner: The "kufa" isn't much of a boat but it floats. These Kurds are building one.

Right-hand corner: The horse rests while his master pushes the wagon across the river Euphrates, over the unsteady pontoon bridge.

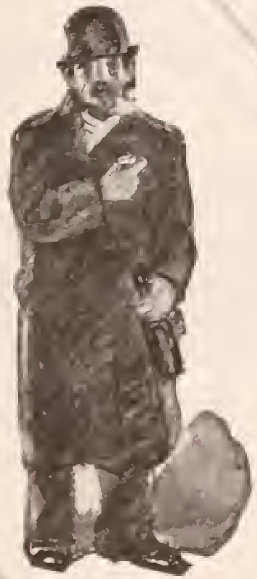


Which Way Are You Going?

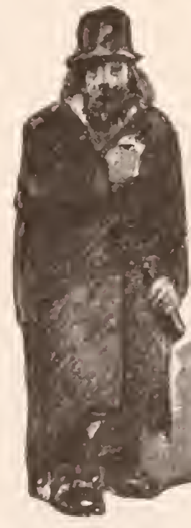




NO. Of course you aren't going the way of the bottle. You come of good respectable people and you know how far to go; and if you ever feel the bottle getting the best of you, which you believe isn't at all likely, you will have done with it. Brave talk! How often it is said, meant perhaps, too; and yet how often this line of argument is followed to its logical conclusion and you say, "Oh, that's just the same old line of bunk the Prohibs have been handing out for years," and you go on to console yourself with another two fingers of rich amber liquor and to have your little laugh at the man who cries danger. "Of course," you say, "if I didn't have plenty of self-control I'd refuse to touch it too"; and you keep up that manner of speech until you get maudlin; and the barkeep throws you out in the cold wind to sober you off and to rid his place of a bad advertisement. All of which is by way of introduction. What I meant to tell you was the story of the gang that used to frequent the old swimming-hole.



That gang was as fine a crowd of young American manhood as ever graduated from grammar school and waded into the mysteries of Caesar's commentaries and quadratic equations. There was big Tom, leader by virtue of size, sparing of words, quick of thought, six feet four high and half as wide, and hard as a rock, yet with a heart big enough to include all boy creation. Then there was Fred, his brother, who reflected the greater light and gained some of the accessories of leadership by standing close to the shadow of greatness. There was Clyde, fair of speech and of presence and expert at all watercraft, and George, who had incipient outbreaks of leadership when big Tom was absent or measurably distant. Ralph, curly-headed, beguiling, laughing Ralph, who always got the best of a trade and who cheated at marbles and in every game he played, but seldom got caught; and who was so good natured when accused that accusation fell harmless against his armor of smiling carelessness. And little Raymond, Ralph's brother, who was usually the under dog in a fight and the first to run home to mother. Then there was my chum and me. If I hadn't been there this story would scarcely have been written. That was the gang that frequented the old swimming-hole below the dam by the deserted mill; and that rushed the growler on the way out and played poker between swims for match ends on the silent millstones that had ceased grinding wheat, but still molded character.



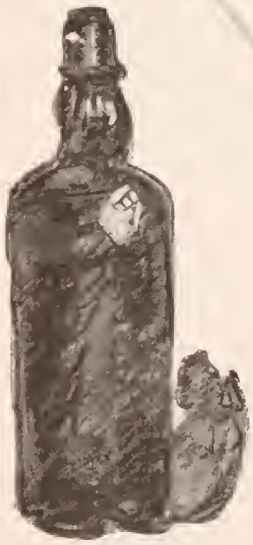
Tom always got his full share of the beer and usually had us all in his debt for match ends before the summer afternoons were gone. I never took any of the beer, nor did my chum, and neither of us ever had any luck with the cards, which, after all, was the best luck that could have befallen us, for it removed far from us all temptation to gamble. If gambling in fun had brought us luck, we might have gambled when it wasn't for fun. Now, according to all good temperance standards Tom should have gone straight to the devil; but he didn't. He went part way; and then the grace of God found his heart and saved him the rest of the trip. But Tom lost out on his college education. Instead of becoming an electrical engineer through a college course, he only became an electrician through the process of the shops. Instead of being chief engineer of a great railway system, he is only master mechanic of its principal shops. The difference between what he is and what he might have been is just five or six years spent at the card-table in the saloon with plenty of beer thrown in or guzzled or otherwise disposed of. Tom is a respectable citizen now and he doesn't touch the stuff; couldn't hold his job five minutes if he was even seen to hesitate in front of a barroom, for that great railway system has no use for men who like booze.

Fred followed very much the same course and now he is a signal engineer on a southern railway, perhaps a trifle better job than Tom's, for Fred was younger and profited somewhat from Tom's experience. Neither ever got to be a horrible example, but either of them might have reached that stage had he not been turned squarely around and started on the other track. Which way are you going? If you are headed for the terminus of the bottle route—but then this story will preach its own sermon and I need not moralize.

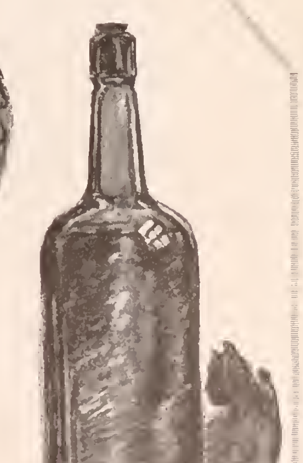
Now Clyde promised better than either of the others. He had a genius for business and was thorough and quick. He always had work in vacations and his trips to the swimming-hole were few and far between when school was not in session. His trips to the bar were not so infrequent, and even before he left high school he had learned to take his stein like a veteran. Housekeeping was done the easy way at Clyde's home, and Clyde's lunches were more often taken from the free lunch counter than from the sparsely settled shelves of his mother's pantry. All of which was good neither for Clyde's morals nor for his stomach. Booze and cheese sandwiches and free lunch soups undermined his digestion just as surely as the associations that went with them undermined his character. Clyde got careless in his dress and indifferent in his work; but he didn't lose his job, although he didn't go ahead. He did get sick with a stomach trouble and after a year of misery the rest of the gang carried him out to the western slope of a wooded hill and his mother and sisters wept a good deal and we all felt pretty sober; but those of us who were keeping company with the bottle kept company with it still. It was stomach trouble that killed Clyde; booze had sins enough to its discredit; be fair now. All right; but what caused the stomach trouble? The cheese, perhaps, or the soup. Oh, well, have it your own way; but when it gets you don't blame the wrong party. Clyde's mother is old now and nearing the time when she should have her son to lean upon; but Clyde has lain these eighteen years and more on that sunny slope under the elms, killed by "indigestion."

Ralph? Of course Ralph, with his curly hair and his smiling face and his smooth ways, would get on. He did get on, but no matter how well he did he always grafted for a little more. Ralph never drank very much; he was a gentleman in his drinking; just enough to give an edge to his subtleties and to dull the edge of his conscience when it appeared profitable to be crooked. He married a beautiful girl and led her in three age-long years to the very sulphur-tinged edge of hell itself; then he left her after he had gambled and drunk away her money; left her with a tiny baby and married another woman without the formality of a divorce. Oh, yes, Ralph was crooked, but he was only crooked under the spell of drink. When he was sober he knew better. A few years in a reformatory and one or two terms more for good measure finally convinced Ralph that the devil was a poor taskmaster, and he turned again to the God of his mother. The last I knew he was clerking back of the sheet music counter in a Western music store, a broken man at thirty-five.

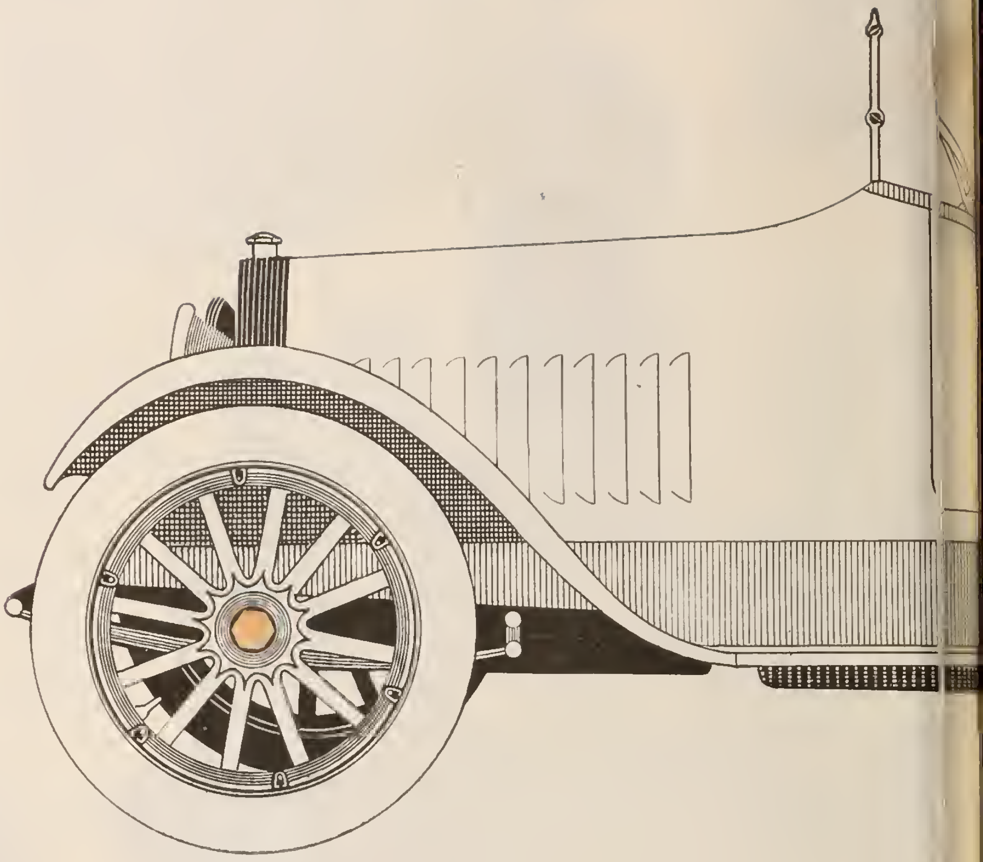
His brother Raymond did better for a while. He finished college and won a high place in his class. He did some creditable work as a mining engineer, but he always took a little liquor. Not much. He drank carefully and I began to think that he was going to be the exception that should prove the rule. But the devil in the bottle finally got him. He went to Mexico, to the mines on the west coast. Virtue leads a precarious existence in those camps and the cards and the wine and the man-killing liquor lie in wait for every man, white man or greaser, who comes that way. Ray toyed with temptation and on several return trips to civilization he showed increasingly the marks of the beast that lives in the glass. At last it got him. It is a patient beast. It can afford to wait, for it knows that its game will not escape. There was a card game, drinks all around and all around again and some more rounds; and then the insult passed. Nobody knows just what happened, but there was some gun play and when it was over a greaser and a white man lay still on the adobe floor. The white man was Ray. Ralph had nearly broken his mother's heart, but Ray shattered it. Mothers' hearts and sons' ambitions and wives' hopes are all one to the beast, that devil beast that lives in the bottle.



Then there was George. His father had money and position; in that he was more fortunate than the rest of the gang. George was always a little better dressed than the rest of us; always had more money to spend and seldom spent it wisely. Before high school days he had learned how to drink like a gentleman, swear like a sailor and smoke like a chimney. I think he taught all the rest of us, except big Tom, to inhale and to blow smoke rings, and he could make smoke come out of his eyes, an accomplishment that is still a sealed book to me, albeit I haven't attempted it for some twenty years at least. George began losing good jobs before I graduated from high school, and he had become expert at it long before I learned the art of getting a raise. As I said, George drank like a gentleman; he always carried it well; and it was hard to tell it on him, except that his skin all got sort of pinkish when he was nicely



Continued on page 91



The New 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers Has Brought Over 100,000 Dicr

It is now two months since the veil was lifted from the new 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers.

Six hundred able merchants went to Detroit for the unveiling, took one look at it, and bought $22,000,000 worth in forty minutes.

A hundred thousand people have since flocked to the salesrooms of Chalmers dealers all over America.

They admired it—and what they have said about it makes the 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers the new season's most talked-of car.

For one look lures. It makes you feel that here's the car you would like to own.

Those who have had the rare treat of a run in the open country with a foot on the accelerator have reached for their check-books.

Though many will buy this car because of the name on its radiator, it will go down in history for its ability.

Others are buying it because it ties up big value and low price.

But most names leap to the dotted line because of the car's great roadability.

The car has been named the 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers because of its wonderful acceleration.

3400 r. p. m. means 3400 revolutions per min e— the speed of its engine.

It's the highest engine speed ever develope for car use in America.

Some cars do 1400. Some 1800. Several a ain One or two turn up 2600. One develops 3000 r. . m

Now the speed of an engine means everythin

In Europe where petrol is high in cost an ca taxed according to their horse-power rating, engi eers for years been forced to get more and more p er smaller and smaller engines.

Their success depended on speeding up t e That's why so many foreign cars have such igh engines—and why they have latterly beaten so American cars on the race-track.

Building a smaller engine, they were able h lighter chassis.

Here was the cue for Chalmers engineers.

They have built a rather small motor—six cy nder by 4½—which achieves 45 horse-power at 2650 p.

They were able to develop well over 70 hrse ar Enthusiasts to the Salesrooms of Chalmers Dealers in 603 Cities same engine—but at the cost of acceleration and omy.

ey stood pat at 45 H. P. They knew this would the better car for all-round performance.

ng built an engine which measured up to their de-were now able to design a relatively light chassis.
r shipping, the whole car weighs only 2660 pounds.
t is as able a car as ever bore the Chalmers name.

3400 r. p. m. Chalmers thus gives you what the big a car used to offer, only it provides high power and ght at low operating cost—you find the same trait ted nimble-footed horse.

yet, unlike so many so-called light-weight cars, you et the feeling that you are riding behind a little it takes short steps.

important than that, it furnishes magnificent ac-
n. Mr. Chalmers was long in doubt whether to is initial announcement of the acceleration tests at that many would doubt the figures—wanted to let omer discover for himself the amazing acceleration.

great thing nowadays in a motor car is acceleration—and in the new 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers you have the finality of desire in a motor car: a small engine, a light-weight chassis—a light-weight chassis, quick acceleration—the goal of engineers.

Specifications no longer mean much as to motor cars. To say that this car has a 115-inch wheelbase conveys nothing to you as to what it can do.

The equation of this car cannot be stated in terms of mere specifications. They mark the car for unquestionable superiority—but they do not—cannot—reveal its ability.

You must step on the little button yourself, and speed the engine up—and up—and up. Then you will say that the "last throb" has been removed.

Go to your Chalmers dealer today and try it.

Or see it at the Automobile Show in your city. You can easily tell where the Chalmers exhibit is. Go where you see the biggest crowd.

You will find a motor of might in a car of charm.

$1050 f. o. b. Detroit
Chalmers Motor Company, Detroit, Michigan

Quality First

"You ask for my Beauty Secret-

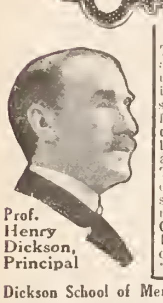
CRÈME SIMON
The Velvet Complexion Maker

Made by J. Simon & Co., Paris, France, is responsible for the beauty you admire. CREME SIMON—45c, 75c and $1.25. POUDRE SIMON (Face Powder) 40c and 75c. SAVON SIMON (Toilet Soap)—one size 50c.

At All Good Dealers

FREE—A handsome and practical CREME SIMON diminution mirror sent free for the name of your dealer.

MAURICE LEVY, Sole U. S. Agent
Dept "C" 15 W. 38th St., New York



The Key To Success

Stop Forgetting

Increase Your Efficiency

The secret of business and social success is the ability to remember. I can make your mind an infallible classified index from which you can instantly select thoughts, facts, figures, names, faces. Enables you to concentrate, develop self-control, overcome bashfulness, think on your feet, address an audience. Easy. Simple. The result of 20 years' experience in developing memories of thousands of students. Write today for copy of my book "How to Remember" and Copyrighted Intensely Interesting Memory Test Free, also how to obtain FREE copy of my book "How to Speak in Public."

Prof. Henry Dickson, Principal

Dickson School of Memory, 701 Hearst Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Feed For Eggs!

Now is the time to make your layers produce—while the price of eggs is soaring.

Free Book

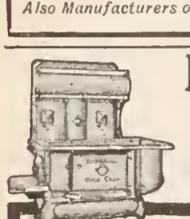
By Experts

Just out. Tells how to feed for eggs—how to develop poultry for market and show. Your name on postal brings it. Get the book. Then go to dealer near you who handles Red Comb. Ask for Red Comb Meat Mash—the great egg-maker.

RED COMB POULTRY FEED

Edwards & Loomis Co., 343P No. Elizabeth St., Chicago, Ill

Also Manufacturers of the Famous Red Horn Dairy Feeds



Factory Prices

Save $5 to $23

Freight Paid—A Year's Trial

Save from $5 to $23 by buying direct from factory. 55 years' reputation back of every stove. Our long experience and big output gives you a better stove or range at less cost.

Gold Coin Stoves and Ranges

Use one for a year—money refunded if it doesn't prove absolutely satisfactory. We pay freight, guarantee safe delivery and send every stove ready to set up. BIG FREE CATALOG—Send for it now. See why improved features of Gold Coin Stoves help you save fuel and bake better. Write today.

GOLD COIN STOVE CO., 11 Oak St., Troy, N. Y.

REVERSIBLE "Linene" COLLARS

TRADE MARK

Send 2 Cents

in U. S. Stamps to pay postage and we will send you free a starch-finished

SAMPLE COLLAR

State size and which style wanted

REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. T, Boston, Mass.

VAN DYCK
RUBENS

BECOME A NURSE

WE have trained thousands of women in their own homes to earn $10 to $25 a week as nurses. Send for "How I Became a Nurse"—248 pages with actual experiences. 48 illustrated lesson pages free.

Fifteenth Year.

The Chautauqua School of Nursing

341 Main St., Jamestown, N.Y.

The Real Situation in the Orient

By an Observer in South Ch

THE remarkable article printed below has come to us from South China, through the hands of a well known missionary now in the United States. It was given as a lecture to a select group of missionaries not long ago. The author is said to be a man who "knows more about such things than any other man in China," but who for obvious reasons does not wish his name to be mentioned, lest harm to missionary interests might result. Professor Isaac Taylor Headland, after reading the article, observed: "I do not know who he is; all I know is that he knows a good deal about the situation in the Orient."

ON October 10 was celebrated the fourth year of the Republic of China; and newspapers counseled, "Celebrate well, for it will be your last opportunity: the Republic is about to go." I did not believe it then, but I do now. Plans are well under way for the coronation of H. I. M., Yuan Shi Kai.

On Monday last there was an election day in the land, and selected men from each township were notified of their right to vote, and were called upon to put their mark to the question: "Are you willing for the country to become a monarchy?" Men who saw the ballots say that there was just room to write "Yuan yi" (willing), but no room for "Pu" (not). They say there were soldiers and other signs that "not" was not wanted at Peking, all of which makes Southern China restive.

What does it mean? Let us review. When the last lamp of the Manchu dynasty was flickering, the foreign ministers advised a constitutional monarchy, with a Chinese on the throne. The army called for a republic, and General Li, the leader of the revolution, said: "My men and I want a republic; give us that or we will take it," and the diplomats succumbed and the republic was granted. But the revolution was not so much a rebellion for a change in government as it was to oust the Manchus. If, however, there had been dissension in the ranks of the fighters there would have been civil war, and so Yuan Shi Kai and other leaders gave them what they wanted. They knew when they were doing it that there might be a war to fight with Japan, for so Japan threatened. But China took the chances, because she did not believe that the Powers would let Japan make a predatory war upon her, and because she preferred to fight a foreign foe rather than turn her weapons against herself. The republic was established, the ablest of the Chinese put at its head, and reform undertaken.

THEN the Great War came on, Europe was too busy to guard China, and Japan was painfully dissatisfied with a republic in China. Why?

1. Japan wants expansion for colonies.
2. The Japanese government fears a successful republic in its vicinity lest its people too turn toward democracy.
3. Dissatisfaction among the common people of Japan is so prevalent now that some politicians think that the only solution of the situation in unifying the nation is in a foreign war.
4. "Japan still remembers that she never got any recognition from Europe until she whipped Russia, and she thinks she will get no more till she wages another successful war." These words were spoken by the Japanese minister to China only a few months ago, and she thinks the situation of Europe is her opportunity.
5. Japan is pretty sure that so long as Europe is at war America has nothing but moral and diplomatic support to offer China. She is right in this.

BUT what has all this to do with Yuan Shi Kai's becoming emperor? you ask. Let us go back again, remembering these two points.

1. Japan sincerely wants a monarchy established in China.
2. Japan prefers a monarchy, plus civil war, started in China, in the hope that it will give her a chance to step in and "preserve the peace of the Orient."

Now to go back. One fine day last winter, gilt-edged invitations from Tokyo reached the chiefs of the Associate Press and Reuter's agency in Peking to be the guests of the Island Empire, to meet the leading statesmen, and travel through the country with all expenses paid. They accepted, leaving their Peking offices in the hands of subordinates. Scarce were they gone, than the Japanese minister, Mr. Hioki, put a document into his pocket and went to call on President Yuan. The document contained the infamous twenty-one demands, and never, I suppose, did one nation present to another a more insulting declaration of its purposes. The minister did the irregular thing of going directly to the president instead of to the Foreign Office, as if to say, "You are the man we will hold responsible, and you are the one that must play the game."

Yuan held a night conference with the British and American ministers. From Sir John Jordan's office, we are told, in an unofficial way, of course, went a copy of the twenty-one demands to the gentlemen of the press, with the instructions that neither was to make a scoop on the other, but the cables should be sent simultaneously to London and New York. That very thing was done, only the chiefs were away being feasted in Tokyo, the names of subordinates were signed to the cables, and the London and New York offices refused to print them. The heads in America and England said the documents were preposterous and incredible. They presented them to the Japanese ministers in London and Washington for verification. These gentlemen denied them and characterized them as typical Chinese fabrications. The identical twenty-one demands are now on file in the State Department in Washington, as later officially communicated by the government. We on this side knew they were in earnest, and the newspaper men came back from their feasts in Tokyo. The cables were again sent. But the Japanese had won their little game. By the time the London and New York offices were willing to print, they had to put in the same column the denials of the Japanese ministers. So in the eyes of the public the demands were discredited at once, for who would venture to doubt the word of a foreign minister? Nor would it have been diplomatic for our State Department to have expressed its opinion of Viscount Chinda.

THE United States sent a cable to China, however, counseling her to accede to minor matters, but not to yield to any in Group 5, those impinging on the sovereignty of China. And the United States had a word to say to Great Britain, which the latter passed on to her Asian ally, which we may imagine as follows: "See here! You know what fanatics those Americans are on the subject of republican governments. We cannot tell them we are fighting for the neutrality of Belgium and at the same time let you, our ally, inflict a ten-fold worse injury on China. Their good opinion is more to us than alliance with you. Better fix up your affairs with China as the United States suggests."

Then America said to Japan, "Drop Group 5 of the demands." Japan said to America, "All right, we've dropped it." Japan said to China, "We've postponed Group 5." America got wind of the changed wording, and asked for an explanation. Viscount Chinda replied: "You do not understand us Orientals: that is our way of dropping it." Japan had one more word to say to Yuan Shi Kai, however. It was spoken in secret, and had it not been for the trend of recent events, we should not have guessed what its purport was. But in the light of contemporary events it has become pretty plain to us that Japan said to Yuan Shi Kai: "We postpone Group 5 on condition that you found a monarchy." And then Japan said to herself: "He is not the man to thrice refuse a kingly crown, and while he is taking it, it will be an easy matter to stir up revolution in the South, and Japan will have to step in to preserve peace in the Orient."

THAT is the crisis we are facing today. The driving force back of the monarchical movement is not Yuan's ambition but Japan. The problem is not the choice of a form of government but warding off of a dangerous foreign

What of the man upon whom crisis turns?

Yuan Shi Kai is by common cons the ablest of the Chinese. He was of the highest officials of the old régi He made and was general-in-chief of army. When he was viceroy of Ch it was said that his municipal gove ment of Tientsin was second to no whether in America or Europe. Dur the Boxer uprising he gave every ass ance in his power to the foreign When the Manchus were relieved of throne, he was the logical man to t the reins of government. He is no professing Christian, but gave as m as $30,000 of his own income for the s port of Christian institutions last y He pays the full salary of one of Y. M. C. A. secretaries besides. On other hand he has many wives, many children, some of whom are be educated in Germany and England. is commonly reported that he betrothed his seven-year-old daugl to the little deposed Emperor, aged n The president has a remarkable po of feeling public opinion and guidin according to his own purposes for best interests of his people. Look back over his official record there many who think that every step he taken has redounded to the welfare China. His brains have been put to service of governing his country, men ask in reason, where is one w could have done better?

To such a man then comes Japa menace, not as an unalloyed temp tion, but as a means of preserving nation. Do you envy him his cho Of course he shows the marks of p sonal ambition—who of us does n But it seems to me that here is a time ever there was one, when a man mi persuade himself into thinking that own advancement and that of the st are one, and hence he could say when officials came to congratulate him being elected emperor: "Condolen rather!" Every one knows that Ch needs a strong man at the helm, wh ever be the title that goes with Yuan is persuaded that he is the ma am sure, and a monarchy is the su defense against a losing war with Jap To us, indeed, it may appear that thi not the ideal course, that he might h more faith in the triumph of righte ness; he might defy Japan and th himself upon the confidence of people; he might remember that once took oath to maintain the repub he might say: "I'll be your presid but you must choose some one else to king over you." He might do these thi and rise immensely in the esteem of world; but the failure to do them, and his country be humiliated, does not m him altogether a monster or a traitor

As for the Chinese people over wh he rules, they are in an altogether prepared state of national defense. have heard more than one call ve mently for war with Japan rather th submission, but I have never yet he one say: "I believe we can whip them The highest pitch of enthusiasm brought them only to the desper climax, "We could at least die fig ing." Signs are not lacking that fr this despair a more virile patriotism i be born. Only the tragedy is that i just that force which Japan hopes turn to the country's ruin—reason with those in the North to consent t temporary reversion to a monarchy order to save the country, and in south baiting every susceptible citizen mutiny for a republic.

You begin to see how tangled skein is, and why we foreigners cou one thing, no matter what kind of l lots the Chinese government gets o Do not quarrel among yourselves. only alternative advice would seem be, "Let us fight Japan," which g against my conscience.

The feeling of the Chinese in Amer against Japan runs so high that we ha known of at least two Chinese stude whom their countrymen threatened shoot, if they dared to return to Ch on a Japanese steamer.

The Correspondence of Professor David Smith, D.D.

"an you give any assurance that God oes eally 're-create'—or, rather, will he do f the asking? It doesn't seem to be any se o talk of repentance: this thing is a ise—at least, it seems so to me: I am orr for it—but I cannot feel any sense of lar or guilt. It offends me to think that fte all these years my life has turned out ich poor thing—just as one's artistic sense c nded when what should be a thing of ea y is a thing of ugliness." E. K. A. M.

GOD does recreate, and personal religion would not be the unintelligible tangle which it is for o many if they realized what the le of "creation" implies. Just con- id, and you will recognize two plain ac: (1) God does not recreate for he asking. The one and only thing h he does for the asking is to for- i our evil past; and he has already o this, if we would only believe it, a e Cross of Christ. And (2) it fol- o that he does not change us in a o ent. He indeed cancels the past h moment we turn to him in desire and ai, but that is merely the beginning f e operation of grace. God creates he arvest, but he does not create it for he asking. We till the ground and o the seed, and he makes it grow and ip. He heals our wounds, but he o not heal them for the asking. We u it them to the physician, and the h ician dresses them, and God heals h.

d it is precisely so in his new r ion. The moment we turn to him, e bsolves us for the asking; but this s rely the beginning of the work, and e ill, if he has his way, accomplish it n is own time. It is his work, not u; yet we have a part to play. And u part is to trust him and put no i rance in his way. The rule is: ep yourselves in the love of God" J e 21). It is God that makes your plant grow, but you must cooperate with him; you must keep it in the sunshine and let the breezes play about it and the rain and dew refresh it. If you keep it in a dark, cold cellar it will droop and die. This is just what we do when we shut the love of God out of our hearts, and harbor bitter, impatient, discontented thoughts, which are like frost and darkness. The principle of cause and effect operates in religion. If we wish the effect, it is foolish to pray for it; we must introduce the cause. Thus, we desire "rest," and our Lord has told us how to obtain it. "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; and ye shall find rest unto your souls" (Matt. 11:29). He does not, you will observe, promise to remove your burden, but he offers to share it with you. He invites you to become his yoke-fellow. It is his yoke, a kindly yoke of faith and love; and it is your burden, too heavy for you. You take him for your yoke-fellow, and his yoke is yours, one end on his neck and the other on yours, and your burden is his too; you and he are pulling in the traces side by side. Then the heaviest burden is light. It is an end of fretting and chafing when you recognize that your lot is his appointment and he is sharing it. Again, you wish "joy"? It also is an effect, and you will have it if you introduce the cause; and the cause is loving service (John 15:1-16). Forget yourself and think of your duty, and joy will come to you. Most of the trouble in the world is due to selfishness and the discontent which it breeds. Life is difficult for us all, and the sensible way is simply to accept it and make the best of it. And we make the best of it when we take it gently and lovingly and believingly.

DAVID SMITH.

4, The College Londonderry.

Letters from Friends

TO THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

Your check of December 3 has been received, and I feel moved on e lf of my wife and myself once again o hank you deeply and most heartily o our great and continued kindness to s and through you to thank all the le friends who so substantially and so e everingly have remembered the 'c minister and his invalid wife."

he Lord, I trust, will greatly favor n abundantly bless one and all of these o l and kind friends, and especially do v ray that heaven's sweetest and larg- s benedictions shall ever abide upon h Christian Herald, and upon the o l-hearted brethren associated in the n velous work which your great paper s ing for the uplift and betterment of n kind everywhere.

rom our humble home, sweetened n made glad by loving hearts and a ls, in behalf of my wife and myself, tend to all the compliments of the roaching Christmas season. With e ts full of love and best wishes, we r most sincerely yours,

H. H. F.

e print the foregoing for the information f e little group of generous-hearted friends v have aided in the support of these aged e nts of Christ, and also to invite the con- l ation of others who may be led to have a h e in this worthy work. Both are well over e nty years of age. The old pastor, after n than fifty years of service in the Gospel, s d aside on account of physical infirmities, n his wife is a confirmed invalid. Inquiries d essed to the Christian Herald will be n ered by giving all particulars concerning h ase.

◆

Lancaster, Penn.,
December 22, 1915.

istian Herald:

is always a pleasure to send a letter f reeting to a friend. I think it is an s cial privilege to be able to send g tings this Christmas, because we h e so much to be thankful for.

e hear a good deal about the cold mmercialism of business, and I dare say competition causes and necessitates a very large amount of this; but after all there is a pretty healthy spirit and a pretty warm sentiment running through and governing our business activities and our business relations with others.

As we approach the end of the year, we cannot help bringing before us in retrospect the past twelve months—twelve months of the greatest adversity which the world as a whole has ever faced. When one realizes that the feelings and actions of all but one of the great nations of the world are grossly destructive and absolutely lacking in anything constructive, I think we of the United States have the greatest thing in the world to be happy and grateful for—the peace of this nation.

While war clouds seem to shadow most of the world, it is my firm belief that, so far as this country is concerned, we are entering upon a period of unparalleled prosperity—a period when all the wheels of industry will turn, the unemployed be reduced to a minimum, and success and prosperity be in the mind of every one.

And so, at this Christmas season, I want to thank you for your helpful cooperation this past year, and to tell you that you have my heartiest wishes for a real Merry Christmas and a Bright and Happy New Year, which will bring to you and yours an ever-increasing measure of health, happiness and prosperity.

Cordially and sincerely yours,
(Signed) CHARLES F. MILLER,
(President of the Hamilton Watch Company.)

◆

I ENCLOSE $20 herewith, of which $10 is for your Christmas baskets for the poor and $10 for the widows and orphans of this terrible war.

Have just closed a Tabernacle campaign at Red Bank, N. J., with over 1,080 decisions.

May God bless you in the noble work you have been carrying on for so many years throughout the world.

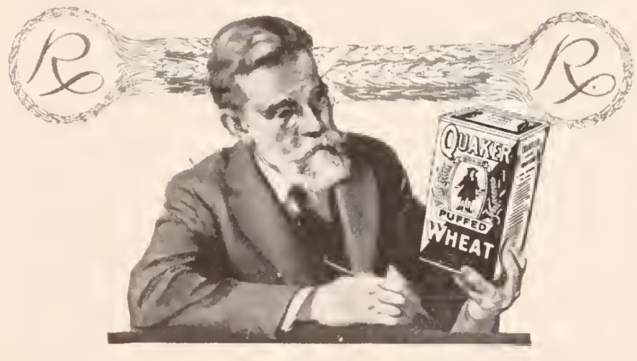
New York City. ROBT. E. JOHNSON.

How Shall I Serve Wheat?

Ask Children

They will say, "Give us Puffed Wheat." They revel in these whole wheat bubbles, with a taste like toasted nuts.

You know that if you've served it. You know how the dishes come back for more. Puffed Wheat is to them a confection.



Ask the Doctor

He'll advise whole wheat, you know. The phosphates and minerals—vital elements—lie in the outer coats.

And he'll advise Puffed Wheat. In this form only is every food cell exploded. Every atom is fitted for easy digestion.

Ask Yourself

Here are whole wheat tit-bits cooked as never before. The kernels are puffed to eight times normal size. They are airy, fragile, crisp and nut-like. You know of no wheat dainty so good with cream, or in bowls of milk, or dry. Why should your folks miss it?

So it is with Puffed Rice or with Corn Puffs. All are grain bubbles with delightful flavor. And all are scientific foods.

Puffed Wheat 12c
Puffed Rice 15c
Except in Far West
Corn Puffs—Bubbles of Corn Hearts—15c

These are Prof. Anderson's ideal foods. Each is cooked and toasted by an hour of fearful heat. Each is shot from guns. In each kernel there occur a hundred million steam explosions—one for every granule. And in each a great grain is better fitted for food than by any other process known.

By every criterion these foods stand supreme as products of wheat, rice or corn. For variety's sake serve them all.

The Quaker Oats Company
Sole Makers

(1123)

The True Flavor of High-Grade Cocoa Beans is Found in

BAKER'S BREAKFAST COCOA

Registered U. S. Patent Office

This is due to the perfection of the mechanical process by which it is manufactured, no chemicals being used, and to the care and skill used in the selection and blending of the beans.

A high authority on cocoa has recently said: "A pure cocoa, unchanged by destructive chemicals, is the best cocoa. There is no more need for introducing alkalies into cocoa than there is into cracked wheat or oatmeal."

Baker's Cocoa is Delicious, Wholesome, Pure and of Great Food Value

Booklet of Choice Recipes sent free

Walter Baker & Co. Ltd.
Established 1780
Dorchester, Mass.

Grand Prize, Panama-Pacific Exposition, 1915
Grand Prize, Panama-California Exposition, 1915

3
CLEANS POLISHES PREVENTS RUST LUBRICATES

GET THIS-NOW

Write at once for free sample bottle of this wonderful household necessity.

3-in-One is the best and only oil on earth for oiling everything properly. Cleans and polishes and positively prevents rust. No housewife should try to get along without it.

If you have never used 3-in-One on sewing machines, piano cases, fine furniture, bathroom fixtures, brass railings, doorplates, hinges, cutlery, etc., try it—now—at our expense. When you write for sample send name of your dealer.

THREE-IN-ONE OIL CO.
42-CB. Broadway New York City

ARCTIC SOCKS

Snug Comfort for Tired Feet in Parker's Arctic Socks
Reg. in U. S. Pat. Off.

Warm, restful, healthful, for bed-chamber, bath, sickroom. Easier than stiff-sole slippers. Worn in rubber boots absorb perspiration. Made of knitted fabric lined with soft white wool fleece. Washable, unshrinkable. Parker's name in every pair. In all sizes at dealers or sent postpaid for 25c a pair.

J. H. PARKER CO., DEPT. C, 25 JAMES ST., MALDEN, MASS

Guaranteed Everbearing Strawberries

Free for Testing

A pair of mated EVERBEARING STRAWBERRY PLANTS FREE if you will report as to your success with them. Will bear loads of big, red berries from June to November. We have counted 480 berries, blossoms and buds on a single plant. A postal will bring the plants, also enough seed of the new CEREAL FETERITA to plant a rod square of ground. Also a pkt. of perennial ORIENTAL POPPY seed. Send 10 cts for mailing expense or not, as you please. Write today and get acquainted with

THE GARDNER NURSERY COMPANY
Box 769, Osage, Iowa.

The Lame Man Leaping

International Sunday School Lesson for January 30. Acts 3

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By REV. F. B. MEYER, D.D.

"Silver and gold have I none; but what I have, that give I thee. In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, walk!" Acts 3: 6.

When the Pope was showing Thomas Aquinas the treasures of the Vatican, he said, "I fear that we cannot, like St. Peter, say, 'Silver and gold have I none.'" "Neither," was the quick retort, "can you say, your Holiness, 'In the name of Jesus, walk.'" There is profound truth in this. They who have most of this world's wealth and glory are often most lacking in spiritual power, whilst they who have nothing may possess all things. It is when we turn ourselves from the outward to the inward, and, expecting nothing from this world, look for all things from God, that we come into the seat of power. There are three classes: (1) Those who have silver and gold, and nothing else, to impart to the lame beggars that lie at their feet, the breaking heart, or the groping hand of the inquirer. (2) There are those who have plenty to give that cannot be figured out by any arithmetical computation—love, hope, peace, comfort, strength, joy. (3) There are those who possess both. There is no reason why rich men should not be good. Those who have the silver of thought and the gold of eloquence, like the golden-mouthed Chrysostom, may yet be able to dispense the spiritual riches which the thief cannot steal, or the depreciation of the money-market lessen.

Health for Soul and Body

By Arthur H. Howland

WE shall get the best light on this chapter by looking at the last verse first: "Unto you first God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning every one of you from his iniquities." While the miracle of healing is wonderful, the miracles of regeneration and sanctification are more wonderful. The real purpose of all these divine acts is the creation and development of pure souls, freed from sin.

In teaching this lesson we should, of course, try to make the ancient event described seem vivid, but we should dwell with special emphasis upon the present-day miracles of salvation. To see a warped, dark, unclean, unkind soul suddenly leap up into straightness, light, purity, love—here is a miracle indeed. And this miracle is taking place constantly. Myriads of souls every year are thus born again to the health and power of Jesus. In revival campaigns, in rescue mission halls, at Salvation Army barracks, in the ordinary meetings of church routine, souls are leaping up to new life and joy like this lame man who was touched by the Spirit-charged fingers of Peter many years ago.

Miracles of healing, both past and present, are matters we have to reckon with. A scientist might prove to his own satisfaction that a miracle could not take place in this day or in any other day, when out from a thousand homes would come the cry: "But the Lord did hear my prayer. He did heal my boy, my wife, my mother, my daughter." Prayer is a great fact of life—and divine power is still coming down to the souls and minds and bodies of men because devout souls believe in the power of the risen Christ.

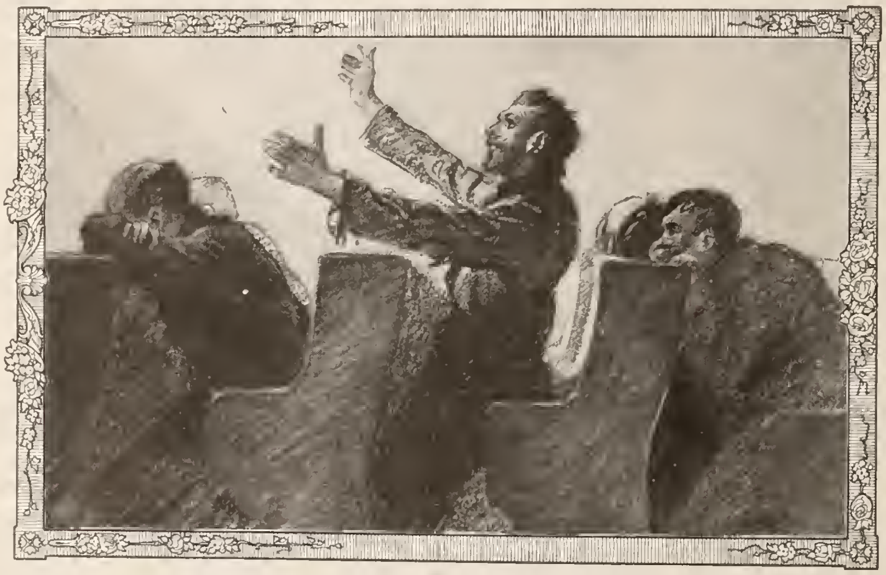
We do not know what was the matter with this lame man. Luke, who writes the narrative, was a physician. In describing what happened, he declares that the man's "feet and ankle bones received strength." Therefore, before this current of divine power began to flow through him, these members and bones had been weak. There are many forms and kinds of lameness. Last summer at the Ocean Grove Camp Meeting I saw and heard Miss Cassie Smith, who was healed of lameness many years ago and raised from a bed of helplessness to live a life of bright and powerful Christian work and testimony. This lame man of long ago was one of the first to feel the new power of the divine life which had been in Jesus and was bestowed upon his followers with the Pentecostal gift of the Holy Spirit.

Peter and John just now were going to church every day. Can we think of times in our lives when there was an opportunity to do that, an opportunity we grasped with zest and delight? Cold winter nights in the country when a revival was taking place, and we went, night after night, through the snow and starlight to the house of God, where souls were being blessed? Camp meeting in some fragrant woods or by the sea, when day after day believers and unbelievers alike were made conscious of the presence and power of God? A convention where day by day Christian workers were instructed in best methods and inspired to more perfect consecration and to stronger faith?

One of the very worst features of modern church life is that the church doors and gates are locked so much of the time and the churches themselves are empty, silent, gloomy. The church ought to be a busy place, something taking place every day and night for the benefit of man and the glory of God.

Find the description of some such church as the Epworth Memorial at Cleveland, the Temple at Philadelphia, St. Bartholomew's, St. George's, St. Mark's in New York, and feel the intense interest of every-day church work for Jesus.

THE Pentecostal blessing made these early worshipers of Christ want to go to the temple every day. This temple, built by Herod, on the site of the ancient temples of Zerubbabel and of Solomon, was a glorious affair architecturally.



To See a Dark Soul Leap Up Into Light, Here Is a Miracle Indeed

Look up a description of it to read briefly to the class. But don't spend too much time on it, for other matters in the lesson are of more importance. Here are two points about it, however, that should be mentioned. It meant death for anybody but a Jew to venture beyond the Court of the Gentiles. Think of that! Under the leadership of Jesus the church opens its portals wide to every one in the world. The Jews said: "You cannot come in here." Of course, if a Gentile became circumcised and formally accepted the Jewish faith, he could enter, but a bronze tablet was discovered in 1871 by Clermont-Ganneau, upon which that ancient prohibition and penalty were announced—death to any Gentile who ventured farther. Think, too, hole in the stone through which the blo the sacrifices was carri a ditch leading to the b Kidron. Think of the of the animals, the str of blood, the defileme the place; think of death warning to outs —and then remember in spite of such condi and cruelties these worshipers loved this because up to that ti was the highest and that the world had k about God. They took Pentecostal blessing t ancient church; they shiped there; they tri the power of their hea sent fire to win their f worshipers to the t cleaner, kindlier way Jesus.

Notice the differen the formula of Peter and that of Cl Jesus said: "I say unto you, A take up thy bed and walk." Peter "In the name of Jesus Christ of areth, rise up and walk." When crowd marveled, Peter insisted th was not his power and holiness that healed the man. He takes occasio accuse them again of having kille Messiah, and adds: "By faith i name hath his name made this strong, whom ye behold and know. the faith which is through him given him this perfect soundness in presence of you all."

Then comes another offer of di grace and blessing. This Jesus, w they had killed, lives still and will blessing to their souls. He is lea up to the climax of that last v God is sending Jesus to the world a to bless them and all by turning e one of them away from their iniqu "Repent ye, therefore," he urges, ' turn again, that your sins may blotted out, that so there may seasons of refreshing from the pres of the Lord."

There is an interesting bit of g mar study here. You notice that th version rea "Repent, your sins ma blotted out the times of freshing sh come." But revised vers show clearly real meani Peter urges t to get their blotted out in der that time refreshing come. What bl the blessing of is sin. People w der why they not get bles why they do have victory peace; churc wonder why fail instead of umph. It is that shuts out divine power and gladness. When is forsaken the times of refreshing come. Peter's exhortation rings and real today as two thousand y ago: "Repent and turn, that y sins may be blotted out, that so t may come seasons of refreshing f the presence of the Lord."

The How Column

Conducted by Frank L. Brown, Joint Ge Secretary World's Sunday School Association

How to Obtain Interest in Lesson Teac

HOW may I keep the interest of class while teaching? The perience of a host of teacher this vital phase of successful teac ncates emphasis upon an interesting stat, variety in lesson method and the awkening of the scholar's mind through wi questioning or other plans of class operation.

A TEACHER of sixteen-year-old girls says wisely: "I keep open ears for the prate class talk before the lesson. I start oft the beginning with a saying or a question beeing on that private talk, and lead into the essn from it as long as I have their ears. I eay grope my way around their thoughts, an meeting them, I get so at one with them th they will question me, and then I surely wi get their interest."

Brooklyn teacher of sixteen-year-old gir has this method: "For the first five nutes we write an outline of the lesson about toe taught. This I find always makes the cla very quiet and so ready for the lesson. I ke up each question in the quarterly, the gi giving me their answers. We have what weall stopping places when we take the truth hoe to our hearts."

New York State teacher of big boys: "I asgn work in advance and find this the best pl, but other plans work well also, such as dete, questions and illustrations."

Brooklyn teacher of fifteen Intermediate bo: "I watch the class carefully and change, nothe subject, but the approach, or line of thght, at the proper moment. I use every the suggested by the boys, even if it apears irrelevant."

Pennsylvania teacher of Juniors: "I tr to obtain the interest of a few of my sclars who like to talk, and for the rest, I tr to get a little story that will suit the lebn; and now they are learning verses from thBible and trying to win a prize."

California teacher of sixteen girls, seenteen years old: "I get the girls to do the taing by suggesting debatable topics, asking thr opinions, experiences, etc."

teacher of high school boys from Syracuse, NY.: "My fellows like Bible readings on the lebn and listen attentively. Outside of this 'iense' preparation I have clippings or vees for them to read aloud in the class."

Connecticut teacher of sixteen boys in the eay teen years says: "I prepare my lesson w. I use illustrations interesting to the bos. I put all the fire and vim I have in tehing the lesson. I require the boys to trt me as a gentleman, which includes atntion to what I am saying. If it is not gin, I send him home and call on his parents ar him later. This does not happen often."

rom Marshall A. Hudson, leader of the grt Baraca Movement, comes this method ironnection with his class of men which has had a record of 1,000 conversions, 650 of these joining the church: "I assign topics to the class. I study application to scholars' lives. They are invited to bring questions, the hardest ones they can find. I emphasize the Oriental setting of the lesson, the geography, using map, time of lesson, etc."

A Denver teacher of a class of twenty young men has this method: "Once a month I ask two or three young men to give the class their view of certain points. I can get better attention by trying to urge scholars to follow a continued story from Sunday to Sunday."

A teacher of girls averaging twenty years: "Have tried various plans. One that has been partially successful is to assign to each pupil a special practical fact or topic from the next lesson for them to think about and discuss the following Sunday."

A Colorado teacher of men says sensibly: "I get myself interested and in earnest and thoroughly prepared. Plans and methods are valuable only when the spirit of the teacher is in close touch with Christ and his word. To get filled with the love of Christ and know the Bible for oneself is the prime requisite. A full heart and mind will find its own best method. Plans and methods will come."

A teacher of a Brooklyn class of young men interests "by a written list of questions suggested from study of the texts that can be made to apply to everyday life."

A teacher of little boys has this plan: "At lesson time we review the previous lesson first; then they produce the little leaflets which they have been given to prepare. They usually want to describe the hero of the lesson. Then the first on the row reads a sentence. The instant he has finished the next one is on his feet for his chance. Yesterday two anxious ones were standing quietly waiting for the first boy to finish. We hastily review; always repeat the memory verses. They are so interested that they never notice the officers who pass in or out."

A Connecticut teacher of young ladies says: "Each pupil has a note book of her own in which important things to remember are written down as I teach. I use pictures illustrating the parables and miracles of Christ."

The problem has been thus solved by another Connecticut teacher of Junior boys: "That was a problem until my class was graded, but since that I have found no need for special devices. When the class was ungraded I found that what interested the older boys would not interest the young, so it was rather difficult to have the interest of the whole class at once."

Many teachers emphasize the valuable help they get from the use of the blackboard.

Charting Alaskan Seas

Continued from page 75

sal spots and rocks are sometimes fcnd in one day.

When the drag strikes a rock the pce is marked and another surveying prty develops the area about it. A boy or float of some kind is then ancored there to show the danger and a nv record is made on the chart.

Up to the present between one-third al one-half of the main channels of sitheastern Alaska have been explored b the wire drag. The work will be psecuted steadily and as fast as the appropriations by Congress will warrant.

Most of the vessels in the Coast Surw service in Alaska are only fit for t scrap heap. Secretary Redfield has rhtly called them "unseaworthy old tps." They are without wireless equipmnt, deficient in modern appliances, al some are so poor that they can be sely used only in protected waters. Te McArthur, to which I have refred, is over forty years old. She ls been nicknamed the "Chinese Soe" on account of her shape. She is oy twenty feet wide and 120 feet long, ad her speed is about seven miles an hur. She has to use a steam launch for lr surveying work, but it is so frail tat she cannot hoist it on board.

The Gedney and the Endeavor are in t same class with the McArthur. ey have no electricity and no congnsing and refrigerating plants. The aommodations for the men and officers a bad. The Endeavor was used in t civil war as a Confederate gunboat. e Gedney was constructed in 1875 the Atlantic coast, and she came ound South America to Alaska thirtye years ago. She is 140 feet long ad twenty-four feet wide. She is w charting the waters about Prince Wales Island.

The Patterson, which aided in rescug the wrecked steamer Tahoma, is aking surveys in the neighborhood of e Shumagin Islands, and the Yukon the ship of which I wrote as surveying e Kuskokwim River. She was built in Nome by Captain Pratt eighteen years ago, and was used in surveying the Yukon. She has also surveyed about Kodiak Island and Cook Inlet.

The Taku, which was originally built to be used in making surveys at the mouth of the Yukon, is now laid up in Prince William Sound, as she is too small to make the trip farther south. She is only seventy-five feet long. Her captain is G. T. Rude, who has been long in Alaska. The captain of the Yukon is R. R. Lukens.

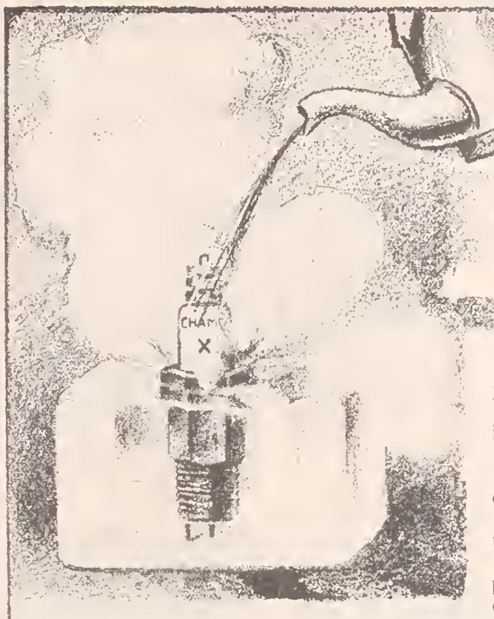
As to the wire drag parties, there are two of them. One is under Captain Daniels, whose boat, the Equator, I have described. The other party is commanded by Captain L. O. Colbert, who has the King and Wing, a power boat that rescued the survivors of the Karluk, the Canadian arctic exploring ship. Captain Colbert has been working this season in the vicinity of Point Baker.

To be continued

◆

Called Higher

Mary J. Baker, Greenville, Mich., 82 years; Mrs. Mary J. Gallway, Summerfield, La., 80 years; W. A. Flowers, Edgewood, Pa., 83 years; Mrs. Henry King, Mount Washington, Mo., 73 years; Mrs. Lyde J. Crabb, Schell City, Mo.; Mr. Sessions, Providence, R. I.; Mrs. Annie Stephens, Whitla, Canada, 71 years; Orman B. Thayer, LaGrange, Me.; Mrs. Elizabeth Wagner, Wooster, Ohio, 79 years; Mrs. Eliza Bushley, Pasadena, Calif.; Mrs. Catherine M. Hensel, Upper Sandusky, Ohio, 69 years; W. A. Graham, Carlisle, Pa., 86 years; Mr. Phillips, Earlville, Ill.; Mrs. Laura E. Balcome, W. Upton, Mass., 76 yrs.; Mr. Pinckney, Stockton, Calif., 71 yrs.; Mrs. M. P. Haycox, Olympia, Wash., 85 yrs.; Mrs. A. S. Humphrey, Copenhagen N. Y., 72 yrs.; Mrs. A. Corycll, Alameda, Calif., 90 yrs.; Mrs. Mary A. Stryker, Somerville, N. J., 79 yrs.; Mr. Frank Butt, Longmont, Colo., 73 yrs.; Mrs. Amanda Patton, Tyrone, Pa., 84 yrs.; Mrs. A. Smith, Catskill, N. Y.; Mrs. E. A. S. Baldwin, Salina, Kans.; Mr. Sharp, Lowell, Mass., 81 yrs.; Mrs. Nancy Moorlag, Marcellus, Mich., 74 yrs.; Lois Rathburn, Greenwich, N. Y., 61 yrs.; Mrs. M. A. Cherrington, Adrian, Mo., 73 yrs.; Mrs. Helen Ackerman, St. Paul, Minn.



This Illustrates What Happens When You Start A Cold Motor

When you "light the gas" under your cold spark plugs the effect is much the same as if you poured boiling water on a spark plug half buried in a cake of ice.

Unless the materials are exactly conditioned—

Unless the parts are accurately tooled and fitted—

Unless the contact points are properly cushioned where the strains come—something is bound to break.

If you would have absolutely reliable service, under all the varying strains of temperature, speed and load, see that your motor is equipped with

Champion

"TOLEDO MADE FOR THE WHOLE WORLD'S TRADE"

Dependable Spark Plugs

Every detail of their construction makes for endurance and dependability.

But to make them dependable, we go to extremes of engineering and of processing which you would never dream of.

These extremes are practical only because their cost is distributed over such an enormous production.

Year after year our output has been greater than that of all other makes of spark plugs combined.

This season our output is doubled compared with last.

The spark plug which we designed to serve your motor we know, by actual comparative tests will serve that particular kind of motor with greater efficiency than any other kind of plug you can buy.

Your dealer knows which one it is and will gladly supply you.

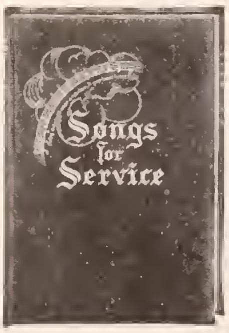
Be sure the name "Champion" is on the porcelain—not merely on the box.

Champion Spark Plug Co., 303 Avondale Ave., Toledo, O.

Earn Big Pay as a Tree Expert

From a farm hand at $25 a month to a tree expert at $3000 a year — from monotonous grind to a fascinating, healthful, respected profession—that is the rise of the man pictured here, P. E. Hudson, Jamaica, L. I., N. Y. Through the Davey course of training by mail hundreds of young men, like Hudson, have improved their condition in life. You have an equal chance. A few months study, at home, in your spare time, will fit you for any of the following positions — Tree Surgery, City Forestry, Park Superintendent, Fruit Growing, City Tree Expert, Forestry, Tree Surgery and Fruit Growing. These fields are uncrowded; you will have more demands for your services than you can fill. Write today for book, "Adventures in Success," and tell us which of the professions listed above especially appeals to you.

THE DAVEY INSTITUTE OF TREE SURGERY, 405 Oak St., Kent, Ohio



A Great Song Book

Sparkling, snappy, invigorating, energizing, appealing, effective and useful, this latest and greatest of Rodeheaver productions has set a new high-water mark in gospel songbook making. Hundreds of churches, Sunday schools and other religious societies are already using it and are expressing unbounded approval and delight. The first to introduce it into your church community will have exercised "winning strategy."

Songs for Service

has 288 pages, is printed from new plates on better-than-usual paper and is finely bound. Orchestrated for 15 instruments. Printed in both round and shaped notes. It is the book used exclusively in the "Billy" Sunday campaigns.

EXAMINE A COPY FREE—Simply state that you will either return it in good condition within 15 days or will remit the retail price. State binding desired.

PRICES—Cloth 35c, limp 25c, manila 20c per copy, postpaid.
Cloth $25, limp $18, manila $15 per 100, not prepaid.

THE RODEHEAVER CO.

1083 MONON BLDG., CHICAGO 633 LIPPINCOTT BLDG., PHILADELPHIA

EAT some Dromedary Dates and learn what good dates are.

Sold only in sealed packages by Grocers and Fruit Stores everywhere.

The HILLS BROTHERS Co.
Dept. S, 375 Washington St., New York

DROMEDARY
GOLDEN DATES
DROMEDARY
BRAND
GOLDEN DATES

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

AGED READER, Duck Hill, Mass. It is a great deprivation when the infirmities of age interfere with our attendance at church. We can sympathize sincerely with those who can no longer hear the spoken Word distinctly, or follow the voice of the preacher. But our Father knows of such deprivations and gives us other consolations. If our eyes still serve us, there is the Bible, in which we can find comfort and guidance for every trouble. There are good books in abundance that give help and inspiration. And you have the choicest of sermons from God's ministers in your favorite paper. Don't let yourself become indifferent to religion because you are growing old. That is the time, above all others, when you need to live nearest to God and to keep in touch with the Redeemer, who will be your companion if you open your heart and ask him to come in. We pray that you may be led to do this and that you may "live right," with a heart full of love and kindness for everybody, and full of confidence in God, who has promised to hear and answer the prayers of all of his children who come to him—as you have a right to come—asking for help and encouragement. We are writing you a letter and hope to hear from you again.

R. M. B., Keokuk, Ia. The use of explosive weapons in war does not date farther back than the seventeenth century, but its evolution has been most marked in the last hundred years. Three centuries ago, cavalry was the principal force on battle fields, the muskets of that day being of short range and of comparatively slight service. Then came the utilization of hand grenades. Next, the flintlock gun came into use. "Musketeer," "grenadier," "fusilier" are all terms originating in those days. The rifle was introduced about seventy and the breech-loader about forty-five years ago.

W. A. H., Clearwater, Fla. If you feel strongly called to preach the Gospel, your first duty is to prepare for the work by securing as good an education as possible. You would do well to enter some theological school in your own state as a student, and take a full course there, making the best use of your time and opportunities. In these days, training is indispensable. Write to Rev. Dr. Gray, Dean of the Moody Institute, Chicago, who will advise you as to the best course to pursue, if you do not see your way clearly.

P. S., Hampden, Me. 1. The subject is controversial in a large degree, as to time and conditions. There are some very good Christians who do not look for a personal reign of Christ on earth, and who hold that his coming is to be understood in a spiritual sense, and that he is here even now. Of those who do believe in his personal return, some hold that it will be before, and others after, the millennium. They base their belief on Rev. 20:4-6; Isa. 2: 19 and 11: 9-12; Zech. 14: 16-21; Heb. 8: 10, 11; and other passages. 2. You can purchase a copy of "555 Difficult Questions Answered" for $1 by sending to this office.

G. W. B., Albany, N. Y. If you buy an article and double your money in selling it, you make one hundred per cent.

W. R. B., Davenport, Ia., writes: "Yours of the 13th was received today, and the same mail brings a message from Senator Kenyon, saying that he has introduced the Christian Party Resolution in the United States Senate, asking that the United States shall adopt the Decalogue and the Christ-rule for the basis of legislation and administration of all its laws, and lift up this standard to all nations as the basis of universal peace. Can you make mention of this in the Christian Herald?"

Miss E. A. Haring, 2215 Rose Street, Berkeley, Calif., writes: "The following lines I have treasured for years, but have failed to find their origin. Can any of your readers inform me as to their authorship?

> "Let us labor for an inward stillness,
> An inward stillness and an inward healing;
> That perfect stillness where the lips and heart
> Are still, and we no longer entertain
> Our own imperfect thoughts and vain opinions,
> But God himself speaks in us, and we wait
> In singleness of heart, that we may know
> His Will, and in the silence of our spirits,
> That we may do His Will, and do that only."

Mrs. D. F. S., Chadbourn, N. C., writes: "The Moonlight Schools in this state are a grand movement, if we can persuade the people to attend. I feel that we can do much good giving our money to help these unfortunate people. We have some well educated people here, and they are trying to relieve the condition of the poor."

M. P., New York. God is very tender and gracious to those who seek him and he never turns away from the contrite heart. Even a shut-in, or one who for some reason is deprived of the privilege of joining with God's people and worshiping him in his temple, may consecrate some corner of her own and make it a sanctuary of prayer and praise. Bella Cooke was a shut-in for nearly fifty years. We remember her little room in a rear building on Third Avenue, where people who knew about her came from far and near to converse with her, and to have her pray with them. She could not walk and had to live propped up in bed; but she was a church member and one of the most cheerful and saintly Christians we ever met. Ill health may prevent attendance at church, but it need not be a bar to membership. If you cannot go out, ask a minister of your own denomination to visit you when he can and if he be a true shepherd of the flock he will not fail to come. As a child of God you are entitled to the loving care and protection of his church, and if you seek it you will find it a great solace and a brightener of your solitary life.

J. G. V. P., Chicago, Ill. 1. There were doubtless many occasions on which the Israelites took the offensive in war, especially in their campaigns in the wilderness, where they were surrounded by warlike, idolatrous races on every hand. It was a rude, warlike age, and the question has often been raised whether many of the Israelitish wars were justifiable. On this point one commentator says: "It is certain that the practice of offensive war cannot be defended by reference to sacred history, and it is equally clear, if wars must be, that they can only be consistent with the light of that dispensation which breathes forgiveness and forbearance, on the clear and obvious ground of necessity and self-defense." The Israelitish wars were conducted in the fierce spirit of the age, which the Mosaic law did all it could to soften and lessen must remember, too, that a long-past age must not be by the rules of modern humanity. 2. Under the Ch dispensation, war, even while it may be unavoidable, can justified on purely Christian grounds, since the princi
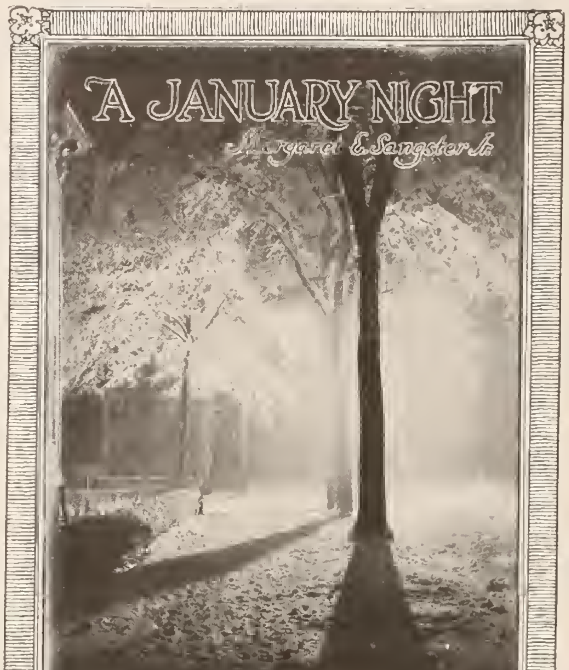
Christianity teach universal love and friendship.



A JANUARY NIGHT

Margaret E. Sangster Jr.

I stood beside my window in the middle of the night,
And looked with awe upon a world all glittering and white;
It seemed as if the moon had turned to silver, melting slow
In dripping, shining, glowing drops upon the earth below.

The trees were crusted thick with ice, and every frozen limb,
Was strung with priceless diamonds and ermine fit to trim
A kingly robe—and every star that twinkled in the sky,
Shone with a loveliness that spelled white magic to my eye.

I pulled aside my curtain in the middle of the night,
And lo! it seemed as if a shining band of angels bright
Had painted all the world with gleams from Heaven far above,
Perhaps to show the folk on earth a little of God's Love:

And as I stood a silence seemed to creep about me there,
And suddenly, upon my knees, I knelt in grateful prayer;
To thank the Father of us all, that I had eyes to see
The glory of the midnight world that He had showed to me.

M. Mac, Minnesota. 1. All religions are equal here the law, and religious equality is guaranteed by the C tution. Religion should not be urged as a bar to holdi office, if the man be a good American citizen.

Mrs. C. A. B., Emery Mills, Me. It has been stat peatedly that there are more women professing Christian men, this conclusion doubtless being based on the fac the former outnumber the latter somewhat in populatio also that in most churches the women lead in point of a ance.

L. J. W., Holyoke, Mass. Please explain the following ture references to plowing: (a) Amos 9: 13; (b) Ps. 1
(c) I Cor. 9: 10.

(a) Amos 9: 13 is a prophecy of great prosperity.
expression "the plowman shall overtake the reaper" that as soon as one crop is gathered, the plowmen are p ing the ground for another. (b) "The plowers plowed my back" (Ps. 129: 3) is a figurative expression of grea secution—as though Liliputian plowmen were plowin rows in the back of a prostrate Gulliver. (c) "That h ploweth should plow in hope" (I Cor. 9: 10) means agricultural matters should be so organized and reg that the farmer should have reasonable expectation of izing satisfactory proceeds from his labor.

J. T., Ashland. Is the King of England, like the C
Russia, the head of the national church, and by whor the church organized? Of what faith were they?
there serious friction between them and the Ca
Church?

Yes, the King of England is recognized as the official of the Established Church of England. There are va traditions of the work of early missionaries in England the first one whose work is clearly established historica
Augustine, who was sent out by Pope Gregory in 596.
British Church remained under Roman control unti English Reformation under Henry VIII. From your que it is not altogether clear whether you refer to the separati
the British Church from Rome or the Greek Church from R
If the latter, that took place in 867 because the Greek chu refused to add the word "filioque," "and from the Son the words describing the Holy Spirit as proceeding " the Father." The Russian Church is, as you know, a p the Greek Catholic Church. It helps to understand historic events and ideas, to remember that there was i thought of the early church no possibility of an actual div in the Church of Christ. All believers together mad church; the only divisions were geographical. So in R the ruler of the nation is the head of the church of that na
And in England, where an established national church is recognized, the same explanation applies, though in Eng of course, the matter is interpreted much more broadly
the "non-conformist" bodies have wide liberty and influ

S. C. H., Mackay, Ky. Jesus said he came not to de but to fulfil the law. The Decalogue is still recited in of the Christian churches. It is made clear, however, when the Gospel dispensation was ushered in, the coe authority of the old dispensation ended. Jesus has fulfille whole law and we who follow him are "not under the (Rom. 6: 14, 15; Gal. 5: 18); we are "dead to law" (
7: 4-6; Gal. 2:19), and "redeemed from under the (Gal. 4: 5). This is the striking contrast between the and the new covenant. When Jesus said of the law that one jot or tittle of it shall pass away," he meant that moral obligation of it remained, but was fulfilled in the Go and that being now under grace, we are to be judged no the law but by grace; not by good works, but by saving in the Redeemer who had satisfied the law in our stead, that love to God and man, as exemplified in the Christian summed up the whole spirit of the old law, of which the law was the solvent.

Where was our flag first called "Old Glory"?

The name "Old Glory" is supposed to have been first in 1862 by Captain William Driver, a retired shipmast Tennessee.

J. S., West Liberty, Ia. Louise Mühlbach is the pen n of Mrs. Theodore Mundt, historical novelist, who was bor 1814 and died in 1873. Her books are considered good st ard works of fiction.

The Great Rock of Acoma and the Pueblo of Acomita, w a recent contributor located in Arizona, are in New Mexi

H. W. G., Teton, Mont. In many instances the chur do sink denominational differences and distinctions to u in some work which can be pushed to greater advant
As a matter of fact, and without violating any principle, could unite on many things, including revival services, reaching works of benevolence, temperance, civic betterm etc. Such cooperation does not affect their denominati integrity.

A. A. J., Olympia, Wash. Baptism for the dead, refe to in I Cor. 15: 29, is variously interpreted. Several comm tators hold that it relates to some symbolical rite of bapt or dedication of themselves to follow the example of the d in certain tasks or duties, taking up their work and pledg themselves to carry it through while life lasts. Another is that it was an ancient custom to baptize certain pers with the names of the dead, in the hope that they would inh their spirit and the finer and nobler qualities that dis guished them in life. Still another suggestion is that rite was designed simply as a tribute of honor to the dead as a mark of great love and affection.

A Voice in the Wilderness

Continued from page 65

g dome. There were mountains l sides, and a slender dark line of uite set off the more delicate col- s of the plain.

o the morning they rode, Margaret the Boy, before Pop Wallis was awake; while all the other men around and watched, eager, us for the hand-shake and the ng smile. They told her they d she would come again and sing hem, and each one had an awkward of parting. Whatever Margaret might do with her school, she won seven loyal friends in the , and she rode away amid their ring glances; which lingered, too, e broad shoulders and wide som- of her escort riding by her side:

'Val, that's the end o' him, I s'pose!" led Long Bill with a deep sigh as iders passed into the valley out of sight.

"I'm!" said Jasper Kemp hungrily, eck'n he thinks it's jes' th' begin-"

"Iaybe so! Maybe so!" said Big dreamily.

e morning was full of wonder for girl who had come straight from Eastern city. The view from the f a mesa, or the cool, dim entrance canyon where great ferns fringed feathered its walls, and strange s hollowed out in the rocks far e made real the stories she had of the cave-dwellers! It was a world.

hen they camped a little while lunch the Boy showed the same ghtfulness that had charmed her night before. Even his talk was xture of boyishness and experience, he seemed to know her thoughts re she had them fully spoken.

do not understand it," she said, ng him frankly in the eyes at last. w ever in the world did one like get landed among all those dreadful ? Of course in their way some of are not so bad—but—they are not you, not in the least—and never d be."

ey were riding out upon the plain in the full afternoon light, and a t time would bring them to her ination.

sad, set look came quickly into the 's eyes and his face grew almost hard.

It's an old story. I suppose you've d it before," he said, and his voice to take on a careless note, but d. "I didn't make good back e—" he waved his hand sharply rd the East—"so I came out here egin again. But I guess I haven't e good here either—not in the way eant when I came."

You can't, you know," said Mar- t. "Not here."

Why?" he looked at her earnestly he felt the answer might help him.

Because! You have to go back re you didn't make good and pick the lost opportunities. You can't y make good till you do that right e you left off."

But suppose it's too late?"

It's never too late if we're in earnest, not too proud."

CHAPTER V

A FEW minutes later they crossed another mesa, and descended to enterprising little town where the was to begin her winter's work. very houses and streets seemed to briskly and hasten to meet them e last few minutes of their ride.

lower the horses walked, and slower. voices of the Boy and Girl were when they spoke again about the mon things by the wayside. Once r eyes met and they both smiled something both sad and glad in m.

They went to the station to see about rgaret's trunks and make inquiries the school and the house where had arranged to board. Then rgaret sent a telegram to her mother say that she had arrived safely. so, when all was done and there no longer an excuse for lingering, Boy realized that he must leave her.

They stood alone for just a moment while the voluble landlady went to attend to something that was boiling over on the stove. It was an ugly little parlor that was to be her reception room for the next year at least, with red and green ingrain carpet of ancient pattern, hideous chromos on the walls, and frantically common furniture setting up in its shining varnish to be pretentious; but the girl had not seen it yet. She was filled with a great homesickness that had not possessed her even when she said good-by to her dear ones at home. She suddenly realized that the people with whom she was to be thrown were of another world from hers, and this one friend whom she had found in the desert was leaving her.

She tried to shake hands formally and tell him how grateful she was to him for rescuing her from the perils of the night, but somehow words seemed so inadequate, and tears kept crowding their way into her throat and eyes. Absurd it was, and he a stranger twenty hours before, and a man of other ways than hers besides. Yet he was her friend and rescuer.

She spoke her thanks as well as she could, and then looked up, a swift timid glance, and found his eyes upon her, earnest and troubled.

"Don't thank me," he said huskily, "I guess it was the best thing I ever did, finding you. I shan't forget, even if you never let me see you again—and—I hope you will."

His eyes searched hers wistfully.

"Of course," she said. "Why not?"

"I thank you," he said in quaint courtly fashion, bending low over her hand. "I shall try to be worthy of the honor."

And so saying he left, and mounting his horse rode away into the lengthening shadows of the afternoon.

SHE stood in the forlorn little room staring out of the window after her late companion, a sense of utter desolation upon her. For the moment all her brave hopes of the future had fled, and if she could have slipped unobserved out of the front door, down to the station, and boarded some waiting express to her home she would gladly have done it then and there.

Try as she would to summon her former reasons for coming to this wild, she could not think of one of them, and her eyes were very near to tears.

But Margaret Earle was not given to tears, and as she felt them smart beneath her lids she turned in a panic to prevent them. She could not afford to cry now. Mrs. Tanner would be returning and she must not find the "new schoolma'am" weeping.

With a glance she swept the meager, pretentious room, and then suddenly became aware of other presences.

In the doorway stood a man and a dog, both regarding her intently, with open surprise not unmixed with open appraisement and a marked degree of admiration.

The man was of medium height, slight, with a putty complexion, cold, pale-blue eyes, pale straw-colored hair, and a look of self-indulgence around his rather weak mouth. He was dressed in a city business suit of the latest cut, however, and looked as much out of place in that crude little house as did Margaret Earle herself, in her simple gown of dark blue crêpe and her undeniable air of style and good taste.

His eyes as they regarded her had in them a smile that the girl instinctively resented. Was it a shade too possessive and complacently sure for a stranger? The dog, a large collie, had great liquid brown eyes, menacing or loyal, as circumstances dictated, and regarded her with an air of brief indecision. She felt she was being weighed in the balance by both pairs of eyes. Of the two the girl preferred the dog.

Perhaps the dog understood, for he came a pace nearer and waved his plumy tail tentatively. For the dog she felt a glow of friendliness at once, but for the man she suddenly and most unreasonably conceived one of her violent and unexpected dislikes.

His Coal Cost Cut In Half

½ to ⅔ Guaranteed Saved
The UNDERFEED Way

You can't fail to get the real money significance to you of a letter like this—one among thousands of such others telling of more and better heat for less money the New-Feed UNDERFEED way. It's mighty interesting:

"In all my years as a householder I have never taken care of a furnace that requires less labor than the UNDERFEED. It is indeed truly remarkable how comfortably it has heated my home during this long and trying winter, on what, on a conservative basis, I should say would be about half what I have formerly expended on other furnaces with less favorable results.

(Signed) Jas. S. Copeland, 98 Murray St., Binghamton, N. Y.

WILLIAMSON NEW-FEED UNDERFEED Furnaces and Boilers CUT COAL BILLS ½ to ⅔

Save Your Coal Money Likewise

All this comfort and saving is due to the scientific principle of combustion of the New-Feed UNDERFEED. Coal is fed from below. The clean, live fire is always on top—in direct contact with the most effective radiation surfaces. Fire is never chilled, because there are no feed doors to open. There is no smoke, soot or gas, because these valuable heat elements are all consumed, since they must pass UP through the fire.

Easy to Handle

A boy of twelve can handle the New-Feed UNDERFEED with every success. A few easy strokes of the operating lever from a standing position, and the fire pot is replenished with coal. And the New-Feed UNDERFEED burns the cheaper grades of coal as effectively as others burn the costlier grades. No clinkers—no partly burned coal. Everything burned to clean white ashes—and few of them.

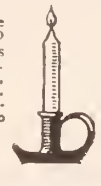
Ask For Free Book

It is called "From Overfed to Underfeed." Solves many a heating problem for you. It's free. No obligation. Just send the coupon today—NOW. Remember, a saving of ½ to ⅔ coal cost is actually Guaranteed the New-Feed UNDERFEED way—a guarantee backed by a million dollar concern.

The Williamson Heater Co.
(Formerly the Peck-Williamson Co.)
325 West Fifth Avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio

This cut-out view of the New-Feed UNDERFEED Furnace shows how it burns coal on the "candle" principle. Fuel is fed from below. Clean, effective flame always on top. All smoke, gas and dirt transformed into usable heat. No waste.

The Williamson Heater Co., 325 W. Fifth Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio.
Tell me how to cut my coal bills from ½ to ⅔ with a Williamson New-Feed.
Warm Air.................Steam or Hot Water.............
(Mark X after System interested in)
Name ....
Address ....
My Dealer's Name is ....
DEALERS! Let us tell you about the New-Feed UNDERFEED and our new proposition. Both are winners.



Burns Kerosene (Coal Oil)

LIGHTS WHOLE ROOM
BEATS ELECTRIC OR GASOLINE
10 DAYS FREE Charges Prepaid Send No Money

We don't ask you to pay a cent until you have used this wonderful modern light in your own home ten days—we even pay transportation charges. You may return it at our expense if not perfectly satisfied after putting it to every possible test for 10 nights. You can't possibly lose a cent. We want to prove to you that it makes an ordinary oil lamp look like a candle; beats electric, gasoline or acetylene. Lights and is put out like old oil lamp. Tests by Government and 33 leading Universities show it Burns 50 Hours on One Gallon common coal oil, and gives more than twice as much light as the best round wick open flame lamps. No odor, smoke or noise; simple, clean, no pressure, won't explode. Several million people already enjoying this powerful, steady light, nearest to sunlight. Guaranteed.

Men with Rigs or Autos make big money

delivering the ALADDIN on our easy plan. No previous experience necessary. Practically every farm home and small town home will buy after trying. Conrad, a farmer near Basil, O., and subscriber to Christian Herald, used an Aladdin one year in his own home, then started distributing among his neighbors and has disposed of several hundred lamps in his County the past three winters, making splendid money. Thousands who are coining money endorse the Aladdin just as strongly. No Money Required. We furnish capital to reliable men to get started. Ask for our distributor's plan and learn how to make big money in unoccupied territory Sample sent for 10 Days' Free Trial. We want one user in each locality to whom we can refer customers. Be the first and get our special introductory offer under which you get your own lamp free for showing it to a few neighbors and sending in their orders. Write quick for 10 DAY ABSOLUTELY FREE TRIAL. Address nearest office.

Won GOLD MEDAL at World's Exposition San Francisco

MANTLE LAMP COMPANY, 339 Aladdin Building
Largest Kerosene (Coal Oil) Mantle Lamp House in the World
CHICAGO NEW YORK CITY PORTLAND, ORE. MONTREAL or WINNIPEG, CANADA

FREE
BUIST'S
Garden Guide

It gives detailed directions as to plant and flower culture, showing how the best results will be obtained in different localities.

Buist's seeds have been famous among vegetable and flower gardeners since 1828—they grow.

This year, we make the following stunning offers:

1st. For every dollar purchase in packets and ounces we will give you an additional twenty-five cents worth in packets and ounces.

2nd. In addition to the above, we will include Free, Five Packets of our finest flower seed, all of easy culture, flowering profusely all season.

ROBERT BUIST COMPANY
Dept. M. 4-6 S. Front St., Philadelphia, Pa.

POULTRY PAPER 44-124 PAGE periodical, up-to-date; tells all you want to know about care and management of poultry for pleasure or profit. Four months for 10 cents.
POULTRY ADVOCATE, Dept. 29, Syracuse, N. Y.

Indoor Closet

More Comfortable Healthful and Convenient than the Out-Door Privy

Eliminates the out-door privy, open vault and cess-pool. They are breeding places for germs. Have a warm, sanitary, odorless toilet right in your house. No going out in cold weather. A boon to invalids. Endorsed by State Boards of Health.

ABSOLUTELY ODORLESS
Put It Anywhere In The House

The germs are killed by a chemical process in water in the container, which you empty once a month. Absolutely no odor. No more trouble to empty than dishwater. Closet absolutely guaranteed. Write for full description and price.

ROWE SANITARY MFG. CO.
130 Rowe Bldg. Detroit, Mich.
Ask about the Ro-San Washstand—Hot and Cold Running Water Without Plumbing

Pearl Grit Aids digestion, makes shells, makes eggs, makes feathers, makes strength. Send for prices and free valuable booklet. Write to-day.
The Ohio Marble Co., 31 S. Cleveland St., Piqua, Ohio

PRESSED HARD

Coffee's Weight on Old Age.

When people realize the injurious effects of coffee and the better health that a change to Postum can bring, they are usually glad to lend their testimony for the benefit of others.

"My mother, since her early childhood, was an inveterate coffee drinker, had been troubled with her heart for a number of years and complained of that 'weak-all-over' feeling and sick stomach.

"Some time ago I was making a visit to a distant part of the country and took dinner with one of the merchants of the place. I noticed a somewhat unusual flavour of the 'coffee' and asked him concerning it. He replied that it was Postum.

"I was so pleased with it that I bought a package to carry home with me, and had wife prepare some for the next meal. The whole family liked it so well that we discontinued coffee and used Postum entirely.

"I had been very anxious concerning my mother's condition, but we noticed that after using Postum for a short time she felt much better, had little trouble with her heart, and no sick stomach; that the headaches were not so frequent, and her general condition much improved. This continued until she was well and hearty.

"I know Postum has benefited myself and the other members of the family, especially my mother, as she was a victim of long standing." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

—sold by Grocers.

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE

To try in your own home 30 days free, no matter where you live. Show your friends. Send it back at our expense if you do not want to keep it. Hundreds of thousands in daily use. Perfect bakers, efficient heaters, made of high grade material, beautifully finished, smooth design, guaranteed for years by our Two Million Dollar Bond.

Ask your dealers to show you Hoosier Stoves. Write for our big free book showing photographs, describing large assortment of sizes and designs to select from, explaining our free trial. Send postal today. Write your name and address plainly. No obligations.

HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, Ind.

POMPEIAN OLIVE OIL

ALWAYS FRESH

There is the same marked difference between fresh Olive Oil and Olive Oil packed months ago as there is between a newly-laid egg and an egg months old. Insist on POMPEIAN

THE STANDARD IMPORTED OLIVE OIL

RIDER AGENTS WANTED

in each town to ride and exhibit sample 1916 "Ranger" Bicycle. Write for special offer.

We Ship on Approval without a cent deposit, allow 30 DAYS FREE TRIAL, actual riding test, and prepay freight on every bicycle.

LOWEST PRICES on bicycles, tires and sundries. Do not buy until you receive our catalogs and learn our unheard of prices and marvelous special offer. Tires, coaster-brake rear wheels, lamps, parts, sundries, half usual prices.

MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. G-71, CHICAGO, ILL.

PIANO TUNING AT HOME

A LUCRATIVE PROFESSION easily acquired. Anyone can learn. Our PATENTED TUNE-A-PHONE METHOD makes success more certain than best oral instruction. Guaranteed. Write for FREE BOOKLET, telling how our STUDENTS MAKE BIG MONEY.

Niles Bryant School of Tuning, 22 Inst. Bld., Battle Creek, Mich.

PASTOR'S COMMUNION SERVICE

For Visiting the Sick

Every Pastor should have one. Leather Case, Silver-plated Flagon and Wafer Box, six crystal glasses. An ideal gift for the pastor. Special price, $6.50 postpaid, satisfaction guaranteed.

THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
Box 611 LIMA, OHIO.

YOU CAN AFFORD Familiar Songs of the Gospel (No. 1 or 2). Round or shape notes. $3 per hundred; samples, 5c each. 83 songs, words and music.

E. A. K. HACKETT, FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

Into this tableau bustled Mrs. Tanner.

"Well, now, I didn't go to leave you by your lonesome all this time," she apologized, wiping her hands on her apron, "but them beans boiled clean over, and I hed to put 'em in a bigger kettle. You see I put in more beans 'count o' you bein' here, an' I ain't uset to calcalatin' on two extry." She looked happily from the man to the girl and back again.

"Mr. West, I s'pose o' course you interjuced yourself? Bein' a preacher, you don't hev to 'stan' on ceremony like the rest of mankind. You ain't? Well, let me hev the pleasure of interjucin' our new school teacher, Miss Margaret Earle. I 'spect you two'll be awful chummy right at the start, both bein' from the East that way, an' both hevin' ben to college."

Margaret Earle acknowledged the bow with a cool little inclination of her head. She wondered why she didn't hate the garrulous woman who rattled on in this happy, take-it-for-granted way; but there was something so innocently pleased in her manner that she couldn't help putting all her wrath on the smiling man who came forward instantly with a low bow and a voice of fulsome flattery.

"Indeed, Miss Earle, I assure you I am happily surprised. I am sure Mrs. Tanner's prophecy will come true and we shall be the best of friends. When they told me the new teacher was to board here I really hesitated. I have seen something of these Western teachers in my time and scarcely thought I should find you congenial; but I can see at a glance that you are the exception to the rule."

He presented a soft unmanly white hand and there was nothing to do but take it or seem rude to her hostess; but her manner was like icicles, and she was thankful she had not yet removed her gloves.

The gloved finger-tips merely touched his hand and were withdrawn, and the girl turned to her hostess with a smile of finality as if he were dismissed. But he did not seem disposed to take the hint and withdraw, until on a sudden the great dog came and stood between them, with open-mouthed welcome and with joyous greeting in the plumy, wagging tail. He pushed close to her and looked up into her face insistently, his hanging pink tongue and wide, smiling countenance proclaiming that he was satisfied with his investigation.

Margaret looked down at him and then stooped and put her arms about his neck. Something in his kindly dog-expression made her feel suddenly as if she had a real friend.

It seemed the man, however, did not like the situation. He kicked gingerly at the dog's hind legs and said in a harsh voice:

"Get out of the way, sir. You're annoying the lady. Get out, I say!"

The dog, however, uttered a low growl and merely showed the whites of his menacing eyes at the man, turning his body slightly so that he stood across the lady's way protectingly as if to keep the man from her.

Margaret smiled at the dog and laid her hand on his head as if to signify her acceptance of the friendship he had offered her, and he waved his plume once more and attended her from the room, neither of them giving further attention to the man.

"Confound that dog!" said Rev. Frederick West in a most unpreac like tone as he walked to the window looked out. Then to himself he mu

"A pretty girl. A very pretty I really think it'll be worth my w to stay a month at least."

UP in her room the "very pr girl" was unpacking her suit and struggling with the tears. since she was a wee little girl and w to school all alone for the first time she felt so very forlorn; and it was little bare bedroom that had done At least that had been the final st that had made too great the bur of keeping down those threate tears.

It was only a bare, plain room unfinished walls, rough woodwork cheap wooden bed, bureau wit warped looking-glass, and on the a braided rug of rags. A little woo rocker, another small straight woo chair, a hanging wall pocket decor with purple roses, a hanging books composed of three thin boards str together with maroon picture cor violently colored picture card of M in the Bulrushes framed in straws red worsted, bright blue paper sh at the windows! That was the ro

Going to the window and looking she saw for the first time the one lux the little room possessed—a view! such a view! Wide and wonde and far it stretched, in colors unmatc by painter's brush; a purple moun topped by rosy clouds in the dista For the second time in Arizona soul was lifted suddenly out of it and its dismay by a vision of the thi that God has made and the large of it all.

To be continued

Little Stories from the Missions

Church Bells Rang for Carranza

REV. CHARLES PETRAN and Rev. Newell J. Elliott, in a letter from Mexico, give this interesting incident: "The train service south of Saltillo was very uncertain, as only box cars were being used for passenger service and it was taking several days often to make the trip. Through an accident, a big bridge near Saltillo was out of commission, which delayed traffic. We did not much like the idea of riding on top, or inside, or under a box car, so decided to wait a little longer and to witness the entrance of Generals Carranza and Obregon into Saltillo, after it had been announced that Carranza was to be recognized. His coming was duly celebrated by the erection of several artistic arches, flags, music and fireworks, for it was from this city that Carranza, when he was governor of Coahuila, went out in rebellion against Huerta. The news of the recognition was announced to the people by the ringing of church bells. It was Sunday morning and I had just entered our chapel and was talking with the pastor. We were not sure what the bells meant, for this sign has been used so often the last few years to indicate a victorious battle at every point. He said, 'Carranza is recognized by the United States. It is well, and I have come to God's house to recognize my Lord, for this is the Lord's day.' It seems to have been the prevalent idea that all the evangelical work in Mexico was almost entirely disorganized and demoralized because of the revolutionary conditions. The churches we visited does not reveal the fact, for our pastors worked faithfully and with much success continually during all these months and years. The recuperative powers of this city and country cannot but deserve praise."

A Chinese "Devil Shrine"

REV. WM. C. KERR of Chai Ryung, China, sends this incident from his itinerating experiences: "As I was entering Samsang, I saw a great assemblage on one of the hills in front of a little devil shrine. I found it was an annual meeting to do honor to their Satanic majesties, and I entered the low dingy building to find people bowing before crude water-colored pictures, intended to show forth the devils in all their hideousness, and praying for blessings during the coming year. As they left the enclosure, they would throw fragments of bread and cakes around on the ground to appease the unseen denizens of the place. But those same spirits are fast losing their influence, for it was only a few years ago that the worshipers met by the thousands; now only a few hundred appear, and the assemblage seems more like the average crowd on fair day than like a meeting for worship."

Took Courage and Confessed Christ

MISS C. J. BRASKAMP, missionary at Tengchowfu, China, writes, "In one village, we met an earnest old Christian woman. Her husband was also a Christian and had joined church. This old woman of sixty wis to join but was afraid to make a pu confession. She could read the Bi understood the Gospel very well, she could sing hymns from mem but she said, 'I dare not make a pu confession.' After a great deal of suasion, we said. 'Let us ask God give you courage to come out bol for him.' She was delighted to h us pray with her and after pray she exclaimed, in a loud voice, 'No am not afraid, I'll go and confess hi my personal Saviour.' Her friends heard of this woman's confession w very much pleased, and she herself s to them now, 'I will teach you to r the Bible and will explain it to you

Have You $100 to Invest?

MANY of the great investment banking houses welcome the patronage of the small investor. Today the man with $100 to invest need not keep his modest capital in a 2 or 3 per cent. bank. It may be just as securely invested at 5 or 6 per cent. in a good bond, instantly salable. Investment bankers, to aid the small investor in first thinking out his own investment problems and then in making discriminating selection of bonds best suited to his needs, maintain extensive publishing departments from which interesting and instructive booklets are issued. These are mailed free upon request from those who are contemplating making investments. Our readers may obtain the following free circulars and booklets without placing themselves under the slightest obligation:

Gilt-edged municipal bonds are generally recognized as one of the safest forms of investment known. A booklet showing how 5 per cent. and 6 per cent. may be obtained in municipals is offered free to Christian Herald subscribers by Charles A. Kidder & Co., W. C. T. U. Building, Chicago, Ill.

Write for booklet "O" and list of current offerings of 6 per cent. farm mortgages offered by E. J. Lander & Co., Grand Forks, N. D., who advertise "We're Right on the Ground."

Bowman, Cost & Co., 615 Third National Bank Building, St. Louis, Mo., in "Investment Factors," show how amounts of $100 and upwards may be invested in 5 and 6 per cent. drainage bonds. "Investment Factors" is published monthly and is offered free to our readers.

Peabody, Houghteling & Co., 10 South La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill., offer our readers participation in 6 per cent. first mortgages on Chicago real estate. These mortgages are described in "Circular No. 900-C." Send for it.

Write to A. H. Bickmore & Co., 111 Broadway, New York City, for "Circulars HM and H2," which tell about 6 per cent. pu utility bonds in the denomination of $ $500 and $1,000.

The United Light and Railways Co., s ing 53 communities in five states, will the $100 investor 5 per cent. and 6 per c for the use of his money through a purc of the company's bonds and notes. T bonds are described in a circular issued N. W. Halsey & Co., 49 Wall Street, York City.

The Forman 6 per cent. farm mortg are described in an interesting booklet p lished by George M. Forman & Co., 11 So LaSalle Street, Chicago, Ill. There is safer investment than carefully selected f mortgages offered by reliable firms. booklet is free.

The Partial Payment Plan and Invest Guide (270 pages), revised to date, Marked Letter mailed free on request m to L. R. Latrobe & Co., 111 Broadway, York City.

Bonds issued by cities are the class of sec ities bought by savings banks because the says these are safest. Bolger, Mosser William, 29 South LaSalle Street, Chica Ill., interestingly tell about this class securities and how they may be obtained $100 amounts, in free booklets. Write them.

◆

A BOOK THAT REALLY EXPLAIN

I received my book of "Difficult Bi Questions." I thank you for it, for I en it very much, as it explains questions I not understand before. I have taken Christian Herald for a number of years. can truthfully say I can find no paper to t its place. MRS. S. J. ALMSTEAD

Newtown, Conn.

The War in Europe

Continued from page 66

Contrary to what seems to be the general impression of people in America, this part of Europe has a very low winter temperature, besides a large snow fall.

In the west the week has been singularly eventless. The fighting of the past three or four weeks on the extreme eastern end of the line which centered at and around Hartsmannsweilerkopf seemed to have died away, and all through this region absolute quietness now exists. But on January 9 London reported the capture by the Germans of a hill north of Hirzstein, together with about 1000 men and 15 machine guns, the immediate result of which was the retirement of the French troops south of Hartsmannsweilerkopf.

Farther west in the Champagne district, except for a day's activity in the vicinity of Tahure, all has been calm. The much discussed possibility of a German offensive on this western line does not seem to be growing more of a probability. It is most likely that there will not be much more activity on this line for the next eight weeks or so, say until the middle of March.

Outside of a little cannonading on the eastern front along the Isonzo River, the Austro-Italian campaign has been featureless the whole of the week. In this campaign, too, the weather conditions seriously circumscribe activities.

Canada is to increase its overseas contingent to 500,000 men in the near future, according to an announcement of the premier of the Dominion. Thus far 212,690 have enlisted in Canada, of whom 118,922 have been sent to Europe. Of those in Europe about 50,000 are on the firing line. In the transportation of the 118,922 sent abroad only one soldier has been lost in the Atlantic crossing, a really marvelous record.

On the southeastern front there has been comparatively little activity. The fighting between the Montenegrins and Austrians languished most of the week, owing again to weather conditions, which in this very rough country are of the highest importance. Toward the end of the week, however, the Austrians resumed their advance into Montenegro on their line southwest of Novi Bazar. On the southwestern part of the Montenegrin frontier the Austrians are reported to be preparing a new invasion. Fighting is going on in Albania between the Bulgarians and Albanians on one side and the Serbians and probably the Italians on the other, but none of the details have reached us, owing no doubt to censorship severities.

In the Salonica front itself all has been quiet. Reports, or better, rumors reach us that the Teutons and Bulgarians will move south on Salonica about the 15th of January, but there seems to be at the present time no confirmation of these from serious sources. In the meantime, the Allies are extending their fortifications around that city, and fresh troops are said to be arriving at the town by sea continually.

The consuls arrested by the Allies at Salonica, who were thence taken to France, have been transported to the Swiss border and there released, so that this question has been disposed of. Another cause of complication with Greece has, however, arisen. The Allies have arrested several hundred Greek subjects in Salonica and confined them, which action against its own subjects on its own territory by tresspassers thereon, is not viewed with complacency by Greece. An energetic protest has been made and the Greek papers are calling on the government to take action. Unless the government is willing to risk the chances of war, it is difficult to see what more it can do than to confine itself to protests.

Sweden is again growing restive and has held up mail going from England to Russia in retaliation for various grievances she has against these two countries.

The campaign in Mesopotamia is in practically the same position as last week. The British are still in Kut-el-Amara, and it is apparently out of the power of the Turks to drive them out, and on the other hand the British are unable to do more than hold on.

There have been insignificant actions along the Caucasian front, while in Persia the Russians continue their advance. Nothing more has been heard of the projected Egyptian campaign by the Turks and Teutons, the past week.

The real interest of the week has, however, been in the report on Lord Derby's scheme of recruiting in Great Britain, and the introduction in Parliament of a bill applying limited conscription, or compulsory military service.

The results attained by Lord Derby's scheme cannot be looked upon as constituting a success. When Lord Derby began work on his plan on October 23 there were in England, Scotland and Wales a grand total of 5,011,441 men of military age who had not enlisted. Ireland is not included in the scope of the scheme. Of these 5,011,441 men 2,829,263 men attested, leaving 2,182,178 men who did not offer their services. Of the 2,829,263 who did, 428,853 were rejected for physical reasons, which reduced the available number to 2,400,410. Of these, 215,431 men enlisted for immediate service, leaving 2,285,000 to be considered, of whom 840,000 were unmarried and 1,445,000 married. These were attested for future service. Of the men who did not present themselves at all 1,029,000 were unmarried.

During the progress of recruiting under Lord Derby's scheme, Mr. Asquith made a pledge that no married men should be taken until practically all unmarried men had been, and here were over a million unmarried men who had not even presented themselves. To redeem his pledge, Mr. Asquith had only one course possible, to apply compulsion to the unmarried men who had not come forward. This he did by presenting to Parliament on January 5 a bill whereby military service by bachelors and childless widowers of military age was made compulsory, and Great Britain entered on the most important Parliamentary struggle over the most far-reaching measure since the Reform Bill of 1832.

Lord Kitchener introduced the bill in the Upper House and his speech in so doing was the most interesting for this summary, as he spoke from the military point of view only. "We are now asking Parliament to sanction a change (from the volunteer system), as it has been proved that in the special circumstances of this utterly unprecedented struggle, the existing system without modification is not equal to maintaining the army which is needed to secure victory."

After a fierce debate in the Lower House the bill passed its first reading by a vote of 403 to 105. The third reading will, however, be the real test, but it is safe to say that the bill will finally pass this house by a large majority. The Lords will pass it without difficulty and overwhelmingly. The Irish party and the Labor party were the backbone of the opposition in the Lower House.

On account of the introduction of this bill there were two resignations from the British cabinet, Sir John Simons, Home Secretary, and Arthur Henderson. Mr. Henderson, however, only resigned to fight the edict of the congress of his party (labor) against any form of conscription, by an appeal to his electors.

Reports from London on January 10 state that the Gallipoli Peninsula has now been completely evacuated by the Allies, the final withdrawal of troops being attended with the wounding of only one man. The Allies are reported to have carried away all their guns. The London morning papers express satisfaction and relief over the successful operation of withdrawal.

Great Britain has sustained another serious naval loss. Official announcement was made January 10 that one of the finest of her last class of predreadnoughts, the King Edward VII, had been destroyed by a mine, officers and crew escaping to the last man. The location of this disaster was not stated. This battleship was of the same general type as our New Jersey and Nebraska, and cost the English government about $8,000,000. The late King Edward laid the first keelplate, and Queen Mary was sponsor at the launching of this vessel.

Choose Seedless

Sunkist

Oranges

Seedless oranges slice better, wafer-thin and unmarred. And these seedless navel oranges are the tenderest also.

Famous chefs prefer Sunkist because this firm and tender fruit makes the best flavored and best looking dishes too.

Millions of housewives are now finding out these facts. You will find them out once you try Sunkist.

So order tender Sunkist seedless navel oranges for all culinary uses in your home.

See how good these dishes are when made with seedless Sunkist from the sunny California groves.

There are scores of luscious orange dishes described in our free recipe book. They will lend variety to your meals, and are very quickly and easily prepared. No woman ever wants to be without this book once she knows how healthful oranges are, and knows the charming ways to use this fruit.

Send now for the book. A postcard gets it.

CALIFORNIA FRUIT GROWERS EXCHANGE
CO-OPERATIVE—NON-PROFIT
Eastern Headquarters: Dept. A92, 139 N. Clark St., Chicago
Sunkist oranges and lemons are sold by all first-class dealers everywhere
Save Sunkist tissue wrappers for beautiful silverware (452)

Plant the Tape
RADISH

Most good stores which usually sell seed are now selling Seedtape. If your dealer cannot supply you we will gladly fill your orders direct.

Ready-To-Grow* Seedtape Gardens afford you the knowledge and experience of a board of gardening authorities. You get the best varieties of each flower and vegetable and in just the quantities needed.

$2 Seedtape Garden — Contains 20 boxes of Seedtape Vegetables We also send our 1916 Seedtape catalog with full directions for successive plantings, and designs of model gardens to make the most of your available space. Attach the coupon below to your order enclosing $2.00 and we will include 5 full-size packages of Seedtape Flowers, with our compliments.

$1 Seedtape Garden — Contains 10 boxes of Seedtape Vegetables. We also send our 1916 Seedtape catalog with full directions for successive plantings and designs of model gardens. Attach the coupon below to your order enclosing $1 and we will include 2 full-size packages of Seedtape Flowers with our compliments.

25c Seedtape Garden — 5 packages of Seedtape Flowers (full size) with the 1916 Seedtape catalog, full directions for successive plantings and designs and model gardens.

10c Seedtape Garden—1 full-size, 40-foot box of radishes with the 1916 Seedtape catalog, directions and designs for gardens.

County Agents Wanted Throughout the U. S.

American Seedtape Company
3913 Woolworth Building New York

Plant as fast as you can walk!

A Complete Seedtape Garden for $2

Plant it a whole row at a time—as fast as you can walk down the furrow. There's no thinning out to be done, for the seeds are correctly spaced when you get them. No more bending over—no more uncertainty on the quality of seeds—for each variety of seeds is grown where the climate and soil conditions are best adapted to it and only the choicest crops are accepted.

SEEDTAPE

(Better Quality Seeds)

What Seedtape Is Seedtape consists of clean, carefully selected garden seed of prize-winning strains, properly spaced in a thin paper tape, fertilized, with fish glue. The fertilized tape acts as a wick and draws the ground moisture, thus assuring earlier germination and healthier plant life. Seedtape Vegetables come in 40-foot strips, selling at 10 cents, and Seedtape Flowers in 10-foot strips, selling at 5c.

This Coupon is Worth 25c

If sent to the American Seedtape Company, Woolworth Building, New York, with your remittance for the $2 Seedtape Garden, this coupon brings you free, 5 full-size, 10-foot packages of Seedtape Flowers.

If sent with your remittance for the $1 Seedtape Garden, it brings you free, 2 full-size packages of Seedtape Flowers.

My name is ....

My address is ....

My dealer is ....

CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOKS

TWO BOOKS BY A FAMOUS PASTOR

REV. J. H. JOWETT, D. D., has been aptly described as the most spiritual preacher in America. He has written two volumes, "Thirsting for the Springs" and "Brooks by the Traveler's Way." These delightful books are written in this great preacher's happiest vein and the gift of felicitous expression shines out on every page.

Dr. Jowett is a deep student of human nature. He has a faculty of kindling the finer emotions and awakening the noblest ambition. This was the impression on the minds of the editors of the Christian Herald after reading these two companion volumes.

These two volumes, aggregating 530 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, will be sent together with the Christian Herald for one whole year, postpaid, for $2.00. Or, we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, these two volumes for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $1.50.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER'S NEW BOOK

MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR., does not make up her stories and poems—they just form themselves on the background of her mind as winter sprites trace wonderful pictures on windowpanes, and then simply because she cannot help herself, she sets down a description of these pictures. There are, in all, in her new book, "Real People and Dreams," about eighty poems and thirty-two short stories and sketches.

We will send this new volume by Margaret E. Sangster, Jr., handsomely bound in cloth, with a new photographic frontispiece of Margaret E. Sangster herself, and with illustrations for a number of the poems, together with the Christian Herald for one whole year, postpaid, for $1.85. Or, we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, this volume for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $1.50.

"FORTY THOUSAND BEAUTIFUL QUOTATIONS"

SOME years ago the Christian Herald published a work entitled "Forty Thousand Sublime and Beautiful Thoughts." It was composed of a collection of the best sayings on every conceivable subject which the compiler could come upon. In the course of time the edition of this book was exhausted. We have had so many inquiries for it that we have decided to republish it this year thoroughly revised.

We will send you this volume, together with the Christian Herald for one whole year, for $3.00, or we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, "Forty Thousand Sublime and Beautiful Thoughts" for sending us two new yearly subscriptions to the Christian Herald with $3.00.

LUTHER IN LIGHT OF RECENT RESEARCH

WHILE there are several lives of Luther, Professor Heinrich Boehmer's famous work, which has attracted universal attention in Europe, is one of the best that has ever appeared. It comes most opportunely in view of the approaching celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the nailing of Luther's famous Thesis on the gate of the old castle church at Wittenberg, which was the beginning of the Reformation. The Christian Herald has had the good fortune to secure the exclusive American rights of this book and has had it translated by Professor Carl F. Huth, Jr., of the University of Chicago.

The Foreword to Boehmer's work by Professor J. H. Robinson of Columbia University, pays a high tribute both to biographer and to the translator.

The Life of Luther, handsomely bound in cloth, will be sent together with the Christian Herald for one whole year, postpaid, for $2.25, or we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, this volume for sending us two new yearly subscriptions to the Christian Herald with $3.00.

A NEW "DO SOMETHING" BOOK

DID you read "Janice Day," which was offered with the Christian Herald last year? You will remember it was the "Do Something" book. The success of the book was such that the author, Helen Beecher Long, wrote a sequel entitled "The Testing of Janice Day." It is a vivid and delightful picture of typical New England life and character.

We will send "The Testing of Janice Day," 310 pages, attractive cloth covers, together with the Christian Herald for one whole year for $2.00, or we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, "The Testing of Janice Day," for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $1.50.

OUR ART CALENDAR FOR 1916

THIS beautiful calendar is composed of a reproduction of that remarkable picture of Christ walking beside the plowman in the field, which was published under the title of "Lo, I Am With You Alway." The picture is described in verses by Margaret E. Sangster, Jr. This calendar is printed in eight colors, achieving a most beautiful effect.

We will send this superb calendar together with the Christian Herald for one whole year for $1.75, or to old subscribers sending us their renewal and one new subscription to the Christian Herald, we will send two copies of this calendar mailed to separate addresses if desired, FREE.

A COMPANION TO THE BIBLE

HAVE you bought your copy of "555 Difficult Bible Questions Answered?" Here is another book which has had a wonderful success during the past year and every lover of the Bible should possess a copy. Indeed it is a wonderful help to Bible study. This book is the result of research covering a period of twenty-seven years. Its theology is thoroughly sound.

The beauty of this book is that it answers those very questions which you are always on the point of asking but for some reason don't.

We will send "555 Difficult Bible Questions Answered" together with the Christian Herald for one whole year for $1.85. Or, we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, this volume for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $1.50.

A STORY FOR THE FAMILY CIRCLE

WE do not know when we have had quite as much pleasure in reading any book this year as "Little Sir Galahad." There is so much that is charming and humorous and intensely human in the whole story that it appeals to the reader probably with greater force than if the action were on a more dignified level.

"Little Sir Galahad" is really a story of the golden age in our own time.

It is as good a story as we have encountered in many a day.

"Little Sir Galahad," 376 pages, illustrated and handsomely bound in cloth, will be sent postpaid with one yearly subscription to the Christian Herald for $2.00. Or, we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, this volume for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $1.50.

OUR 1916 ALMANAC

DON'T forget the Almanac. This year it is better than ever. In addition to its permanent features, its prose and poetry, its wit and humor, it contains new departments such as the story of the European War up to date of going to press; political information which should be at the disposal of every voter in the Presidential Election of 1916. There is a comprehensive description of the Lincoln Highway; difficult Bible questions are answered; a department devoted to Common Law, etc.

Add ten cents to your subscription to the Christian Herald and we will send you the Christian Herald Almanac for 1916 postpaid.

Address, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also anyone is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

THIS good news comes from a South Carolina mother: "It is my joy to write you of three answered prayers during this year. A brother has been reclaimed and is continuing in the victorious life. Another loved one has also gained the victory over intemperance; the third answered prayer was for work made possible for a son." Mrs. J. W. H. writes from Ontario: "I would like to acknowledge God's faithfulness in answering many prayers, especially the conversion of my daughter within the past few months." Mrs. A. Y. K., Penryn, Pa., writes: "I wish to thank you and acknowledge answer to prayer asked some months ago for a dear brother who was sick and not converted. He fell asleep in Jesus after being converted. The last month of his life he was a light to all who came in his sick-room." Mrs. E. C., Canton, Ohio, writes to tell of answered prayer. She says: "I want to acknowledge your answer to prayer for my brother, who was addicted to the drink habit. He has not drank for about six months." Mrs. S. W. H., Lake Placid, N. Y., writes: "I asked your prayers for the conversion of my sons, and for some time one has been much interested in religious things and yesterday he united with the church. My other son writes me that he reads his Bible. My little niece also has come out on the Lord's side and is soon to unite with the church." Mrs. G. F. F. writes from Chatham, N. Y.: "Several months ago I asked the prayers of the League that I might hear from a dear brother very soon and that a great trouble which threatened those dear to him might be averted. Thank God, my prayer was answered in a wonderful way."

A Believer in Prayer writes from Dandridge, Tenn.: "Some time ago I wrote you asking prayer for four young men, and also that a brother-in-law's mind might be restored. Since that time one young man has been converted, another who was doubting his conversion has been strengthened, and my brother-in-law's mind has been restored." Mrs. C. A. A., Excelsior Springs, Mo., writes: "I asked you to pray that my nephew would accept Jesus as his Saviour. He has since written me that he is trusting him every day." Faith writes: "I want to acknowledge answers to recent prayers for financial aid, when it seemed almost impossible to get positions."

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have also been received from Mrs. J. R., Hamlin, Texas; Mrs. G. L. O., Vicksburg, Mich.; Mrs. H. H. B., Detroit, Mich.; Mrs. A. S. S. A., Connecticut; Mrs. E. J. D., Yates City, Ill.; Mrs. D. A. R., Dunkerton, Iowa (for the wonderful healing of an aged man who had Bright's disease); E. M. P., Kirkdale, Que.; F. C., Greenup, Ill.; A Reader, Ames, Iowa; H. L. W., Wayside, Ill.; Mrs. E. A. H., Seeley, Calif.; M. A. C., Brockton, Mass.; A Subscriber, Redlands, Calif.; A Friend, Ballston Spa, N. Y.; E. C. H., Brooklyn, N. Y.; J. M. H., Denver, Colo.; J. A. V., Quincy, Ill.; A Reader; J. A., Wheeling, Ill.; Mrs. W. H. C., Ozark, Ark.; A Friend, Escondido, Calif.; A Friend, Mich.; Mrs. E A. B., Baltimore, Md.; Reader, Clayton, N. Mex.; Mrs. M. H., Columbus, Ohio; A Reader, Alice, Texas; E. E. D., Frankton, Ind.; M. K. S., Little Rock, Ark.; Mrs. H. S., Minnesota; Anxious Reader, West Virginia; Mrs. L. C. B., Detroit, Mich.; Mrs. E. E. A., Fosston, Colo.; Mrs. C. A. B., Montverde, Fla.; A Reader, Ohio; A Member of the Prayer League, Fort Worth, Texas; J. W., Strong, Ark.; Mrs. R., Canada; M. M., Seattle, Wash.; Mrs. L. S., Highland, Mich.; E. F., Reading, Pa.; M. G., Ronda, N. C.; E. J., Sharon, Pa.; Believer in Prayer, Dayton, Ohio; Mrs. E. R. T., Kingsley, Pa. (for restoration of mother to health); M, D., Salem, Ore.; A Reader, Alabama.

A mother asks prayer for a little daughter nine years old who has never talked. She writes: "It is a great sorrow for my husband and myself when we can see all the other chi bright and cheerful, and she is s where looking on in silence. Whe all sing she attempts to join in cries because she cannot." A father writes to say that his wife a hospital for the insane, leavin care of six children upon his shou Beside his farm work he does the ing and mending for his little fa but is particularly grieved that th not get on happily, but quarrel a themselves and resent the authori their oldest sister. We know tha League will join in earnest prayer this father may be helped to lea little flock into lives of sweetness and peace; also that the wife mother may be restored to the circle and that the household ma every way be richly blessed.

Another father writes from Grove, Clay County, Ill., to tell long and happy experience of fu vation. He adds:

"I have a family. My dear wife was ca her heavenly home five years ago. She wonderful faith in our Saviour and for s years before she departed this life she w of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and was and anxious to go to her reward. While sad and lonely without her, my childr kind to me, and I ask the Prayer Lea join in prayer that each of them, thoug are all converted, may be filled with the
of God that passeth understanding; als
we may have an old-time Pentecostal r at Bible Grove, Clay County, Ill."

Prayers are asked for revivals of r at Mount Pleasant, Mich.; Pueblo, Big Lake, Minn.; Princeton, W. Va.;
ville, Iowa; Seeley, Calif.; Los Angeles,
Pine Bluff, Ark.; Johnson, Vt.; Elaz ton, Tenn.; Lebanon, Ill.; Weston, Denver, Colo. (in the Washington
Church); Eugene, Ore. (in the First Church); Penryn, Pa. Prayers are that Ohio may become a dry state; a Believer, Port Leyden, N. Y., asks that twenty people may come nearer to

H. R. asks prayer for a poor stru mission in Wellsville, Ohio; Miss D.
Toronto, Canada, that the Jewish m may join the mother's meeting and Class; A Troubled Mother, Montrose, that the boys in the Baraca class of the Church may be converted and becom Christians.

J. L. E. and I. A. M. ask prayer f mental restoration of their wives; M
T. M. and J. H. T., their sons'; Mrs.
Mrs. S. L., Mrs. A. K., Mrs. J. S. S. and
M. P., their daughters'. Seventeen friends ask prayer for the mental resto or strengthening of friends, relatives or selves.

Mrs. J. J. T. asks prayer that son's may be restored; Mrs. S. L., her daug Mrs. D. K. and E. M. P., their sisters'.
other friends ask prayer for restorati strengthening of sight for themselves or friends.

Thirty-nine friends ask prayer for a work of grace, assurance of sins forgiv express in other ways their desire for pe spiritual blessing.

Nine parents ask blessing that sons m delivered from the liquor habit; four their husbands. Sixteen other friend prayer that friends or relatives may livered from the liquor habit.

Mrs. H. M. F. asks prayer that a so a friend may be cured of the drug habit

Mrs. M. C. asks prayer that five sons be saved; twenty-seven other parent prayer for the conversion of sons; fifteen for the conversion of husbands. Sixty other friends ask prayer that friends or tives may be converted.

Seventeen readers ask prayer for s spiritual blessing for relatives or friends

Ninety-seven friends ask prayer fo healing of friends or relatives, including and Mrs. W. H. M., who ask that a ch seven may soon learn to talk; "Co-wo that a neighbor's child who cannot talk gain the power of speech; also Mrs. M that daughter may be able to talk an body be strengthened; and Mrs. S. L., daughter's speech may be restored.
friends ask prayer for the healing of including two that they may regain th of their limbs.

Twelve friends ask prayer for the resto of hearing for themselves or other friends

Fifty readers ask prayer for help or gui in financial affairs.

Fifty-one friends ask prayer for the g ing of varied desires and needs, including J. T. F., who asks that a broken-he mother may learn the whereabouts of he who left home.

◆

A TREASURE IN ONE'S LIBRA

I think the answers are Scriptural and sen
It is a treasure to have in one's library.
Allen, Pa. C. C. SPANGL

What Readers Think About Preparedness

he Dangers of Preparedness

I appears that no nation on earth vas so well prepared for war eighteen months ago as Germany And they were the first ones into fight, and if reports are reliable have ered a loss of more than two million of the very flower of their nation. And ay well be assumed that they have ild and disabled an equal number of enemies. This is besides the mil- ios of innocent women and children had nothing whatever to do with paredness, or the declaration of for some real or fancied injury.

hall we as peace-loving citizens of great nation favor or look upon clamor for preparedness without a d of protest? Brought about by a paganda of militarists, together those who are engaged in the aufacture of munitions of war— never expect to suffer the awful equences of war, but rather seek eap a harvest from the misfortunes thers.

od does not want men or nations oy at each others' throats for every rvance, as some ten or twelve nations Europe are now doing. But when or nations go around armed to the h, as it were, it takes but very little efy any trampling on imaginary or rights. That man or nation is apt ke the law into his own hands and dicate his own cause, rather than ait for the slow process of justice to k out a satisfactory solution.

reparedness simply causes men as as nations to lose faith in an over- ung Providence. When men or aons once have determined to vindi- their own cause by force of arms, lets them have their own way, they have exhausted their re- oces, and the greater the resources greater the slaughter, and the whole d is sustaining the loss, until they completely exhausted. Why should not consider those things before we everything in readiness to plunge the fray? It is not always those have the greatest preparedness are the victors in the end. Napo- came to his Waterloo; so will every on who thinks itself invincible.

entralia, Mo. J. D. Guengerich.

ritual Danger from Europe's War

I "A message from the Society of Friends," just issued, the organiza- calls attention to the dangers that aten the moral and spiritual in- ests of the United States, growing of the war in Europe. It says:

We must not let the smoke of battle ure our spiritual vision, nor allow material needs and the commercial antages growing out of the war to d us to the wrong of violence nor our sense of righteousness and ice. The conflict in Europe must be allowed to lessen our faith in pitual forces, nor in the finer qualities uman nature. The thunder of the t guns may all too easily drown the small voice, and the menace of t battalions may make us forget strength of faith, love and justice. are tempted to leave the path of h dealing, good-will, good faith, and tration, and 'trust in chariots be- ase they are many, and in horsemen ause they are strong.'

These dangers to the spirit of our ople may bring a hurt to our life per than any material injury we likely to suffer from the European .

One of the most serious of these gers is the widespread demand for increase in our military and naval es far beyond what may seem neces- for police service. . . .

If we forsake the path of good-will arbitration and put our trust in equate armaments' we shall have tinually to increase our forces to be quately superior to the 'adequate' es raised by other powers to protect nselves from us, and we shall re- re armaments equal to any such combination of powers before we are 'adequately' armed. The military ambition of army and navy officials, the greed of armament-makers and dealers in military supplies, and the adroit appeals of ambitious demagogues, will agitate for ever greater defenses. Newspapers will be subsidized, speakers enlisted, war scares manufactured. An increase of enlisted men and armaments secured by such means would infect our national spirit with a mortal sickness, retard the progress of civilization, and replace the mind of Christian America with that of pagan Rome.

"We appeal to you to help put away from our hearts the race hatred and the national greed and lusts from which wars and fightings come; to oppose the spirit of war in whatever guise it may appear; to preserve our national life from the hurt of militarism; and to seek that fruit of righteousness and faith in God which is brotherhood and peace."

A Canadian's View

I WISH to express to you my warm appreciation of the stand you have taken upon the question arising from this fearful war. Honestly, I cannot see how any who sincerely try to live the spirit of the Master can take any other stand. I am sure that were Jesus to come to earth today, he would be with you, heart and soul. Your criticism of President Wilson's misuse of Scripture was fine, and I trust you will continue to rebuke that which is wrong in so fearless a manner.

May your paper become a mighty influence in combating the anti-Christian spirit of militarism and sordid greed, which will surely blight the high ideals possible to the American people.

Chas. H. Newman.
Niagara Falls, Ont.

A Pastor Who Favors Preparedness

I HAVE been reading several articles in the Christian Herald about "Preparedness." It seems to me a good many people in this country are letting sentiment take the place of common sense.

Our nation among the nations of the world is much like an individual in a community. If all nations were governed by the Golden Rule, we would need no navy or army. If all people were governed by the Golden Rule, we would need no police, sheriffs or constables. Why don't these peace advocates commence at home and insist on the discharge of all the police officers? What an immense sum of money would be saved to every city! There are officers who are not called upon to make a single arrest in an entire year, yet there is not a peace advocate in the land who would like to live in any of our cities if the officers of the law were removed, and there will be some of them that will find this country is not a very desirable place to live in, inside of a few years, unless we are prepared to defend our free institutions.

Rev. C. N. Manchester.
Chrisman, Ill.

Wants Red Blood in the Nation

I HAVE read with the utmost astonishment some of the letters which have appeared in your paper in opposition to a reasonable preparedness for the defense of the United States. It is wellnigh inconceivable that such distorted and shocking views could be held by people, such as Pastor Sheldon for instance, who seem to be perfectly rational in other matters. When a man attains to such an exalted state of mind that he believes the twentieth century world can be swerved from its stern purposes by a coterie of amiable gentlemen and gentlewomen effervescing with brotherly love and good will, he is not for this world he is ready to depart hence. How sane American citizens can urge others to deliver our country over as a tempting and helpless lamb to the powerful and greedy nations of the world is one of the facts of existence which is not easily explained. Such absolutely imbecile and infantile theories can scarcely be credited to any healthy and normal human mind.

The great trouble with the extreme pacifist who is opposed to all armament is, that instead of being practical he is entirely theoretical. He is an idealist living, as he fondly and ignorantly imagines, in a world of peace and contentment, a world which is never out of joint. He is walking with his head in the clouds and these same clouds obscure from him the things of earth which he is trying to refashion in his mold of high ideals. In your last week's issue, Pastor Sheldon said: "the people of this country will not accept a military program. I am very confident of that." For the past few days the Chicago Tribune has been conducting an interesting experiment. They are taking a poll of the sentiment of fathers and mothers of high school boys in Chicago in regard to military training for their sons in school. During the first four days they received 2,669 votes. Of this number 2,325, or 87.8 per cent. of those voting, favored military training for their own sons. This well illustrates the sentiment of the public in regard to preparedness; yet Pastor Sheldon that good but deluded man, is blissfully unaware of it.

If our rabid peace-at-any-price men would descend from their silly and lofty pinnacles of self-inspired moral fervor, and mingle on earth with red-blooded men, they would obtain for their doctrines a more respectful attention from men of affairs than their stupid fulminations now merit.

Joliet, Ill. Marshall Wentworth.

◆

I MUST say a word to you about your beautiful Christmas cover by M. Ortlip. I consider it a picture of rare spiritual suggestiveness, and think a copy of it should hang in every Sunday school room in the land. It glows with a luminosity which comes from a Christ-filled life, and in the spirit of its reverence and awe-thrilling wonder reminds one of the illuminated manuscripts and windows of the medieval craftsman. I know that few lives are won to Christ's kingdom by pictures. I have never known of anyone to change a habit as the result of a picture; but pictures do produce an atmosphere, and an atmosphere which a picture like this produces is most wholesome, and is found all too rarely in these days of business pressure and intensity.

Wyncote, Pa. L. B. S.

DEAF?

Read What Dr. Upham Says of the

1916 Acousticon

W. C. Upham, M. D., of Washington, D. C., writes us—"Where I could not possibly hear a word of conversation, with the ACOUSTICON I heard distinctly. No person who is hard of hearing should fail to get this Instrument if possible to obtain it."

The unstinted praise of 250,000 satisfied customers and many letters like the above from eminent physicians lead us to urge you and every deaf person, entirely at our risk, without a penny of expense, to give the 1916 ACOUSTICON a thorough trial in your own home, absolutely and entirely

NO DEPOSIT FREE NO EXPENSE

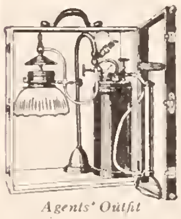
All you need to do is to write saying that you are deaf and will try the ACOUSTICON. The trial will not cost you one cent, for we even pay delivery charges.

WARNING! There is no good reason why every-one should not make as liberal a trial offer as we do, so do not send money for any instrument for the deaf until you have tried it.

The ACOUSTICON has improvements and patented features which cannot be duplicated, so no matter what you have tried in the past, send for your free trial of the ACOUSTICON today and convince yourself—you alone to decide. Address

General Acoustic Co. 1314 Candler Bldg. New York
Toronto, Ont. Office, Royal Bank Bldg.



AGENTS WANTED

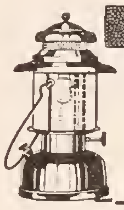
Agents' Outfit

for our independent hollow-wire lighting systems for homes, stores, public buildings, etc. Use common gasoline. Best and cheapest illumination known.

AKRON LIGHTING SYSTEMS

are most improved, simplest and safest of all. Shed a clear, soft, bright light of high candle power. Also complete line of portable and street lamps, and lanterns. Fully guaranteed. Our Agency Proposition cannot be beat. Exclusive territory. Send quick for catalog and terms.

Akron Gas Lamp Co., 627 So. Main St., Akron, Ohio



ACORN UNI-LITE FREE

Turns night into day. 300 candle power. Carry as a lantern; use anywhere as a lamp. Weather proof. For house, barn, garage, camp and around the farm. Write for big free offer. Special opportunity to farmers, stockmen and motorists. Agents make big money. Write tonight.

Acorn Brass Mfg. Co., 880 Acorn Bldg., Chicago

WHY STAMMER

You can be cured in a very short time and for a very reasonable cost. Enter our school now. Established 21 yrs. Highest references furnished.

The Lewis School 49 Adelaide St. Detroit, Mich.

Standard Home No. 193—all material at wholesale with complete plans $957

Standard Home No. 121—all material at wholesale with complete plans $1026

Standard Home No. 301—all material at wholesale with complete plans $744

Ready-Cut Home No. 500—all material cut to measure; Plans wholesale price $652

300 Home Plans FREE Satisfaction or MONEY BACK

Send today for our two big plan books. Show over 300 homes, floor plans, color schemes, exact prices. All sold "direct-to-you" by Gordon-Van Tine Method. Built hundreds of times—in every State—many near you. Local references. Newest Architectural Styles. All material highest quality. Prices lowest. Quick shipments. Save enough to pay for your lot.

Ready-Cut Homes Material Cut to Fit—Standard Homes Material in the Standard Way

Shipped Anywhere—300 Plans

Buy from us any system you prefer. All at "direct-prices." Over 100,000 customers and three banks vouch for us. Homes full of comfort and convenience ideas. Our "Home Builders' Department" follows with advisory service right until house is built. All or any part of any building Wholesale!

Get These Three Big Books FREE! Two plan books and 156 page Catalog of 5000 Building Bargains.

All Free. Send Coupon NOW! We save for thousands; let us save for you. Don't pay local retail prices. Put that profit in your own pocket. Use the Coupon. NOW!

GORDON-VAN TINE COMPANY
5854 Case St. In Business Half a Century DAVENPORT, IOWA

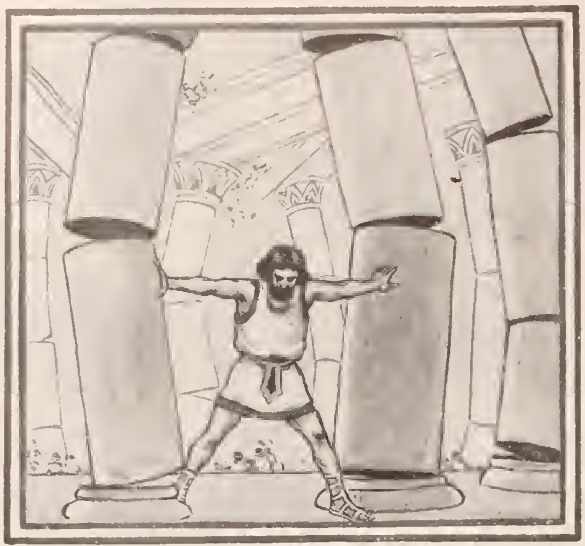
GORDON-VAN TINE COMPANY, 5854 Case Street, Davenport, Iowa
Please send me free the books checked.

☐ Standard Quality Home Plan Book ☐ 5000 Building Material Bargain Catalog ☐ Ready-Cut Plan Book ☐ Garages Ready-Cut or Portable
☐ Summer Cottages ☐ Hot Beds and Greenhouses for the Home Grower
Name..
Street No..........................Occupation..................
City..............................State..................

Gordon-Van Tine's Ready-Cut Homes
Gordon-Van Tine's Standard Homes
Gordon-Van Tine Co.
BUILDING MATERIAL CATALOG



Picture No. 13

You Yourself
Can Earn

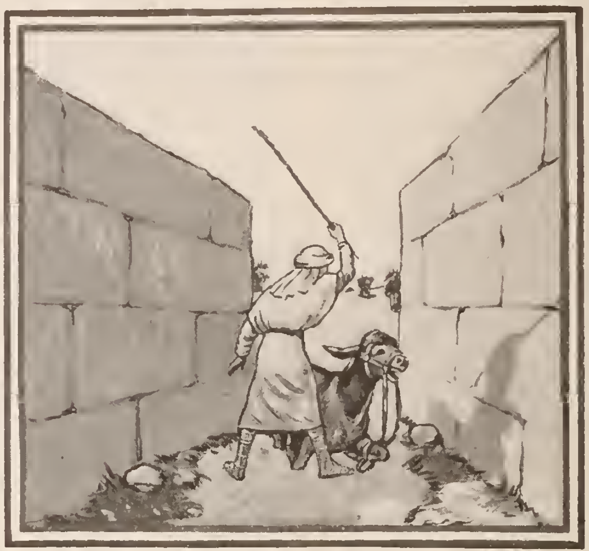
$1,250
in Gold
FIRST REWARD

IN OUR



Picture No. 14

Bible Picture Contest

Second, $625; Third, $350; Fourth, $250; Fifth, $150; 414 Others
A TOTAL OF 419 REWARDS AGGREGATING $3,500.00 CASH

For the Most Appropriate Texts to Match a Series of Sixty Pictures

Open to All

Excepting employees of the Christian Herald, and of the periodicals co-operating in this contest, everybody is eligible to take part. In this connection we assure all our friends who occasionally, or regularly as agents, favor us with one or more subscriptions obtained in our behalf, that such action does not make you an employee of ours, as far as the present meaning is concerned; and you are certainly entitled to compete in this Contest, the same as anyone else. We also take this opportunity of answering several inquiries on that subject by now emphasizing that the Bible Picture Contest is not exclusively for adults but can also be participated in by young folks, and the veriest child (able to read and write) with or without casual assistance from relatives. In fact it is intended that the whole family join in this fine pastime; and every member may enter for him- (or her-) self.

The Contest is free as well as open. You are not required to pay anything or do anything except submit the texts you believe suitable for the pictures—on which you will be judged. Fairness is assured; for the Committee will consider (at the end of the Contest) the different answers submitted for each picture by you and other contestants, and from among those answers the Committee will select the answers which fit the pictures the closest. The set of answers containing the greatest number of appropriate answers for the 60 pictures, and otherwise meeting the conditions of the Rules, will receive the $1,250.

Don't send in your answers for this week's pictures now. Wait until the full sixty pictures have appeared. Then submit your complete set of answers.

In this issue you see pictures Nos. 13, 14 and 15. A dozen pictures have already appeared, in preceding issues; but, if you have missed them, or if you would like to start a friend in the Contest, you can obtain the back pictures by sending twenty cents and obtaining the last four issues of the Christian Herald, or we shall send the pictures alone on receipt of the nominal price of one cent each. Use one or two cent stamps. Likewise, the full Rules, which appeared in the opening issue, together with object lessons, etc., will be mailed you direct—if you have not already read them—on receipt of a two cent stamp. Address: The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City.

Solving Made Easy

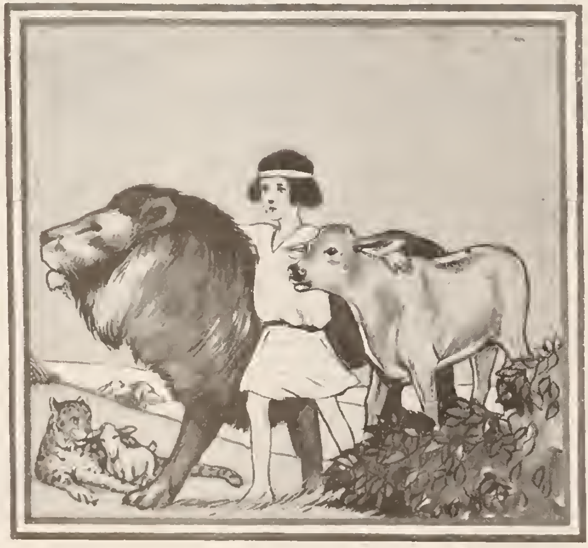
All the best answers, those which will be approved eventually by the Committee of Judges and will therefore constitute the winning answers, are now contained in a splendid little volume called Gems from the Bible. This is so because no sooner had we thought of presenting this competition to the public than we realized that the important element would be sharp eyes and common sense—and not expert Biblical knowledge; and also for the sake of equalizing opportunity, we decided to limit the selection of texts, for the pictures, to a given list of eligible Bible verses. This list composes the Gems from the Bible. Inasmuch as no answer will be accepted that is not in this standard list, and since the Judges will consider only such eligible answers submitted by contestants, you know right away that the winning answers can be found by you in Gems from the Bible.

Isn't that much easier than searching through the thirty odd thousand verses in the whole Bible? Of course you may use your own Bible, or that of church or library, after obtaining the references. But you are likewise at liberty to follow the example of the numerous contestants who have already requested the book Gems from the Bible and thus serve your convenience. You simply cannot imagine the delight you will experience in quickly locating texts for the pictures in this handy book, until you actually have it and use it.

You can begin right now in the Bible Picture Contest, even though publication of the pictures has already begun; for nobody can get ahead of you, as no answers will be accepted by us until after all the sixty pictures have appeared. We shall go right on publishing three each week. So you have plenty of time in which to work out your solutions. Yet the sooner you start the better. And be sure to save the pictures, or else keep each issue of the Christian Herald.

The first twelve pictures, if you ask for them, will be sent together with Gems from the Bible, as will also the conveniently arranged Contest Reply Book into which you can enter as many as five answers for each picture. These articles constitute the Bible Picture Contest OUTFIT which we offer, as explained below. Not obligatory but a decided help.

Picture No. 15



The Christian Herald acknowledges with heartfelt satisfaction the words of praise and enthusiastic commendation received from readers in every part of the country, congratulating this publication upon the newly inaugurated "feature of the season"—The Bible Picture Contest.

If our friends are happy, we are happy.

To those who haven't yet started hunting texts to describe the Contest pictures, we feel warranted in declaring that a fascinating pleasure is in store for them. Those already taking part know what a good time—and a profitable time—they are having. Keep it up.

HOW TO OBTAIN

"Gems from the Bible" and "Reply Book'

OFFER No. 1: "Gems from the Bible," together with the booklet known as "Contest Reply Book," into which you can write your answers, will be sent on receipt of $2.00 for yearly subscription to the CHRISTIAN HERALD (new or renewal).

OFFER No. 2: "Gems from the Bible" and "Reply Book" will be sent FREE to any subscriber who sends us $1.50 for a new yearly subscription to the CHRISTIAN HERALD.

OFFER No. 3: "Gems from the Bible" and "Reply Book" will be sent FREE to any subscriber who sends us $2.00 for a new subscriber who enters the contest. The new subscriber will receive the CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, "Gems from the Bible" and "Reply Book" and the present subscriber sending the new subscription, will receive as a present from us, "Gems from the Bible" and "Reply Book" FREE.

Address: THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City

"For Girls—Not for Gain"

Continued from page 64

h ity gives very little for nothing were rkly nervous about accepting the ntation. It was three months before h first girl stepped shyly into the t active room and found that the rnises were real promises of real hgs. Now, in the Central Branch le, there have been 2,835 members n in a year 10,012 guests. The Cen- r Branch is only one of the thirteen ng Women's Christian Association dings that flourish in Greater New k—nine in Manhattan and four in oklyn.

FTER the first girl came haltingly over the threshold, things began to up in the little Young Women's istian Association room in Univer- it Place. The first girl brought her rids, and they brought their friends, they brought their friends. In a the organizers found it necessary o iove to larger quarters on the corner f ighteenth Street and Irving Place. re they rented a whole floor, but the k continued so surprisingly that in 5 the Young Women's Christian ociation took a building at the rent site of the Central Branch— ieenth Street between Broadway and h Avenue.

he Central Branch was for a time the r Young Women's Christian Asso- ion in the city. Just in the heart of t was then the shopping district ny of the stores have now moved up n), a great many of the shopgirls led themselves of the privileges of h organization. And then someone ugested the Educational Branch, h is now such a great part of the ociation.

great many girls who come to the i to take positions are unfitted by hr previous education to hold the tions that are offered to them. A r t many lose work because there is o e flaw in their mental equipment. t wasn't long before the Young nen's Christian Association realized h great need, and started free evening ools in stenography, bookkeeping, o mercial English, and many other u cets. It was then before the time f ree evening schools, but the city lic and high schools soon followed hr example and opened night classes. ing that example was, I think, one f he greatest good deeds of the Young men's Christian Association.

fter a while, well-to-do girls heard of l wonderful Young Women's Chris- i Association classes. They wanted o ake the different courses and they ted to pay for their lessons. So the cational board, after careful consid- r ion, decided to put a very nominal charge on each branch of work. This tuition has enabled them to secure the best instructors to be had in the country. The Young Women's Christian Association now has efficient teachers who give lessons in fine and applied art; secretarial training; evening business courses; stenography and typewriting; English, arithmetic, and penmanship; French, Spanish, and German; household arts; dressmaking and designing; embroidery, plain sewing, and millinery; trained attendance on the sick; home nursing; voice culture and dramatics; cookery and household management; character analysis; swimming, gymnastics and music.

The above list gives an idea of the marvelous growth in the Educational Branch. The growth of every department has been just as remarkable. The Bible Class started with six members, and there are now 1,500 members and 5,000 yearly visitors in the Central Branch alone. The Young Women's Christian Association itself started with thirty members in one small room. Now the National Association has 2,400 city associations with a total membership of 232,930; 716 student associations with a membership of 65,129; and 13 county associations with a membership of 4,246. The total membership of these associations comes to 302,305. There are, of course, many small branches not counted under these general heads.

The Young Women's Christian Association in New York has started a number of great reforms. I mentioned before that the Association was instrumental in the founding of evening schools, but I did not mention that it started the movement for seats for sales girls in department stores, and is still fighting for living wages for shopgirls. I did not mention that it organized a new sort of employment agency, and started a library for working women.

Mrs. Robert Seer is now the head of the National Association. Mrs. James S. Cushman is the president of the New York City Association. Miss Grace Dodge, who died in 1914, was at one time one of the most active members and, perhaps, did more in the organization of the National Branch than anyone else. Miss Ballard, who was one of the original charter members (of whom only eight are now alive), is still at the head of the educational department.

Fifty years is a short time, when you think of it as half a century. But, though it took centuries, perhaps, to build the pyramids, it took only one short half century to build the Young Women's Christian Association into the firm organization that it is today. The pyramids were started with a handful of brick, and the Young Women's Christian Association was started with a handful of girls who had a gentle little motto, "For girls—not for gain," tucked away in their hearts. That motto is the reason why the Young Women's Christian Association has grown so quickly and so well. Perhaps that is the reason that the Young Women's Christian Association may still be living when the pyramids have crumbled to dust. For the motto has been lived up to, and I think that it will always be lived up to. That small group of girls builded better than they knew.

"THE buildings are so high and the streets are so crowded with people that I don't know," sobbed the Girl. That girl might have been your sister or your daughter, or your dearest friend. The Young Women's Christian Association perhaps saved her—at any rate very vitally helped her. That's why you should be interested in their Fiftieth Jubilee. This is their program of events, as nearly as I can give it to you:

February 1, Membership Rally; February 6-7, Pioneer Days; February 8-21, Regular Association Activities (details about the girls' work and recreation); February 22, "The Girls of Yesterday and Today," being an historical representation of the Association; February 23-26 Days of Giving; February 27 to March 2, Days of Consecration; March 3, Fiftieth Birthday Service of Rejoicing.

The Young Women's Christian Association is a large organization—one of the largest organizations of the time. It has done a great deal in the last fifty years—perhaps there isn't much that it won't be able to do in the next fifty years. You, friends of mine, who are interested in the work—who have Young Women's Christian Association buildings in your home town—will agree with me.

"For girls—not for gain!" For girls who are alone in the city; for girls who are lonely; for girls who are out of work—in need of material, of spiritual, help; for young girls and for older girls; for your sister or daughter, for your friend, or for yourself when you are friendless.

"Loneliness," said one of the Young Women's Christian Association secretaries, "is the greatest thing that the girl who works in the city has to combat with. It is felt, sometimes, more keenly than hunger or cold. It is something that the high-salaried girl, as well as her six-dollar-a-week sister, must combat with. Save a girl from loneliness or she may go down!

That's the greatest aim of a great organization.

Which Way Are You Going?

Continued from page 77

i led. Four years after I graduated r high school I was in Chicago. rge's father had started him up there he grain business. I believe this was h third time he had given him $5,000 o start in business. The father was e orted to have told George he could ke good this time or—I won't repeat He didn't make good. He couldn't ze and tend to business too, so he let iness go. One morning early the a tor went into his tiny office and o d George, but George didn't greet i. There was a pool of blood on the r and a gun in the death grip of the d that rested beside George's head he desk. George had gone—where? y chum? Oh, he let the stuff alone made his mark in university and ege and now he is a physician making 36,000 a year with fame and practice h growing. And I? My grand- er was a drunkard's son and that dfather left his business for six ths to get the prohibition amend- t written into the constitution of state of Iowa. I have teetotalism ned into every drop of my blood. I e learned to hate the stuff, but I have inherited taste for it; and for both e reasons I let it alone; and such success as I have had has been untarnished by appetite and unmellowed by drink. Here is the true story of the gang.

Which way are you going? Are you going the way that leads to death, real, living, eternal death, and the bottle regnant in your life, and yourself but the shadow and creature of your appetite? Or will you throw away the bottle and take in its place the Book? All the mercy of divine grace is waiting to sweep over your soul and to rid your system of every vestige and trace of drink or desire or damage already done, in so far as damage already done is not irreparable. Every force of economic life today is ready to help you stay on your course of abstinence. The preachers inveighed against liquor on moral grounds for decades, and even the deacons continued to take their nightly nip; the schools portrayed the terrible effects of alcohol and every educational process was turned to make it hideous, but boys still learned to drink. Now business has seen the light and it says, "If you drink, even just a little in moderation, I don't want you." And business is going to drive the devil in the bottle out of society with the help of the church and the school. The area in which alcohol is an outlaw is steadily widening; the knell has been sounded for John Barleycorn; even Mars will have none of him. The counting of the almost unnumbered thousands who yearly sink into sodden graves has touched most of us, but the world at large has refused to be horrified. The man who loses his job because of a glass will remember the reason, and when several hundreds of him lose their jobs the saloon begins to show in its true colors and they vote it out. Cling to the bottle and you will become its creature; there is no escape so long as you hold it fast. Which way are you going?!?

◆

A Cry from China

LITTLE HAI IEH TSI (the "Abused Leaf"); a Story of Childhood and its Perils in Heathen China. All who are interested in sweet and innocent childhood will find this a fascinating story. A postal card addressed to "China Orphans, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York," will bring you free copies of this illustrated booklet.

◆

If half the wealth now spent in sin
Were spent the gospel truth to spread,
Christ's kingdom would be ushered in
Before a century has fled.

Do You Need More Money?

TO ANY WOMAN who has no special training and wants to earn money, I would recommend nothing better than selling World's Star goods. When I started in this work I had never done any soliciting of any kind. The money earned on my first day's orders was twice as much as I ever made before. What other work is there that a woman can do to earn that amount? One cannot help but succeed with World's Star goods, and enthusiasm. Both will lead to success.

S. write Mr . G. H. Litt field, of Oregon.

We Have Helped More Than 9000 ambitious, deserving women. You can do the same as they have done. Sell World's Star Hosiery and Klean-Knit Underwear in your home town. No previous experience is necessary we show you how to make money in an easy, congenial and profitable way. We are known everywhere. Our advertising makes sales easy — the quality holds the trade. PROMPT DELIVERIES and PROTECTED TERRITORY. Our free catalog tells whole story.

World's Star Hosiery and Klean-Knit Underwear are sold only direct from the Mill to the Home by our special representatives.

This method in use to you not only lower prices for higher values, but the personal attention of our representative. In the privacy of your home you make your selection. The line includes everything in hosiery and underwear for all the family.

WORLDS STAR KNITTING CO

Dept. 110B Bay City, Mich.

$15 95 Upward ON TRIAL American FULLY GUARANTEED CREAM SEPARATOR

A SOLID PROPOSITION to send new, well made, easy running, perfect skimming separator for $15.95. Skims warm or cold milk; making heavy or light cream. Bowl is a sanitary marvel; easily cleaned.

ABSOLUTELY ON APPROVAL

Different from picture, which illustrates our large capacity machines. Western orders filled from western points. Whether dairy is large or small write for handsome free catalog. Address:

AMERICAN SEPARATOR CO.
Box 4184 Bainbridge, N. Y.

WOULD YOU show this standard high grade 42 key fully visible typewriter to your friends and let them see wherein it excells any other $100 typewriter, if by doing this and rendering other small assistance, you could easily have one GIVEN YOU to keep as your own? Then by post card or letter to us simply say, "Mail Particulars."

WOODSTOCK TYPEWRITER CO., Dept. J176, Chicago, Ill.

HEALTH? TAKE TURKISH BATH AT HOME—ONLY 2 CENTS

Physicians are abandoning drugs for this new treatment. If your mind or body is tired, open your pores and feel the rapid change in your condition, at cost of 2c a bath. The Robinson Bath Cabinet is the only scientifically constructed bath cabinet ever made for the home. Great $2 Book Sent Free—"The Philosophy of Health and Beauty." Write today. Agents Wanted.

ROBINSON MFG. CO., 4014 Factories Bldg., Toledo, O.

WANTED in every town in the United States, an intelligent man or woman, boy or girl to represent The Christian Herald. This is an opportunity to build up a business of your own, which should grow more and more profitable year after year. Address:

Agency Dept., THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House, New York City

Will You Take Orders?

Your spare time is worth big money demonstrating the 1917 Model, Steel, 18-in-1 Automatic Handi-Tool. Equals separate tools costing $160. Lifting and pulling jack; fence building tool; stump and post puller; baler; press; hoist; vise; etc. No experience needed. Demonstrator free, Credit given. Exclusive territory. Write for special factory agency offer.

Chas. E. Benefiel Co. 234a Industrial Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

500 TYPEWRITERS AT $10 TO $15

Typewriter prices smashed! Your choice of any factory rebuilt machine at a bargain. Every one perfect—guaranteed for 3 yrs.—including repairs. My free circular tells how to save 40 per cent—60 per cent on each machine. Write for it! C. E. GAERTE, Pres.

DEARBORN TYPEWRITER EXCHANGE, DEPT. 731, CHICAGO, ILL.

HOT BED SASH 80c CYPRESS, well made with cross bar, blind tenons, white leaded in joints, Glass, $1.50 per Box.

C. N. ROBINSON & BRO. Dept. 8 Baltimore Md.

6% NET For 36 years we have been paying our customers the highest returns consistent with conservative methods. First mortgage loans of $200 and up which we can recommend after the most thorough personal investigation. Please ask for Loan List No. 709.

$25 Certificates of Deposit also for saving Investors

PERKINS & CO. Lawrence, Kans.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."

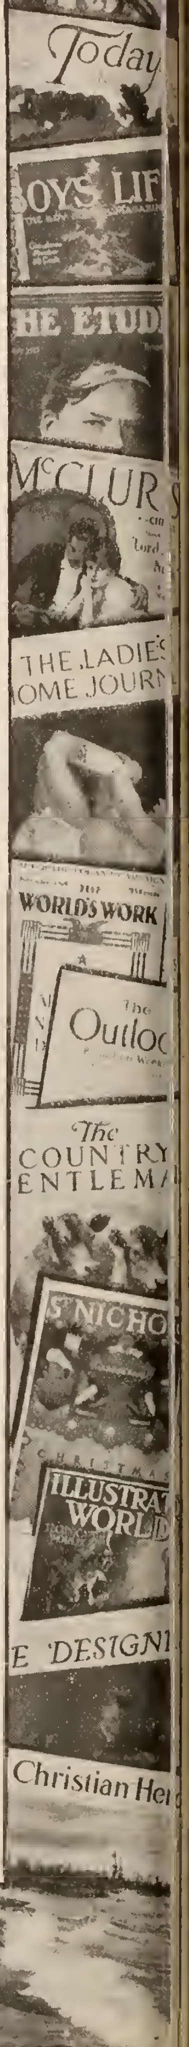
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

TABLE GRACES For DAILY USE SPECIAL DAYS and OCCASIONS

All Will Welcome This New Book of Graces. Postpaid. Paper, 25c. Cloth, 50c. M. E. MUNSON, 77 Bible House, New York, N.Y.

THE YOUTHS COMPANION
THE HOUSEWIFE
Modern Priscilla
Christian Herald
DELINEATOR
WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION
PICTORIAL REVIEW
Good Housekeeping
Everybody's
Little Folks
The Children's Magazine
Home Needlework
American
REVIEW OF REVIEWS
MOTHERS MAGAZINE

THE PEOPLES HOME JOURNAL
THE LADIES' WORLD
BOYS' MAGAZINE
THE SATURDAY EVENING POST
HARPER'S MAGAZINE
Travel
Something-to-Do
McBride's
Collier's
THE NATIONAL WEEKLY
THE WOMAN'S MAGAZINE
Christian Herald



MAGAZINE READING for 1916

IF you have not ordered your Magazines for this year, now is the time to do so. The Christian Herald Magazine Bureau has made arrangements with the publishers of other magazines whereby readers of the Christian Herald can obtain two or more magazines at a considerable saving over the price if ordered singly. The prices given here are for one year (new or renewal) and can go to different addresses, excepting in a few cases noted otherwise. No one can fill your order for these Magazines at any lower price.

The cost of any combination can be obtained by referring to the periodical list below. Canadian postage 50 cents additional; Foreign postage $1.00 additional

WE WANT YOUR ORDER WHETHER CHRISTIAN HERALD IS INCLUDED OR NOT

OUR BEST OFFERS

Magazines	Price	Saving
Christian Herald People's Home Journal	$1.55	Save 45c
Christian Herald McCall's (pattern)	$1.65	Save 35c
Christian Herald Ladies' World	$1.90	Save 60c
Christian Herald Little Folks	$1.90	Save 60c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla	$2.00	Save 50c
Christian Herald American Poultry Advocate Book—200 Eggs a Year per Hen	$2.00	Save 50c
Christian Herald Ladies' World Housewife	$2.00	Save $1.00
Christian Herald Housewife People's Home Journal	$2.15	Save 35c
Christian Herald McClure's Mag.	$2.15	Save 35c
Christian Herald American	$2.40	Save 60c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Home Needlework	$2.40	Save 85c
Christian Herald McCall's (pattern) Woman's Home Companion	$2.90	Save 60c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Pictorial Review	$3.05	Save 95c
Christian Herald Pictorial Review Metropolitan	$3.15	Save $1.35
Christian Herald Boys' Magazine Housewife Illustrated World	$3.15	Save $1.35
Christian Herald *Woman's Home Companion *American	$3.15	Save $1.36

* Must go to same address

BIBLE PICTURE CONTEST

Magazines	Price
CHRISTIAN HERALD Gems from Bible and Reply Book	$2.00
CHRISTIAN HERALD Modern Priscilla Gems from Bible and Reply Book	$2.50
CHRISTIAN HERALD American Messenger Gems from Bible and Reply Book	$2.10

GEMS FROM THE BIBLE and REPLY BOOK are supplied only with the above magazines. See full details of Bible Picture Contest on page 90.

SPECIAL COMBINATIONS

Magazines	Single price	Price	Saving
CHRISTIAN HERALD Housewife	$1.50 .50	$1.55	Save 45cts.
CHRISTIAN HERALD Home Needlework	$1.50 .75	$1.75	Save 50cts.
CHRISTIAN HERALD McCall's (free pattern) Housewife To-day's (free pattern)	$1.50 .50 .50 .50	$1.90	Save $1.10
CHRISTIAN HERALD Mother's Magazine	$1.50 1.50	$2.00	Save $1.00
CHRISTIAN HERALD Etude (Music)	$1.50 1.50	$2.00	Save $1.00
CHRISTIAN HERALD Woman's Home Companion	$1.50 1.50	$2.40	Save 60cts.
CHRISTIAN HERALD Pictorial Review	$1.50 1.50	$2.40	Save 60cts.
CHRISTIAN HERALD *Mother's Magazine *Ladies' World *McCall's (free pattern)	$1.50 1.50 1.00 .50	$2.40	Save $2.10

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF PERIODICALS

To Find the Price of Any Club ☞

You can make up your own combination of Magazines from the list below.

Add the Class Price of the Magazines selected, multiply the sum by five and the result will be the cost.

EXAMPLE
Christian Herald Class 23
Pictorial Review Class 25
McCall's . . . . . . Class 10
Total class numbers 58
Multiply by 5
Price of club $2.90

Class No.		With Christian Herald Pub. Price	Our Price
30	Adventure	$3.00	$2.65
17	American Boy	2.50	2.00
25	American Magazine	3.00	2.40
17	Boys' Life	2.50	2.00
17	Boys' Magazine	2.50	2.00
23	Christian Herald	1.50	1.50
60	Christian Herald, 3 years	4.50	3.00
35	Collier's Weekly	4.00	3.00
16	Cooking Club Mag.	2.50	1.95
70	Country Life in Am.	5.50	4.65
55	Current Opinion	4.50	3.90
23	Delineator	3.00	2.30
12	Designer	2.25	1.75
25	Etude	3.00	2.00
25	Everybody's	3.00	2.40
23	Garden Magazine	3.00	2.30
	Good Housekeeping	3.00	2.65
	Harper's Bazar	3.50	3.15
70	Harper's Magazine	5.50	4.65
70	Harper's Weekly	6.50	4.65
12	Home Needlework	2.25	1.75
8	Housewife	2.00	1.55
25	Illustrated World	3.00	2.40
55	Independent	4.50	3.90
50	John Martin's Book	4.50	3.65
	Ladies' Home Jnl.	3.00	3.00
15	Ladies' World	2.50	1.90
17	Little Folks	2.50	1.90
45	McBride's	4.50	3.40
10	McCall's	2.00	1.65
20	McClure's	2.50	2.15
25	Metropolitan	3.00	2.40
17	Modern Priscilla	$2.50	$2.00
23	Mother's Magazine	3.00	2.00
60	Outlook	4.50	4.15
8	People's Home Jnl.	2.00	1.55
25	Pictorial Review	3.00	2.40
40	Review of Reviews	4.50	3.15
50	Scribner's	4.50	3.65
17	Something-to-Do	2.50	2.00
50	St. Nicholas	4.50	3.65
8	To-Day's	2.00	1.55
55	Travel	4.50	3.90
25	Woman's Home Companion	3.00	2.40
12	Woman's Magazine	2.25	1.75
5	Woman's World	1.85	1.55
40	World's Work	4.50	3.15
40	Youth's Companion	4.00	3.25

Religious Publications

Class No.		Pub. Price	Our Price
	Prophetic and Mission Record—3 Yrs. Amer. Advent Miss. Soc.	$1.85	$1.60
8	American Messenger	2.00	1.65
8	Daily Bible	2.10	1.75
20	Protestant Magazine	2.50	1.95
18	Record of Christian Work	3.00	2.00
30	Christian Standard	3.00	2.30
30	Christian End. World (new)	3.00	2.50
35	Presbyterian Banner	3.50	2.90
40	Standard (Chicago)	3.50	3.00

OUR BEST OFFERS

Magazines	Price	Saving
Christian Herald *Delineator *Everybody's	$3.15	Save $ .35
Christian Herald American Boy (or Little Folks) Woman's Home Companion	$3.25	Save 75c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Woman's Home Companion	$3.25	Save 75c
Christian Herald Youth's Companion McCall's (free pattern)	$3.25	Save 75c
Christian Herald Delineator Woman's Home Companion	$3.55	Save 95c
Christian Herald St. Nicholas	$3.65	Save 85c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Pictorial Review Ladies' World	$3.65	Save $1.35
Christian Herald Current Opinion	$3.65	Save 85c
Christian Herald Pictorial Review Woman's Home Companion	$3.65	Save 85c
Christian Herald Everybody's Woman's Home Companion	$3.65	Save 85c
Christian Herald Collier's Woman's Home Companion	$4.15	Save $1.35
Christian Herald Everybody's Review of Revs.	$4.40	Save $1.60
Christian Herald Woman's Home Companion World's Work	$4.40	Save $1.60
Christian Herald Youth's Companion Woman's Home Companion	$4.40	Save 60c
Christian Herald Woman's Home Companion Review of Revs.	$4.40	Save $1.60

* Must go to same address

Send All Orders and Make All Remittances Payable to

CHRISTIAN HERALD MAGAZINE BUREAU, Bible House, New York, N. Y.

Young People's Topics for January 30

The Meaning of Discipleship

Epworth League, Luke 14: 33; John 12: 26

EFORE looking up the references assigned for this lesson, turn to Rom. 1: 14, and notice a strange eark Paul makes there: "I am a leor," he declares; a debtor to all lases of people.

rdinarily people are not proud of hr debts; do not like to talk, or w think about them. But Paul bosted of this debt, gloried in it, was ulost frantically enthusiastic about paing it. Paul felt that he owed this le to every other person in the world. Wt he owed them was to help them n very way he could, and particularly o tell them about Jesus and his aation. That was Paul's debt to the wd.

hat may be put down as the most ulamental difference between one w is a Christian and one who is not – h is, so far as his relation with his ew man is concerned. The man who s t a Christian is likely to view other peple as owing him something; he is rng to get something from them. The Tistian owes everybody else his seice, his help, his comradeship; he fes that his debt is not paid until he ha done all he can for everybody he ca reach.

ow look at Luke 14: 33. "Whoso-v of you forsaketh not all that he ha cannot be my disciple." A oower of Jesus must consider that vything he has, in possessions, in ality, in opportunity, belongs not to hiself but to the world. He has, rording to Christ's standards, no rigt to use these things selfishly. He ny not be called upon to go away from hn. "Forsake" need not mean this. B it does mean that he must forsake h idea that they are his to do with as hepleases, to minister to his own desires u fancies. They are his to use for the wfare of all.

Great Foreign Missionaries

istian Endeavor Topic. II Cor. 8: 16-23

CAREY, John G. Paton. Adoniram Judson, David Livingstone, Hud-sc Taylor, William Taylor — these nes are among the greatest of the mdern missionary movement. Other anes could be added indefinitely, but vngpeople cannot become too familiar wh these hero pioneers of the modern msionary movement. William Carey, bn at Paulersbury, Northampton-sle, England, August 17, 1761, is alost as famous as a shoemaker as he w as a missionary. His father was a weaver, but at the age of sixteen Wliam became apprenticed to a slemaker at Hackleton, and for twelve yrs worked at this trade. Two years afr his apprenticeship he was con-vted, but he kept up his work at his trle, making shoes, as he said, "to pa expenses," while his real work w to preach the Gospel. He went to India and gave his life to pioneer wk for the evangelization of that entry. He translated the New Ttament into Bengali, preached to a dlrict containing two hundred villages, a later translated the Bible in whole o in part into twenty-four Indian laguages or dialects. "The Serampur Pss, under his direction, rendered the Ble accessible to more than three hdred millions of human beings." Erly in his missionary career, Mr. Crey, believing that a missionary slnld be self-supporting, gave up his sary, although at times this sacrifice bught him and his family near to sous want.

ohn G. Paton gave his life to the Nw Hebrides. Sent out by the Presby-tean Church, Dr. Paton had a leading pt in the wonderful transformation of tse islands. Dr. Paton as well as Dr. Crey had much to do with the trans-laon of the Scriptures, but the greatest gry of his life is that he lived to see all t natives of the particular island to wich he gave his life professed Chris-tns. But not only the island of Anawa ws the scene of his labors. He made tours of the entire archipelago and made many visits to the home land and to America to secure funds and recruits for the work.

Hudson Taylor is the founder of the China Inland Mission. A striking characteristic of this mission is that it is preeminently a work of faith. Beginning in 1866 with eighteen missionaries, on January 1, 1911, the society had 968 missionaries, including their wives, and to the work of the mission 1,471,000 pounds, more than seven million dollars, had been contributed in answer to the prayer and faith of the workers, without any public or private solicitation of funds. Dr. Taylor has been characterized as "a man full of the Holy Ghost and of faith, of entire surrender to God and his call; of great self-denial, heartfelt compassion, rare power in prayer, marvelous organizing faculty, energetic initiative, indefatigable perseverance, and of astonishing influence with men, and, withal, of childlike humility."

William Taylor, Methodist Bishop of Africa, began his missionary work in California in its early days, went to India, then to Central and South America; then established his great self-supporting work in Africa and was made Methodist Episcopal Bishop of that continent. He established a chain of missions on the Congo and in other parts of Africa and left a well-organized work to be carried on by his successor, Bishop Hartzell. He was a man of rare faith, great affection, indomitable will, a fine singer, a real preacher of the pure Gospel, a lover and winner of souls.

David Livingstone's life is most thrilling of all. Perhaps you can find some of the articles and pamphlets published during the Livingstone centennial two years ago. An account of his work appeared in the Christian Herald for February 12, 1913. Livingstone was great as an explorer, great as a reformer, great as a sufferer for Jesus. Gnawed by a lion, threatened by natives and slave dealers, leaving wife, home, children to do God's work in the dark continent, he is credited with having done most to abolish the slave trade in Africa, and with having done more than any other one man to open up the dark continent to the world, and many have been inspired by his heroism to follow him as missionaries to Africa.

Dan Crawford, sending from Africa his wonderful book, "Thinking Black," emerging from its wildernesses after twenty-two years' residence there; going back to spend his life among the people to whose salvation he has dedicated his life, has turned the attention of the present generation to Africa again.

Judson was the hero of Burma. He, too, learned what it means to suffer for Jesus. Imprisoned, tortured, ill, he was faithful to the end. He translated the Bible and other books into Burmese, made a Burmese dictionary, won many converts and established under the Baptist Board a great work which still flourishes. His centenary was celebrated widely a year ago.

The Light in Africa

B. Y. P. U. Topic. Acts 8: 26-39
(Conquest Meeting)

THE American Baptist Foreign Missionary Society reports 4,424 native church members in Africa; 5,452 Sunday school members; 6,837 students in Baptist schools (258 of whom joined the church last year). There are 186 meeting-places, 45 missionaries, 133 church and chapel buildings. There were last year 50,354 treatments given at Baptist hospitals, 6,098 patients being attended. There are four hospitals, 10 dispensaries. Gifts totaling $1,970 were made to Baptist work in Africa by the natives alone.

Of course, other Baptist bodies, as well as many other denominations, support mission work in Africa, but these statistics will be of chief interest to our American Baptist young people. Notice the paragraphs about David Livingstone, Bishop Taylor and Dan Crawford in the Christian Endeavor study on "Great Missionaries."

PARKER
LUCKY CURVE

You know this trade-mark through national periodical advertising

THE success of a big manufacturer depends upon the friendliness of the public—not necessarily friendliness for the business, nor for the man at the head of it, but for the product of the business.

Big business cannot be built without big friendliness. But friendliness to be effective in the promotion of a business must be positively and constantly directed toward the product of that business.

That is the reason for trade-marks to give direction and certainty to the friendliness that has been created by a satisfactory trial of the product itself.

If a man buys an axe that holds its edge, cuts well, fits the hand and balances right, he develops a friendliness for that kind of an axe and wants another one like it when the first wears out.

When the axe does not bear a trade-mark the value of the friendliness created by the first axe is lost.

But if the axe is trade-marked that manufacturer has a continuous, progressive asset in the good will of every purchaser.

Trade-marks make profits out of good will.

Conversely, it is not worth while for manufacturers to place their brands on unworthy goods because such goods will not create the friendliness which is the basis of value in trade-marks. Trade-marks on unworthy goods are danger signals to the consumer.

That is why branded goods are so generally the best of their kind.

Trade-marks and national advertising are the two most valuable public servants in business today. Their whole tendency is to raise qualities and standardize them, while reducing prices and stabilizing them.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

MEMBER OF THE QUOIN CLUB
THE NATIONAL PERIODICAL ASSOCIATION

"LAWN PARK" COOP

Saves Your Chicks

The Wire Park, which pulls out like a drawer, gives hen and chicks fresh grass, air and sunshine during the day; closes at night and in storms. This coop meets every demand; portable, with removable floor for easy cleaning; roomy, light, durable, sanitary.

IT TELESCOPES!
LAWN PARK BROOD COOP

PROOF Against Hawks, Rats, Weasels, etc.

Made of galvanized metal; repels vermin. Size, open, 18 in. x 24 in. x 48 in. Pays for itself in chicks and labor saved. Write today for free circulars, special prepaid offer and how to turn work into pleasure and profit.
CYCLONE MFG. CO., DEPT. C; URBANA, IND.

"DON'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. 'How?' With the MORLEY PHONE. I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right.
"The Morley Phone for the DEAF is to the ears what glassses are to the eyes. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it." Over one hundred thousand sold. Write for booklet and testimonials.
THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Bldg., Phila.

YOUR Church Organizations can make money through our very liberal proposition on the well known SKAT preparations. Write SKAT CO. Hartford, Conn.

EARN MONEY Showing Queen Fabric dress goods. Honest, ambitious women wanted. Salary or com. Whole or part time. Experience unnecessary. Be first in your locality. Queen Fabric Mfg. Co., Dept. 428, Syracuse, N. Y.

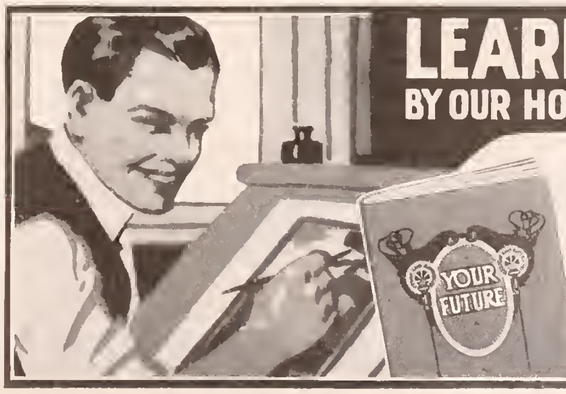
LEARN TO DRAW BY OUR HOME STUDY METHOD



Train yourself in spare time as a Commercial Designer. Many artists trained by members of our faculty are making good money. The field is uncrowded—prices paid for good work will surprise you.

SEND FOR FREE BOOK "YOUR FUTURE"

and portfolio of Commercial Illustrations. It tells about our interesting, practical correspondence course, easy to learn and apply, endorsed by high authorities. Write at once to FEDERAL SCHOOL OF COMMERCIAL DESIGNING, Inc., 2801 Warner Bldg., Minneapolis, Minn.

The SHERIDAN 7 Rooms complete $848

Better Homes for Less Money

The VALLEJO COMPLETE $1175

The MONTAWK COMPLETE $895

If you are figuring on building this spring, send for our new 1916 book of Lewis-Built Homes (Permanent Construction) and learn how you can buy your house, complete, direct from the heart of the lumber industry.

Choose your new home from 100 actual photos and floor plans in our home-builders' book. We ship all materials, with lumber accurately saving one-half the labor and time in erecting. Newest designs—best grades of lumber. Saves money, cutting out middlemen's profits; saves in cost of labor; saves time; saves work; saves worry. Avoids architects' fees, waste of material, delays, and mistakes in building. One price covers all lumber, hardware, plaster, paint, kitchen cabinet, nails, glass—everything. Our precise instructions simplify erection. Hundreds say "Lewis saved us money."

CUT-TO-FIT

Send 4c stamps today for big catalog of homes—worth its weight in gold to home-builder.

LEWIS-BUILT HOMES

DIRECT TO YOU CUTS COST IN TWO

Lewis Mfg. Co.
Dept. 193
Bay City, Mich.

Vapo Cresolene

"USED WHILE YOU SLEEP"

for Whooping Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Asthma, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Catarrh.

ESTABLISHED 1879.

Don't fail to use Cresolene for the distressing, and often fatal, affections for which it is recommended.

It is a simple, safe, effective and drugless treatment.

Vaporized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping Cough and relieves Spasmodic Croup at once.

It is a boon to sufferers from asthma.

The air carrying the antiseptic vapor, inspired with every breath, makes breathing easy, soothes the sore throat, and stops the cough, assuring restful nights.

Cresolene relieves the bronchial complications of Scarlet Fever and Measles and is a valuable aid in the treatment of Diphtheria.

Cresolene's best recommendation is its 36 years of successful use. Send us postal for Descriptive Booklet.

For Sale by Druggists

Try Cresolene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated throat, composed of slippery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene. They can't harm you. Of your druggist or from us 10c. in stamps.

THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 62 Cortlandt St., New York or Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada

Agents—Big Money

We want Special Agents to travel by Motorcycle selling our

300 Candle Power Outdoor Lamp and Safety Lantern

Burns Kerosene. Can't explode. Can't set fire to anything. Burns in all kinds of weather. Rain proof, wind proof, bug proof. For farmers, teamsters, hucksters, plumbers, dairymen, campers—everybody needs it.

This Motorcycle Given

We furnish each representative with a motorcycle. This is no contest where only one person wins. Write for particulars how anyone can get this motorcycle.

Thomas Mfg. Co., 3924 East St., Dayton, Ohio

TYPEWRITERS FACTORY TO YOU

Look at these bargains! Typewriters Rebuilt in our own Factories, and guaranteed for one year.

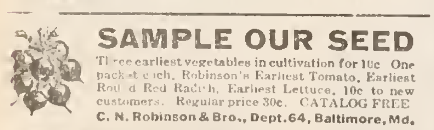
Underwoods $25 to $70 Royals $25 to $65
L. C. Smith $30 to $55 Olivers $20 to $45
Brand new No. 2 Smith Premiers $45
Special this month
Remington Visible No. 10, $38.50

We have others, of course. Send for catalogue describing them. Branch offices in principal cities.

MERICAN WRITING MACHINE CO., Inc., 345 Broadway, N. Y.

SHOEMAKER'S POULTRY BOOK AND ALMANAC FOR 1916

Has 200 pages; with many colored plates of fowls true to life; tells about chickens, incubators, poultry houses, etc. Price 15c. Money back if not satisfied. C. C. Shoemaker, Box 905 Freeport, Ill.



SAMPLE OUR SEED

Three earliest vegetables in cultivation for 10c One packet each, Robinson's Earliest Tomato, Earliest Round Red Radish, Earliest Lettuce. 10c to new customers. Regular price 30c. CATALOG FREE

C. N. Robinson & Bro., Dept. 64, Baltimore, Md.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay

Advice and Books FREE

Rates Reasonable. Highest References Best Services.

WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D. C.

Saving Elder Myer

A TRUE STORY

By EDITH A. TALBOT

"WHY don't papa come home, mama?" asked Maria Ellen as she finished the long seam which was her daily duty. "The five an' the five fifteen's come in and he isn't here yet. Oh, I wish papa would come!"

Mrs. Myer wished so, too, but like a wise mother did not add to Maria Ellen's impatience by showing her own. "Oh, well, he may have missed his train at the junction," she said as she glanced out of the window through the tangle of honeysuckle toward the road. Then she started; for approaching on the road was an object that seemed half strange, half familiar. It was only old Jerry with the express wagon, but placed upon that wagon was a cot, and upon the cot lay something . . . A sick feeling crept over her. Like destiny itself the wagon approached; then, slackening its pace, stopped at her door.

Maria Ellen leaped to her feet, and together they stood at the doorway, realizing only too well that the unconscious man on the cot was the husband and father, the traveler homeward bound.

As the doctor and the driver lifted him from the wagon, neighbors flocked to the gate. Soon the road was black with them, as Maria Ellen noticed in spite of her grief and confusion. Upstairs to the cool shaded room that belonged to the head of the house went the little procession, and there he was laid, while Maria Ellen plied a fan to keep the air in motion about him. Below, the news was passed from lip to lip that Elder Myer had been run over in trying to save a child. Internal injuries had been received, the doctor had said. They could see the doctor as he bade Mrs. Myer good-by in the shaded porch. "Back in an hour." He spoke the words softly, though there was no need of hushed tones. "I don't look for much change."

"Is there—danger, doctor?" She dreaded to speak the word.

"Well, who knows? We'll see later," replied he, avoiding her eye as he left the porch.

During the next half hour, it seemed to Maria Ellen that all the people in Bannerstown had gathered before their gate. The ministers came with the rest. "Myer is so needed just now! Strange indeed are the dispensations of providence," said one. The visitors were mostly men. There were the workingmen, the business men, the lawyers. Had she been among them she would have heard always the same question and the same answer: as twilight deepened over the warm southern landscape, and the sound of whip-poorwills and katydids filled the air, it was ever, "Is there any hope?" and the answer, "God knows."

Near the gate was gathered a small group of men who seemed particularly downcast. "Myer can't be spared just now," said one; "all our hopes hang on him." The speaker was a shrewd lawyer of the better type, and was the leader in the fight against the forces of corruption in the large southern city of which Bannerstown was a suburb. It was the climax of a three years' struggle, and thanks to Myer's high personal reputation and popularity, victory was within reach. No one but he could win the election. No one but he could, when elected, stem the tide of vice in the city, and bring about the public school reforms which were needed. In three days' time was the election, and he, in whom all hopes were centered, lay helpless, cut down like a tree in the forest.

"The doctor gives him up?" "Why, what's the matter?" "Doesn't know exactly, but says his life seems to be ebbing away." "Shock?" "Perhaps so. Get another doctor, why don't they?" "There's one coming now . . ."

And so the talk ran on in a disjointed fashion. The crowd had dispersed, all but the little group by the door. When the great doctor from the city went in, they were there, and when, half an hour later, he came out, there they still were. In silence they watched him as he stepped into his motor and was whirled away, and no one needed to tell them the verdict.

Presently the local physician emerged, and they clustered round him, Lawyer Eldridge asking in a low voice the question that was in the hearts of all. "Tell us, just what did he say?" "That no man could help," replied the young doctor sadly; "only a miracle of God could save him."

"The days of miracles are over," remarked one of the clergymen, as he turned his steps homeward.

THERE was a moment's silence, as the few who were left watched the forms of the two last speakers vanishing in the dusk. Then a bright light broke over them all. The front door opened and Mrs. Myer came out. Her face was pale but a look of exaltation was upon it.

"Listen!" she said as she raised her hand. "The doctor has said that only a miracle of God can save my husband. Then a miracle of God shall save him! Who will join me in prayer tonight for him? The arm of the Lord is not shortened! He will save my husband for the great work which he has to do. I know it!" The tears gushed from her eyes, but she did not heed them.

"Who will help? Who? Who?"

One of the group stepped forward—a rough man who had been standing in the background, respectfully holding his hat in his hand.

"I will, ma'am," he said. "I believe in prayer and I know what it will do."

"And I!" "And I!" "And I!" came from one and another. Here was the Methodist clergyman, and the druggist's clerk, and the stationmaster, and the bank cashier—six in all.

They followed Mrs. Myer into the house and upstairs to the sick room. How still it was there! only a night lamp burned in the corner. The evening breeze brought in the scent of honeysuckle and lifted the damp hair on the brow of the sick man. How still lay! Only the slight rise and fall his chest showed that the deep unc sciousness in which he lay was death.

A sigh fell from his pastor's lips l the wife raised her hand. "No not sadness here, dear friend! He is dead, but sleepeth, and soon will aw to the glory of God!" They stood gether by the bedside of the sick m Then the voice of the carpenter heard in prayer, and one and anot spoke words of strong faith that ech through that room of distress lik bugle note. "Father, we thank t that thou hast heard us, and we kn that thou hearest us always . . ."

The moon rose and shed a lig brighter than that of the night-lamp the quiet room. It touched the f of the sick man, and showed his l met in a sweet line, almost like a sm

Prayers had been said, and in sile and confidence the watchers sto Suddenly Elder Myer opened his ey and exclaimed in a natural thou harsh voice, "Look out there! Do you see that child?" Then he look about him in surprise.

"Dr. Pettigrew, you here! Wha the matter? Why, I'm at hor Mother! how came you here? How I get here?" The words burst from lips almost in one breath. Then made an effort to sit up, but it was t much for his feeble strength, and he f back, remaining quiet for some n ments. The watchers regarded h anxiously. Had this been only a l flickering of the vital spark ere it w out? "Pray, pray!" cried Mrs. My "Call on him who redeemeth our l from destruction! He never fail those who cry to him."

Again rose the voices in strong co fident prayer, to die away a mom later as the watchers perceived that t unconsciousness in which the lov one lay was sleep—natural, peacef sleep.

After an hour, the flush of da showed him still sleeping, and th crept away. "Father, we thank th that thou hast heard us, and we kn that thou hearest us always."

Downstairs, one by one they left t house, each going in awed silen through the fresh dewy dawn to l home.

Early in the morning the doct called. He took a look at the sick ma then turned away, muttering, "Ta about miracles! Pray, woman! Ke up your praying. It's the only me cine that can reach him."

At the next sundown Elder Myer w sitting up in his bed, drinking a cup milk: below were the six who h saved him by their prayers. They h hung about the house all day, waiti to rejoice with him when he awoke.

"Well, looks like we'll get the el tion after all, what, colonel?" ask the druggist's clerk cheerfully of t stationmaster, who was a member the first family in the state. "Y glory to God!" was all the answer l lips could frame.

Additional Gifts for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

Miscellaneous Amounts

Union Thanksgiving Service of the Cong., Meth. and Bapt. churches, Kansas City, Kans., $3.78; Miss Bernice Stein, $6.00; Mrs. George W. Sowers, $4.50; B. O. L., $3.30; Class No. 3, Presby. S. S., Milford, Va., $1.59; M. E. S. S., Adrian, Minn., $13.75; "Friends," Gorman, Texas $4.50; U. B. Church, Sugar Grove, Ind., $3.26; M. C. Spangler, $6.00; Lydia Wagner, $12.75; Mrs. E. T. Norman, $1.00. Union Thanksgiving Service, Bapt. Church, Canby, Minn., $12.53; First Bapt. S. S., Waupaca, Wis., $7.10; A. D., Williamsport, Pa., $1.10; Mrs. N. L. Cooley, $1.15; Woodland S. S., Mt. Olive, N. C. $1.75; N. W. Merrill, $3.50; John D. Wilson, $3.50. G. W. Parmenter, $10.20; Miss Hoyt and Lizzie G. Dewey, $6.00; Friends, Independence, Iowa, $2.86; J. L. Caldwell, $9.60; Friends Beckley, W. Va., $30.00; Mr. Chas. F. Jones $7.00, Thanksgiving offering, The Liberty Free Meth. Church, Buckeye, Ariz., $3.75; Alice M. Willard, $6.00; Pratherville Church, Excelsior Springs, Mo., $8.36; Mrs. R. M. Goodspeed, $6.00; Bapt. Church, Clenville, Neb., $2.06; F. A. Funkhauser, $40.00; Thanksgiving offering, Union Church Service, Watervliet, Mich., $5.45; M. E. S. S., Lindsey, Wis., $7.50; Thanksgiving Day collection Bison, Kansas, $6.31; A. J. Seagle, $4.00, Shiloh S. S., Codell, Kan., $4.50; Mrs. M. L. Rockue, $2.25; Mrs. Nellie Burger, $1.40; The Members of the Trade River and Bass Lake Mission and Friends, Grantsburg, Wis., $46.25; Sunday School Children, Utica, Ohio, $15.90; First Ref. Church, Walden, N. Y., $27.55; Thornwell Memorial Church, Clinton, S. C., $16.05.

Gifts of $50 Each

Emily A. Gibbons, Hope Ref. Church, Holland, Mich.

Gifts of $25 Each

Robt. L. Park, J. E. McGuire, B. Bradford.

Gifts of $20 Each

United Presby. Church, Fall River, Mass.; Elizabeth M. Bordman, Mrs. Mary A. Conklin and children.

Gifts of $15 Each

Mrs. M. S. Hess, M. E. Sunday School, Independence, Iowa; Mrs. A. J. Seccombe; H. G. Phillips.

Gifts of $10 Each

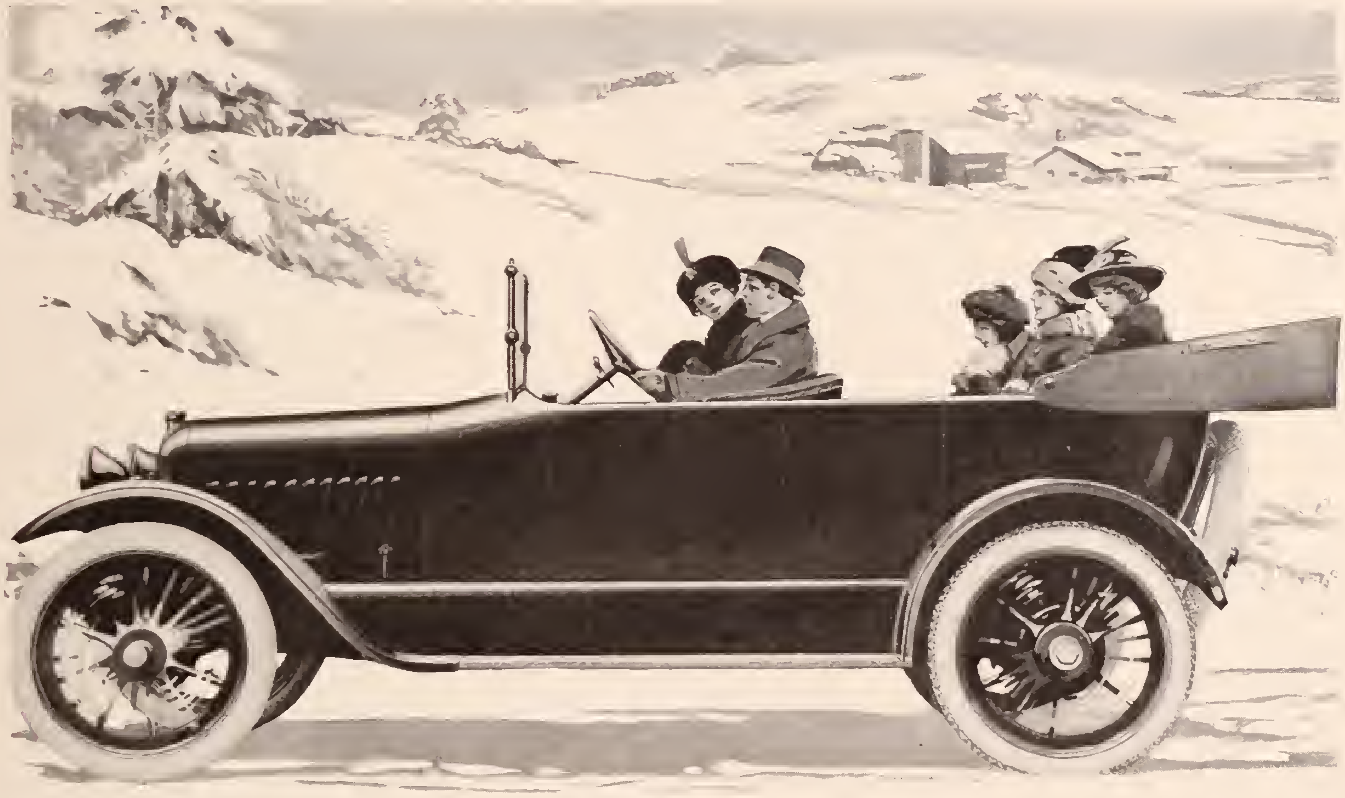
A. Mottaz; Chas. Bohatec; Mr. and Mrs. Geo. L. Jones; F. G. Mitchell; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hoyt; Miss Anna K. Hoersch; H. C. Newmaster; Mrs. Rudolph Miller; W. H. A.; Mrs. L. V. Graves; Mrs. John Holdenri F. J. Sulzback; M. Moon; Grace M. Mill Mrs. Ellen Foxall; Leon E. Watson; Mr. a Mrs. F. E. Boudinot; John H. Kauch "One who wishes to help," Caldwell, N. E. R. Deffenbaugh.

Gifts of $5 Each

The Citizens of Ivanhoe, Okla.; H. Bradfo Chas. G. Emerson; Miss G. R. Ward; Lilli Skelton; A Friend, Alameda, Calif.; Edwa Francis; S. W. Hamblen Cong. Church, C cinnatus, N. Y.; John M. Thomen; Ethel Bennett; Mrs. John Sneed; Axel T. Johns J. B., Rising Sun, Ind.; Mrs. Almena Moo Mrs. Lida L. Whitney; Mrs. O. S. Hartm Mr. and Mrs. P. Baggerly; M. A. Westerm S. S., Eureka School House, Abilene, Kans Mary P. Whitney; H. L. Sandefur; Hel J. L., and Mrs. J. L. McGhee; Wm. McNeil; Mrs. F. E. Granberry; Mrs. A. Ha ilton; Arthur J. Raley; Miss Florence Kobler; Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Morris; L. Pickett; A Reader; Salem, N. J.; Geo. Str Mrs. Bertha Wendt; R. Meyers; Virgi Miller; Mrs. J. N. Peters; Mrs. J. A. Hu Agnes H. Hoyt; D. Marty; Mary A. Bouch Mrs. Annie Murberg; Mary C. Miller; M A. N. Warner; Florence A. Brown; Miss A. Evans; Charles L. Dow.

Additional acknowledgments will follow.

GRANT SIX $795



A Remarkable Combination of High Quality, Large Size and Low Price

IN those few words, you have the story of the Grant Six.

And you also have the reason why the Grant Six is enjoying unheard of popularity.

It explains why we have never been able to build enough cars to meet the demand. Why,—even on the basis of nine thousand cars a year, this season's program, we have been unable to keep pace with orders for immediate delivery, even with greatly increased facilities.

It has always been the Grant idea to make its product the literal expression of the utmost in motor car value.

We were the first to build a high quality six-cylinder car priced below a thousand dollars—and it is our sincere conviction that the Grant Six still leads in Quality, Size and Power for its price.

This car has marvelous flexibility. It throttles down to one and one-half miles an hour on high gear—and it speeds up to fifty miles. It has power to spare. Moreover, it is economical,—goes twenty miles to the gallon of gasoline (some owners say twenty-eight miles) and 900 miles to the gallon of oil. Of course, it is easy on tires.

And its true cantilever spring suspension makes it easy riding on any road. We emphasize this feature of the Grant Six because it deserves emphasis.

Consider the facts mentioned and you will quickly realize why the Grant Six looms large on the horizon of value.

There are three models, all built on one chassis: Five-passenger Touring Car $795; Three-passenger Roadster $795; Three-passenger Cabriolet $1025.

Send at once for the latest Grant literature.

GRANT MOTOR COMPANY, FINDLAY, OHIO

Fourteen of Our Complete Specialty Stores

Women's Waist Store: Over 100 models for tailored and dressy wear.

Women's Coats and Suits: 75 exclusive designs in suits and coats, many models in color

Millinery Store: One of the largest in the world. A range of prices and values which will amaze you. Many models shown in color at special prices

Corset and Muslin Underwear Store: Our corset store shows models such as only big city stores usually carry Our muslin underwear store contains every possible style of garment, including special models for the trousseau

Maternity and Infants' Store: This store is under the care of specialists and every garment is specially planned Six pages in color

Misses' and Children's Store: This store has its own manager, who thinks only of suitable, appropriate styles for misses and children

Hosiery and Knit Underwear Store: This store carries 104 styles, 16 different grades and weights, at prices which speak for themselves

Shoe Store: Complete in every detail Forty pages devoted exclusively to shoes—fourteen pages in color

Boys' Store: See what the Charles William Boys' Store offers and what boys' clothing can be like when it is especially planned and designed'

Men's Store: The Charles William Store for men contains over a thousand items! Many shown in full color

Toilet Goods Store: The Charles William Toilet Goods Store contains over 200 items every one at the cut prices that New York women pay

Jewelry Store: A jeweler in a small town hasn't the capital to carry one-hundredth part of the items shown in the Charles William Jewelry Store, which contains over 3 000 articles—46 pages —2 in color.

Dress Goods Store: A complete stock of dress goods, notions, embroideries, silks, dress-trimmings etc

Sewing Machine Shop: This store was established by us especially to sell sewing machines direct, doing away with agent's big commissions Notice our prices—$14 65 up to $28 65

For Women

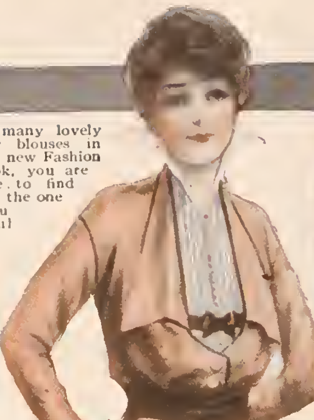
Waists	$ 39 to $4 98
Lingerie and Tub Dresses	98 to 12 98
Silk Dresses	4 98 to 16 98
House Dresses	59 to 1 98
Skirts	79 to 5.98
Coats and Wraps	3.98 to 10.98
Hats	23 to 5.98
Gloves	23 to 2.75
Shoes and Pumps	.58 to 3.45
Underwear	07 to 3 75
Petticoats	.19 to 4.95
Corsets	49 to 2 98
Brassieres	.19 to 49
Neckwear	19 to 98
Scarfs	.49 to 1 39

For Children

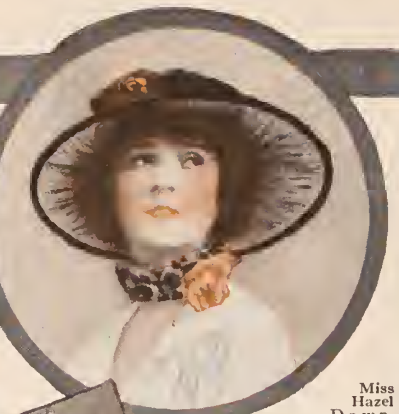
Girls' Dresses	$ 49 to $3 98
Girls' Coats	98 to 6 98
Girls' Shoes	80 to 2 60
Infants' Layettes	6 75 to 10 98
Infants' Dresses & Coats	25 to 2 98
Infants' Caps	25 to 1 89
Boys' Suits	32 to 8.45
Boys' Blouses	24 to 1 29
Boys' Coats	1 98 to 5.65
Boys' Shoes	.95 to 2 59

For Men

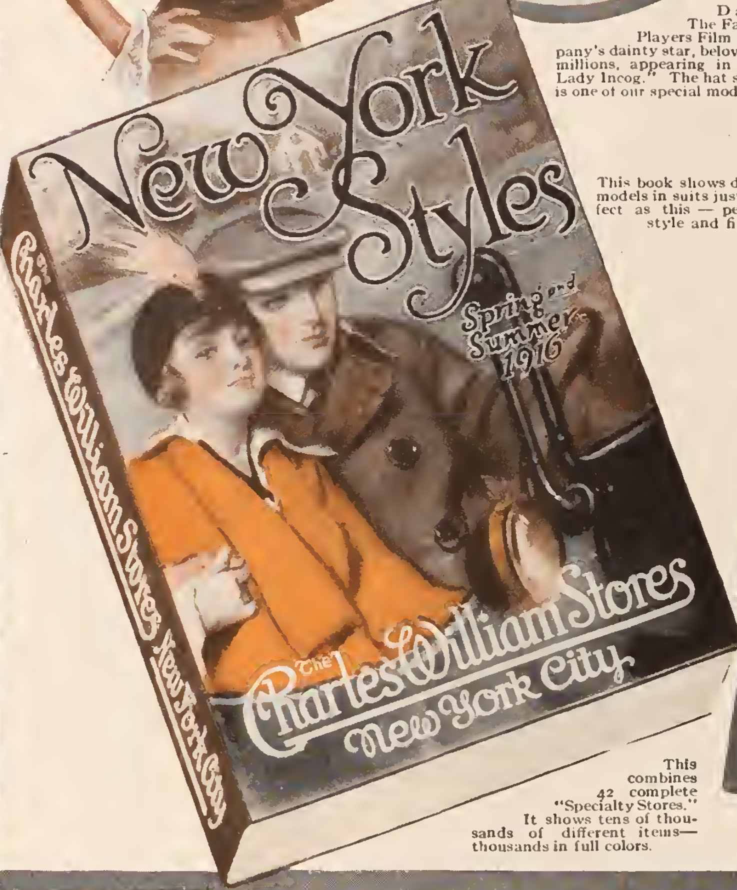
Suits	$4.95 to 19 50
Shoes	1 60 to 4.35
Shirts	.49 to 2.95
Hats	.49 to 4.50
Underwear	23 to 4.98
Coats	11.50 to 29.75



So many lovely new blouses in this new Fashion Book, you are sure to find just the one you wish!



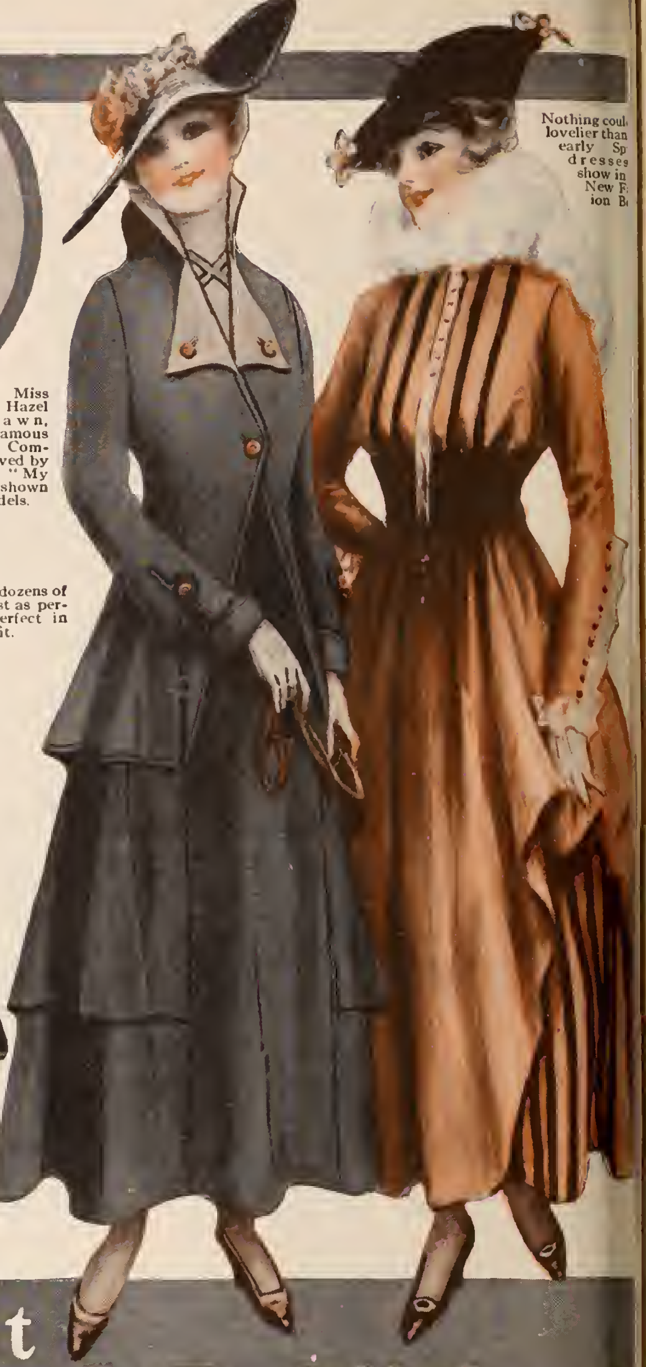
Miss Hazel Dawn, The Famous Players Film Company's dainty star, beloved by millions, appearing in "My Lady Incog." The hat shown is one of our special models.



New York Styles
Spring and Summer 1916
The Charles William Stores New York City
Charles William Stores New York City

This book shows dozens of models in suits just as perfect as this — perfect in style and fit.

This combines 42 complete "Specialty Stores." It shows tens of thousands of different items—thousands in full colors.



Nothing coul lovelier than early Sp dresses show in New F ion B

FREE The Largest Fashion Book Published

Write to-day for your copy

Thousands of Clerks to Handle Your Order Promptly

Think of the small number of clerks most stores have—none of them specially trained. The Charles William Stores have thousands of clerks, each with his own special job That is why our service is famous. Read what Mrs. Parker Ladd says:

> "Received the goods I sent for and am more than satisfied with them. The petticoat that I paid 49c for we have to pay $1.50 here for and it is not nearly as good."
> Mrs. Parker Ladd.
> No. Haven, Me.

More than five hundred pages of new merchandise! Eighty-two pages of special offers in actual colors! The most attractive styles in New York—the loveliest illustrations and values greater than ever before offered even by mail. Fourteen heads of fourteen different SPECIALTY STORES have worked six months preparing the merchandise for it.

You will say this book is the most interesting, the handsomest book ever issued. Regardless of how you now do your buying, regardless of what other books you may consult, get a copy of this one and see for yourself what The Charles William Stores are offering.

Write for this free book today.

An absolutely free copy for you is ready to mail to you the moment we get your request.

A postal sent now will save you so much that you will always be grateful to us for having persuaded you not to delay writing.

No matter where you live, this book brings to you the very latest styles New York has to offer—just what New York women are wearing. More than this, every garment shown is an exclusive Charles William model. They are styles which can be seen only in this book.

Ours, the Most Remarkable Success in America's History

Why have The Charles William Stores over a million customers in less than two years?

With all of the retail and mail order houses already in America, why were The Charles William Stores successful from the very moment they were ready for business?

Because based on two new ideas!

Mail order houses have always been conceded to be able to offer lower prices than retail dealers can even approximate. The Charles William Stores from the beginning have built their business on the idea that these mail order prices should be extended to Merchandise of Quality. Not cheap, ordinary merchandise sold at a price. But the best merchandise only, the finest, and yet sold at the low price of which selling direct permits. This is what won them trade immediately.

The other idea, which The Charles Willi Stores alone have, is the idea of a group of s cialty stores—43 of them—all managed w the same capital. This means that each st is under the direction of a man devoting entire time to the one store, yet that each st has the big cash buying facilities which cc only from uniting the purchases of the 43 stor

IMPORTANT—TO OUR CUSTOME

If you are among the thousands who alrea buy from The Charles William Stores, it v not be necessary for you to write for your co of "New York Styles." As soon as it is rea it will be mailed immediately to all of T Charles William customers.

Name..

R. D. Route or Street No.............................

City and State.......................................

Please send your big Free Fashion Book, the one which you say is the finest ever issued, to the above address.

The Charles William Stores
42 Stores Building
New York

SEND A POSTAL OR MAIL THE COUPON TODAY

The Charles William Stores New York

AT THE NATION'S GATEWAY

42 Stores Building, New York

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1916, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

BSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
BLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, JANUARY 26, 1916

VOL. 39—NO. 4. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Still in the old time fashion the Arabs cross the stream,
And in the shining water the bright reflections gleam
With Oriental luster—the fabric of a dream.

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

F. G. M., Corvallis, Ore. I am puzzled and discouraged. For several years I have been afflicted with eczema, which makes me unsightly at times, often breaking my nightly rest. It is written: "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you" (John 15: 7). Was this language meant for the disciples only, or for all Christians? My prayers on other matters are answered, but in the matter of this disease I receive either a refusal or no attention.

Have you studied carefully Paul's experience related in II Cor. 12: 7-9? We must make Scripture interpret itself. Paul had the same promise that you have, but in this case the answer came in a way that seemed at first disappointing. But on the other hand, it may be that you have not sufficient faith. We learn from the whole Scripture teaching about prayer that it is not the prayer itself but the faith we exercise that brings the blessing. There is a positive scientific value in faith; faith opens the way for the power and health of God to fill us; while the heart and mind are resting upon him the body has a better chance to receive and keep the gift of health. Then, too, we must back up our prayers with works. Get the best medical advice obtainable; it may be that some skilful physician can find a remedy for your affliction. But if you are denied the grace of health you can show by your beautiful trust and gentleness the greater grace of patient, cheerful holiness.

Waterin' th' Horses

Margaret E. Sangster Jr.

I took th' horses to th' brook - to water 'em you know,
Th' air was cold with just a touch o' frost;
And as we went a-joggin' down I couldn't help but think,
O' city folk an' all the things they lost.

O' course they have their lighted streets - their Great White Way an' such,
O' course they have their buildin's large an' tall;
But, my! they never know th' joy o' ridin' ter th' brook,
An' somehow I don't envy 'em at all!

Perhaps I'd like it - fer awhile - to hear th' songs an' laughter,
But somehow, I don't know exactly why;
I'd feel th' country callin' me; I'd long again fer silence,
An' fer God's mountains, blue against th' sky.

I took th' horses to th' brook - to water 'em you know,
Th' day was pretty as a day can be;
An' as we went a-joggin' down I couldn't help but think,
O' city folk an' all they never see!

One of our readers, Mrs. Robert Thomas (Michigan), sends this very touching note enclosing a contribution which has been given to China orphanage support: "This I send for my little niece. May the trifle given in God's name be acceptable and blessed. There are many demands for benevolence and with limited means it costs sacrifice such as God approves and accepts through the merits of his own dear Son." This is the right spirit in which to give for any worthy cause.

L. A. L. C., Halifax, Pa. The 8th verse of the 97th Psalm is the middle verse of the Bible.

M. A. B., New Hampshire. Wife-beating is severely punished in England, though there doubtless were laws in past times which permitted many things that are now forbidden.

Mrs. P. P. B., Withee, Wis. The only kind of war that can by any means be regarded as justifiable is one of self-defense. At the present time we are not threatened from any quarter.

C. H. H., Masonville, N. J. The name of Pharaoh's daughter, who found and adopted the infant Moses, is not given in Scripture, but Artabanus, an ancient historian, mentions that traditions current among the Egyptian Jews call the princess Merrhis, and her father Palmanothes (presumed to be a corruption or the equivalent of Amenhapt). The tradition is regarded as of little value.

A. S. B., Carlyle, Ill. We have no means of knowing what the evangelist mentioned does with his income from revival work, nor what is its extent.

J. H. A. Michael Hillegas was treasurer of the United Colonies under the authority of the Continental Congress and was appointed July 29, 1775. He served until September 11, 1789. The Treasury Department was organized under the constitution, in effect March 4, 1789, and the Act of Congress of September 2, 1789. Mr. Hillegas was treasurer for nearly five months after the inauguration of Washington and nine days after the Treasury Department was organized. We cannot tell you any more about Mr. Hillegas. Alexander Hamilton was never Treasurer of the United States. He was the first Secretary of the Treasury and as such gave us our decimal coinage and established the credit of the United States at home and abroad. The office of Treasurer of the United States is a subordinate office in the Treasury Department.

Mrs. Oren Hooper, 143 Neal Street, Portland, Maine, writes to ask if some of our readers will send her the titles of books they have found specially serviceable in the training of young children—books readable and uplifting, helpful in teaching spiritual truths, and in leading the child to know God in nature; also books that are suited to Sabbath reading for the young.

Rev. Joseph Hamilton, of Toronto, Can., distinguished in the pulpit and in authorship, writes to the Mail-Bag discussing the value of moving pictures as an aid to Bible instruction. He says: "Let me give you a suggestion as to picture shows. The very first one I saw, I said, 'Here is a suggestion for the Sunday school.' We take in truth when it appeals to the eye much faster than when it appeals to the ear and retain it a great deal longer. Just imagine, for instance, the tale of the Prodigal Son. And surely, it is just as right and as reverent to make an appeal to the eye as to the ear. I must say that I am surprised that this wonderful suggestion of picture shows was not utilized long ago."

W. C. A., West Liberty, Iowa. Yes, most of the powers mentioned had representatives at the Vatican at the outbreak of the war. England, for the first time in three centuries, sent a special representative, notwithstanding a widespread protest against such a course.

J. M. F., Staunton, Va. You will find the quotations to which you refer in Matt. 26: 52, 53; Luke 22: 36. Read on the same subject James 4: 1, 2; John 18: 36. The whole subject of preparedness is very ably discussed in a series of letters on the subject now appearing in the Christian Herald, which you might hand to the Sunday school teacher.

A. E. C., Chico, Calif. The Book of Enoch is regarded by many as one of the most important in apocalyptic literature. It is mentioned in Jude 14, 15, and several of the early Christian fathers refer to it in their writings. In 1773, three copies of the book were found in manuscript, in Abyssinia, the manuscripts containing an Ethiopic translation complete. It has been translated and printed. The Book of Enoch does not seem ever to have been accepted by the Jews, and the general conclusion among scholars is that it is altogether separate from the canonical Scriptures. It is classed among the Apocrypha. Originally, it is supposed to have been of Hebrew origin, handed down in the form of tradition from generation to generation, and after a time committed to writing. It is in twenty-seven sections and consists of a series of revelations given to Enoch and Noah, dealing with the phenomena of nature and life, the object being "to vindicate the action of Providence." It refers to the fall of the angels, the secrets of heaven, the mysteries of nature, the future judgment, the future blessedness of the righteous, and the coming Messiah, the final establishment of whose kingdom is to be preceded by "wars and desolations." The whole book is written in a highly inspirational style and it has many fine poetic passages. Several eminent commentators place the composition of the book at a period shortly after the Christian era, while others give a probable date between 144 and 120 B.C. Jesus Christ is nowhere mentioned in it, nor is there any special indication of a Christian origin, although the Messiah is spoken of in exalted terms.

F. R. S. B., Seattle, Wash. When and by whom was the motion picture invented?

The motion picture is more than fifty years old if we understand by that term any device for producing the optical illusion of moving objects. These toys were called by various names, such as thaumatrope, zoetrope, stroboscope, phenakistoscope, stereoscopic cabinet, kinematoscope, etc. The first exhibition of photographic motion pictures was made by Henry Heyl in Philadelphia in 1870. The pictures were made by successive careful poses, thrown on the screen in such a way that the movement of the subjects kept time with the music of an orchestra. Many other inventors worked on this problem before Edison, in 1889, produced the first modern motion picture apparatus of the type so familiar to us today.

P. B., Birmingham, Ala. No official statistics available on the subject.

S. W., Canandaigua, N. Y. To what grand division of the human race do the aborigines of Australia belong?

This question has been long disputed by ethnologists. The native Australians are black, which led many to class them among the negro races; but later investigators, considering their features, their straight or curled, not woolly hair, and their heavy beards, classify them along with the Veddahs of Ceylon and the hill-tribes of India, as Caucasians. If this classification is correct, we see, stretching from Iceland to Australia, i. e., more than half-way around the globe, a long belt in which are found nations of all colors and all grades of culture, from the blond Icelander to the black Australian, and from the highest product of twentieth century civilization to a condition comparable to that of the cave-dwellers of prehistoric Europe. The Australians, when first discovered by white men, were at the lowest state of development, as regards civilization, of any known human race.

A. L. W., Los Angeles, Calif. Who was the author of the multiplication table?

It is impossible to know who was the author of the multiplication table, but it is known to have been in existence in the days of the builders of the ruined cities of Mesopotamia, whose records are now being patiently deciphered by archeologists. Tablets are found which tell us of their system of education, banking, accounting, business correspondence, etc., and among others are multiplication tables. So the multiplication table is probably not less than six thousand years old.

NOTICE OF EXPIRATION

ONCE each month we attach, just und this notice, a subscription blank and noti of expiration for our subscribers who Christian Herald subscriptions expired at a time during the past month. If your copy h this subscription blank attached, please use to renew at once. IF YOU SENT YOUR R NEWAL WITHIN THE LAST TWO C THREE WEEKS, PLEASE PAY NO ATTE TION TO THE BLANK.

When renewing, indicate on the blank wi your remittance whether you are subscribi for any of our premium books, Real People a Dreams, by Margaret E. Sangster, Jr., $1.8 Little Sir Galahad, $2.00; Luther in Light Recent Research, $2.25; 555 Difficult Bi Questions Answered, $1.85; India Paper R Letter Bible, $3, with your subscription, or straight year's subscription at $1.50.

Do not forget you can have YOUR OW RENEWAL AND ONE NEW SUBSCRI TION FOR $2.25, or, YOUR OWN R NEWAL AND TWO NEW SUBSCRI TIONS FOR $3. It is understood that t old subscriber must get the full subscripti price of $1.50 from the new subscriber a must not in any way share the special pr with the new subscriber.

Send money by postal express money orders. A dress, The Christian Hera Bible House, New York.

"Old Subscriber," St bury, Pa. Send name a address for answer by ma

Earnest, Quincy, Ill. T Gospel is not for you accept and keep and hug your own heart, treating as a precious gift to guarded jealously for yo own spiritual joy and welfa That is not the Divine pu pose. Your acceptance only the initial step. T Gospel is given to be so and spread abroad a multiplied everywhere. well might the farmer lo up the precious seed, stead of planting it, multiply a thousand-fo and to feed the world. we spread not the Gosp we are unprofitable servan Jesus' apostles scattered abroad and made the wh world their field. Paul, af his conversion, was impell to sow the seed broadca and faced every peril land and sea in the wo Georgia's new liquor law h been erroneously reported the press as permitting a resident of the state have shipped to himself, from outside, two qua of liquor, one gallon of wine and forty-eight pi of beer a month. The law provides that he m have two quarts of liquor or one gallon of wi or forty-eight pints of beer. He must cho one of these, he may not have them all.

F. E. R., Key West, Fla. When was the aut mobile invented?

There are many machines of which it is n possible to name the inventor, nor the time place of the invention; and this is preem nently true of the automobile. In 1802 Richa Trevithick propelled a horseless vehicle at t rate of ten miles an hour, for which he w forbidden the use of the roads. A large numb of inventions, some of which are in practic use in the automobile of today, had been ma by 1845, when the pneumatic tire was invent Indeed, as the Scientific American puts it, t automobile before that year had a ve thorough trying out, and had been fou wanting. In 1855 Richard Dudgeon built steam roadster with a record of 40 miles hour. Traction engines were a common sig on our roads long before the automobile we know it came into use. R. E. Olds in 18 built a buggy driven by a steam engine with boiler of the tubular type which used gasoli as fuel. In 1889 Serpollet, in France, reviv the flash boiler principle, first developed 1825. In 1860 Lenoir, in France, patented vehicle driven by an explosive gas engine. T real father of the modern automobile w Gottfried Daimler, who in 1884 patented road vehicle driven by a high speed intern combustion engine. From that time t development of the automobile was co paratively rapid, but it was not till in t nineties of the last century that it began to b common, and its use as an ordinary vehic may be said to begin with the twentie century. Even a list of the names of those w have contributed to the perfecting of the hors less carriage would require more space than w have at our disposal.

HE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

An Illustrated News Weekly for the Home

World Federation Begins

HISTORY moves with seven-league strides. On the opening of the Pan-American tific Congress, at ington, December 7-nuary 8, an intel- al union for the interchange of professors and tuents, an exchange of publications and the con- rtion of archeological treasures, was proposed. eek later, a practical extension of the Monroe rine, affecting the three Americas and furnishing n nprecedented example to the entire world, was itted to the ministers of twenty republics. t a thought that must be to the anxious crowned s of Europe!

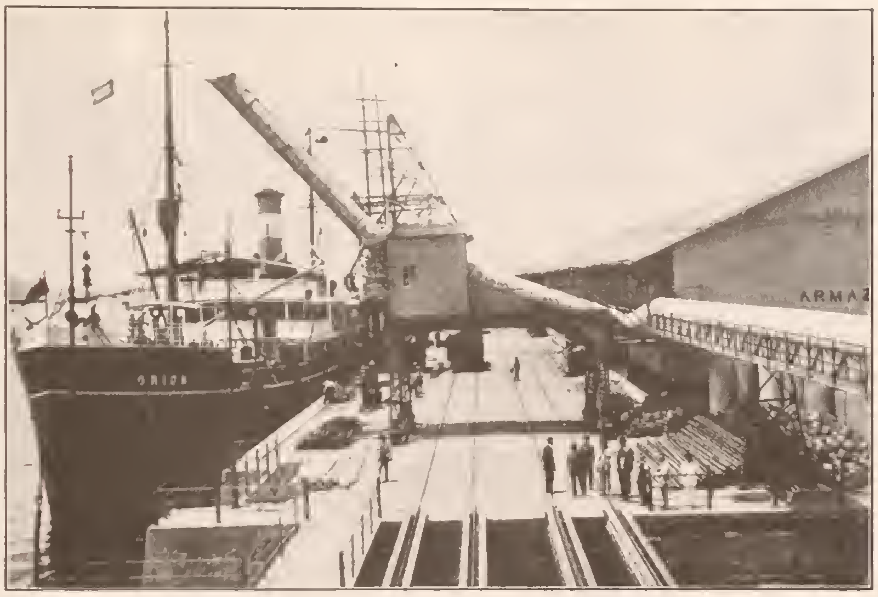
his was not a union proposed in haste to be re- ed at leisure. Nearly a year ago Alberto brano, minister from Honduras, gested a plan for preventing a ration of war in America before question had been submitted to rt of arbitration. A little later, e the Pan-American Financial erence, which did much to extend feeling of commercial friendship, dent Wilson said: "It would great thing if the Americas could to the distinction which they al- y wear, this of showing the way to anent peace."

week later, in the historic as- ly room of Independence Hall, or Blankenburg of Philadelphia gested a formal federation of all rican peoples in an alliance as -knit as the United States itself, sure world peace and human re.

spite of the many sessions, which o do with all branches of scientific rch, the prevailing note of the ering was the science of an en- ened internationalism and ad- ed government. Problems of in- ual development gave way to the lem of world evolution. Con- tion of all that goes to make up ty and freedom was discussed hose who had come thousands of s to describe a single waterfall or to diagnose the ses of a single plant.

he division on mining and metallurgy forgot the lems of the extraction of metals and turned to problem of the refining of fellowship. The fusion inerals served to teach the lesson of the fusion of s. Questions of public health were expanded to r the hemisphere not with life alone, but with ty and the pursuit of happiness. Weighty mat- of transportation, commerce and finance were ssed from the viewpoint of friendly helpfulness er than individual gain. One congress consid- the good of all the twenty-one republics, whose dreds of representatives united in the desire to many peoples one in thought and trust.

HREE weeks before the opening of the Scientific ongress President Wilson, in what has already me a noted presidential message, proclaimed a new Pan-Americanism, and his sentiments found favor among the many republics of Central and South America. The plan for a Pan-American federation has been the subject of careful consideration for more than a year. The attitude of the President over the Colombian settlement, his determination not to coerce Mexico, and his open declaration at Mobile that the United States has no idea of territorial aggression, are all along the line of the present movement. Distrust of America's motives has melted before the warmth of friendship which has developed toward the Latin-American republics. A celebrated banker from South America, speaking at the Financial Conference of last May, showed the attitude of his race toward our government in these words:



Loading Coffee at Docks, Santos, Brazil

> The disappearance of distrust will permit of the real union in sentiment of all the nations of America, and that union will mean strength for the protection of the continent and of the ideals of liberty and democracy to which it is dedicated.

Eduardo Suarez Mujica, the Chilean ambassador and presiding officer of the Pan-American Scientific Congress, in his reply to Secretary Lansing's address, said:

> Although representing only one of the republics, I am convinced that I am interpreting the thought and feeling of each and every one of them when I say that the government of the United States today completes the erasing with a friendly hand of the last traces of past misunderstandings and erroneous interpretations which had in former times clouded the horizon of America.
>
> No doubt there had prevailed before now, in the atmosphere of American foreign offices, uncertainties, misgivings, and suspicions whenever the well-inspired and unquestionably beneficial declaration by President Monroe was brandished in the United States with a view to practical application. There was lacking the precise definition of the meaning and extent of that memorable document, and many of the weaker American nations seemed afraid and apprehensive whenever the news reached them of a possible application of its declarations.
>
> Thus the Monroe Doctrine might have been a threat so long as it was only a right and an obligation on the part of the United States. Generalized as a derivation derived from the Pan-American policy supported by all the republics in the continent as a common force and a common defense, it has become a solid tie of union, a guarantee, a bulwark for our democracies.

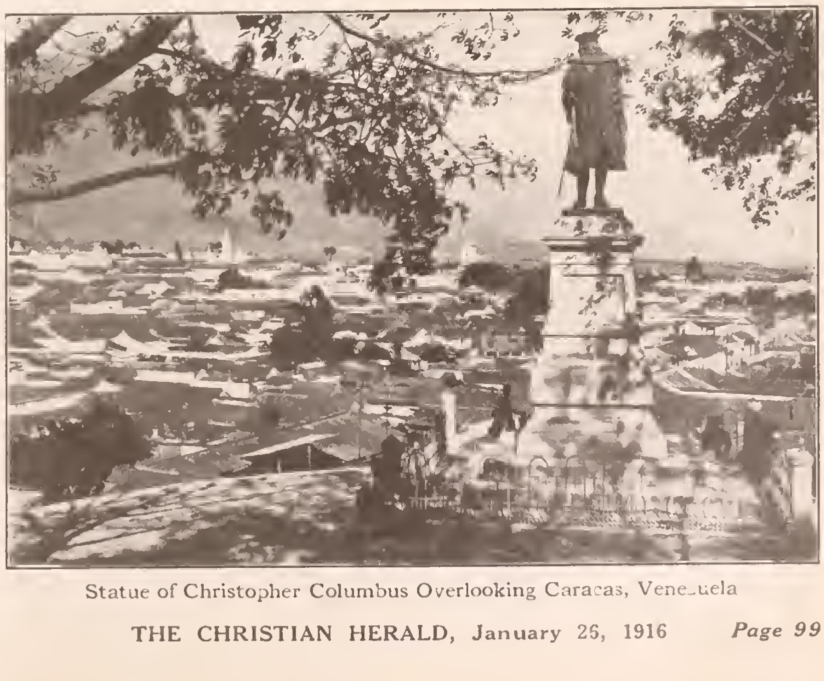
The speech by Secretary Lansing which drew forth this frank reply was a hearty expression of a desire for trust and friendship among the American republics. In defining the essentials of Pan-Americanism, he said:

> When we attempt to analyze Pan-Americanism, we find that the essential qualities are those of the family sympathy, helpfulness, and a sincere desire to see one another grow in prosperity; absence of covetousness of another's possessions; absence of jealousy of another's prominence; and, above all, absence of that spirit of intrigue which menaces the domestic peace of a neighbor. The might of this country will never be used in a spirit of greed to wrest from a neighboring state its territory and possessions. The ambitions of this Republic lie in the paths of peace and justice. Whenever and wherever we can, we will stretch forth a hand to those who need help. If the sovereignty of a sister republic is menaced from overseas, the power of the United States, and I hope and believe the united power of the American republics, will constitute a bulwark which will protect the independence and integrity of their neighbor from unjust invasion or aggression. The American Family of Nations might well take for its motto that of Dumas's famous musketeers: "One for all; all for one."

On the day when the excitement over the Austrian note was at its height and a break was expected, the American republics were drawing together, not in fear of a European foe, but in the desire to prevent the horrors of war from spreading to this hemisphere. The ordinary business of the congress was forgotten in the desire to further the cause of Pan-Americanism.

A UNION of the American republics is not a gain to the United States so far as armament is concerned, for it increases the territory to be defended more than it increases the means of defense. While this union will not bring material benefit to us, it is interesting to note that the South American republics are relatively better prepared, so far as army is concerned, than we are, and that the per capita revenue is nearly as great in the Southern republics as it is in the United States. While we gain nothing in a material way from a union with our twenty friends, they gain no more than we do. Selfish interest is entirely absent from the entire scheme of internationalism. Nationalism is necessarily lessened when internationalism is born. As the acknowledged leader of the Western Hemisphere, using moderation in our leadership, the United States can further not only the ideal of Pan-Americanism, but also that of world-brotherhood and universal peace. If this will work in the Western Hemisphere, why not in the world?

Rio de Janeiro Harbor, and Famous Sugar Loaf Rock



Statue of Christopher Columbus Overlooking Caracas, Venezuela

Argentina and Chile nearly bankrupted themselves because of mutual defense measures that affected no other nations in the world. When arbitration was decided upon and the "Christ of the Andes" took its place as the symbol of a mutual agreement to establish arbitration between the two nations, Argentina and Chile began to grow strong, till today they occupy an important place in international affairs. What armaments could not bring them, the decision to arbitrate did.

Brazil touches every other South American republic except Chile, and there have been boundary disputes with every one of them. It is worth every effort on the part of Pan-America to prevent the recurrence of such disputes. Pan-American peace will bring a prosperity that will actuate against war far more than any navies that the nations of this hemisphere can afford to build.

Pan-Americanism is not a policy of exclusion. Prosperity and growth in these two mighty continents, harboring nearly two hundred million people, will mean prosperity to the nations now at war. The isolation enjoyed by the Americas militates against foreign aggression, but no sea is too wide for modern commerce to bridge. Pan-Americanism is an open-door policy throughout two of the richest continents, peopled by consumers of world products. In spite of the Monroe Doctrine, our exports to Argentina in 1913 were less than half those of the United Kingdom, and our imports from that country were less than one-fifth as great as those of the United Kingdom. The Monroe Doctrine has never been the basis for an attempt to monopolize Latin American markets, nor will it be. Pan-Americanism may bring us a larger measure of trade, but it will do so through greater friendship and better understanding rather than through the destruction of foreign competition.

Elihu Root, discussing the power of international law before the congress, said:

> When this war is ended, the civilized world will have to determine whether what we call international law is to be continued as a mere code of etiquette or is to be a real body of laws, imposing obligations much more definite and inevitable than they have been heretofore. It must be one thing or the other. Vague and uncertain as the future must be, there is some reason to think that after the terrible experience through which civilization is passing there will be a tendency to strengthen, rather than abandon, the law of nations.

David Jayne Hill supplemented this idea:

> The only alternative to defensive armament on a great and possibly ruinous scale is the gradual triumph of law over force. There should be among self-governing nations such unanimity in the acceptance of the principles of international justice, and such union in organizing the necessary means of defense as to present to the whole world a formidable solidarity of peoples' determined to maintain their independence against arbitrary aggression.

The distinction between the Monroe Doctrine and Pan-Americansim has caused much comment. Secretary Lansing is both true to the United States and to the Pan-American republics when he says: "The Monroe Doctrine is the national policy of the United States; Pan-Americanism is an international policy of the Americas. The motives are to an extent different; the ends sought are the same. Both can exist without impairing the force of the other. And both do exist, and I trust will ever exist in all their vigor."

THE practical extension of the Monroe Doctrine which has been proposed by the United States has been presented to the ambassadors and ministers of twenty republics. If accepted, this will be the greatest step toward universal peace and group action ever taken. The various principles are:

The United States and all other nations of this hemisphere mutually agree to guarantee the territorial integrity of the countries of this hemisphere.

All the nations agree to maintain the republican form of government.

All bind themselves to submit to settlement by diplomacy, arbitration, or investigating commissions, as provided for by the treaties already ratified, disputes of all kinds, including boundary troubles, but not controversies affecting the independence of each.

General agreement whereby the exportation of arms to any but legally constituted governments of this hemisphere will be prohibited, and laws of neutrality adopted which will make it impossible for filibustering expeditions to threaten or carry on revolutions in neighboring republics.

No definite steps have been taken toward the holding of a convention for the accepting of these principles, but it is thought that this convention will soon be held.

John Barrett, who is closely in touch with conditions, gives as his opinion of the possibilities of the movement the following:

> So strongly may this movement toward Pan-Americanism develop that by its strength it may represent the most po > future factor in preserving peace among all nations.
> nations of Europe and Asia realize that a war of aggrandiz > undertaken against any American nation would be me > united front of twenty-one republics, such a war will ha > undertaken.

SO much thought was given by the congress t matter of Pan-Americanism that the man cellent papers and lectures were almost overl in the larger issue. Prominent among the fe of the congress were the excellent personal f that existed, and the care with which the gover handled the details. The wives and women f of the delegates formed a Pan-American Wo Congress to promote friendship among the w of the three Americas.

The speech by President Wilson on January enthusiastically received by a large audience overflowed the Memorial Continental Hall
Daughters of the American Revolution. The $1 000 home of the Pan-American Union was too to hold the vast audience. On the evening of Ja 7, the White House was the scene of the first f function there in two years, when 4,000 delegat representatives were received by President and his bride.

Press comments from the cities of South A are most favorable to the ideal of Pan-American and the newspapers of the continent have been g interested in the developments, actual and exp resulting from the holding of this great interna meeting. The next such congress is to be h Peru during the centennial year of that rep declaration of independence in 1821. Who ca see the character of the Congress of 1921?

What the New Year will bring to Europe can say. Nineteen sixteen may prove as gru and hopeless as the year that has passed. T World, inhabited by men who are like us, act
we would act in like circumstances, is slowly co ting suicide—spilling its life blood as a sacrifice gory god of war. Ideals are there being foug individual and national aspirations are there th of bloody battle; but the Old World, seeking r finding death.

Meanwhile, here in these United States a life-movement has been growing. An ideal is striven for which would have seemed Utopian years ago. Twenty-one republics, proud in individuality, vibrant with the power of natio are drawing together for friendship, for a sp partnership, in which the pride of nationalism i in the common weal.

MAYNARD OWEN WILLI

The Beautiful Gloria Garden, Rio de Janeiro

Pleasure Gardens of Montevideo, Uruguay

$18,302,905.71 for Foreign Missions During 1915

GIFTS to foreign missions through the 192 foreign mission organizations of the United States and Canada increased $1,625,379 during 1915, or 9.43 per cent. This fact was announced recently at the annual meeting of the Conference of Foreign Mission Boards in Garden City, Long Island. The Home Base Committee, through Rev. Fred P. Haggard, stated that the total offerings for religious, educational and medical missionary work, outside of the United States and Canada, last year, through the organizations comprising this Conference, amounted to $18,793,990. In addition $594,260 was expended by certain home mission organizations for work in Mexico, Central America, the Philippines, Cuba, Porto Rico, Alaska and Hawaii. While considerable anxiety prevailed at the beginning of the year as to the effect of the war upon offerings, the returns show that the effect has been favorable rather than otherwise. Two of the leading boards, Baptist and Episcopalian, succeeded in wiping out large accumulated debts, while others were equally successful with smaller obligations or materially reduced them. Of the 192 boards reporting to the Conference, 83 show an increase in income for the past year. Two boards, the Northern Presbyterian and the American Board (Congregational), acted as agents in forwarding more than $1,000,000 to Syrians, Armenians and other sufferers on account of the war. Several boards also aided, from their own treasuries, certain missions, chiefly German, whose work has been seriously disturbed.

The contributions for the various denominations for the past year, as reported January, 1916, are given below:

UNITED STATES

Adventist	$ 649,948.46	Methodist	$3,514,791.80
Baptist	2,620,650.36	Moravian	35,935.94
Brethren	10,894.80	Presbyterian	3,976,606.72
Churches of God	12,303.49	Protestant Episcopal	1,152,250.00
Christian	476,429.12	Pentecostal	28,238.94
Congregational	1,461,324.57	Reformed	505,474.85
Evangelical	127,923.67	Reformed Episcopal	4,445.05
Friends	144,088.35	United Brethren	155,329.57
German Evangelical	45,529.34	Universalist	13,672.94
Lutheran Evangelical	669,314.05	Miscellaneous	2,307,058.25
Mennonite	55,178.63
			$17,937,388.90
Less deductions for duplications, etc.			791,854.94
Total for United States			$17,145,533.96

CANADA

Baptist	$158,552.22	Methodist	$3
Church of England	155,682.28	Presbyterian	56
Congregational	11,452.80	Miscellaneous	7
Mennonite	6,147.92
			$1,29
Less deductions for duplications, etc.			17
Total for Canada			$1,11
Add United States			17,14
Grand Total			$18,30

AT the Foreign Missions Conference the n medical missions, both in men and ma was emphasized, and the value of the hospital approach to the hearts of people was shown to least equal to that of the school. Reports show exceptional growth of religious interest in Japa
a noticeable unifying of Christian spirit amo missionaries of different nationalities. The Co Women for Home Missions participated for th time in the sessions of the Home Missions C
The strategic points in home missions are the
for the immigrant, the Indian, the negro, and th community.

Abolishing the Horizon

By LOUIS E. ORCUTT

WHAT does it mean that a few days ago the railways of Kansas petitioned the State Railway Commission for permission to raise passenger rates from 2 cents to 3 mile? For one thing, it means that the auto- has become an essential and very useful part life of every family, and that, instead of con- time-tables and going when the railroad chooses atch a train, the average American is making rt trips, under 150 miles, in his always-ready he automobile has become an article of popu- and so much a part of everyday life that er there is a showing of automobiles, there ople crowd. Neither is it merely curiosity aws them, as it was very largely twenty years Chicago at the very first automobile show, or when the first show was held in New York at n Square Garden. They crowd to the shows they have cars, or intend to have them, or find it possible to have them.

Sixteenth Annual Automobile Show closed in ork on January 8. It filled four floors of the Central Palace with exhibits ks, and the folks were there siness. They wanted to One exhibitor told the that the people who came show knew what they were for and knew when they und it, and couldn't be fooled f anybody wanted to fool He said they were motor- nd that the car that wasn't " might as well stay out of ow. As far as the writer ble to see, they were all ." Every car offered seemed y more than an even money's and the question of which buy was largely a question ich price you could afford. then there were some diffi- hoices. It is claimed that re now produced at a figure that every man with an of $1,200 a year or more can to buy a car. Some who o know put it the other way y he can't afford not to buy It has been estimated that are something more than 000 men in the country with that equal or exceed ; 1,500,000 of them with s about $1,800, and to these the trade expects to sell 000 cars in 1916. In 1899 tal production of cars was in 1910, about 187,000; and 15 the total production was little short of 900,000. The ge price of the cars sold in was $2,123; the average price cars sold in 1915 was very $800, and it will probably go below $800 in 1916.

men with the moderate es are buying cars; they are g to themselves that they t afford to do otherwise. six-cylinder, five-passenger wholly dependable, graceful e and economical in opera- on sale at less than $1,000. smaller cars running as low 5, it behooves every man who good health and the open ry, or who has a growing for whose health and pleas- e is responsible, to think very sly before he decides that he must be without ere are cars for the man whose income is a little than moderate and for the man who only needs cide which car and can be careless about the There are classes of cars priced around $1,000, 0, $1,500, $2,000 and up to $7,000, and each as the price advances presents some added that balances the difference in cost. There are ments in design that are possible at higher s and that add much to the comfort and the urable use of the car, and these refinements are while. The higher-priced cars have more power, r wheelbases (which means easier riding), r finish, deeper upholstery, in some instances a more of what we call "class," but the man who a low or medium-priced car may be sure that he king a good purchase and that his car will give good service. It is a pretty cheap car nowadays h is without a self-starter, and that means that e steadily mounting number of men who drive il be added perhaps an even larger number of en. With the self-starter it is easy for mother to take father down to the train or to business in the morning, do her errands, take a little spin and return to her housework tuned up and alive in every nerve; and easy again for her to go for him at night. It is good for him, too.

IN the days when the horse was king of the road the people of the United States bought 1,000,000 buggies a year. The sale of automobiles is just reaching the mark set by the buggy. Last year 448 manufacturers produced 892,618 vehicles and orders for 300,000 remained unfilled. This year plants are being increased to provide the 1916 market with at least 1,000,000 cars. Sales such as this show that the automobile has long ago gotten out of the class of luxuries. There were registered in 1915 in all the states 2,400,000 motor cars, which is more than one for every mile of public highway in the Union. The per capita relationship for the whole country is one car to forty-eight people, but the agricultural states of the Middle West make a better showing than the Eastern states, the state of Iowa leading with one car to each nineteen people; approximately one family in four owning a car. To the farmer, the merchant, the plumber, the contractor and the salesman, the automobile is both a necessity and a valuable asset, and the great bulk of the lower-priced cars are being sold to these classes of buyers. The automobile makes the distance to town a negligible quantity; it helps to keep the boys on the farm and helps to keep the farm for the boys. Automobile tractors are even sending the patient farm-horse out to pasture and are plowing, harrowing and harvesting, and towing the loads to market. In the fields and on the road the farmer of today is making full use of the automobile, and he is the best customer of the industry, which is now the fourth largest in the United States. Lumber, steel and clothing alone lead the automobile in the industries of America.

The automobile has raised farm values and has made possible a great widening of the suburban communities about the cities. A few years ago Connecticut had a serious problem to solve in her abandoned farms. Today there isn't an abandoned farm in the state; they have been sold largely to commuters who motor from the railway station to their country homes, the remodeled and no longer abandoned farmhouses.

The early automobiles were compromises between the buggy and something else. Today the automobile is the something else, and the old lines of the buggy have disappeared. The cars offered in the recent show in New York were uniformly graceful, the lines of the bodies were pleasing, and while, a year ago, designs were more or less standardized, this year there was variety. The enclosed bodies showed a very great advance over any previous year, especially in the convertible types, the all-weather cars. It used to take a considerable degree of fortitude and more wrappings than were entirely comfortable to use an automobile in the coldest weather; but now even the driver may be snug and warm in a closed car that is heated either from the exhaust or from the batteries, and that is as comfortable in any weather as your home itself.

Rising fuel costs, and the fact that unnecessary weight means wasted power, as well as the fact that unneeded weight adds to cost and tends to cumbersome lines and to tire troubles, have hastened the already noticeable trend toward lightness; and the cars of 1916 in every range of price underweigh the cars of earlier design. In spite of the radical lessening in weight of the last few years, automobile engineers have succeeded in producing cars that will stand up against more hard work and do it better and cheaper than their heavier predecessors. Vanadium and nickel steel, aluminum, drop forgings, oxy-acetylene welding, improved tests for materials, parts and finished cars, and improved designs, have all entered into the result, which is the light car of today, light in weight, light "on its feet," quick in the "get away," and responsive to every emergency of the road.

IT is impossible for any man, whether he is country born or city bred, to go through a motor show without hearing the call of the road. There is joy in movement, there is exhilaration, just in having the throbbing energy of the car at your command. The man who needs a car in his business and who buys from a purely utilitarian standpoint cannot keep the wider use of his purchase out of mind. On holidays and Saturday afternoons, and such other times as may appear, this utilitarian buyer and his family will be found motoring for pleasure only. There is a higher utility, however, in the car that is purchased just for the family. It cannot, today, be held in any sense an extravagance. At prices that now prevail a car can be purchased without mortgaging the home or sacrificing the father's life insurance. The saving for a couple of years of the money that need not be spent, the cost of a couple of the ordinary sort of mountain or seaside vacations—these are enough in many a family to purchase a car which will make every week-end a vacation, and which will bring to every member of the family that birthright which so many cherish but which so few ever realize in full: the birthright of the out-of-doors—the out-of-doors where lakes dimple in the light of the summer sun; where gentle breezes cool grassy banks and great trees furnish welcome shade; where rivers run smoothly over untried depths or ripple over shallows or rage in rapids over rocks and ledges; where roads run through ferny glens and along quiet country-sides, or climb rugged hills and bring you unexpectedly face to face with the whole panorama of hill and lake and river and farm and village.

We can walk into the out-of-doors, but the distance is limited which a man can walk. The horse widened the horizon, but even the horse, faithful friend though he has been, was limited in speed and in endurance. The railroad and the iron horse widened the horizon still more and brought the continents within the view of men; yet nature seen through the car-window still held aloof and guarded her intimate secrets well. It remained for the automobile to lay wide open the heart of the out-of-doors. The automobile has abolished the horizon.

A Week in the World's News

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Indépendance Belge

ITALY has ordered a census of all the grain in the kingdom, to be taken not later than January 25, with the object of controlling the sale price thereof and to prevent speculation therein. She has also called four additional classes of artillerymen to the colors, from which it may be inferred that the reports of her severe losses in men, which have been reaching us, have some foundation in fact.

Italy is also having great difficulty in placing her latest internal loan, and this, coupled with a rather startling decline in Italian exchange during the past week, while exchange on Great Britain and Germany has ameliorated, seems to indicate that Italy is in a difficult position economically.

The Austro-Italian campaign during the past week has presented no features of either interest or importance. The depth of the snow on the Alpine fronts has prevented military activities, and on the Isonzo front there have been only artillery duels without particular results. Italy is still not at war with Germany, and it is said that no German troops are operating on the Italian front. This condition of affairs constitutes one of the continuing mysteries of the war.

Political conditions in Great Britain decidedly ameliorated during the past week. Between the first and second readings of the compulsory military service bill in Parliament, the opposition to the bill almost completely collapsed. The Labor party broke into fragments, and the Irish party withdrew its opposition to the bill, which finally passed its second reading by a majority so large as to render the opposition almost ridiculous. One result of the division of the Labor party was that Mr. Arthur Henderson, who had offered his resignation from the cabinet, withdrew the same pending the further developments of the situation.

Some of the labor organizations, however, continue their opposition, among which may be particularly cited that of the railroad men, called in Great Britain the railway servants, who, at a meeting after the second reading of the bill, practically dared the government to put the measure in active operation, threatening in such event a general strike with a resultant absolute tie-up in railway transportation. It is probable, however, that the government will be unmoved by these threats, and feels itself sufficiently strong to deal drastically with the situation, probably by a proclamation of martial law with all the consequences which result therefrom, should the threat be put into effect.

On the northern Russian front little has taken place during the past week. This condition, except for the first two days, has also prevailed on the southern front, where such hard fighting took place the last two weeks. On these first two days the Russians made herculean efforts to pierce the Austrian lines northeast of Czernowitz, Bukowina, and on the east bank of the Stirpa river, which runs north and south in eastern Galicia, parallel to the Sereth river. The Austrian resistance was, however, too tenacious for the Russians to overcome, and finally they gave up the effort, and both sides have been resting on their arms; though probably after a short rest heavy fighting will be renewed in this region.

The positions of the two adversaries have not been modified to any appreciable degree, the Austrians holding in this sector to all intents and purposes the same positions which they held six months ago. In spite of this negative result the losses on both sides have been very heavy, perhaps as high as 60,000 for the Russians and somewhere around 35,000 for the Austrians. The weather on this front has been Arctic at all points, being below zero, while at some the thermometer has fallen as low as twenty below; besides which the snow is very deep. Campaigning under such conditions is necessarily very difficult.

The Mesopotamia campaign is now the most important, and has reached a critical stage; and not only is that important in itself, but its collateral effects are even more so.

A British defeat here, coming on the heels of Gallipoli, would completely destroy Great Britain's remaining prestige in the Mohammedan world, and would weaken her greatly in the Farther East, and these results would have a decided effect on the future course of events in India, Afghanistan, Russian Turkestan, and particularly Egypt. Moreover, if complete enough to force the retreat of the British to the shores of the Persian Gulf or so to cripple them as to render impossible their prosecuting this enterprise further, such a defeat would expose the Russians operating about 250 miles northeast of the Mesopotamia scene of action, in Persia, to attack in a short time by superior forces, which would be very apt to spell disaster to them.

© Underwood & Underwood

Kut-el-Amara, Where British Troops Are Surrounded by Turks

The present position of affairs in the Mesopotamia field is about as follows: At Kut-el-Amara, on the Tigris, about ninety miles south of Bagdad, is a British force of some 10,000, under General Townsend, surrounded by Turks. About thirty miles from Kut-el-Amara, to the southeast, also on the Tigris, is El Owasa. This place has just been reached by the head of the British army which is advancing under General Aylmer to the relief of the force in Kut-el-Amara from Iman Ah Gharbi. This relieving army stretches as far to the southeast as Amara.

There is also a British force on the southern side of the Tigris moving in unison with the force above mentioned as having reached El Owasa. The whole army of relief is probably over 100,000 strong and is aided by river gunboats, etc., operating on the Tigris.

Between Kut-el-Amara and El Owasa, directly across the path of the British army of relief, is entrenched a large Turkish force, reported to be about 80,000 strong. In addition to this force in front of them the British are being attacked from both sides by regular and irregular Turkish troops and Arabs, the numbers of which latter are increasing hourly.

The British probably have another hundred thousand men near the Persian Gulf, while the Turks are rushing troops into this field of action as rapidly as possible from the west. The Turks are bombarding heavily, we are told, Kut-el-Amara, and Gen. Townsend has sent a wireless to Sir Percy Lake, commanding the combined army of relief, advising him that help was needed at once. In addition to the Turkish forces opposed to them, the floods caused by the Tigris are giving the army of relief great difficulty.

The British have one advantage over the Turks, in that their army of relief has much more artillery than their opponents, but whether or not this advantage will turn the scales in their favor remains to be seen. Up to the present both sides have suffered very severe casualties, the British reporting great difficulty in caring for their wounded, owing to the hospital boats being filled to overflowing. The Indian army corps recently removed from France is reported as participating in this campaign, as are a considerable number of the troops which left Gallipoli peninsula on the first evacuation.

The figures on the Irish recruiting to date have been published by the British government and are rather interesting. The military population of Ulster is 169,489, and up to December 15, 49,740 of these had enlisted. In Leinster the figures were 174,597 and 27,458 respectively; in Munster, 136,637 and 14,190, and in Connaught, 81,392 and 3,589. So that Ulster with 169,000 military population had up to date contributed more men than the other three counties with 391,000.

On the Salonica front the week has been quiet, though from time to time there have been alarmist rumors. The French have occupied the Greek island of Corfu, and it is intended to remove thither the remnants of the Serbian army now in the coast towns of Albania and in Montenegro, for reorganization. Greece has protested against this fresh violation of her neutrality.

The rumor that the consuls of the Teutonic Allies arrested at Salonica had been released appears to have been without foundation, as it is now announced that they have been transferred to a French auxiliary cruiser, on which they have been interned.

The Austrian invasion of Montenegro made rapid progress during the week. The great stronghold of Montenegro, Mount Loveen, was captured, and in a day or two later the capital of that kingdom, Cettinje, passed into A hands. In the eastern front the ans also made progress and cross river Trava. Montenegro will bly be completely overrun in the of the coming week.

The Bulgarians to the south bania have almost reached the A coast a little south of Durazzo, n
the alarm of the Italians at Duraz at Avlona and San Giovanni di M whose position caught betwee
Austrians in the north and thi garian force is rather critical.
also true of such portion of the army as still remains at Scutari, it reached with such great di
after suffering so many hardship

In the west, there was some vigorous fighting in Champagn the Butte de Tahure and M which cost many lives, but whi not result in any very definite g either side. Outside of these poin the usual artillery duels and han ade fighting occurred. There are of an impending Ally offensive front, but of this there are no signs.

◆

A NEW MEXICAN CRISIS. Th
tion of possible American interventio affairs of Mexico was again brought to a head on January 11 when s Americans bound from Chihuahua the mining districts of northern M reopen the mines were taken from a and North Western train, fifty miles
the city, robbed, and murdered in col
The men carried safe conducts from t ranza authorities, and were murd bandits under the direction of two "c of the former Villa forces. Secretary at once sent a telegram through Con eral Silliman to General Carranza de that steps be taken for the immedi suit, capture and punishment of the and for the protection of other Americ foreigners within the confines of Secretary Lansing also denied that th which was under the leadership of
B. Watson, had returned to Mexico assent of the United States governme warning to Americans to remain out ico still stands. (January 16, British were ordered out of the State of Chihu
Sir Cecil Spring Rice, British Ambas Washington.) The report of this atrocity brought the subject of inte to a head in the Senate, and resulted severe criticism and ardent defense Administration's policy of watchful and a considerable demand for im intervention. Senator Sherman of presented a resolution providing f
American policing of Mexico.
resolution, which had been passed by mous vote, prior to the massacre, as President to submit to the Senate all in regard to Mexico and asked him or not there was a government in and, if there were, where it was situat was the extent of its authority, what gu had been given in the United States it had been recognized. This resolut particularly upon the question of firmation of the appointment of Mr.
as Ambassador to the new Carranza ment. Senator Stone, chairman of the Relations Committee of the Senate, the President's policy in Mexico and with the Senate not to force the hand President when it was hoped that hi of watchful waiting was about to
All of the resolutions urging inte were reported to committees and them reached a vote, but a poll of th showed that a vote on the question vention would stand a very good ch passing by a small majority unless action by Carranza resulted satisf before the vote was taken. Reports murders fanned the flame of indi
Two days following the murder of th teen Americans, a small body of troops and Americans captured two Villa chiefs, who were at first thoug the ones guilty of the outrage. Bo executed. Immediately upon receipt of the murder, Carranza dispatched of several hundred cavalry westwa
Chihuahua City and he was reporte preparing to send 5000 cavalry into trict infested with the remnants of t forces. Feeling along the border is ingly bitter and a small anti-Mexi occurred in El Paso, about the time th of the slain Americans were brou Carranza replied immediately to the A telegram, promising condign punish every guilty participant in the outr promising also to establish strong along the railway lines. At the sam other Americans in the danger zo urged to return to the United Stat ar nza was asked to provide convoys to isu safe conduct. Offers of armed Amer- an to assist in maintaining order were re- se by Carranza. President Wilson is firm t l adherence to the policy of watchful ai g. and all of the power of the Adminis- at n is being exerted to give Carranza ve chance and to prevent the use of United tat troops in Mexico. The State Depart- en had a large foree of men at work Fri- ay aturday and Sunday preparing a com- let statement of the facts of the whole le n situation. It was expected that this would be delivered to the Senate on lo ay, January 17.

B FIRE AND FLOOD. On January fire starting in an ironmonger's shop ve the city of Bergen, Norway, causing o ty damage estimated at $40,000,000. w ives were lost and 2000 people were ad homeless. Bergen is the great seaport rway. High tid s in the North Sea roken through a dyke in North Holland, u g some loss of life and driving several ou nd people to higher ground. The o has threatened Rotterdam, but it is ou t that the canals will be sufficient to a off the water and save this important r om actual damage.

T E ORIENT EXPRESS. The first ro h train from Berlin to Constantinople ft rlin on January 16. The route is via ie , Belgrade, Sofia to Constantinople d e trip is scheduled to take 56 hours.

C INESE REVOLUTION SPREADS. he ew Chinese monarchy is already meet- g ifficulties. Japan has refused formal co ition, the refusal taking the form of a qu t for the postponement of a state visit t Chinese Minister of Agriculture and m erce. In the province of Sze Chuen. es ent-Emperor Yuan Shi Kai's forces e orted to have been defeated by a force 6 00 rebels fighting under the banner of e w Chinese Republic Association.

A ERICAN SUBMARINE DESTROY- D The submarine E-2, undergoing re- ir n the Brooklyn Navy Yard dry dock, s utted by an internal explosion in the te oon of January 15. Four men were le and ten seriously injured. The sub- r had recently been fitted with a new tt y designed especially for submarines r. Edison. Former batteries gave off lo e gas, which became dangerous if b rines had to remain submerged for a g eriod. The new Edison battery elim- at the chlorine but gave off double the a ty of hydrogen gas produced by the e batteries. Experiments were being d with the E-2 to determine the best a of handling this hydrogen. The cause t explosion had not been determined at e ne of this writing, the accusation being d out equally against the hydrogen gas n the batteries and the compressed air k of the submarine and the tank of e ne which supplied the torch that was in used by workmen in making repairs. e terior of the submarine was so com- t wrecked, and the men who were in a si n to know the facts were all so seriously ju d, that the Board of Inquiry which g sitting at once was not ready on Mon- y orning to make any suggestion as to its i n regarding the cause. This is the sec- d bmarine fatality within a year in the i States navy, the other being the F-4 i sank in the harbor of Honolulu.

N QUEEN TO STOP THIS CON- LT. Russian troops operating in Persia v occupied Hamadan, ancient Ecbatana, i was plundered by Alexander the Great d hich tradition names as the Shushan e Ahasuerus reigned and Queen Esther p d the slaughter of her race. Two tombs madan protected by a wooden domed il ng in the center of the town, are still i d out by pious Jews as the tombs of ecai and Esther. They bear Hebrew e tions, but the inscriptions do not date urther than 557 A. D. A large mound he city is reported to be the site of the la before whose gates Mordecai sat and whose walls Haman completed his estruction.

TRENTON GOES TO CHURCH. As a part of the Billy Sunday revival, January 16 was Go-to-Church Sunday in Trenton, and the attendance on divine worship is said to have been phenomenal. 50,000 persons heard Billy Sunday and nearly 800 hit the trail.

BABIES MAY DIE. The British and French governments have denied the request of the American Red Cross for permission to ship condensed milk to Germany for the benefit of some 3,000,000 babies. The reason for the denial was that the transportation of the milk could not be permitted for military reasons. But just what military reasons could possibly exist even Hudson Maxim, greatest American authority on munitions, declares himself unable to imagine.

TRAIN MEXICAN YOUTHS. Letters received in Brooklyn from the Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Mexico report that the Carranza government has asked the Y. M. C. A. to establish branches and gymnasiums in the capital of every state in Mexico.

The Mexican Mining Property to Which the Slain Americans Were Going

THE PEARL OF THE PACIFIC. The recent annual report of Governor Pinkham of Hawaii gives the Japanese a decided predominance in the mixed population of the Hawaiian group, that race aggregating 93,136; native Hawaiians 24,120; Portuguese 23,650; Chinese 21,770; Americans, English, Germans and Russians combined 16,000; natives of other Pacific islands 15,220; mixed Hawaiians 14,800; Porto Ricans 5,080; Spanish 4,210, and all others combined 14,870. These figures are based on the estimates of June 30 which gave a total population of 232,856, showing an increase of above 40,000 since 1910. It is in the increase that the Japanese predominance is more clearly seen, as that country contributed about 13,500 to the increase as against 12,420 Filipinos. The Japanese are migrating to the Island at an increasing rate, and have also practically doubled their birthrate. They also hold the lead in business. The report shows that sugar and pineapples are still the staples of the islands. Physical conditions do not appear to favor a very wide extension of agricultural crops. Rice, tobacco, coffee, bananas and others have been tried out without much encouragement in results. But on the whole, the two main crops and the general advancement of civilization in the Islands have produced what the report refers to as "a prosperous condition of things in the Hawaiian Islands."

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP IN THE PHILIPPINES. The Philippine Legislature is expected to ratify an agreement executed by Governor Harrison under which the Island Government is to purchase the Manila railroad for 8,000,000 pesos of which a little more than half is to be paid at once. The railroad has been under construction by an English company, which finds itself unable to finance the operation, and the government is forced to take the road over to protect a loan of 6,000,000 pesos. The growing efficiency of the Philippine government has encouraged some to hope for an early withdrawal of American authority. A resolution has been introduced in the Senate of the United States to withdraw American sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and recognize an independent government there within two years. The resolution was referred to the Philippine Committee. Its passage would not be looked upon by Japan as an unfriendly act.

$25,000,000 FOR FEDERAL ROADS. Under the authority of the constitution, which gives Congress power to construct post roads, a proposition is now pending in the House of Representatives in Washington for the direct appropriation from the Treasury of $25,000,000 to be apportioned among the states for the construction and maintenance of rural post roads. This measure, known as the Shackelford bill, for which the good roads enthusiasts have been working for a number of years, will make possible the completion of improved roads, in a great many sections, in sparsely populated districts, which are needed to tie up existing systems of improved highways. The communities themselves will be unable to make the improvement in a number of years. Considerable opposition has developed in Congress, partly because of the present deficiency in revenue, and partly because the prosperous eastern states, which provide the bulk of the federal revenue, will receive but little of the direct benefit to be derived from this measure.

THE IRONY OF FATE. General Victoriano Huerta, who has been a prisoner of the United States government at El Paso, Texas, pending trial on the charge of conspiracy against the neutrality laws of this country, was recently removed from prison because of what was believed to be a fatal illness. He bade his wife and other relatives good-by after receiving the last rites of the Catholic Church and died on January 13. General Huerta will always be remembered as the ruler who refused to salute the American flag, repudiating the hostile conduct of his troops toward Americans. His unsuccessful efforts to succeed Diaz as the iron man of Mexico, his flight abroad and subsequent attempt to return to his country by way of the United States, are all matters of comparatively recent history. His death occurred on American territory at a frontier city in which lay the bodies of a number of Americans but recently murdered by Mexican bandit soldiers, whose action may lead to intervention by the United States in the affairs of Mexico. This is indeed a remarkable termination of a remarkable life.

HEATHEN HOLLOW. This is the name applied locally to a certain section of a certain county, which was found in a survey made recently under the direction of two universities. (We will not name the locality but we shall be glad to learn if you recognize it.) When the survey was started the people said, "Our county doesn't need any more churches, there isn't a corner of the county that we don't know all about." Few of them however knew of Heathen Hollow, a district three miles from any railroad where the people worked on Sundays and got their conjugal relations badly mixed. At a funeral service the minister reading the service was surprised to hear one of these people ask another, "Who is this Jesus Christ, anyhow?" It was found, too, that in this prosperous county there were more than thirty homes in which there was no Bible or Testament.

ARE YOU AWAITING MAIL FROM US? In the midst of the usual expansion of our mail at this time of the year due to new and renewal subscriptions coming in (unusually heavy this year, we are very glad to say), the epidemic of grippe depleted the clerical staff of the Herald and enough substitute workers competent to handle mail of this character were not obtainable at a moment's notice. In consequence, workers from other departments have given some of their time to assisting in the Subscription Department, and as a result a proportion of our daily mail has not been answered with the customary promptness. We value the correspondence of our readers and never knowingly neglect any communication which deserves a reply. All such letters will be reached with as little further delay as possible, and in the meanwhile, we ask you to accept this explanation.—Business Manager.

A STRIKE, ARMED GUARDS, AND WHISKY. On January 7 one man was killed, nineteen persons were wounded and fifteen buildings were burned as the result of a riot which began when armed guards at the plant of the Youngstown Sheet and Tool Company at East Youngstown, Ohio, fired at a crowd of strikers and sympathizers. Laborers at the plant had demanded twenty-five cents an hour, as against an offer of twenty-two cents, the rate before the strike having been nineteen and one-half cents. A report that strike-breakers were to be brought in brought a crowd of strikers and sympathizers about the plant. It is not definitely determined whether the strikers or the guards opened the conflict. The evidence seems to indicate that the guards were the aggressors. The crowd already in an ugly temper, soon became a mob. Its first work was the looting of a couple of saloons. Barrels of whisky were set up in the street, and men and women helped themselves to the liquor with tin cups. With their passions inflamed by drink, the mob started to fire the town. The small police

Continued on page 119

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE $1.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

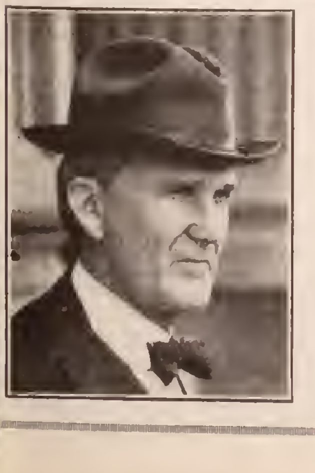
EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper Indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa



LEFT TO RIGHT

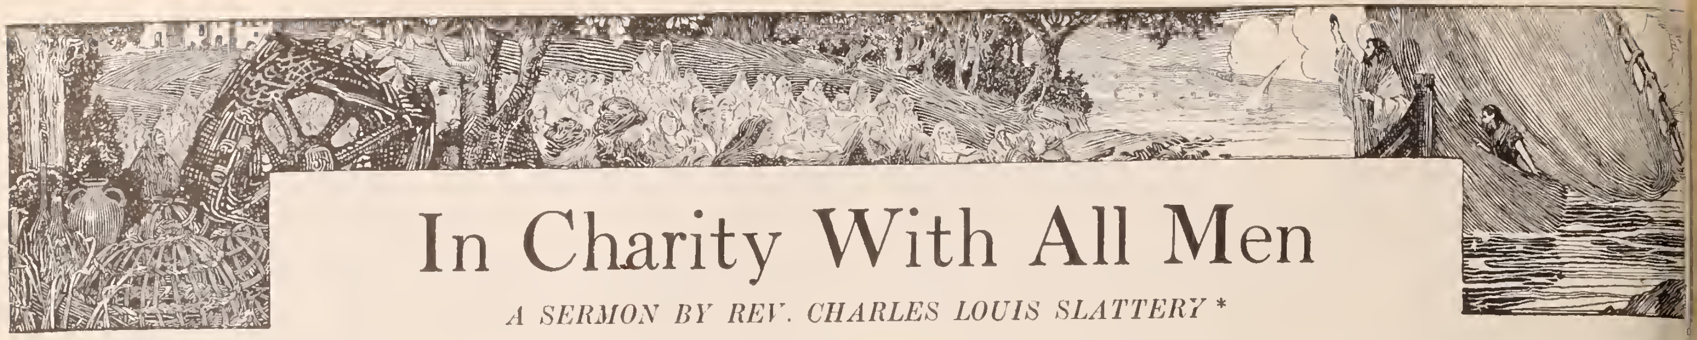
Senator
Lawrence G. Sherman
For Intervention

Peter Keene
Ranch Manager: Killed

G. W. Newman
Mines: Killed

Senator J. W. Stone
Opposes Force

© International Film Service, Inc



In Charity With All Men

*A SERMON BY REV. CHARLES LOUIS SLATTERY **

TEXT:—Eph. 4:2. "With all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love."

ONE of the sentences in the exhortation at the Holy Communion requires of us that we be in love and charity with our neighbors. Often men and women who hear these words search their hearts, and then decide that because they have certain hard feelings against this person or that, they have no right to receive the Sacrament.

I wish to assure you first of all that the Holy Communion is not so much for saints as for sinners. It is not for those who are unconscious of any lack; it is, rather, for those who feel great need of help. If when you think of those who have ill-used you or yours you give to them what I may call a willing hate—that is, a hate which you solemnly intend to keep—then I fear you ought not to come. But if you honestly strive against your hard feelings, if you honestly pray one sincere prayer to God that the stinging thoughts may melt into kindness, then by all means you have not only the right but the most urgent command to go forward to beg of Christ all the help which his love can give. It is your real desire which counts.

This, you will notice, does not in any sense explain the words away. You do not come intending to feel as you feel now. You are eagerly reaching up out of your old self toward that new and altogether loving person whom you aspire to be. So the main question which I shall try to answer is, How may you overcome hard feelings?

That we may keep strictly to what is possible, I am going to ask you to think of the experience and words of a very sensitive human soul whose honesty was as transparent as his sensitiveness: St. Paul.

Before I repeat Paul's rules, let a word be said about Paul himself. There is an impression among those who make no attempt to soften their hard feelings that the person who remains in charity with all men does so at the cost of keenness, and sometimes at the cost of justice. Now think of Paul. Think of him as he faced Peter, his fellow apostle, his friend. It was in a sharp controversy about the rights of Gentile Christians. Paul had been commissioned by Peter and others to found a Gentile church at Antioch. Peter at length visited the church; but, because he was afraid of Jewish prejudice, he refused to eat with the Gentile Christians. What did Paul do? Did he say that in order to be in charity with all men he must overlook this affront to his Gentile parishioners? Did he go up to his fellow apostle and say that he did not care what Peter did, so long as there was peace between them? No; Paul was evidently quite angry, for the record still survives: "I resisted him," he said, "to the face." There were no smiles, we may be sure, at that significant meeting; but a consuming wrath, which brought Peter to a sense of his lack of Christian breadth and firmness.

Let us be clear at the start about this discrimination. Being "in charity with all men" does not mean any diminution of justice. But you will notice that Paul's indignation was aroused not by a personal injury to himself, but by the abuse of a great Christian principle affecting many people, and indeed the whole history of the church. The people who have heart-burning for massive public wrongs are not, ordinarily, the people who carry about the remembrance of small personal injuries. Our Saviour, for example, was vividly scornful of the people who made elaborate rules and then by a cunning casuistry evaded the primal laws of God; but he bore no hard memories of those who struck him in the face and nailed him to the cross: "Father, forgive them," he said; "for they know not what they do." He who was ablaze with indignation at the wrongs which hypocrites heaped upon simple peasants was alert to forgive all affronts personal to himself, however cruel and malicious. What I wish you to notice is this: Paul and Paul's Master have demonstrated for all time that to be in charity with all men does not mean any tame permission to let evil take its course in the surrounding world.

NOW we are ready, I think, to weigh Paul's rules for the overcoming of hard feelings. Paul's first word is "lowliness." To be lowly has a smug sound from which a wholesome man is apt to retreat. But when we give it a modern translation, and say that to be lowly is to have a modest estimate of oneself, we find lowliness a very practical word.

If you are inclined to cherish hard feelings, Paul would say then, be sure to maintain a modest estimate of yourself. As I think over the hard feelings of which I happen to have some knowledge, an astonishing number may be attributed to an exaggerated valuation of one's importance. Many injuries which cut deep wounds are inflicted unconsciously. Some people are absent-minded, some are awkward, some are stupid. They say and do what sends icy shivers over one's whole frame and never know it. How absurd, then, to treasure the memory of such unintentional wrongs!

Again, even when injuries are evidently aimed at you—when the arrow is carefully dipped in poison and shot at what is deemed your most vulnerable part—even then a modest estimate of yourself is an immeasurable help toward forgetting it. One might wisely recall how Mozart, with the genius of the ages aglow within him, was invited to visit the great duchess who, when he came, kept him waiting in a cold room till his fingers were frozen, and then, bidding him play, she and her guests loudly talked. "It is an odd world," some one has said, "which lets Homer go begging, claps Bunyan in jail, and pays its jockeys ten thousand a year!" When the immortals have been treated with indignity and have gone forward undaunted, without bitterness, is it not altogether absurd that we, in our small corners, should grow crusty and sour because somebody does not give to us what we think our meed of respect, or drops an uncomfortable word about us? Are we then so enormously important?

I am sure it will take us a long way out of our hard feelings if we rigidly school ourselves to be modest, quite modest, in estimating our own importance.

Paul's second word is "meekness." That word, too, has a remote, uncanny sound. Bishop Gore has admirably translated it "mildness in mutual relations." There is no doubt that a great deal of the injury which comes to people is invited by sharpness of tongue. One sharp word invites another, and there is no knowing how bitter the last word may be. If a man is sensitive, if he is likely to brood over the harsh things people say to him or about him, it is wise for him to hold his cleverness in check. Conversation may lose its color and dash for a season, but now we are not bent upon being brilliant, we are merely honestly in search of that which will overcome our hard feelings. This meekness, or mildness in mutual relations, will vastly help.

Paul's third word is "longsuffering." This, I think, can be compared with our Saviour's command, "Judge not." Quick judgments are the source of interminable trouble. Circumstantial evidence has hanged perfectly innocent people. The quick judgments which, with a good deal of apparent justice, are pronounced upon sometime friends are often as unjust, and almost as cruel. Our Saviour said, "With what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged." How often do we see the relentless return of quick judgments! The man who has a habit of summarily condemning others is sure to be judged by his neighbors in the same way. And then what a howl of dismay goes up from the lips of that once unjust judge! He has, with insufficient investigation, played fast and loose with people's reputations, and now the nemesis has come to him, and people are twisting his name into all sorts of unpleasant tales; old sores are opened; the pain is intense, and bitter thoughts rankle in his soul. He is out of charity with all men; men point to him pitiful example of a bitter, disappointed soul.

I have known people otherwise estimable, s times almost great, who have no faculty for sayin actly what they know to be true. They mingle facts what they infer from facts; they even roma little, and then with one or two tellings they deliver f inferences and romance all in one piece, as somet which they aver to be true. He who is prone to feelings needs most of all to hold back judgmen he knows every scrap of evidence as he know fingers on his two hands. He must not only hold the words, he must hold back the judging thou Let no bitterness enter on some free and easy hea or by some facile inference of your own. Be suffering.

PAUL'S fourth and last word for overcoming feelings is forbearance—"Forbearing one an in love." We have come to the last hard stage.
injury is certain. The malicious word has been the hostile act has been done. It is neither conje nor inference; it is indubitable fact. Is ther ground for bitterness? Shall one not say that asks too much: we must be out of charity with two men after all. Paul's reply is that when the is proved we must forbear one another in love.
sentence comes in Paul's wonderful exhortati unity. That unity is in Christ: as we are all me of Christ, so are we members of one another. T fore when any one does us injury or insult, it i duty to look on him not as an alien, but as a still. For the argument must ever run: he is Ch and I am Christ's; therefore he is mine and I a Then the bitterness tends—you notice I say tend be swallowed up by a larger feeling, a feeling of co ownership by One who is the common Master

In passing, we may notice the practical out
If you treat a man as an enemy, he will become enemy. So the tiny spring of bitterness will flow the hill till it becomes a wide river of bitterness.
it is your own fault. You have persisted in mak quasi enemy into a real enemy, and your insis upon treating him as such makes him every more pronounced enemy. That is an ugly th so let us turn to the other side of the truth. T man who has done you an injury, said the sharp of you behind your back, done the crooked deed involved you in pain—treat that man as if he still your friend, and he will gradually becom friend. You may say that you are proud and want his friendship. That does not matter. Y not independently in business in God's world.
your Master; and through his Son he has m plain that you are to treat all men who touch life, and in so far as they do touch your life, as f
An enemy who is treated as a friend will gradua transformed, and as the transformation advanc old bitterness will grow dim, till at length it quite away. You may say that it is an outwa Yes, so it will doubtless be at first. You will bo will speak, you will smile, when it costs you m do so. But you will be no hypocrite. You will l ing to follow Jesus Christ in the hardest path h and at last you will come to the place where y say that you are indeed "in charity with all men

The trait which I most dread in any friend of bitterness. Bitterness ruins life with amazing ness. He who is out in the thick of the world have many buffets and many scars. Bitterne tend to come into his soul. My dear parishioner would be a unique congregation if there were n terness at the threshold of many lives here tod beg you not to tolerate it. If it knocks at the your heart, shut it out. Do not, for your ow for the world's sake, for Christ's sake, allow bit to get a permanent lodging in your heart. Nev up the fight against it. It is one of the compen of long life that as a good life goes forward it tenderer, more considerate, freer of bitterne famous man used to speak bitterly of wasted, cient lives; but when his own son was foun
after a drunken brawl the sorrow of his exp made that father tender toward all who had The bitterness all melted away. So as we go life, the very greatest things—life, love, immort loom high above our disappointments and tr
We more easily forget and forgive. We face the with a calm eye; God's love kindles its holy fire hearts; we are "in charity with all men." S we draw near to him, not in complacent satisf in our own goodness, but "with all lowline meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one a in love."

"I will sup with him and he with me."—The Christ in the Revelation.

WHAT have we that we may share with him? Pain that throbs and burns, but somehow does not kill!

Sorrow that darkens the sunshine, new every morning, fresh every evening, wringing the heart that may not break.

Sin that numbs the will and shames the face, that shrivels both soul and body in its fire: and yet will not let us cease!

These we had that he had not until he came in to sup with us.

What hath he to share with us?

Love tender and strong, that "knoweth our frame" and loves us still!

Will-power disciplined, strong, free, loyal!

Life of body and mind and soul, rich abounding vitality!

These beginning on earth but reaching onward through all the ages of Eternity!

---

*Rector, Grace Episcopal Church, New York City.

Daily Meditation

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY

J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

The Knights of the Red Cross

SUNDAY, January 30. Phil. 4:3. "Other my fellow-laborers whose names are in the book of life." These are noble knights who have left no written biography. Even their names are ot blazoned in any visible scroll. They just went wa on a chivalrous errand, and shed their blood in a oy service, and nobly lived, and bravely died. They elong to the brilliant élite of the rank and file, whose eroism has no earthly herald, but whose courage and acrifice win great fame in the courts of heaven, and roughout the city of our God. All they seek is a lace of service, and they are unconcerned about its eir a place of honor; they aspire after travail rather han applause; the gravest task presents the most oved office; and the emblem of their life is not a rumpeter, but a quiet cross. Indeed, in the very best nd deepest sense of the word, they belong to the istinguished company of the Red Cross Society.

The world has always been deeply in debt to these nights of the Red Cross. Their blood is the seed of he Church. Nay, it is through their hallowed sacrice that the race renews its youth. We may not ac the ministers of our restoration, any more than he man who was healed wist that his Healer was est. But the blood of their sacrifice gets into our eins like hallowed fire, and in our own limbs there is or the possibility of heroic deeds. Sacrificial blood never like spilt milk, a futile waste and beyond ecovery. Sacrificial blood is never shed like the termittent rains which fall on desert sands. The ood is the life, and when it is given away in lavish urrender to a noble cause, it is directed by the holy or himself into the anemic veins of the race. In is profound sense, death has immediate resurrection. Life which culminates in sacrifice has reached its ointed goal. We are given our life in order that e may learn how to lay it down. School is over when he lesson is perfected. A young fellow who lays own his life for others at the age of twenty-one as died in maturity and is ready for promotion. elfish people are infants, even though they are urscore years and ten; martyrs are full-grown, e though they are only in their teens. School is ve "Come up higher!" J. H. J.

The Secret of a Holy Life

MONDAY, January 31. Isa. 57:1-21. "I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is contrite and humble heart." It is related of a intly woman that she passed through a period of eat distress, because she could not realize the ence of the Lord. She sought him in prayer, in ecation, in the sacraments of the Church, but in ain. Then she seemed to hear the Master's voice eking from the depths of her heart, and saying, Why do you seek me everywhere, except within: am here!" God is so great that the heaven of eaven cannot contain him, but he will stoop to fill e contrite and humble spirit to refresh and revive it. The busy world passes by you unheeding; but od will come and dwell in your heart, and his work e will be as gentle and quiet as the dew which ves the parched and drooping herbage.

The main business for us is not to seek to explain ll this great fact, but to accept and affirm it. ou are sorry and broken for your sins; if your art is not haughty, nor your eyes lofty; if you still d quiet your soul like a weaned child with its mother, ou may dare to say: "The high and holy One has me to me, and dwells within me." But remember at as the presence of God makes heaven the high d holy place, so it will make your lowly and conite heart high and holy also. This is the secret of a oly life, the affirmation of the indwelling Christ!

F. B. M.

God's Knowledge of Us

ESDAY, February 1. Job 23:10. "But he knoweth the way that I take; when he hath tried me, shall come forth as gold." The consciousness that od knows and cares—that is worth more than houses d lands as a surety for happiness. Sorrow and isfortune are to men either caves or tunnels. A nel is dark, but one feels that he is moving toward e light at the farther end: it is simply a patch of g in a blazing day. A cave's darkness is fixed, a—with deeper, more hopeless blackness as one moves on into its labyrinthine depths; it fills one with no certainty of light beyond; we grope our way, leaving the day behind us. God's men are often called upon to march through tunnel shadows, but they move with expectant faces turned toward the sunshine that they believe must soon envelop them. They feel that there is a purpose even in the darkness; it is an inevitable passageway through the mountain, or beneath the river. They learn, as did Job, to look upon these shadow places as having a meaning all their own. A friend of mine who travels much on trains tells me that he spends his time in tunnels in prayer—not a bad suggestion for the way to fill the troubled nights of our lives. To be conscious of God that is the secret of bearing pain and loss with a shining face.

"It matters not how straight the gate,
How charged with punishment the scroll,"

as long as we can keep firm hold on the thought that, in the words of the psalmist, "Thou art near, O God."

"Speak to him, thou, for he hears,
And spirit with spirit shall meet;
Nearer is he than breathing,
Closer than hands and feet." C. S. C.

The "Everlasting Righteousness"

WEDNESDAY, February 2. John 19:17-30. "He said, It is finished." Finished! It did not appear so. He was yet in the prime of life! The great world still lay under the shadow of death! Much needed to be imparted to the infant Church for her fulfilment of the great purpose of her election! Yet the Master was able to address to the Father that remarkable statement which he repeats here: "I have glorified thee on the earth, having finished the work which thou gavest me to do."

But what was finished? (1) His fulfilment of each jot and tittle of the ancient Law. He said that none should pass until all were fulfilled, and when he asked for drink to quench his parching thirst, and they brought him vinegar, he knew that there was no further prediction in the roll of the book, which was written for him, that had to be fulfilled. The King had passed through, and all the gates were closed behind. (2) But the ancient method of revelation through types and symbols was finished also. No more sacrifices of bulls and goats. No need of the morning and evening lamb. No veil on the revelation of God's love. No exclusive selection of a privileged caste or class. The old covenant with its ceremonial and ritual had become old and was about to vanish away. (3) Above all, Jesus had finished, so far as God could do it, the work of reconciliation. He had made an end of sin and brought in an everlasting righteousness. Righteousness and Peace had kissed each other. Nothing more needed to be done than to accept the finished propitiation. There remained no more sacrifice for sin. F. B. M.

The Bible and the Church

THURSDAY, February 3. I Cor. 1:2. "Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, even them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that call upon the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." Here Paul gives one definition of church membership. It is not a detailed definition, but it is a wide and spiritual definition.

He who would belittle the Church should think from whence we derived the spirit of our freedom. Lecky said: "Liberty first came to Europe in a little boat with St. Paul." This same free spirit was brought to us in the frail ships of the Pilgrims, who came to worship in peace the Founder of the Christian Democracy.

The Chinese high commissioners who were the nation's guests some years ago said: "We are surprised, we are astounded at your charities. We have nothing like them in China." But the Church has been and is the mother of modern charities and philanthropies. To convince yourself of this make a list of the greatest philanthropists of your city or town.

The Church is responsible for the Christian home, the Christian Sunday, the Christian Bible. Stop to think what of sanctity and purity of domestic life has grown out of organized church Christianity! Where do we find a Sunday of rest and worship without a church? Was it not the early body of Christian believers in the first century that were largely responsible for the New Testament writings, that have helped to mold our highest life as nations or individuals?

What am I doing for the Church? I owe it a great debt. It has a right to demand something definite from me. C. S. C.

What Election Means to You

FRIDAY, February 4. Titus 1:1-16. "The faith of God's elect." Election is an undeniable fact in God's universe. There are elect races, elect individuals, elect orders of creatures, elect stars. One star differeth from another star in glory. Some creatures, like the mole, seem bound to darkness and sloth; others, like the eagle or the lark, live in the sun. The Hebrews were elect to high privilege and function. Theirs was the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; theirs were the fathers, and of them was Christ, who is above all, God-blessed forever. Paul states it with candid simplicity: The purpose of God according to election must stand.

But a fact is one thing, its interpretation another. Election is a fact, but many have placed a wrong interpretation on it, saying that it meant election to privilege, place, and salvation; whereas it really means election to ministry, to service, to suffering and self-sacrifice on the behalf of others. If you should be endowed with gifts and graces, which communicate a happy disposition, or a pleasant heritage in the sunshine, remember that it is only yours in trust for the welfare of others. You have no right to hug these outstanding privileges and delights for yourself alone. If you do, you will be deprived of them, and your life cast on the rubbish-heap as a failure and mistake. The elect servants of God have been the apostles, martyrs, chief sufferers and burden-bearers of the race.

But they have faith. They believe that they will win at the end of the day, that they will hear the "Well-done" of Him who sent them out, and that while death works in them, life will be imparted to others. They seek to make their calling and election sure, believing that the abundant entrance awaits them. F. B. M.

The Blessedness of Giving

SATURDAY, February 5. Acts 20:35. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Giving is like an endless circle; it is casting bread upon the waters, which returns in multiplied abundance after many days. It is the seed in the soil, bursting into the golden harvest; it is the banker, giving out to the borrower till the interest exceeds the principal. It is the philanthropist, receiving the gratitude of mankind; the missionary, losing his life to find it.

Giving is the philosopher's stone, which, instead of turning everything into gold, turns gold into everything—into halls of learning, libraries of information, missions for millions and Christ for the world. Those who give get bills of exchange on God's banking-house, the interest of which is paid along life's journey, while the principal awaits your arrival in the Eternal City.

The returning compensation for all noble benevolence comes in that which is better than an equivalent; in a love and gratitude unpurchasable, as it is unfading and unspeakable in its glory and blessedness; it is the crown of character on the brow of the individual, resplendent, immortal. Shall we say that God the Father never so fully possessed his only begotten Son as when, after giving him for a race, he received him back with a saved world in his arms? Is it not true that one never possesses himself till he has given himself away? This law of reciprocity presents the contrast between a whirlpool and a fountain, the one being only a receiver, while the other gives and receives the sparkling gems back upon its own bosom.

E. W. C.

The Incense of Praise

MISS E. M. MURRAY writing from Changsha, China says; "One tai-tai sat through our service one Sabbath afternoon. On her way home she said to the friend who brought her; 'I never heard anything like that before, and now I shall never burn incense or go to the temples to worship again.' When we heard of this, we thought of another dear old lady whose little home is on the broken-down part of the city wall. As we sat outside her door one evening in early springtime, talking of the things of the Kingdom, she bowed her head in prayer a few minutes and then looking up with her pale, thin face aglow, she said: 'Oh, it is good to talk of God and his love; it makes my heart so happy.'"

Through Gates of Pearl

Augusta Albertson

THE first chapters of this remarkable vision dealing with its beginning, the approach to the Gates of Pearl, the entrance into the city of light and the happiness of the spirits of the redeemed children, have appeared in preceding numbers of the Christian Herald and, so long as they last, can be obtained on request. Any new reader receiving this copy as the beginning of his subscription will receive the back numbers of this series on sending us a postal, until the editions are exhausted.

CHAPTER III

IT was the Pilgrim Gate through which I had entered the Beautiful City. I had seen a host of little ones come through the Children's Gate. Now my guide took me to the Martyr Gate. Here the outer portal was of pearl, but the inner entrance was blood-red. I have seen no color like it except in the sunset sky, and that but once or twice in my life. The marvel of the color of this gate was that it was iridescent. Its liquid redness flashed as the ribbons of light that pulsate in the Aurora Borealis. It was as though the red were a living thing, pulsing with the tides of measureless life. Here and there the color deepened and quickened until it made me think of fire. It was indeed a Gate of Blood and Fire, vividly symbolic of martyrdom.

I do not know how long I stood beside this gate, but as I gazed I saw, at first, two angels enter, bearing between them a body so ethereal that it seemed as close an approach to pure spirit as could be conceived. It was a mortal face, but there rested upon it a more than mortal glory. It was given me to read the record of that life. It is not possible, even if it were wise, to write much of the earthly history which explained its admission through the Martyr Gate. It is sufficient to say she was a woman who had been crucified for threescore years—not on a hilltop, outside a city wall, but within her meager home in which, for love's sake, she had suffered in silence, and devoted herself with passionate patience to tasks that bent her frail body and agonized her sensitive soul. For love's sake she had endured privations of flesh and mind. For love's sake she had been reviled and put to open shame. Now the agony was over, and there rested upon her features a look of ineffable relief. The messengers who had conveyed her vanished, and she stood alone. Then her eyes feasted on the scenes she beheld. She uttered a single word of joy, but in that single word was the significance of volumes. Buoyantly she moved away and stood for a little time within the shadow of a graceful palm. Every frond was waving over her as if impelled by innumerable invisible hands. "Is there none to greet her?" I inquired. My guide replied, "She is alone for a time; she has seldom been alone on earth; she has been a stranger to the luxury of solitude. Presently she will find congenial companions. Familiar friends she had none on earth—that was a part of her martyrdom—but she will find them here." John Burroughs was right when he wrote:

"What matter if I stand alone?
  I wait with joy the coming years;
My heart shall reap where it has sown,
  And garner up its fruit of tears.
The law of love threads every heart,
  And knits it to its utmost kin;
Nor can our lives flow long apart
  From souls our secret souls would win.
The stars come nightly to the sky,
  The tidal wave unto the sea;
Nor time, nor space, nor deep, nor high
  Can keep my own away from me."

Now, as at numerous other times during my journey, it flashed through my mind how deep a prophetic insight into the mysteries of the spirit world the poets have possessed.

I DO not know how it came to pass, but something had occurred in less than the flash of a thought; for now, as I looked at the lonely figure under the palms, she was not alone. She had been joined by several others, though I had not seen them approaching her, and did not know from what direction they had come. They talked together, though I could not hear their conversation, and arm in arm moved away and passed out of my sight. Others were entering through the gate, and I thought no more about the martyr of love until I saw her later, in another part of the City, of which I shall presently speak.

Through the Pilgrim Gate and the Children's Gate I had seen them enter by companies. Through the Martyr Gate there passed no large groups. One by one they came, although in quick succession. Those the nature of whose martyrdom I did not recognize by their appearance my guide was prompt to name.

Child of a Christian home as I had been and native of a Christian land, it had never occurred more than casually to my mind that there are still lands in which to be Christ's witness is to be his martyr. Now I beheld them: a youth, converted from Mohammedanism, who had been thrown into a foul dungeon. His companions there were base and brutal. Holding him against the wall, with their sinewy fingers around his throat, they had demanded, "Is it Jesus or Mohammed?" With the name of his new-found Master upon his lips, death had been mercifully swift. I saw upon his face the strength of death-defying courage, and on his beautiful high brow there rested a wreath of some kind. As he came nearer, it became apparent that the wreath was woven of flowers. No color that I know so much resembles the color of the blossoms that he wore as the purple asters that glorify the New England hillsides in September. Then came a man from China, Christ's first trophy in a village within sight of the Tibetan border; then a woman from Laos, and two boys, ten and twelve years old, from Africa.

I now understand that martyrdom is not so rare a thing on earth as I had thought. The Martyr Gate admitted many another while I stood there. Women passed through, martyrs of overwork; students, martyrs of science; teachers, martyrs of duty. Within the Gate, they moved in various directions. One reclined upon a bank of cushioning moss. Some wandered through fields of poppies, and others along an avenue of interlacing trees.

WITHIN the Pilgrim Gate I had heard singing. Now there came to me the music of far-off silvery bells, which, however, proved to be but the prelude to a chorus which swelled into a torrent of song. Nothing better describes it than "the voice of many waters." It was like the thunders of Niagara or the booming of the cataract at the Yosemite Falls. The surf at Gloucester, in a storm, is a sort of rhythmic roar. The Martyrs' Chorus had the volume of these majestic sounds and yet the quality of almost poignant sweetness. I caught the words, oft-repeated, anthem-like:

"These are they who have come up through tribulation, and have overcome."

By and by the volume of the music diminis until I heard it but faintly, as though the sin were far away. I looked and saw that they entered a temple whose gleaming towers s out against the distant purple hills. I "towers" rather than "spires" or "steep for the architecture of the tower in no res resembled a church or cathedral. The to were many, and all were at the same he every one surmounted by a star. In dimens the temple looked larger than a hundred l mos, and I searched my memory in vai any similarity to earthly edifice. It migh a temple of art or of music, or a People's Pa a place in which to celebrate a Jubilee of P I inquired mentally its use, and instantl guide explained: "The edifice you see is of many in this land. It was built by an hands, but its architect was one who centuries ago in your small world. He w Roman slave. At the bidding of his m he devoted himself to architecture, and veloped unusual gifts. He built an an theater. At its dedication, when by the peror's order Christians were being fed to beasts, his nature revolted at the bloody tacle. Sick at heart, yet strong of will, he his way into the arena, cried out, "I, too, Christian," and fell a victim to the emp wrath. His entrance here was through Martyrs' Gate, and he who rules this real given him work to do. No gift of beauty power lies dormant here. The Roman tect is absent on a royal errand now."

I had the information I long had d concerning the employments of the imm life. As a child I had said to my mothe day, when we were talking about heaven, they do nothing there but sing? I don't I could be happy long with nothing else to Now I know better. God has much wo us to do in other worlds—in any world to his goodness and his grace may gi entrance.

CHAPTER IV

"HOW many gates are there?" I my guide, and he replied, many as the tribes of Israe many as the apostles of the as saith your Book." I had forgotten moment, though I knew it well, the ve Revelation: "On the east, three gates; north, three gates; on the south, three and on the west, three gates." I had the gates on the south. Now my journe me to the east, and ere long I stood besi Ambassadors' Gate. It was of amethys up to it the crystal stairway ran from the gate of pearl. Through the other gates seen multitudes entering, but no one dep Here I beheld apparently an equal numbe ing in and going out. My mentor "Through this gate the angels of the Lo ceed upon their planetary missions. Her ward bound, passed the cherubim that their fiery swords at Eden's garden gate; istrants to patriarchs; the Wrestler Jacob; the deliverer of Daniel; the mi that sang above the plains of Bethlehem Infinite Love lay incarnate in the Virgin's through this gate he passed who comfort God-Man in the wilderness—the same stood beside the fainting Christ in Geths

He began the journey of the angels of the Rerrection; they who stood beside the empty tom in Joseph's garden, and spoke to the woen who brought their spices to the Saviour's seplcher, 'He is not here, but is risen, as he sai' Here commenced the earthward flight of hose ambassadors of heaven whom John sav on Patmos."

'Who are they that enter here?" I asked. Th it was given me to see a dream within a drem, a vision within a vision. There passed befre me a procession representative of all who ha ever been admitted through the Amethyst Ga: prophets, from Enoch to the Baptist; os whose eyes had been anointed to see what wa hidden from the world, and whose lips had be touched with the fire of brave and beautiful pech; apostles, augmenters of the Kingdom, oiers of the Christ, "legates of the sky"; rechers, trumpet-tongued for righteousness, eilds of reform; evangelists, recruiting officers of he army of the redeemed. I saw these as hrugh a glass darkly. It was a panorama of hoast. The vision grew dim and disappeared, an I saw, as at the other gates, companies of pits, celestial-bodied, sweep through the poral mortals that had put on immortality. Krwledge of their names I did not seek, but of he earthly histories I did desire to be inoried. Such knowledge came. It was mine nsantaneously, as if by attribute rather than y ct of learning. Many passed me who had bee ambassadors of God in other worlds than ha from which I came. But many were from ny amiliar world. I knew not that the Master ha so many worthy to enter by this Gate.

umbers, mere figures, I took no note of, xcpt comparatively. An army of men and woen, young and old, passed in: these were eahers of the Word. Another army, composed mctly of men: these were preachers of the Vd. A smaller group I recognized as writers f ooks. In a still smaller group, one face atrated me: it was a face I had seen a hundred ins; not in any pulpit, but on a street corner, whre, with a campstool or a goods-box to stand nhe had addressed the passersby, defending h faith, and appealing to the thoughtless and h hardened to consider the claims of religion. At a certain seaside resort, it was his custom in the height of the season to distribute copies of portions of the Scriptures to the pleasure-seekers. Often ridiculed, sometimes attacked verbally by enemies of the Cross, and once at least beaten by a maniacal unbeliever, he had been an unordained but faithful missioner. Now I witnessed his coronation.

Vaster than the army of those that entered was the army of the ransomed that greeted them within the gates. Crowds of children surrounded the arriving teachers. Gratitude was upon every young face, and lovelight shone in every innocent eye. Priests and preachers were met by throngs of those who had once been members of their congregations. By far the largest assembly hailed the coming of a missionary whose life had been spent in Africa. These were the harvest of his sacrificial labor. I watched him closely, and he was evidently much surprised to find so many who owed their presence here to him. And the curbstone ambassador—the goods-box orator—the Coney Island colporteur—was not without his welcome.

BUT now, for the first time since I left the shores of earth, my heart grew sad with sympathy for one, a country pastor in his earth-life, who seemed to have but meager welcome here. Only a little group took notice of his entrance. I felt lonely for him. No sooner had I formed the thought of sadness than my guide explained, "Wait until you see the greetings that await him beyond the hills. These you see are all he led to Christ. His ministry was brief. He was slow of speech, but patient with the stupid and the reluctant. One of those he led to Christ is an evangelist who has accomplished more in a single year than this man was able to do in many years. The sower's tears and the reaper's song are all one source of joy." What reunions, what greetings, what a rush of hallelujahs awaited these ambassadors somewhere beyond the hills I did not know; nor did they—until afterward.

"Is it given to those who were God's ambassadors on earth to know, while they dwell in this Land, how true it is that their works follow them in the world from which they came?" I asked my guide. "No knowledge is withheld from them the possession of which would enhance their happiness. But their capacity for happiness is constantly enlarging," said he, "and so long as their works endure on earth, their influence abides. They can never know, until time shall be no more, until the globe they inhabited is tenantless, the full accumulation of the fruit of their ministry. There is a sense in which their works follow them here, and this is a source of continual joy both to them and to all who dwell herein."

Hitherto I had thought of my companion as a guide, a courier, but he had proved an interpreter as well. With wisdom supernatural he discoursed about innumerable things which my obtuse mind had not, until then, apprehended. Of course I had read in the Scriptures about the Books of Judgment. Now I saw that there must enter into the eternal records much more than we have ever imagined. When, short of the final consummation of all things, the end of all ages, is the record of a human life complete? I wondered, "Is evil influence as immortal as good? Are the results of sin as endless as the harvest of righteousness?" The interpreter spoke: "Evil is far-reaching in its effects. Sin reproduces itself. The iniquities of the fathers are visited upon their children for generations, but there is a limit to the persistency of disobedience. Wickedness has within itself the seeds of death. Vice tends to self-extermination. The universe can never be what it would have been if falsehood and iniquity had not existed, but goodness is eternal, and evil is destined to ultimate extinction. Christ's kingdom is indestructible. His power will yet subdue all rebellion."

I did not understand his words to signify the ultimate restoration of all souls. Indeed, he made it plain to me that the scars of sin are ineradicable. I did not see, in all my vision, a gate through which the impenitent could pass. I had no glimpse of any part of the City of Light in which a sin-loving, or even a selfish soul, would feel at home. To be anywhere within the gates of pearl was heaven; to be anywhere outside these gates—to fail of admittance—would be hell.

To be continued

Gospel News from Many Points

January I Mr. Fred B. Fisher, who has or three years been General Secretary of le Methodist Laymen's Missionary Movee, became associate general secretary of le nterdenominational Laymen's Missionary lement. Mr. Fisher will give special tion to the conference and convention o. Mr. Fisher has done successful work in missions in Boston and in foreign work in and has traveled widely. He has been nlarly successful in interesting earnest yen and big business men in the missionary . The Laymen's Missionary Movement ntion at Manchester, N. H., enrolled delegates, from 90 towns outside of the ntion city, more than one-third of the t registration, a record for the conventions date. Chicago's total registration of 5 is still unmatched, but Los Angeles is oing for 5,000 delegates. As a result of conventions the Baptist churches in ly, Detroit, Milwaukee, Denver and in cities are uniting in simultaneous everyper visitations for fellowship, evangelism nancial support. In a recent editorial, t. Louis Republic said: "It is for our to send the heathen kerosene, and sewing ines, and cotton print goods, and agricul and milling machinery, and antiseptics as but shall we neglect to send him the le of the Good Samaritan and the misory who turns it into modern practice? h Laymen's Missionary Movement says, N"

SSIONARY C. BRASKAMP writes: "It is a thousand pities that just now we to apologize to the Chinese for European zation. One remarked, 'I do not believe the True One, can take any interest in war, for the whole thing is so absolutely te from his standards.' Well may we say General Chang of Peking: 'It is a day of w for us all. We do not live in a fatalistic where such a war as this has been de of God. Men have sinned and here is the result.' No longer can we turn with complacent pride to Western civilization. We cannot even turn to the churches of the West, for is not each Christian church in Europe praying, in truly provincial fashion, to God to vindicate the government of the land in which she is?"

THE National Temperance Council held its annual meeting in Washington, December 11, with a large representation of practically all the leading temperance bodies. The Council voted to indorse the bills for the national prohibitory amendment and for prohibition of the liquor traffic in the District of Columbia, and also placed itself on record as in favor of prohibiting transmission by mail of liquor advertising into dry territory, and of prohibition of the traffic in all territories over which the Federal Government has jurisdiction. Daniel A. Poling of Boston was re-elected President; Ernest H. Cherrington, of Westerville, Ohio, Secretary.

EVANGELIST BILLY SUNDAY has just begun a seven weeks' spiritual campaign at Trenton, N. J. He is already making arrangements for his long-deferred campaign in New York, which is being planned to open a year hence.

DR. HENRY H. ATKINSON, for fourteen years a medical missionary of the A. B. C. F. M. at Harpoot, Eastern Turkey, died recently of typhus fever, attributable to war exposures and privations. He is the sixth missionary who has succumbed from war conditions within a year.

THE Prisoners' Relief Society, Huntington, W. Va., founded by E. E. Dudding, is doing a most deserving work among the families of prisoners in a number of states. Superintendent Dudding writes to the Christian Herald: "We have applications in our office from nearly a thousand families of prisoners in different states whose destitute situation is pitiful." Any reader desiring to know more about this organization and its work may address Mr. Dudding, as above.

EVANGELIST TENNYSON SMITH, of England, since his arrival here has been busily engaged in preaching and lecturing. He has also been doing an active work in the New York factories—mostly in the Interborough shops—under the auspices of the West Side Y. M. C. A., by addressing noonday meetings of the workmen. His services have deeply interested his hearers, and at many of the meetings men have crowded round the lecturer to sign the temperance pledge, from sixty to seventy signing at a single meeting.

AT Paotingfu, China, on October 12, Miss Grace Newton passed away. She was born in South Orange, N. J., May 10, 1860, and came to China in 1887 as a missionary of the American Presbyterian Mission. The year after she reached Peking she took charge of the Girls' Boarding School. After the Boxer trouble, her school was removed to Paotingfu. She was a great character builder. For twenty-eight years she poured her rich life into the hearts and souls of the girls. Like Dr. Arnold of Rugby, Miss Newton possessed the power to implant in her students "a principle of moral earnestness" which stayed with them through life. Of the graduates of the last nine years, ninety-six per cent. are Christians, living good and useful lives.

LAWRENCE C. JONES, of Braxton, Miss., is following in the footsteps of Booker T. Washington in his labors for the benefit of the colored race. From very small beginnings, he has succeeded in building up a work that is full of promise on industrial and spiritual lines. It began with a gift of forty acres of pine land and $50 in money, six years ago, from an ex-slave. Now, the work has 534 acres, three large buildings, over 200 students, nine teachers, economic and industrial courses, and a considerable industrial plant.

REV. J. H. JOWETT, Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, writes to the Christian Herald acknowledging the receipt of $5 from an unknown reader of this journal in Cleveland, Ohio, "to be applied to some religious purpose." Dr. Jowett, who takes this means of acknowledging the gift, will use it as directed.

◆

I HAVE seen so many answers in your paper, from different ones, as to which part of the paper they liked best, that I have long been going to write and tell you that I think the Mail-Bag is the most instructive of anything I ever read. In the wonderful revival which we have just passed through in Syracuse, over twenty-four thousand souls professed conversion. Words aren't strong enough to express the good Billy Sunday has done here. I personally know men who have run saloons for over twenty years who closed them up and are now working for twelve dollars a week; and hundreds of other cases just as remarkable. People of all classes have started out to serve Christ. Long live Billy Sunday! From an old subscriber.

Syracuse, N. Y. MRS. CHAS. LYNHAM.

Our Editorial Forum

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

What Shall We Do?

TROUBLE in Mexico again. Terrible trouble. A score of strong, brave American men shot down in cold blood.

"Something must be done about it!" say the people. "Something must be done about it!" say the senators. "What is the President going to do about it?" asks the House of Representatives.

What can be done? The slain men cannot be brought to life. "To do something" appears to mean to get ready to send a score of regiments, or twoscore, or three, to kill some Mexicans and to leave behind on Mexican soil the dead bodies of hundreds, perhaps thousands, of other strong, brave American men.

Who shot these Americans? "Bandits," is the reply. Who asked them or commanded them to commit the slaughter? "Villa," we are informed. From whom did Villa and his men purchase the rifles and the cartridges with which these Americans were shot? "From American manufacturers, of course." How does it come that American guns and shells were in the hands of these murderous Mexicans? "Because the policy of our government has been based on the assumption that it was good business and good diplomacy to allow its citizens to sell and ship these implements of murder."

We have sown the wind. We are beginning to reap the whirlwind. We are finding true what a peaceful Teacher said centuries ago: "They that take the sword shall perish with the sword."

Recent history has proved incontestably that there are professional "provocateurs," men whose business it is to stir up wars so that gun and powder makers will have a market for their wares. This whole matter of making, selling and exporting ammunition is a far bigger question to deal with than the question of reprisals for the brave, strong Americans who have just been put to death in Mexico. We would not minimize this horror. It is horrible. We would not ignore the anguish of those who have lost husbands, fathers and sons. But we do say that it is an unspeakable shame that the American nation has gone into the business of spreading death and anguish on this continent and far across the seas. We do say that the real issue raised by the Mexican situation is: Shall we continue to allow American citizens to supply either to the armies or to the bandits of other lands implements and means of slaughter?

The Christian Herald published last week the statements of a number of senators on these questions, and since then other utterances equally forceful have been made. Representative Shackleford of Missouri said the other day: "The United States is today the base of operations by which one belligerent is carrying on warfare against another, and that in the face of a statute which says that our shores shall not become the base of operations for any belligerent in a war to which we are not a party." He declared:

> In 1914 the stock of Du Pont Company was $122 a share, and in 1915 it was selling for $1,000. If some of us were as fortunate as some of these tories from Boston and New York and the New Jersey money-changers, and had a block of stock in some of these munitions factories, I apprehend that we should favor an extensive scheme of preparedness. Another thing is that these munitions-makers are prominent and influential people. They have entree to the newspaper offices and are the men who shut such speeches as I am delivering out of the newspapers and carry columns of the sort of things said in the anti-embargo speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Gardner. What will happen to the Du Pont stock after the war? It will slump in price unless the gentleman from Massachusetts and some of the capitalistic tories on this floor can get us into a position where we will take it up where the French and English quit and keep on supplying material for this unholy thing.

It is impossible to refrain from calling attention again to the strange, perilous and utterly undemocratic usage which has grown up in our governmental system which allows the President to act without consultation with the representatives of the people in international matters. We do not wish to criticize President Wilson. We are not at all sure that any other single citizen could do better than he has done with our international affairs during these long months of trial and anxiety. But we do most urgently call public attention to the fact of this grave flaw and fault in our governmental usage. The Constitution denies to the President the power of declaring war. It is perfectly fair to insist that this limitation also denies him the power of making official decisions and official utterances which might lead to or provoke war.

Perhaps the representatives of the people in Congress assembled could not have formulated a better message to Carranza than President Wilson directed Secretary Lansing to forward. But Congress was in session and the message which went to Carranza should have been their message and not the President's. Congress should have been called together months ago, and should have been consulted at the various grave international crises that have arisen. The people and not the President should have decided whether it was wise and safe and just and right to allow and continue the shipment of war munitions to Mexico and Europe.

The Mexican situation may perhaps give new impetus to the program of preparedness, but General Carranza should be given a fair and ample opportunity of proving his ability to cope with the situation. And we still insist that there is no right or reasonable ground for entering upon a vast national plan of preparation for war.

Throughout these grievous and ominous days the Christian Herald has stood and will continue to stand rigidly for three fundamental propositions: First, that this government should not allow the export of arms and ammunition to any nation engaged in a war with a power with which we are on friendly terms, or to any nation engaged in civil strife; second, that it is both wrong and needless to enter the mad competition of the nations for large, extensive and costly preparation for war; third, that in any matters pertaining to the friendly or unfriendly relations of this country with other nations, no one citizen, although he may happen to have been elected to the high office of President, should have the power to act without first finding out what is the mind and will of the whole people.

Putting Its Foot Down on Dope Cures

AFTER years of litigation, the United States Supreme Court has at last decided that the traffic in dope medicines and cure-alls is illegal, and must hereafter be excluded from the mails and barred from interstate commerce. Under this ruling, the Shirley amendment to the Pure Food and Drugs Act becomes operative, shutting out the whole fraternity of quacks who for many years have been growing rich at the expense of the credulous and the simple. These conscienceless swindlers and their worthless cures have been so often exposed that the only remarkable thing about the case is that they were not suppressed and stamped out of existence long ago. They have numbered their victims by the million, and the foolish faith reposed in their nostrums by both real and imaginary invalids has cost many lives that might have been saved by proper treatment, to say nothing of the multitudes who have become slaves to drugs and alcohol. The Christian Herald has always been in active sympathy with the movement to suppress these fakirs, regarding their traffic as immoral, unscientific and wholly fraudulent. If they can now be excluded not only from the mails, but from the columns of the country newspapers, their source of revenue will be cut off and they will soon disappear—a riddance upon which the country is to be congratulated.

Fair Play for the Farmers

THAT many banks throughout the country are practicing usury and exacting from borrowers in rural districts, and especially farmers, rates of interest varying from 25 to 1,000 per cent., is the extraordinary charge that is made in the annual report of the Controller of the Currency, submitted to Congress January 10. He fortifies the accusation by giving instances showing how the financial vitals of helpless borrowers are squeezed by the extortioners, and he urges honest bankers—who are fortunately in the majority—to unite in putting a stop to these disgraceful practices. In some cases, grasping banks have utilized their 3 per cent. emergency funds to earn from 20 to 100 per cent. One Western bank charged a woman borrower on a homestead 120 per cent. for a thirty-day loan of $110. The worst offenders were found in Georgia, Louisiana, Oklahoma and Texas. Controller Williams has received many bitter complaints of the hardships inflicted on agricultural borrowers, which have made it impossible for them to live decently. And this is aggravated by the fact that the banks suffer very little from losses on agricultural notes—the average amounting to only a fraction of 1 per cent. annually. The farmer, to save himself, must make good his loans, yet he is often made to pay four and five times as high a rate as other borrowers. If he should sue the usurer, he runs the danger of being blacklisted. To meet this intolerable and altogether unjust situation, the Controller advocates the passage of a law empowering the Department of Justice to bring suit against such usurers on information. This he believes would check the evil immediately. In framing such a law, it would be well to provide for the prohibition of b on loans and similar tricks by which the usur usually cover up his tracks. Honest bankers s aid the government in putting a check on thes scienceless plunderers, and in making them under that the Federal Reserve Act was intended to fit the banks and their customers alike. A few ous prosecutions would have a wholesome eff
the situation.

Misinterpreting the Word

SPECULATIVE theology, or rather that p ular branch of it which runs to pro interpretation, seems to have taken o activity in view of the great world event in progress. There are pastors and writers wh to be talked about, and who venture into the p realm of prophecy, forgetful of the warning t is only through the gift of divine wisdom t hard problems can be solved. Jeremiah decl against such rash and unhallowed interp calling them "prophets of the deceit of thei heart," or imagination. Since Christ's day prophets and interpreters of God's will have abo and the Saviour repeatedly warned his fol against them. In modern times, too, they hav in evidence. In the last quarter century full a score of men of this class have yielded to t cination and professed to lift the veil of the and reveal God's purposes for this world. B dates which they fixed for the fulfilment prophecies in Daniel and Revelation passed a revelators, conscious of their impotence, bu sistent in their folly, revised their dates, only met with new disappointment. The latest in of this kind is found in a series of prophetic tions which are included in the Bible Te Manual, which circulates among the follower so-called "pastor" whose sermons have freq been attacked as of more than doubtful orth
These appeared some years ago and indicate as a culminating period. They included the foll
The earthly phase of God's kingdom to be esta in 1914; Christendom's overthrow, 1914; the nium proper begins, 1914. Not one word ab war which broke out in that climacteric ye will be interesting to observe how this teacher,
"strange doctrines" have already given rise t criticism, can face the music of such a con demonstration of the worthlessness of his pred and the shallowness of his claims as an inte of Scripture.

Loiterers

"WHY stand ye here all the day idle
the question put by the househo
the parable to the loiterers in th ket-place. There was work to b and plenty of it, in his vineyards, and while oth gone in to help, these had lingered and now t was almost gone. "No man hath hired us," w excuse. Though they knew of the need of l and had seen the others go in, they took toward the gateway. It was only in the last h daylight that they were persuaded to enter.
question by the householder might with a go of propriety be asked of a certain class of Christians today. In a magazine, recently, a indicted the church because it had failed to al a task when he had been ready for service.
stood in the market-place, but no man had a him. He had even volunteered, but, accordin own account, had never succeeded in comi actual contact with the spiritual activities church. So, while he remained a member no he was to all intents and purposes a rank outsi

It is easy, however, to saddle the blame on even when it rests to a large extent with ou
If we really mean work, we can find it. Perse is one of the main things in life. True Christia life of active service, and the Christian who sta while others are pulling their hardest will mis
all that makes life, in the finest sense, worth Why wait for others to point the way when t sick to be visited, sorrowing to be comforted, be helped, sinners to be won? There are a h ways in which one can do Christian service, an open to him. An enterprising California pa listed over one hundred and twenty different which any good man or woman can help adva kingdom. Those who love Christ and have desire to serve him need not stand idle awaiti tations. The desire—the call in the heart—cient. Our life is a working-day and what we it must depend largely on ourselves.

The Bible and Newspaper

CONDUCTED BY

FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

The Automobile Show

NEW records for attendance at industrial exhibitions in New York City were set by the National Automobile show in the ird Central Palace, which closed the ig of January 8. Upward of twenty hosand a day attended. The total ttdance for the whole exhibition was nhundred and seventy-five thousand. Th products of eighty-seven different nafactories were on exhibition. There ve men of large ability and enterprise rent, representing the leading manuacries, and buyers from all parts of hcountry were present to inspect and ea orders for cars. One opany claimed to have nae a hundred thousand cars is year; another had a sevnt-mile speedometer to recrets speed; others exhibited eces for making the riding as, or steering more accuaty, or insuring greater safey one way or another. The rae reported the enormous u ut of 892,000 machines ung the past year. Tuesa January 4, was "Pioneer Da." At the banquet at night t he Waldorf-Astoria, Senaor Gore of Oklahoma made headdress. Wednesday was Siety Day," and the most asonable and wealthy people f ew York and other cities ve present. At night was e the banquet of the Motor n Accessory Manufacturers t e Waldorf-Astoria. Thursa was "Military Day." At the aquet of the Society of Autoile Engineers at the Plaza Hel, Secretary Josephus Daiels, Major General Leonard Wd, and Alfred Reeves, genra manager of the National Aubmobile Chamber of Comnce, made addresses. Friday n Saturday were full of imant events. Among the en wonders of the modern vld the wireless and the auobile stand in the forefront. Th democratic feature of the nstry is to be commended. Tl rich man can have as large n fast and costly a car as he ay desire, and the man of rnary means can enjoy the dantage or luxury of the umobile. There is a long li ance between the cumbersome charo of Bible times and the touring car of oy, which calls to mind these words f he prophet: "Their horses' hoofs hl be counted like flint, and their wls like a whirlwind." (Isa. 5: 28.)

Robbing the Poor

ROBBING the poor in the extortionate price charged for coal has become o general as to stir the attention and rer of the public and the action of ers of the law in many places. The as of trade require the small dealer to a somewhat more than the larger one. ts not the natural increase in the lge to the small dealer that is complned of, but the extortion levied upon the poor man who lives from hand to nith, and can buy only coal enough to a him one or two or three days at a ie. The commissioner of weights and nsures of Greater New York rectly made a careful investigation of abuse and found that coal was sold he pailful for from twenty to twentyi dollars a ton, an excess charge over cost price and percentage for profit fifteen dollars a ton, or the price of whole tons of coal. The commissioner discovered that a band of a dozen men control a thousand "coal cellars" which supply the fuel at such rates. Even those able to get a hundred-pound sack are taxed in the neighborhood of twenty-five dollars a ton for it. Commissioner Hartigan had the weighing machines of one borough tested in the stores of 285 dealers and condemned 105 and confiscated 95 of them, and took action on 10 penal and 15 civil violations. Beside charging the twenty-five dollars a ton for the coal, they had "doctored" the scales so that they might steal some more. It is a low depth of villainy to rob these poor people, so sorely burdened already, who are scarcely able to keep soul and body together. Besides, this fabulous price does not allow the family to keep half warm half the time, and hundreds of hovels are able to have little or no fire at all in the winter. This seems incredible, but it is true. Discovering these facts, the commissioner presented them to the grand jury, and there is a public clamor that the district attorney push the cases of these ravenous robbers of the poor till all the criminals shall have received the punishment that is due them. This kind of crime is thus condemned: "Rob not the poor, because he is poor; neither oppress the afflicted in the gate." (Prov. 22: 22.)

© International Film Service, Inc.

Record Motor Truck Load

THE curiosity of the inhabitants of a part of Massachusetts was considerably aroused recently by the appearance along the roads of what is possibly the most cumbersome load ever seen upon an American highway, drawn by a powerful tractor. It encountered difficulties every mile or so, coming into contact with telegraph wires and arches and struggling past awkward branches. Some idea of the size and importance of the contents may be judged from the fact that a party went in advance cutting down tree branches, and removing all likely obstacles. The progress of the monster car was, however, temporarily cut short on the approach to a river bridge, the parapets not being wide enough to allow it to cross. In these days of close competition, when the question of utility is so important, it seems foolish to put so huge a wagon on the road to meet with such vexatious and expensive obstructions to its progress. There may have been reasons for the construction of the jumbo truck not revealed in the newspaper account of it. Bigness in machines, institutions, or men amounts to nothing unless there is room for them on the road they have to travel. Adaptation to the practical work desired is all-important in the material and spiritual world. The ox cart was for thousands of years the vehicle for transportation. It was employed as such by the Hebrews as is seen in the following command: "Now therefore make a new cart, and take two milch kine, on which there hath come no yoke, and tie the kine to the cart." (I Sam. 6: 7.)

Tilefish Have Returned

FOR years the tilefish, an unusual sort of delicacy, has not frequented our shores until this season, when it suddenly reappears in great numbers, and is taken in great quantities for food. Three years after the fish was first placed on the market in 1879, the species disappeared as the warm Gulf Stream swung away from the tilefish grounds, leaving this tropical tribe to perish in colder waters. Later as the stream edged back to its old course the fishing smacks caught a fish with the body of a cod and the head of a channel bass. As the stream flowed more evenly over the old tilefish plateau, the nets dragged up in schools a fish of beautiful color. Experts in the Bureau of Fisheries called the new species the "tilefish." They had never seen such a specimen before, and in all their books they could not find a line about the species. After a lapse of a generation it has now come back again to add to the nation's supply of sea food. Fish was an important part of diet in Palestine. Peter, James, John and Andrew were found by Christ at their nets when he thus called them to be his apostles: "Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men. And straightway they forsook their nets, and followed him." (Mark 1: 17, 18.)

Newspaper Building Dedicated

THE Los Angeles Examiner building, said to be the largest and finest building in the world devoted to the making of a newspaper, was dedicated the other night by William Randolph Hearst. A small company of distinguished persons, including Senator O'Gorman, were at Mr. Hearst's Riverside Drive residence in New York. Some 400 guests, including Mayor Sebastian and other prominent officers and citizens, were gathered in the office of the Examiner in Los Angeles, while 400 miles north a similar important group assembled in the San Francisco Chronicle building with Mayor Rolph. The groups in the three cities had telephone receivers, and Mr. Hearst made the address to the people over 3,500 miles of wire, and was heard as plainly as though he had been in the room. Mr. Hearst, after praising the building, said that the newspaper in the building was the main thing. Among other things he said: "Build your newspaper carefully and conscientiously. Make it worthy of the great people who are giving it its opportunity. Rest it upon the firm foundation of truth, justice and public service. Inclose it with the four strong walls of courage and character, enterprise and accuracy. Crown it with patriotic devotion to the welfare of our country and our people. Then when the stone and steel of your material building shall have crumbled and passed away, the worthy work of your great newspaper will still endure." The congratulations of the distinguished men of the three cities over the wire followed the address. They had no newspapers in Palestine, but they had books and documents written with the pen as instruments of publicity, as is thus illustrated in the words of the prophet: "Declare this in the house of Jacob, and publish it in Judah." (Jer. 5: 20.)

Died with Pen in Hand

CHARLES W. KNAPP, who had been connected for forty-eight years with the St. Louis Republic, which his father and uncle had owned before he succeeded them in the control of the property, came east to become the treasurer of the New York Times. He entered upon his duties Monday, January 3, and on Thursday of the same week he was found dead at his desk with his pen still in his fingers. The people of St. Louis and members of the newspaper staff gave him a reception before he left, and his desk was full of flowers and piled up with letters of congratulation from friends west and in the city. He had dictated letters of appreciation, expressing his satisfaction at his prospects, and had his pen in his hand signing them. Mr. Knapp had a national reputation as a journalist. Is there any more appropriate place for death to find a man than at the post of duty? "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." (Matt. 24: 44.)

Wise College Alumnæ

A STUDY of Fire Prevention, a gift to the community from a group of Bryn Mawr College alumnæ in commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of their graduation, has just been announced. The State Department of Labor and Industry of Pennsylvania accepted the direction of the study on behalf of the public, the field selected being the industrial establishments where women and girls are employed. The holder of the award is Miss Fanny Travis Cochran, of Bryn Mawr, 1902, who associated with her Miss Florence Lucas Sanville, of Barnard, 1901. The class of '89 thought at first they would present the college with a Greek theater or Spanish garden, but, thinking of the appalling loss of girls and women workers in New York and other cities, resolved to put their gift in an organized effort to prevent the recurrence of such scenes. What good common sense there is in this gift, and what a blessed charity! In this act, these alumnæ answer this beautiful description of comeliness of character: "That our daughters may be as cornerstones, polished after the similitude of a palace." (Ps. 144: 12.)

Our Big Halibut Industry

Continuing Frank G. Carpenter's Story of Alaska

Copyright, 1916, by Frank G. Carpenter

The Author (5 ft. 8 in. Tall) with 150 lb. Halibut

I HAVE come from Alaska to British Columbia to write of an international complication regarding the placing of Alaskan halibut and salmon on the breakfast tables of the people of the United States. This business has been rapidly growing. The fish have been caught in Alaskan waters, put upon ice and brought to Ketchikan, from where they were shipped to Seattle. At Seattle they were put in cold-storage cars and sent over the American railroads to the markets.

Now the Canadians have established a new fishing port at Prince Rupert, B. C. This port is the terminus of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. It is 600 miles nearer the fishing grounds than Puget Sound, and it is claimed that fish from our Alaskan waters can be landed there and be transported through Canada to our cities two days sooner than when shipped via Seattle. This means that, if other conditions are equal, most of the fresh fish caught in Alaskan waters for shipment to the East will be shipped from Prince Rupert, and that it will become the headquarters of the Alaskan fishing industry. Our fishermen will come here to live and they will buy their fishing supplies from the Canadian stores. In other words, the Canadians, rather than the Alaskan Americans, will get the chief profits out of the business.

In order to bring this about the Canadian parliament has recently passed laws enabling American fishermen and American vessels to land their cargoes at Prince Rupert free of all duties, and to send them in bond over their railroad through Canada on the way to our markets. The citizens of Prince Rupert are doing all they can to encourage the industry, and as a result the people of Southeastern Alaska are greatly excited. The town council of Ketchikan and its commerical club have requested Secretary Redfield of our Department of Commerce to give them protection, and bills to that end will probably be introduced into Congress next session. The Alaskans demand that all fish caught in Alaskan waters, if shipped free of duty to the United States markets, shall be sent out from American ports, and they say that the Canadian railroads which carry the fish can easily send boats to Ketchikan, which is only half a day away, for their cargoes.

Eighty Thousand Pounds of Halibut on Prince Rupert Wharves. Single Fish Sometimes Weigh Over 200 Pounds

From what I see here the fears of the Alaskans seem well founded. Prince Rupert is the baby port of the Northern Pacific, but it has already become one of the fishing centers of this part of the world. Nevertheless, the town is only six years of age, and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, which connects it with the East, has just begun to run its through cars. The place already has more than $5,000,000 invested in its fisheries, and included in that amount are thirty-five canneries and seven large cold-storage plants.

Hugeness of the Catch

PRINCE RUPERT has hundreds of sailing vessels that are now going back and forth to and from our fishing grounds. It has ninety-nine gasoline launches used for the same purpose and forty-one fishing vessels moved by steam. There are about fifty American boats that land cargoes of fish here every week, and each train that goes eastward over the Grand Trunk Railway carries carloads of fresh fish to the cities of the United States. More than a quarter of a million pounds of halibut were recently sent to New York and Boston in a single trainload, and over two hundred million pounds of that fish have been landed here in one year. The fish are packed in ice the moment they are taken from the sea, and are kept in cold-storage cars until they reach the market, which is less than two weeks from the time they leave the hook. I am told that fish can be kept perfectly fresh for a month by the present methods of catching and packing.

The most of the fresh fish shipped in this way are halibut, which are caught throughout the year. Fresh salmon are sent only during the months of the summer, when the salmon are running. They are exported in a frozen state from the cold-storage plants throughout the winter. The exports of Alaskan halibut are rapidly increasing. It used to be that all the fish of this kind consumed in our markets came from the Atlantic Ocean. Eighty-five per cent. of it comes from the Pacific Ocean, and the bulk from fishing banks off the coast of Alaska. Alaskan hali is now used in almost every part of the United Sta

The fishing center of the territory is still Ke ikan, and there are also fleets that make their h quarters at Petersburg, Juneau and elsewhere. extent of the fishing grounds is enormous. There some banks that seem to be paved with halibut, the vessels bring them in by the thousands of pou A single party has been known to catch one hun thousand pounds in a day, and fifty thousand pou a day is not uncommon. Not long ago one of the b that went out from Ketchikan brought in more t a quarter of a million pounds of fish. The w cargo had been caught in one week, and every po of it had been taken with hook and line.

I have become greatly interested in the halibut dustry during my stay in Alaska. The halibu the largest of the flat fishes. I have seen many wh if stood upon their tails, would reach high above head, and some which I venture are over three in width. The average halibut weighs about pounds, and some have been caught that may w as much as 300.

The halibut swims on the bottom of the sea, chiefly on banks, several hundred feet below surface. It devours all sorts of fishes. One o favorite foods is the herring, which is caught he great quantities and frozen, that it may be kept used for bait.

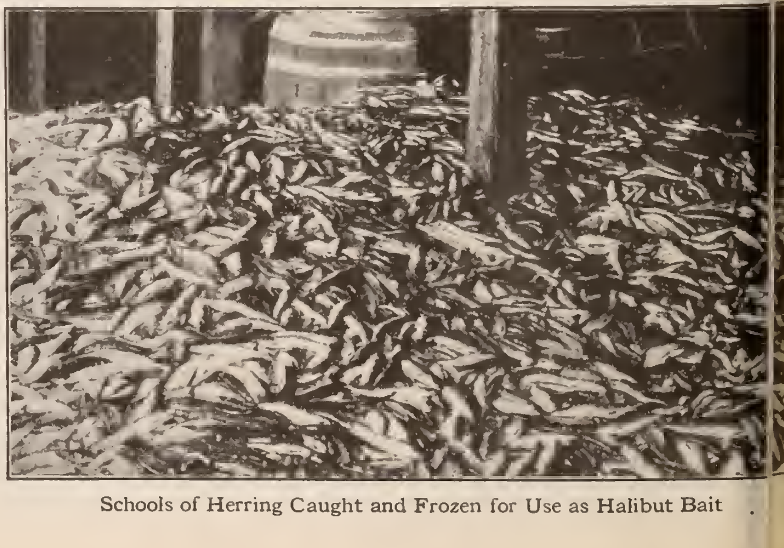
The herring are found in nearly all the wate Alaska. They move about in large schools, som which cover several square miles. Twice a year swim to the shores to spawn. come by the millions, and in such l schools that they can be scoope from the water right into the b Last year a great haul was made a the face of the dock of the New land Fish Company at Ketchikan. end of the net was made fast to wharf, and the herring were dra out by the thousand. At that time more than 2,000 barrels of he were taken up by four seines in Tongas Narrows.

One way of catching these fish driving nails into a board so that stick out several inches. The b are then dragged through the s and the fish catch between the and are pulled by the boardful the boats. In one year more th million pounds of herring were ca at Prince Rupert and frozen by cold-storage plants to be sold for Something like 125,000 pounds of fish are annually taken for the purpose.

Fish Lines 60 Miles Long

THE most of the halibut are ca with the hook and line. The ing, however, has nothing gam sporting about it. The lines dropped down into the sea in such a way tha baited hooks rest on the bed of the ocean. The are of great length. Some of them are sixty long; when loaded with fish it takes the steam e on the vessel the better part of a day to wind the

Cold-Storage Plant for Halibut and Salmon at Prince Rupert



Schools of Herring Caught and Frozen for Use as Halibut Bait

Th y are divided into sections, each sec on having a float or buoy that res on the surface, and is marked by a fl g in the daytime and at night by a lig . The line lies right on the bed of e sea. Attached to it are hundreds of oks and each hook is baited. The hal ut swallows the bait and is caught on he hook and held there until the lin is drawn up. These fish always fee on or close to the bed of the ocean.

he fishing parties usually stay out fro ten days to three weeks. They ca y ice with them and the moment th fish are taken from the hook they ar cleaned and put in the ice and ke there until they reach the cold-sto age plant. They are washed as so as they are landed and shipped in col -storage cars direct to the marke , or they may be kept for some ti before shipping.

he next step is to dip each fish fo or five times in fresh water until it ecomes entirely encased in a thin sh t of clear ice. It can then be held in old-storage at a temperature of fo degrees below freezing until it is eeded for export. The fish get a fr coating of ice before they are sh ped. They are then wrapped se rately in vegetable parchment pa er, and are packed in paper-lined bo es of 375 pounds capacity and sent ea ward in the cold-storage trains.

he fishermen who go out with the st mers are often paid by their catch; ar a medium-sized halibut vessel di urses about $50,000 a year in wages. T men get on the average from $100 to $125 a month each, although on so e of the ships they are paid at the ra of a cent a pound for all that they ca h. Many of the independent boats a run in partnership, the fishermen di ding the profits.

uring my stay in Prince Rupert and K chikan, I have gone through some of the big freezing establishments. E h town has its cold-storage plants, w re halibut and salmon are frozen to be kept for some time before shipment. The frozen fish are not thawed until they reach the larger cities and towns of the United States, where they are sold. I wish I could take you through the biggest cold-storage plant of Prince Rupert. It has a capacity of 14,000,000 pounds of fish. Its buildings are right on the harbor, and the fish are frozen stiff as soon as they come from the wharves.

Salmon with Fast Color

MUCH of the fish in the cold-storage plant was salmon, which had been frozen and stored away to be shipped as needed throughout the year. In some of the rooms I noticed that the noses had been cut from the salmon. The manager told me this was to mark the character of the fish as to its color. Some of the salmon have flesh which is white or light pink, while the flesh of others is red. It is impossible to tell the color of the flesh without cutting open the fish, and so the white salmon are marked by slicing their noses. The manager says there is really no difference in the taste or quality of the salmon according to its color, although the different colors bring a different price in the market.

And in this connection comes a story, which is fairly well authenticated, of how one of the salmon kings started his fortune in the fish industry on the basis of the then despised light-colored salmon. This man had put up his cannery at a location past which the fish came in great numbers on their way in to spawn. He was right in his selection of a site and the salmon were caught in vast quantities. They were all, however, of the light pink variety, and the fisherman was in despair. At that time no light-colored salmon had been shipped and the demand everywhere was for salmon of an almost red hue. The man canned his catch and sold it by means of a label which implied that it was the only sanitary fish on the market. The label read: "This salmon is warranted not to turn red in the can." The most of the catch went to the Southern states, and the drummers selling it did their business so well that in many of the cities of that locality you can hardly sell a red salmon. The people think it is spoiled, and has, therefore, turned red in the can.

I am surprised at the extent of the fishing industry of this part of the world. The ocean floors of southeastern Alaska are carpeted with fish of many varieties; and there are large fishing industries carried on all along the coast out to the Aleutian Islands. There are many fish in Bering Sea, and the Yukon and Kuskokwim Rivers are filled with fish of one kind or another. The total value of the Alaskan catch for 1914 was almost $20,000,000 and altogether we have caught enough fish in these waters to equal about thirty times what we paid for the territory. The total value up to date has been very close to $220,000,000.

The most of this has been made up of salmon, the canning of which is an enormous industry. I shall write of it in the future. Next to it comes the halibut, which is only in its beginning, although from five to ten million dollars a year are now spent upon that industry in wages and supplies. There are more than 1,400 men employed in halibut fishing in Alaska, and the annual catch is almost 15,000,000 pounds and is rapidly growing.

There are also large cod-fisheries in Alaska, and the cod are said to be equal to those caught on the Banks of Newfoundland. Much of the cod-fishing is about the Aleutian Islands, and there are many vessels and stations devoted to the industry. The amount of cod caught last year was more than fifteen million pounds, which was an increase of 20 per cent. over the catch of the year preceding.

In addition to the ordinary cod, they are now catching black cod, a fish of about the same size as the ordinary cod, but darker in color. The flesh is much richer in oil, but it may be prepared in such a way that it is delicious. It has been eaten for many years in Alaska, and they have been recently shipping it to Seattle, where the restaurants make a special feature of barbecued black cod. This consists of the backs of the fish, which are kippered or smoked, after being salted. They are served with drawn butter.

There is a prospect that an extensive industry will some time arise in the shellfish of Alaska. They have oysters near here as large around as a saucer, and there are many places among the Alaskan islands where you can catch crabs as big around as a dinner plate. There are clams, large and small; little butter clams that are delicious and others good to eat as big around as your hand. There is a man at Petersburg who has shipped this year sixty cases of one-pound cans of clams; and clams and clam juice were formerly packed at Klawak.

I am told, however, that one has to be very careful as to the source of his clam supply. Some of these bivalves feed in the water near the copper deposits, and the copper poisons their meat. The captain of one of our coast survey steamers, in speaking of this recently, told me how his life was saved by a pussy-cat. Said he:

"It was a narrow escape. I had bought a fine mess of clams and was just about to eat some of them raw when I decided I had better test their edibility by giving one of them to my cat. The pussy ate it, and a moment later she rolled over and went into convulsions. She kept on kicking until every one of her nine lives had departed. The clams were poisoned by copper, but they looked as sweet and healthy as any I have ever seen. Had the cat not been near, I would have tried them without question, and I really believe that that cat saved my life."

Helen Keller on Preparedness

A GREAT audience at Carnegie Hall, New York, on January 5, greeted Hellen Keller, the blind and deaf girl whose brave fight f an education and a career have won t admiration of the world. The m eting was held under the auspices of t Women's Peace Party and the Labor rum, and its main object was to g e Miss Keller an opportunity to r ply to the newspaper criticisms of h earlier speech before the Labor rum, in which she had attacked the p licy of "Preparedness."

It was truly a thrilling sight—two t ousand people hanging upon the words o a young woman who could neither s nor hear; who had learned to talk a though by a miracle. Her words w re repeated by an interpreter so that a in the room could hear distinctly.

Before Miss Keller's address Mrs. C ystal Benedict Eastman, president o the Women's Peace Party, made a s rring appeal for the cause, and the ller sisters of England gave, in cos me, a number of anti-war folk-songs. he most touching of these was a song itten by an English soldier in France ring the present war. It was en led "Under the Grass," and embodied e fancy that two dead soldiers re ined for a moment the power of speech d asked each other the answerless estion, "Why did we die?"

Mrs. Eastman declared that it was possible for her to believe that a orld that could produce poetry and usic so beautiful as that could also oduce the horrors of the European ar.

Then Miss Keller was introduced. he world will never cease to wonder the amazing achievements of this oung woman, who has overcome handi ps which would have been considered surmountable if she had not herself emonstrated otherwise. People were terested some years ago when she ntered college. They were more interested when, four years later, she graduated, having completed the regular course in the regular time and taken her place with the other graduates of Radcliffe College. Her standing as a useful member of society has been recognized by her appointment as a member of the Massachusetts Commission for the Blind and to membership in the advisory boards of various societies for the blind and deaf. A few years ago she made her first venture as a public speaker and since then has been welcomed to the lecture platform by many audiences. She is known also as a gifted poetess and has contributed to some of the best-known magazines, besides being the author of a number of books. The Peace-lovers present at Carnegie Hall on the present occasion welcomed her with hearty enthusiasm. After acknowledging their greetings, Miss Keller said:

"TO begin with, I have a word to say to my good friends the editors, and others who are moved to pity me. Some people are grieved because they imagine I am in the hands of unscrupulous persons who lead me astray and persuade me to espouse unpopular causes and make me the mouthpiece of their propaganda. Now, let it be understood, once for all, that I do not want their pity; I would not change places with one of them. I know what I am talking about. My sources of information are as good and reliable as anybody else's. I have papers and magazines from England, France, Germany and Austria that I can read myself. Not all the editors I have met can do that. Quite a number of them have to take their French and German second-hand. No, I will not disparage the editors. They are an overworked, misunderstood class. Let them remember, though, that if I cannot see the fire at the end of their cigarettes, neither can they thread a needle in the dark. All I ask, gentlemen, is a fair field and no favor. I have entered the fight against preparedness and against the economic system under which we live. It is to be a fight to the finish, and I ask no quarter.

"The future of the world rests in the hands of America. The future of America rests on the backs of 80,000,000 workingmen and women and their children. We are facing a grave crisis in our national life. The few who profit from the labor of the masses want to organize the workers into an army which will protect the interests of the capitalists. You are urged to add to the heavy burdens you already bear the burden of a larger army and many additional warships. It is in your power to refuse to carry the artillery and the dreadnoughts and to shake off some of the other burdens, too. You do not need to make a great noise about it. With the silence and dignity of creators you can end wars and the system of selfishness and exploitation that causes wars. All you need to do to bring about this stupendous revolution is to straighten up and fold your arms.

"We are not preparing to defend our country. Even if we were as helpless as Congressman Gardner says we are, we have no enemies foolhardy enough to attempt to invade the United States. The talk about attack from Germany and Japan is absurd. Germany has its hands full and will be busy with its own affairs for some generations after the European war is over.

"IF the Mikado should pack soldiers on every ocean-going ship he has he could land only 40,000 troops. And it would take him six weeks to bring the next 40,000. Should Germany perform a miracle and spring to the first place among the nations it could do little better. It seems to my feminine mind that our stalwart friends in California could take care of 40,000 men while their ships went back for the next load. And if we on the Atlantic coast cannot take care of 40,000 Germans we are not worth saving anyhow.

"If the European war has proved anything it has proved that invasion by ships is not feasible. With full control of the Atlantic Ocean and the Mediterranean Sea, the Allies failed to land enough men to defeat the Turks at Gallipoli; and then they failed again to land an army at Salonica in time to check the Bulgarian invasion of Serbia. The conquest of America by water is a nightmare confined exclusively to ignorant persons and members of the Navy League.

"You know, the last war we had we quite accidentally picked up some islands in the Pacific Ocean that may some day be a pretext for a quarrel between ourselves and Japan. I'd rather drop those islands right now and forget about them than to go to war to keep them. Wouldn't you?

"Congress is not preparing to defend the people of the United States. It is planning to protect the capital of American speculators and investors in Mexico, South America, China and the Philippine Islands. Incidentally this preparation will benefit the manufacturers of munitions and war machines.

"Until recently there were uses in the United States for the money taken from the workers. But American labor is exploited almost to the limit now, and our national resources have all been appropriated. Still the profits keep piling up new capital. Our flourishing industry in implements of murder is filling the vaults of New York's banks with gold. And a dollar that is not being used to make a slave of some human being is not fulfilling its purpose in the capitalistic scheme. That dollar must be invested, in South America, Mexico, China or the Philippines.

Continued on page 117

A Voice in the Wilderness

By GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL LUTZ

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

MARGARET EARLE, school teacher, "tenderfoot," mistaking a water stop for her station and discovering her mistake just too late, was left behind on the desert plain of Arizona and saw her train disappear into the night. A passing half-drunken rancher told her that her station was twenty miles away. She started to go to the rancher's camp, first on foot and then riding behind on the pony; but she found his company less desirable than loneliness. The rancher left her sobbing in the sand beside the trail and reported his erstwhile passenger to his wife and the eight men in the bunk house. One of them was young and "different." It was a subtle difference that they all felt unconsciously and that kept them in some awe of "the Boy" as they called him. The Boy saddled two horses and went in search of the girl. He found her, reassured her, set her on a horse and returned with her to the ranchhouse. On the way, Margaret and the Boy talked of the wonders of the Arizona night, and she discovered in him an indefinable something that she could not penetrate. The first sight of the bunk house was not very reassuring but the Boy had told her that "Mom" Wallis would look after her and there was no alternative but the desert. Her fineness and tact and the Boy's evident knowledge of the culture that she expressed and that awed while it pleased the men, won Margaret the fealty of the plainsmen in the bunk house and made them fear that they would lose the Boy, whom they had found sick in the desert and had nursed back to life. The Boy left her at her boarding-house late the next afternoon, but left with her promise to see him again. Afterward she met the Rev. Frederick West and a dog. She liked the dog.

CHAPTER VI

FOR some time she stood and gazed, marveling at the beauty and recalling some of the things her companion of the afternoon had said about his impressions of the place; then suddenly there loomed a dark speck in the near foreground of her meditation, and looking down annoyed, she discovered the minister like a gnat between the eye and a grand spectacle, his face turned admiringly up to her window, his hand lifted in familiar greeting.

Vexed at his familiarity she turned quickly and jerked down the shade; then throwing herself on the bed she had a good cry. Her nerves were terribly wrought up. Things seemed twisted in her mind, and she felt that she had reached the limit of her endurance. Here was she, Margaret Earle, newly elected teacher to the Ashland Ridge school, lying on her bed in tears when she ought to be getting settled and planning her new life; when the situation demanded her best attention she was wrought up over a foolish little personal dislike. Why did she have to dislike a minister anyway, and then take to a wild young fellow whose life thus far had been anything but satisfactory even to himself? Was it her perverse nature that caused her to remember the look in the eyes of the Boy who had rescued her from a night in the wilderness and to feel there was far more manliness in his face than in the face of the man whose profession surely would lead one to suppose he was more worthy of her respect and interest? Well, she was tired. Perhaps things would assume their normal relation to one another in the morning. And so after a few minutes she bathed her face in the little heavy ironstone wash-bowl, combed her hair, and freshened the collar and ruffles in her sleeves preparatory to going down for the evening meal. Then with a swift thought she searched through her suitcase for every available article wherewith to brighten that forlorn room.

The dainty dressing-case of Dresden silk with rosy ribbons that her girl friends at home had given as a parting gift covered a generous portion of the pine bureau, and when she had spread it out and bestowed its silver-mounted brushes, combs, hand-glass, and pretty sachet, things seemed to brighten up a bit. She hung up a cobweb of a lace boudoir cap with its rose-colored ribbons over the bleary mirror, threw her kimono of flowered challis over the back of the rocker, arranged her soap and tooth brush, her own wash rag and a towel brought from home on the washstand, and somehow felt better and more as if she belonged. Lastly she ranged her precious photographs of father and mother and the dear vine-covered church and manse across in front of the mirror. When her trunks came there would be other things, and she could bear it perhaps when she had this room buried deep in the home belongings. But this would have to do for tonight, for the trunk might not come till morning, and anyhow she was too weary to unpack.

SHE ventured one more look out of her window, peering carefully at first to make sure her fellow boarder was not still standing down below on the grass. A pang of compunction shot through her conscience. What would her dear father think of her feeling this way toward a minister; and before she knew the first thing about him, too? It was dreadful! She must shake it off. Of course he was a good man or he wouldn't be in the ministry, and she had doubtless mistaken mere friendliness for forwardness. She would forget it and try to go down and behave to him the way her father would want her to behave toward a fellow minister.

Cautiously she raised her shade again and looked out. The mountain was bathed in a wonderful ruby light fading into amethyst, and all the path between was many-colored like a pavement of jewels set in filigree. While she looked the picture changed, glowed, softened, and changed again, making her think of the chapter about the Holy City in Revelation.

She started at last when some one knocked hesitatingly on her door, for the wonderful sunset light had made her forget for the moment where she was, and it seemed a desecration to have mere mortals step in and announce supper, although the odor of pork and cabbage had been proclaiming it dumbly for some time.

She went to the door and opening it found a dark figure standing in the hall. For a minute she half feared it was the minister, until a shy reluctant backwardness in the whole stocky figure and the stirring of a large furry creature just behind him made her sure it was not.

"Ma says you're to come to supper," said a gruff, untamed voice, and Margaret perceived that the person in the gathering gloom of the hall was a boy.

"Oh!" said Margaret with relief in her voice, "thank you for coming to tell me. I meant to come down and not give that trouble, but I got to looking at the wonderful sunset. Have you been watching it?"

She pointed across the room to the window. "Look! Isn't that a great color there on the tip of the mountain? I never saw anything like that at home. I suppose you're used to it though."

The boy came a step nearer the door and looked blankly, half wonderingly, across at the window, as if he expected to see some phenomenon.

"Oh! That?" he exclaimed carelessly. "Sure! We have them all the time."

"But that wonderful silver light pouring down just in that one tiny spot!" exclaimed Margaret. "It makes the mountain seem alive and smiling!"

The boy turned and looked at her curiously.

Might As Well Be Happy

By Clara W. Angell

MIGHT as well be happy as the worl' goes roun';
Ain't no use lookin' cross; jest shake your frown;
Jest as like as not there's others—
Why not treat them all as brothers?
Make 'em happy as the worl' goes roun'.

Keep off of the corners as the worl' goes roun';
You may lose your balance in your own home town;
Plan things so's you's always busy,
Keep yer head straight, don't get dizzy—
Keep a-workin' as the worl' turns roun'.

Keep one eye on heaven as the worl' goes roun';
Never hit another feller when he's down;
When things look about the worse,
Think up some good Bible verse,
God's a-list'nin' as the worl' goes roun'.

Might as well be happy as the worl' goes roun';
God is in his heaven, an' he's lookin' down;
Seems jest that would give your back
Strength enough to "keep the track"—
Keep a-hopin' as the worl' turns roun'.

"Oh," said he, "I c'n show you pl like that!" But he turned and lo at it a long, lingering minute again.

"But we mustn't keep your mo waiting," said Margaret, remembe and turning reluctantly toward door. "Is this your dog? Isn't beauty? He made me feel really as were glad to see me."

She stooped and laid her hand o dog's head, and smiled brightly u his master.

The boy's face lit with a smile an turned a keen, appreciative look at new teacher, for the first time genui interested in her.

"Cap's a good old scout," he mitted.

"So his name is Cap. Is that s for anything?"

"Cap'n."

"Captain. What a good nam him! He looks as if he were a cap and he waves that tail grandly almo if it might be a badge of office. But are you? You haven't told me name yet. Are you Mrs. Tan son?"

The boy nodded.

"I'm just Bud Tanner."

"Then you are one of my pu aren't you? We must shake hand that." She put out her hand, but was forced to go out after Bud's r tant red fist, take it by force in a str grasp and do all the shaking; for had never had that experience befo his life, and he emerged from it w very red face and a feeling as if his arm had been somehow lifted out o same class with the rest of his b It was rather awful, too, that it pened just in the open dining- door and that the "preacher-boar watched the whole performance. put on an extra deep frown and shu away from the teacher, making a show of putting Cap out of the di room, though he always sat behin master's chair at meals, much to th comfiture of the male boarder, wh slightly in awe of his dogship, not ha been admitted into friendship as the had been.

MR. WEST stood back of his awaiting the arrival of the boarder, with an expectant smile. spite of her resolves to like the Margaret was again struck with ave as she saw him standing there, and intensely relieved when she saw tha seat assigned to her was on the opp side of the table from him, and b Bud. Mr. West, however, did not so pleased with the arrangement, stepping around the table said t landlady:

"Did you mean me to sit over h as he placed a possessive hand o back of the chair that was mean Bud.

"No, Mr. West, you jest set v you ben settin'," responded Mrs. ner. She had thought the matter a and decided that the minister converse with the teacher to the b advantage of the whole table if h across from her. Mrs. Tanner w born matchmaker. This she felt w opportunity not to be despised, ev it robbed the Ridge School of a desi teacher.

But Mr. West did not immedi return to his place at the other si the table. To Margaret's extrem noyance he drew back her chair waited for her to sit down. The s tion, however, was somewhat reliev its familiarity by a sudden interfe from Cap, who darted away from frowning master and stepped up aut tatively to the minister's side with growl, as if to say: "Hands off chair! That doesn't belong to you

Mr. West suddenly released his on the chair without waiting to m up to the table, and precipitatel tired to his own place.

'hat dog is a nuisance!" he said es y, and was answered with a glare ro Bud's dark eyes.

d came to his seat with his eyes til set savagely on the minister, and Ca settled down protectingly behind M garet's chair.

rs. Tanner bustled in with the cof ee ot and Mr. Tanner came last, hav ng ist finished his rather elaborate hair o bing at the kitchen glass with the cit en comb, in full view of the assem ole multitude. He was a little, thin, wi weather-beaten man, with skin ik eather and sparse gray hair. Some of s teeth were missing, leaving deep ho ws in his cheeks, and his kindly pr uding chin was covered with cr gy gray whiskers, which stuck out h d of him like a cowcatcher. He was n is shirt sleeves and collarless, but oo ed neat and clean, and greeted the e guest heartily before he sat down, an nodded to the minister:

Naow, Brother West, I reckon we're e y fer your part o' the performance. Y ll please to say grace."

r. West bowed his sleek yellow head an muttered a formal blessing with an off nd manner as if it were a mere cere n y. Bud stared contemptuously at ni the while, and Cap uttered a low u ble as of a distant growl. Margaret el sudden desire to laugh, and tried to o rol herself, wondering what her a er would feel about it all.

THE genial clatter of knives and forks broke the stiffness after the blessing. M . Tanner bustled back and forth r the stove to the table, talking la orously the while. Mr. Tanner jo ed in with his flat nasal twang re sp ding; and the minister, with an air of tter contempt for them both, en de ored to set up a separate and alto ge er private conversation with Mar ga t across the narrow table; but M garet innocently had begun a con ve ation with Bud about the school, and ha to be addressed by name each time be re Mr. West could get her attention. B , with a boy's keenness, noticed her a sion and put aside his own back w dness, entering into the contest with re arkably voluble replies. The minis te if he would be in the talk at all, was fo ed to join in with theirs, and found hi self worsted and contradicted by the bo at every turn.

trange to say, however, this state of th gs only served to make the man m e eager to talk with the lady. She w not anxious for his attention? Ah! S was coy, and the acquaintance was to ave the zest of being no lightly won fr ndship. All the better. He watched h as she talked, noted every charm of la and lid and curving lip; stared so c tinually that she finally gave up l king his way at all, even when she w obliged to answer his questions.

Thus, at last, the first meal in the new h ne was concluded, and Margaret, p ading excessive weariness, went to h room. She felt as if she could not e dure another half hour of contact w h her present world until she had had s e rest. If the world had been just F d and the dog she could have stayed b ow stairs and found out a little more a ut the new life; but with that min i er continually interrupting, her mind w a chaos.

When she had prepared for rest she p t out her light and drew up the shade. T ere before her spread the wide wonder c the heavens again, with the soft pur of the mountain under stars; and she w s carried back to the experience of the ght before, with a vivid memory of her c npanion. Why, just why couldn't she as interested in the minister down t re as in the wild young man? Well, s was too tired tonight to analyze it , and she knelt beside her window in t starlight to pray. As she prayed her oughts were on the young man once re, and she felt her heart go out in ging for him, that he might find a y to "make good," whatever his ouble had been.

CHAPTER VII

THE next day was filled with unpacking and with writing letters home. dint of being very busy Margaret anaged to forget the minister, who emed to obtrude himself at every pos-

Continued on page 121

HUDSON SUPER SIX TRADE NAME REG.

In Hudsons Only

Can You Get

$1375 at Detroit

The Super-Six Motor

Patented by Hudson
December 28, 1915
Patent No. 1165861

The Transcendent Car

That fact fixes Hudson supremacy.

All previous Hudsons, though the leaders among fine cars, have had rivals of like type.

Now the motor which has broken all stock-car records is controlled by Hudson patents.

The undisputed monarch in motor efficiency can be had in the Hudson only. Never before has any car controlled a like attraction.

OUR OUTPUT, $42,000,000

That is why we doubled our factory before announcing the Super-Six. And we bought materials for 42 million dollars' worth before anyone saw the car.

For here is a motor nearly twice better than our former best. A motor whose performance has never been matched in any size or type or price.

And all the demand for that motor, on which fine car buyers will insist, must be met by us alone.

A 76 HORSE-POWER CAR

Here is the smallest motor ever built with 76 horse-power capacity. And the lightest.

The size is identical with the Hudson Six-40, yet it shows 80 per cent more efficiency.

It out-performs all other types.

There never was such flexibility, such quick response, such quiet operation. Never such reserve power without greater size and weight.

There never was a stock car which could speed like this, or creep like this, or pick up so quickly, or glide with such bird-like motion.

And all this is due to ending vibration. It is the very acme in motor attainments.

ALSO LUXURIOUS CARS

This patented motor makes the Hudson the great car of the day. Men who want the best must have it. So we have embodied all the luxuries which that class demands.

The bodies are entirely new creations. They are new in design, in finish, in upholstery, and in features like the double-cowl. In all respects—down to smallest details—they mark the limit in fine body-building.

We do not need to argue that fact. Hudson eminence in these respects is apparent at a glance.

MEETS EVERY MAN'S WANT

Today men who want the superlative car will find that we control it. Any comparison will prove that to their satisfaction.

But we also want to urge what the Super-Six means in economy to those who seek it.

Despite its power, this motor is small and light. The lack of vibration reduces friction to minimum—a vast saving in fuel and in wear.

And our mammoth production gives you a value unmatched among quality cars.

If you have any idea of paying even $1000, you will find actual savings to outweigh the difference in the Hudson Super-Six.

On exhibit at all Hudson showrooms.

7-Passenger Phaeton, $1375 at Detroit.

Five Other Styles of Bodies.

World's Records

Made at Sheepshead Bay under supervision of American Automobile Association, with a 7-passenger stock-car Super-Six. Breaking all stock-car records for any size, or any price, or any number of cylinders.

100 miles in 80 min., 21.4 sec., averaging 74.67 miles per hour, with driver and passenger.

Previous best stock-car record was made with a multi-cylinder car carrying driver only.

75.69 miles in one hour with driver and passenger.

Two laps made at 76.75 miles per hour.

Standing start to 50 miles per hour in 16.2 sec. A new record in quick acceleration.

HUDSON MOTOR CAR COMPANY, DETROIT, MICH.

Shift Your Gears
From The Steering Wheel

The same power that cranks your motor will shift the gears of your automobile at the touch of a button. The controlled by push button mounted on the steering column at your finger tip, out of the way of lap robe or overcoat, makes the gear shift lever unnecessary and permits you to shift from any speed to any speed—instantly and surely—by merely pressing a button.

C-H MAGNETIC GEAR-SHIFT

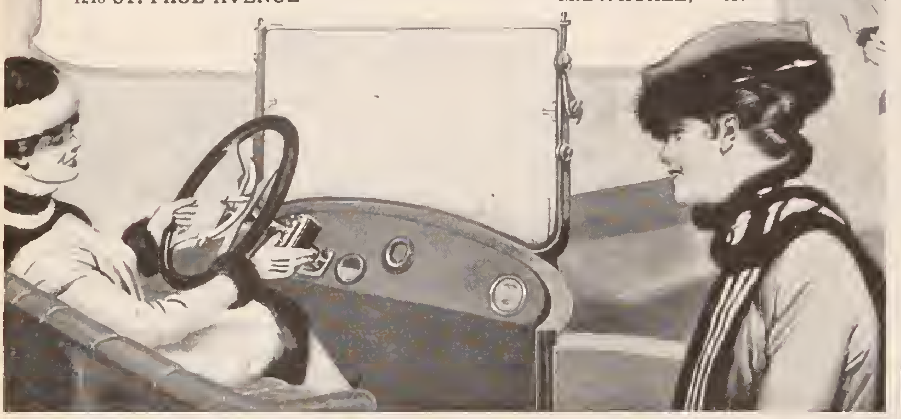
No need to take the eyes from the road or to lose steering control for a single instant. No stripping or clashing of gears. The C-H Magnetic Gear Shift makes the most powerful gasoline car as easy to drive as an electric coupe. Practical! Economical! Simple in operation—startling in efficiency. The century's greatest gift to Motordom. Insist that your next car be equipped with the C-H Magnetic Gear Shift.

WRITE FOR BOOKLET

THE CUTLER-HAMMER MFG. CO.
1218 ST. PAUL AVENUE
MILWAUKEE, WIS.



First Lady: But surely, my dear, these are not the same things I helped you make before you were married?
Second Lady: Oh, yes, they are! You see, they have always been washed with Fels-Naptha soap, without hard rubbing, so have not been frayed or worn out.

Several other important advantages are gained by the use of Fels-Naptha. Not only are the clothes saved from undue wear, but the time taken for washing them is reduced by half, their color keeps perfect, the work is hardly work at all. That's because the naptha and other wonderful cleansers dissolve the grease and loosen the dirt. They do the hard part of all soap and water work.

FELS-NAPTHA
FELS-NAPTHA

Fels & Co.
Philadelphia

The Boldness of Peter and John

International Sunday School Lesson for February 6
Acts 4: 1-31

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By REV. F. B. MEYER, D.D.

"Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong." I Cor. 16: 13.

Charles Kingsley was once asked, "What is your favorite motto or proverb?" And he answered "Be strong." When Dean Stanley preached his funeral sermon in Westminster Abbey, it was from this verse which is our Golden Text today. He said that the three main lessons of his character and career might be summed up in the three parts of this stirring watchword. There are plenty of wobblers in the world. They have no backbone; no stickfastness; no steadfastness. They walk in silver slippers, and are afraid to soil them. Their pride is that they have been innocent of any gross sin; but they forget that it is a sin not to enter a protest when Christ o truth or a noble character is being assailed But how are we, who are naturally timorous and weakminded, to become firm as a rock and strong as a lion? It would be impossible, were it not that all God's commands are enablings. If he bids a paralyti man to stretch forth his withered hand, it i because in the very effort to obey his direc tion the man finds that power is communicated. So is it in God s dealings with us He says to Peter, "Thou art a Rock": bu his Spirit arises within the apostle's heart a a fountain of life and strength. "I can do al things in Christ which strengtheneth me."

Strange Boldness and Strange Hatred

By Arthur H. Howland

ONE of the most baffling problems of life and history is the question why certain people hate certain things, particularly why some people who profess to be champions and promoters of goodness, hate and antagonize new movements and new leaders. Present-day life, secular history, church history and Scripture history are full of instances of this sort. Often, in fact usually, the hatred and antagonism can be traced back to a fondness for money and the dislike of losing it. The riot at Ephesus described in the nineteenth chapter of Acts is typical in this respect. Demetrius said frankly in leading the opposition to Paul: "By this craft we have our wealth." The silversmiths were part of the religious cult at Ephesus. They made images of the city's goddess. Of course, they got paid for these images, but many of them doubtless sincerely believed in the worship which they promoted. Now, if the Deity that Paul preached was to be worshiped there would be no need for silver images of Diana. So Demetrius and his fellow craftsmen would lose their fees.

But there is often a deeper reason for the prejudice than the love of gain. There seems to be in the human heart an innate, intuitive rebellion against God and against the truth, and when a newcomer appears with a new message, the spontaneous, instinctive cry is "Away with him!" So these priests and the leader of the temple did not like to have these Galileans talking about Jesus of Nazareth and declaring that he had risen from the dead. It annoyed them, it angered them, it distressed and enraged them. They could not reasonably object to the mere fact of a man having been healed of lameness by the apostle's faith; they could not object to the spirit of brotherhood and helpfulness manifested by these believers in Jesus; they would have no reasonable grounds for objecting to the declaration of the apostles' faith that Jesus of Nazareth was the long expected Messiah. Of course, they did object to the accusation that they had killed the Messiah. But Peter had been careful to say in an earlier address: "And now, brethren, I know that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers." But the real secret of their antagonism must be found in this strange, innate dislike of the human spirit to face the truth, particularly when that truth brings a man face to face with God. So these priests of the temple arrested these disciples of Jesus and put them in the city prison.

Two of the ecclesiastical officials presiding at their trial the next day had recently had before them that strange person, Jesus, the Carpenter of Nazareth. They must have been startled when Peter in explaining and justifying his conduct said: "If we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man, by what means he is made whole, be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth man stand here before you who Then it was that the strange bold of Peter and John stood out in cont to the strange hatred of their pressors. The Sanhedrin marvelec this boldness. They could not acc for it; but they knew that the men been with Jesus. They felt that Spirit of the man they had thought c was working still in these men who c do deeds so strange and who could persecution with a boldness equ strange.

"And beholding the man who healed standing with them, they c say nothing against it." This is the that Christianity or any other f must meet: What has it produ Just now the record looks pretty The organized church is not produ results at all commensurate with money and effort expended; nation Europe that had called themse Christians are busy trying to des one another. Notwithstanding t suggestions of failure, there are in e land men standing by who have l healed, and against whose transfor tion not a word can be spoken.

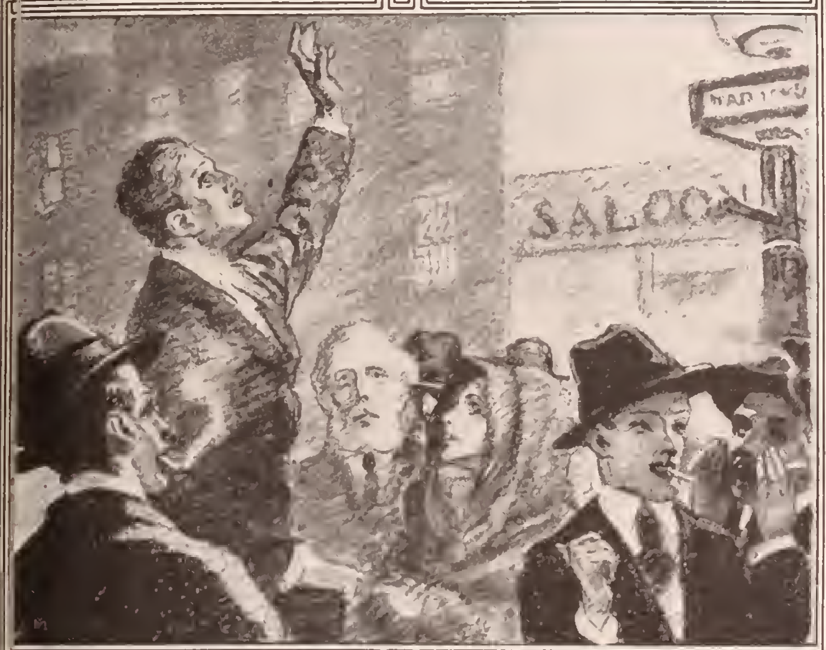
As I write these words, I have come back from taking lunch with men who stand, like this healed cri of long ago, as unanswerable argum to the redeeming power of Jesus. of them was a crook, a grafter, a dru ard, a thief. Four years ago it w perhaps have been hard to find i New York a crueler, crookeder, fo man than he. Today he is clean, k humble, honest, efficient, sympath energetic—saintly. The other ma man of high birth and good breec wandered for years in the maze agnosticism. He, too, was saved; s by what seemed like a chance visit, pelled by curiosity, to the same mis at which the other man had just been redeemed. Both these men f widely different walks of life, saved f widely differing forms of sin, were c pelled at about the same time to through the toughest possible sor test. Their hearts were crushed by sudden loss of their faithful wi Friends stood by aghast and hel in the presence of their grief. W their new faith stand the test? W they still trust the Deity who had lowed them to be so heavily scour But they did stand it. They are st ing it. And today they are numb among that proud and happy multi upon whom the world may look as ing been healed and saved by the p of Jesus, and against the fact of w healing no man can say a word.

But still these ancient rulers of church felt that something must be to stop the new propaganda. T could not deny the miracle; they d not dispute the power of the n through which it had been perfor but neither could they afford to l that name proclaimed further. So threatened the apostles and comma them "not to speak at all nor teac the name of Jesus." But Peter John, with this strange boldness upon them, answered: "Whether i right in the sight of God to hearken you more than unto God, judge ye;

we annot but speak the things which we ave both seen and heard."

hold again the power of Christian tesmony. These men had seen things and had heard things so vital, so precio, so valuable, so real, that they co not help talking about them. Misters wonder why it is so hard nowads to get people to testify in the prar meetings. Is it not because so may of our church people have, as a maer of fact, nothing to testify to? Ha they seen Jesus? Have they head his voice? Have they felt the tou of his hand upon theirs? Have the felt the power of his salvation puting through their souls? If they ha they could not keep still.

he apostles were finally dismissed. Th were not afraid to be punished, bu the priests were afraid to punish them, "because of the people; for all men glofied God for that which was done." ow notice the beautiful account of a prayer meeting, the kind of prayer meeting they had just after Pentecost. When Peter and John were released, they went right back to the waiting circle of believers and told what had happened. Instead of laying plans to retaliate, instead of trying to get even, they all took to prayer. We don't know who it was who first led in prayer, but some of the words of that beautiful prayer are recorded. They told the Lord about their persecutions and asked, not for revenge, not for protection, but for what? For more boldness. That was a prayer God was glad to answer, and how well he answered it shall be seen from the chapters to follow. The very place where they were praying seemed to be shaken by the power of God that fell upon their souls. They received instantly that boon of greater boldness for which they asked, and began to go out to tell more people about Christ's uttermost salvation.



"ord, bless these young men who have been scoffing at thy word." A young apostle John proclaiming the Gospel, while a present-day Peter stands near

The Gift of Sleep

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

I WAS cleaning the huge desk that stands in the window of my bedroom. When I have nothing more iportant to do I usually clean my desk —lean it vigorously. Letters are torn u half finished verses usually follow tm to the waste basket; cards and pers and clippings flutter in the air. I as cleaning my desk.

utside it was snowing, snowing so hd that I was stranded at home with nhing more important than desk caning to do. The air was filled with stly merciless white flakes that whirled sntly, swiftly past my window. The gund was drifted with white piles of sow. There was a specially high drift uler my window, and as I saw the nted, sharp outlines of it, I realized tt under that drift lay a rosebush that l flowered fragrantly in June. As I tught of it blooming there, the whole ldscape seemed drearier, sadder, more peless to me.

"All of the world is—dead," I thought lefully, and turned away from the rm and began to attack the cluttered t of my desk even more vigorously.

As I sorted papers and letters and ppings, piling some of them in neat cks, throwing others in disordered aps, I tried resolutely to turn my oughts away from the buried garden. t every time that I raised my eyes I w the grave-like drifts that had been wer beds, the bare branches that at e time had been flowering shrubs. mmer seemed very far away—almost returning. It was then that I came on The Clipping.

It lay under a pile of other clippings; inted on rather heavy brown paper; and I lifted it curiously in my hand, attracted, perhaps, by its color. Most clippings in my desk are black and white newspaper clippings. As I looked at it I saw that it was called "A Morning Prayer." The author was Robert Louis Stevenson.

"The day returns," began the prayer, "and brings us the petty round of irritating concerns and duties. Help us to play the man; help us to perform them with laughter and kind faces; let cheerfulness abound with industry. Give us to go blithely on our business all this day; bring us to our resting beds weary and content and undishonoured; and grant us in the end the gift of sleep. Amen."

"THE gift of sleep." I looked out over the freezing landscape. The snow was whirling faster now—more heartlessly, lightly, coldly. And then I glanced down at the garden spot under my window—at the rosebush that was entirely covered with snow. And as I looked I thought of the words of the morning prayer. I thought of the rosebush that had bloomed in June and the thorns that had grown with it—thickly, piercingly, on its stem. "The day returns," said the prayer, "and brings with it the petty round of irritating concerns and duties—" Perhaps if a rosebush could read a morning prayer, could feel a morning prayer, thorns would have taken the place of those irritating concerns and duties in its mind.

I thought of the sick child who had loved the blossoms. How she had smiled when she laid the soft pink petals

DODGE BROTHERS
WINTER CAR

Warmth and protection and comfort are, of course, their chief attributes but these Winter Cars are built with an eye to convenience as well—

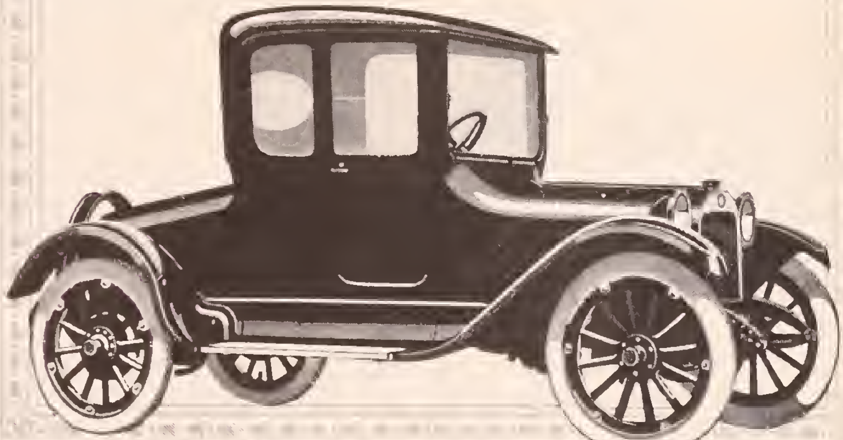
For instance, the doors are as high as those of a coupe. They open readily from within or without. Their wide swing makes entrance and exit easy. Ventilation is provided by means of adjustable windows. There is clear-vision on all sides, for driver and passenger.

The gasoline consumption is unusually low.

The price of the Winter Touring Car or Roadster, complete, including regular mohair top is $950
(f. o. b. Detroit)

Canadian Price, $1335
(Add freight from Detroit)

DODGE BROTHERS, DETROIT



ADLER'S PLAN
SAVES HALF

Before you decide on an organ for Church, Sunday School or Young Peoples' Society, you should get my big FREE ORGAN BOOK and details of my direct-from-factory selling plan. I will save you big money.

CHURCH ORGANS

Any size or style shipped freight prepaid for 30 days absolutely free trial. Price so low and terms so easy that no Church, Sunday School or Young Peoples' Society need be without a sweet-toned, resonant, durable, highest grade organ. My organs won highest prize at St. Louis World's Fair and National Conservation Exposition. Fifty year guarantee. Send postal for big, free book of all styles of organs for homes, Churches, Sunday Schools, etc.

C. L. ADLER, Pres., ADLER ORGAN CO.,
8009 W. Chestnut Street, Louisville, Ky.

SPLIT HICKORY VEHICLES

FREE
MY 1916 SPLIT HICKORY BUGGY BOOK
Just drop me a postal and I will send you a copy of my big, new, 1916 Buggy Book, Free and Postpaid. It shows more than a hundred stunning new styles which my big factory is turning out this season at prices as low as only $39.25 and up. Think of getting a genuine Split Hickory—guaranteed 2 years at such prices. Send today and see how to save $20 to $40 on your new rig. Address
(6)
H. C. PHELPS, Pres.
THE OHIO CARRIAGE MFG. CO.
Station 219 Columbus, Ohio

WHEN YOU SOLDER SOLDER WITH SOLDERALL
SOLDERALL
TRADE MARK
PATENT APPLIED FOR

50 Mends for 50 Cents
Price 50c

Genuine Solder

With an ordinary match it easily mends and solders metals permanently. Used by the housewife, farmer, electrician, automobilist, moving picture operator, jeweler, merchant and mechanic.

AGENTS WANTED

Show what it will do and it sells itself. Everybody wants SOLDERALL. Send 50c for large tube. Your money back if dissatisfied.

EMENAR CO.
47 E. 23rd Street NEW YORK CITY

La Grippe

Cause, Prevention and Cure by Dr. Elmer Lee Editor of the Health Culture Magazine is one of many interesting features in the February issue. Every month it is a mine of valuable information on health topics.
$1.00 a year; 15 cents a number.
Six months "On trial" for 25 cents.
Send now. Money back if not satisfied.
HEALTH CULTURE, 514 ST. JAMES BLDG., NEW YORK

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

Does YOUR Church use this cleanly and sanitary method? Send for catalog and special offer. Outfits on trial.
Thomas Communion Service Co. Box 150 Lima, Ohio

AGENTS WANTED in every county in U. S. to sell an "Instructive Missionary Game." Good seller. Commission 20 per cent. Inquire of
C. E. DOANE Strongsville, Ohio

Good Health is Your Birthright and almost every woman can have a Perfect Figure

I know it!

I have helped 75,000 splendid women to better figures, better health, and richer happiness in real living—and I will help you. You will be delighted at the very start with the simple, practical, pleasant methods I advise—and with the improvement you realize in your physical and mental happiness.

Expressing Poise—Balance—Ease

You Can Be SO Well

A physician writes me: "Am very glad to tell you that you've made a new woman of my wife. Her weight Dec. 14th last was 184½ lbs., today, May 17th. i. is 146½ lbs. You may perhaps recall the cramps in toe. lameness and pain in Sacro-iliac joint, catarrh, headaches, dyspepsia, epigestic tenderness, constipation (but I'll be easy on you, won't prolong the list)—these are all things of the past."

A pupil writes: "I've gained 8 1-2 lbs. in 5 weeks. Don't you think that's good, Miss Cocroft?

In the privacy of your room, with just a few minutes a day, you follow the simple, easy, pleasant methods I arrange to fit your individual, personal case; practical, scientific exercises for the nerves and muscles controlling the weakened organs, as well as to decrease or increase your weight, improve your figure and find a perfect poise of body and mind. If you suffer from

Indigestion Sleeplessness Catarrh
Constipation Nervousness Headache
Anemia Torpid Liver Weakness
Rheumatism

write me about yourself. If you know some friend whom I have helped, or am helping, ask her. Write me about your faults of health or figure; your letter will be personal to me and my reply will be just as sincere to you. I number thousands of physicians among my friends; their wives and daughters are my pupils. Medical magazines advertise my work. With my letter to you I will send my book which is filled with valuable information. It tells how to stand, sit and walk, and many other simple things which are truly helpful. If you do not need it get it for a friend. I will send it free.

Write to me now. Do not wait. I have had a wonderful experience, and I should like to tell you about it.

SUSANNA COCROFT,
Dept. 18, 624 Michigan Ave., Chicago

Rand, McNally & Co. have just published Miss Cocroft's new book, "Beauty a Duty." For sale at all booksellers. Beautifully bound.

Allay Pain Quickly

by rubbing in a few drops of Absorbine, Jr. It is surprising how promptly it penetrates and acts—how clean and pleasant it is to use and how economical, because only a few drops are required to do the work.

Absorbine Jr.
THE ANTISEPTIC LINIMENT

is an efficient germicide as well as a dependable liniment. When applied to cuts, bruises and sores, it kills the germs, makes the wound aseptically clean, and promotes rapid and healthy healing. It allays pain and inflammation promptly. Swollen glands, painful varicose veins, wens and bursal enlargements yield readily to the application of Absorbine, Jr.

A 10% solution sprayed into the throat is cleansing, healing and kills the germs. An excellent preventive—thoroughly efficient and yet positively harmless. Absorbine, Jr., is made of herbs, non-poisonous and non-destructive of tissue.

Absorbine, Jr., $1.00 a bottle at druggists or postpaid.

A LIBERAL TRIAL BOTTLE will be sent to your address upon receipt of 10c in stamps.

W. F. Young, P. D. F.
5 Temple St. Springfield, Mass.

against her wan little cheek! How she had sniffed eagerly at their delicate perfume! "Help us to perform them with laughter and kind faces," had been the words of the prayer. Ah! as the roses lifted their heads by that little bed the golden hearts of them had indeed been kind!

I thought of the fragrance that had filled the whole garden, that had wafted up to my room and stirred vaguely along the dusty street in the summer-time, and the next line rang in my brain: "Give us to go blithely on our business this day." This world would be a happy one if everybody's business might be as wonderful as the business of a rosebush—the giving of beauty and sweetness!

Then at last the words came back to me again: "Grant us in the end the gift of sleep!"

And I had called my garden dead!

I KNOW a trained nurse who goes out on a great many cases—very difficult cases. She is a careful nurse, an efficient nurse, a cheerful nurse. Therefore she is much in demand. But, after every long case, no matter what inducements are offered to her, no matter how great a personage a patient is, she will not go out again until she has rested up for several days.

"Why, it wouldn't be fair to the patient, or the doctor, to say nothing of me!" she answers when you question her. "I wouldn't be able to do anything worth while." If you question her further she goes more into detail.

"It's this way," she tells you. "I get cases because the doctors like me, and my patients all grow fond of me, because, in a way, I'm popular. Well, if you stop to analyze it, why am I popular?

"People like to have me around because I can comprehend what they want—and do it for them. Could I comprehend if my brain were tired? They like me because I'm cheerful. Can you be cheerful when your eyes are half shut with utter weariness? Would they be glad, if I jumped from one case to another as some nurses do, to have me around? Well, they might for a while. It might take several years for me to get peevish and worn out and old before my time. Then nobody would want me, and even if they did, I wouldn't be able to help. Yes, I can do good—but I couldn't if I wasn't rested and fresh and calm."

You, friends of mine, know that she is right. Some of you who correspond with me are schoolgirls and college girls, and I think that you'll agree with me that you are better fitted for an examination when you've been resting the night before instead of sitting up until dawn and studying. Some of you are club women, some of you are home-makers. You know how much easier it is to prepare that paper for your next meeting; or to plan Sally's graduation dress, after a wonderful, refreshing night's sleep. You business girls know that it isn't easy to be clever and well informed when your head is nodding.

The Gift of Sleep is a great gift—one of the greatest gifts that our Father has given to the tired children of the earth. It's a wonderful thing to shut one's eyes and slip away from the worries of the daytime into the oblivion and rest of the night. It's a wonderful thing and it's a necessary thing.

IT was still snowing when I finished cleaning my desk. Neat stacks of manuscript, fastened with rubber bands; neat piles of letters, neat boxes of pencils and pens, clean blotters and freshly filled ink wells smiled at me in an orderly, well-bred way. I smiled, too, as I looked out of the window.

It was still snowing, though the flakes were a bit finer now. The drift over my rosebush was even deeper. But, as I looked at the somber whiteness, it did not make me feel sad.

"My garden is—asleep!" I thought, happily, as I looked out at it.

Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

MRS. J. Y. writes from Mukwonago, Wis.: "About a year ago I asked the prayers of the League that a young church brother who was insane and also physically ill might be restored to health. Both physically and mentally that prayer has been answered. He has been himself for more than a year." M. S. writes from Danville, Ky.: "I write to tell you of the glorious revival in Danville. It has been felt for hundreds of miles about. I asked the prayers of the League for this revival and God has heard them." Mrs. P. P., Corry, Pa., writes: "I wrote four months ago asking prayer that a nephew might be restored to health. He is now well and able to work." H. S., Lewiston, Mont., writes: "Some time ago I asked prayer for a dear one's health, and I am thankful to say she is much improved, for which I am truly thankful to God and the Prayer League." A Subscriber from Springfield, Mass., writes: "I want to acknowledge an answer to prayer. My boys have better positions."

Mrs. L. E. S., of Paris, Me., has a practical and correct view of the relation of prayer to means of healing. To pray for health does not mean that we can neglect the ordinary means of healing. There are laws of the body, as well as laws of the soul; and the best human knowledge of the body should be made use of to accompany our prayers. Mrs. S. says: "I wrote to you requesting prayers for my health. In a short time I was told of a simple remedy which helped me greatly. I think it was a direct answer to prayer, for which I thank God very much." Luke, writer of the third Gospel and the Acts, evangelist of Christ and friend and fellow worker of Paul, was a physician. There are many earnest, devout, consecrated physicians. When a believer is ill he should ask God's direction in choosing a doctor, should pray that God will direct the physician in prescribing remedies and treatment, and then pray that God will add to the medicine and treatment the help of his omnipotence and the blessings of his love.

R. C. writes from Milo, Me.: "About a year ago I wrote asking prayers for a revival here in our village, for the cause lay very low and the churches were almost disheartened. The first week in October the Lord sent Evangelist E. W. Kenyon to us and he labored five weeks with the most marvelous results. About eighty men are serving Christ, and many women. No such revival was ever known in these parts."

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have also been received from:

Reader, S. C.; Miss V. M., Reeds, Mo.; D. D., Del Norte, Colo.; Marie, Topeka, Kan.; M. A. B., Hale, Mo.; S. J. S., Oxford, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. W. C.; A Friend, Duluth, Minn.; Miss J. D., South Holland, Ill.; J. O. J., Akron, Ohio (for help in securing employment); Mrs. J. M., Amsterdam, N. Y.; M. A. T., Hartford, Conn.; Mrs. H. M., Sterling, Ohio; Mrs. E. B., St. John, Wash.; Mrs. C. S. W., LaFayette, N. Y.; Mrs. P. E. P., News Ferry, Va. (for healing of daughter); Mrs. H. S., Pontiac, Mich.; A Praying Mother, Carlisle, Pa.; Mrs. R. O. R., Westernville, N. Y.; B. Y., Philadelphia, Pa.; Mrs. E. R. G., Indianapolis, Ind.; Mrs. J. M. G., Carnek, Pa.; A Subscriber, Springfield, Mo.; E. B. C., Nottawa, Mich.; Mrs. L. E. S., South Paris, Me.; Mrs. F. E. H., Rochester, N. Y.; Mrs. H. C. R., Wellsville, N. Y.; T. J. W., Selma, Ala.; Mrs. R. P. P., Tobaccoville, N. C.; Mrs. L. M. S., Fort Worth, Texas; Mrs. W. A. L. (for glorious revival at Tate, Tenn.).

A letter was received today by special delivery mail from Miss H. E. G., of Poultney, Vt., asking the special prayer of the League for her sick mother. She writes: "Please pray that my dear mother, who is very ill with pneumonia, may be restored to health if God sees it is best, and that I may trust fully in his love and goodness whatever his will for us may be. I know he hears and answers prayer."

Special prayers are also asked for the recovery of Mrs. Schell, of Philadelphia,

"Just what I hav been waiting for-"

This is what one woman wrote us when sh
read the Bissell advertisement announcin BISSELL'S VACUUM SWEEPER an CLEANER. "I have seen many vacuums, bu want one with your name on it," the letter said—gratifying evidence of the confidence inspire by the name BISSELL'S.

"I am delighted! It is all that I expecte and I expected a great deal," was her repo after a thorough trial—

—Proof that BISSELL'S lived up to the reputation when they perfected

BISSELL'S

Vacuum Sweeper and Clean

Careful, practical tests have demonstrate that these hand-propelled BISSELL machin develop as much or more suction power an cleaning efficiency as various electrically ope ated machines. In one test, conducted by dealer without our knowledge, the BISSEL extracted more dust per given area of carp than a standard make of power machine.

They are light and smooth-running; easi emptied; have exclusive advantages and co veniences no other make affords.

Prices are $7.50 for the Vacuum Cleaner (wit out brush) and $9.00 for the Vacuum Sweepe (with brush). Slightly higher in the Wes
South, and in Canada. Carpet Sweepers $2.7 to $5.75. Sold by dealers everywhere. Bookl on request.

BISSELL CARPET SWEEPER CO
Largest Exclusive Manufacturers of Carpe
Sweeping Devices in the World
Dept. 123, GRAND RAPIDS, MICH
Made in Canada, too.

STRAWBERRIE
give the Quickest, Bigges and Surest Profits o
Anything You Can Grow

The work is so easy and simpl that even beginners make big profit from the start. Our free book tells how

Kellogg's Everbearers

produce big crops of big, fancy berrie from June until November. Light freez ing does not affect their fruiting.
The berries are in great demand. Price range from 30 to 45 cents per quart. Three month after plants are set, your profits begin. Ou free book tells the rest.

A Kellogg Strawberry Garden

will add beauty, pleasure and profit to you home. Get our free book and learn how t supply your entire family with delicious straw berries the year round without cost.

Great Crops of Strawberries and How to Grow Them, the best and most complet strawberry book ever writter
Fully explains the Kellogg Way. 64 pages of commo sense, actual experience, strawberry facts, pictures galore. Kellogg's free book, Kellogg's free service and Kellogg Pedigree Plants insure your success. Our book is worth its weight in gold—costs you nothing. Send for copy today. A postal will do.

R. M. KELLOGG CO.
Box 670
Three Rivers, Michigan

Rider AGENTS Want
in each town to ride and show a new model "RANGER" bicycle Write fo special offer on a sample to introduce DELIVERED FREE on approval an days' trial. Send for big free catalo particulars of most marvelous offer made on a bicycle. You will be aston at our low prices and remarkable te 94 STYLES, sizes and colors in Ra bicycles. Most complete line in Ame
Other guaranteed models $11.95, $14.75
$17.60. A few good second-hand bic taken in trade, $3 to $8 to clear.
Tires, lamps, wheels, sundries, parts, an bicycle supplies at half usual prices. Do not until you get our catalog and offers. Write
MEAD CYCLE CO., DEPT. G-71, CHICA

OYSTERS
Shucked daily as they c
from the famous Chesape Bay with their natural water flavor.
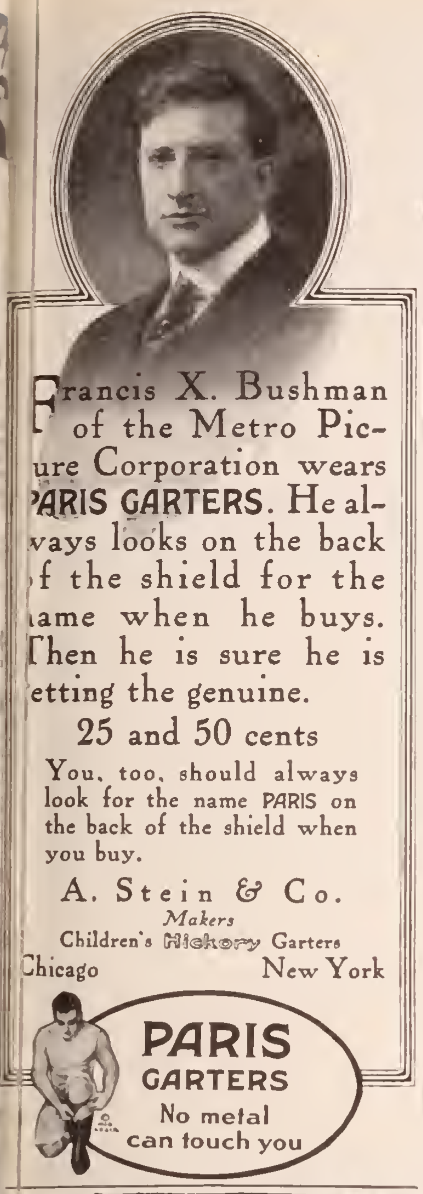
SINGLE GALLON - - $1.
THREE GALLONS - - 3.
C. N. ROBINSON & BRO., Dept. 200, Baltimore,



Francis X. Bushman of the Metro Pic-ure Corporation wears PARIS GARTERS. He always looks on the back of the shield for the name when he buys. Then he is sure he is etting the genuine.

25 and 50 cents

You, too, should always look for the name PARIS on the back of the shield when you buy.

A. Stein & Co.
Makers
Children's Hickory Garters
Chicago New York

PARIS GARTERS
No metal can touch you

Since 1856
egory's Honest Seeds have been the standard for those demanding the best. For 60 years we have supplied thousands of growers all over the U. S.

Our 60th Year in Business

To celebrate this 60th Anniversary we want to get acquainted with 25,000 garden lovers. Send for this collection:

5 Large Packets for 10c
Gregory's Improved Crosby Egyptian Beet; Lucullus Swiss Chard; Gregory's Hanson Lettuce; Scarlet Globe Radish; Japanese Climbing Cucumber; including Garden Blue Print with directions.

60th Anniversary Catalog FREE. A handsome book full of valuable information about honest seeds and honest prices. Send for collection and catalog today.

J. J. H. Gregory & Son
219 Elm Street
Marblehead, Mass.

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE
try in your own home 30 days free, no matter where live. Show your friends. Send it back at our ex-se if you do not want to keep it. Hundreds of thou-ds in daily use. Perfect bakers, efficient heaters, made high grade material, beautifully finished, smooth design, guaranteed for years by our Two Million Dollar Bond.

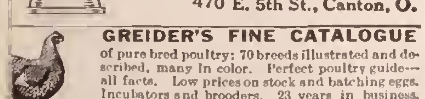
Ask your dealers to show you Hoosier Stoves. Write for our big free book showing photographs, describing large assortment of sizes and designs to select from, explaining our free trial. Send postal today. Write your name and address plainly. No obligations.

HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, Ind.

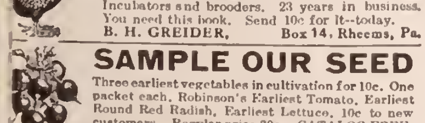
The "BEST" LIGHT

Positively the cheapest and strongest light on earth. Used in every country on the globe. Makes and burns its own gas. Casts no shadows. Clean and odorless. Absolutely safe. Over 200 styles. 100 to 2000 Candle Power. Fully Guaranteed. Write for catalog. AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE.

THE BEST LIGHT CO.
470 E. 5th St., Canton, O.



GREIDER'S FINE CATALOGUE
of pure bred poultry; 70 breeds illustrated and described, many in color. Perfect poultry guide—all facts. Low prices on stock and hatching eggs. Incubators and brooders. 23 years in business. You need this book. Send 10c for it—today.
B. H. GREIDER, Box 14, Rheems, Pa.



SAMPLE OUR SEED
Three earliest vegetables in cultivation for 10c. One packet each, Robinson's Earliest Tomato, Earliest Round Red Radish, Earliest Lettuce. 10c to new customers. Regular price 30c. CATALOG FREE.
C. N. Robinson & Bro., Dept. 64, Baltimore, Md.

Pa. She is critically ill; her mother is broken-hearted. The friend who sends this request writes: "Please pray that her life may be spared; she is so much needed in the home." She adds: "Last year when I was so ill it was Mrs. Schell's desire that you should pray for me, and your prayers were answered. Oh, if only God would hear and answer our prayers for her recovery!"

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Nashville, Tenn. (that pastor may be successful in revival here); Walnut, N. C.; Omak, Wash.; Lawton, Okla.; Lyndhurst, N. J.; Hamilton, Mont.; Harveyville, Kan. (that many may be saved during the revival services being held); Sanbornton, N. H. (in the Congregational Church); Plains, Mont.; Carlisle, Pa.; Williamsport, Pa.; Fredericktown, Ohio; Otsego, Mich.; South Paris, Me.; Lincoln, Neb.; Mapleton Depot, Pa.; Lincoln, Ark.; Lake View, Iowa; London, Canada. Mrs. R. P. P. asks prayer that Sunday school may have increased attendance and that neighborhood may experience spiritual blessings. Mrs. F. E. B. asks prayer that she and her family may be led by God's Holy Spirit to do only those things that he can sanction, that their faith may grow stronger, and that they may be permitted to remain with the church until it is reunited and stronger than ever before. Mr. Forest Cole, formerly Dr. Cox's assistant at Central Church, Memphis, is accompanying Gipsy Smith, Jr., as evangelistic singer. He asks prayer for God's blessing upon their campaign.

J. E. and Mrs. M. W. ask prayer that their sons' minds may be restored; Mrs. L. M. R. and Mrs. F. C. D., their daughters'; Mrs. J. S. and Mrs. A. J. W., their husbands'; and Mrs. H. C. R. and Mr. R. O. R. their mothers'. Eleven other friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for other relatives, friends or themselves.

Mrs. I. M. P., Mrs. G. D. S., and Mrs. C. F. M. ask prayer that their husbands' sight may be restored; G. M., her mother's; Mrs. N. C., her son's. Thirteen other friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for other friends or relatives or for themselves.

Forty-one friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Eleven parents ask prayer that their sons may be delivered (from the liquor habit; Mrs. D. E., her husband. Twelve other friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be delivered from this habit.

J. D. and P. S. W. ask prayer that their sons may be cured of the drug habit.

Mrs. S. R. asks prayer that seven sons may be saved; twenty-eight other parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; seventeen wives, their husbands. Sixty other friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be converted.

Twelve readers ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for relatives or friends.

Eighty-five friends ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives, including Mrs. B. A. R., that her husband may be cured of tuberculosis; H. M., that mother may be cured of cancer; and L. P. B., that mother may be restored to health and cured of tumors. Fifty-eight friends ask prayer for the healing of self, including Mrs. J. E. P. that the use of left arm and limb may be restored, and Mrs. S. A. T. that the use of limbs may be restored.

Mrs. A. E. P. asks prayer that husband's hearing may be restored. Rev. D. C. M., that daughter's hearing may be restored. Six other friends ask prayer for restoration of hearing for friends or for themselves.

Thirty-two friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Forty-five friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs, including L. C. B., who asks that a home may be found for an orphan girl.

Helen Keller on Preparedness

Continued from page 111

"IT was no accident that the Navy League came into prominence at the same time that the National City Bank of New York established a branch in Buenos Aires. It is not a mere coincidence that six business associates of J. P. Morgan are officials of defense leagues. And chance did not dictate that Mayor Mitchel should appoint to his Committee of Safety a thousand men that represent a fifth of the wealth of the United States. These men want their foreign investments protected.

"Every modern war has had its root in exploitation. The Civil War was fought to decide whether the slaveholders of the South or the capitalists of the North should exploit the West. The Spanish-American War decided that the United States should exploit Cuba and the Philippines. The South African War decided that the British should exploit the diamond mines. The Russo-Japanese War decided that Japan should exploit Korea. The present war is to decide who shall exploit the Balkans, Turkey, Persia, Egypt, India, China, Africa. And we are whetting our sword to scare the victors into sharing the spoils with us. Now, the workers are not interested in the spoils; they will not get any of them, anyway.

"The clever ones, up in the high places, know how childish and silly the workers are. They know that if the government dresses them up in khaki and gives them a rifle and starts them off with a brass band and waving banners, they will go forth to fight valiantly for their own enemies. They are taught that brave men die for their country's honor. What a price to pay for an abstraction—the lives of millions of young men; other millions crippled and blinded for life; existence made hideous for still more millions of human beings; the achievement and inheritance of generations swept away in a moment—and nobody better off for all the misery!

"The kind of preparedness the workers want is reorganization and reconstruction of their whole life, such as has never been attempted by statesmen or governments. The Germans found out years ago that they could not raise good soldiers in the slums, so they abolished the slums. They saw to it that all the people had at least a few of the essentials of civilization—decent lodging, clean streets, wholesome if scanty food, proper medical care and proper safeguards for the workers in their occupations. That is only a small part of what should be done; but what wonders that one step toward the right sort of preparedness has wrought for Germany! For eighteen months it has kept itself free from invasion while carrying on an extended war of conquest, and its armies are still pressing on with unabated vigor. It is your business to force these reforms on the Administration. Let there be no more talk about what a government can or cannot do. All these things have been done by all the belligerent nations in the hurly-burly of war. Every fundamental industry has been managed better by the governments than it was managed by private corporations.

"It is your duty to insist upon still more radical measures. It is your business to see that no child is employed in an industrial establishment, or mine, or store, and that no worker is needlessly exposed to accident or disease. It is your business to make them give you clean cities, free from smoke, dirt and congestion. It is your business to make them pay you a living wage. It is your business to see that this kind of preparedness is carried into every department of the nation, until every one has a chance to be well born, well nourished, rightly educated, intelligent and serviceable to the country at all times.

"Strike against all ordinances and laws and institutions that continue the slaughter of peace and the butcheries of war. Strike against war, for without you no battles can be fought. Strike against manufacturing shrapnel and gas bombs and all other tools of murder. Strike against preparedness that means death and misery to millions of human beings. Be not dumb, obedient slaves in an army of destruction. Be heroes in an army of construction."

◆

DURING October, 1915, the Arts College of the Shantung University, China, was visited by Rev. Ding Li Mei, accompanied by a Mr. Stephans, an evangelist from the Southern Baptist Mission of Dingtu, who had been so attracted by Ding Li Mei's work that he had decided to travel around with him. As a result of the meetings, fifty-two persons—chiefly servants and workmen from the compound—announced that they intended to accept Christianity, or at least to study its claims. One of the best college teachers declared his decision to study for the ministry, although this decision meant comparative poverty for himself and family.

BLUE STREAKS

Seven thousand dealers are saving money for more bicycle riders daily by selling them non-skid Blue Streaks at $2.50 each.

The riders are getting better service, too, from this guaranteed standard-quality Goodyear.

Say "Goodyear Blue Streak" when you buy new tires. You can always tell a Goodyear by the beautiful white tread and the Blue Streaks on each side. Any dealer can supply you.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company
AKRON, OHIO

GOOD EAR
A K R
Bicycle Tires

DOOR EXHAUST
AIR TIGHT CONTAINER
CHEMICAL RETORT
CHEMICALS
AIR VENTILATION

Comfort Indoor Closet

ODORLESS SANITARY GERM-PROOF

Every home without sewerage needs one. Most convenient, meritorious home necessity in a century. A boon to sick people. Can be placed anywhere in house.

Makes Outdoor Privy Unnecessary

Put a warm Comfort Toilet in your home; a guarantee of healthy, sanitary conditions. Germ-life killed by chemicals in retort. Emptied once a month—no more trouble than throwing out coffee grounds. Needs no other attention. Boards of Health endorse it. Write now for literature, prices, etc. Agents wanted—exclusive territory.

Comfort Chemical Closet Co.
541 Factories Bldg. Toledo, Ohio

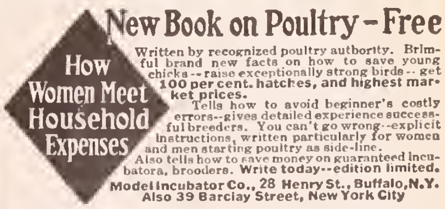
Seeds, Roses

Bedding Plants, Fruit and Ornamental Trees, Shrubs, Vines, Hedge—everything for garden, home and orchard beautifully pictured and described in our 1916 catalog—America's Nursery Guide and Authority. Sent FREE, postpaid. Tells all about planting and care, how to have charming garden and attractive home surroundings at small cost.

Catalog FREE

Save Money—Buy Direct. Over 1200 acres, 60 acres of roses, 48 greenhouses, 7 kinds of soil, 62 years' experience. Seeds all tested, nursery stock free from disease. No risk. Safe arrival and satisfaction guaranteed. Write for catalog today.

The Storrs & Harrison Co.
Dept. 183 Painesville, Ohio



New Book on Poultry—Free

How Women Meet Household Expenses

Written by recognized poultry authority. Brimful brand new facts on how to save young chicks—raise exceptionally strong birds—get 100 per cent. hatches, and highest market prices.

Tells how to avoid beginner's costly errors—gives detailed experience successful breeders. You can't go wrong—explicit instructions, written particularly for women and men starting poultry as side-line.

Also tells how to save money on guaranteed incubators, brooders. Write today—edition limited.

Model Incubator Co., 28 Henry St., Buffalo, N.Y.
Also 39 Barclay Street, New York City

TABLE GRACES For DAILY USE SPECIAL DAYS and OCCASIONS
All Will Welcome This New Book of Graces. Postpaid. Paper, 25c. Cloth, 50c. M. E. MUNSON, 77 Bible House, New York, N.Y.

The Strong Demand

for well-secured short-term investments has effected an appreciable rise in the prices of these securities.

Their stability, marketability and income return particularly recommend them for investment at this time.

We can supply a limited amount, strictly subject to prior sale and advance in price of

6% NOTES
Due July 1, 1917

of a successful Public Utility Company, secured by 120% of bonds, and with earnings over six times interest charges

To Yield Slightly Over 6%

Ask for Circular H-11

A·H·Bickmore & Co.
111 BROADWAY, N.Y.

6% Investments

For $100, $500 and Larger Amounts

First Mortgage Bonds on Chicago Real Estate Improved with Modern Buildings

Abundant security in established localities. Constantly increasing margin of security. Large Income.

After fifty years' successful experience in handling investments upon Chicago property we recommend these in the strongest terms to investors requiring safety and attractive yield.

Ask for Circular C

Peabody, Houghteling & Co.

(Established 1865)

10 South La Salle Street Chicago

Stocks and Bonds ON THE PARTIAL PAYMENT PLAN

Our convenient method enables you to buy dividend-paying Stocks and Bonds in any amount—one, five, ten, seventeen, forty—by making a small first payment and balance in monthly installments, depending upon what you can afford to pay, $5,$10,$25,$40,$75. You receive all dividends while completing payments and may sell securities at any time to take advantage of rise in market.

Free Booklet E-2 "The Partial Payment Plan." Gives full information of this method which appeals to thrifty men, and women in all parts of the country.

Sheldon, Morgan & Co.
42 Broadway, New York City
Members New York Stock Exchange

WE'RE RIGHT ON THE GROUND

FAVORITES OF THE WISE INVESTOR

Not one of our customers has ever lost a dollar through our

6% Farm Mortgages

Here's a sample of our offerings:

No. 4336—$5000. Due Dec. 1, 1920. Secured by 320 acres, 5 miles from good market in a highly developed section. All the land tillable. Splendid buildings. Value, $14000. Write today for Booklet "O," and current offerings

6%

E. J. LANDER & CO.
Grand Forks, N. D.
Est. 1883
Capital and Surplus, $400,000

Investment and Insurance Counsel

This department is maintained for the benefit of our regular readers; the service is offered entirely free of cost to them, and all correspondence is strictly personal and confidential, in so far as the identity of the inquirer is concerned. Always enclose letter postage and write name and address plainly, addressing your inquiry to Financial Editor, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City.

Neither the Christian Herald nor any other publication can guarantee the value of investment securities. We do all we can, however, to make sure of the integrity of our advertisers before admitting them to our columns. Any advice given is an expression of our conclusions, based upon information we believe to be reliable, but we must not be held responsible, should any loss arise from its acceptance.

Answers to Financial Queries

J. D. T., GEORGIA. (1) A good opportunity for speculation, with a minimum of risk, is presented by short term public service corporation notes, selling under par. (2) Chicago real estate mortgages are sound. (3) E. H. Harriman.

E. M. D., NEW JERSEY. We can find no quotable value to International Land Company convertible bonds. This company is one of the Foster promotions, and the scheme was to sell small fruit farms in southern California.

L. N. A., ILLINOIS. We know nothing about Seattle real estate, nor have any facilities for obtaining independent appraisal of the value of the advertised lots. One of the surest ways to lose money is to buy land you have never seen.

O. A. P., IOWA. Life insurance companies, chartered under the state of New York, are permitted by law to buy bonds of foreign governments. Massachusetts insurance companies cannot do this, according to a recent ruling of the commissioner of insurance.

H. M. C., MASSACHUSETTS. United 5 and 10 Cent Stores stock is quoted at $2. This is probably the best price you can get. Although a sale at this price will represent a large loss to you, we would advise that you dispose of your stock.

REV. C. B. D., MAINE. The Banking Department of the State of New York, as receiver, has paid a third instalment dividend to Industrial Savings & Loan creditors, amounting to 10 per cent. This makes the total paid 35 per cent. Checks were mailed December 10.

F. V. H., NEW YORK. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company First Sinking Fund Gold 5s are one of the best public service bond issues in the market. We see no reason why you should have the slightest fear for the safety of your money, nor that you should be induced to sell just because you have a two-point profit.

MRS. W. M., CALIFORNIA. The casualty company you ask about was organized in 1905. It reports assets of only $352,630 and a net surplus of only $97,908. Compared with other casualty companies the concern is way down in the lists in point of relative size and strength. Why insure in a small company? It costs no more to buy a policy in a big one and you are infinitely better protected.

MRS. J. W. G., SOUTH DAKOTA. The crayon portrait proposition looks insincere. The firm tells you their products can be sold by any one, inexperience being no drawback. This is obviously untrue. There are thousands of persons who would be failures as chromo venders and the writer is one of these. Besides, the concern wants you to put up a deposit for "samples." The whole thing looks fishy. Keep out of such schemes.

H. H. W., NEW YORK. Do not sell your American Sugar Refining common. The company has a long dividend record behind it and we see no reason to fear any immediate break in the continuity of payments for years to come. Domestic refiners anticipate a further advance in the price of granulated sugar within the next three months and predictions have been made that a level of ten cents per pound will be reached before summer.

MISS N. A. N., OREGON. The insurance company you ask about is relatively small, not over strong financially and, most important of all, it offers too much for the money. We do not believe in "health" insurance. We do not believe that any company can afford to insure a person against illness, and companies that write this class of risk assume too much. We believe in life insurance, also in accident insurance, but only when it is issued by a responsible company. Write to the Travelers Insurance Company of Hartford, Conn.

D. M. G., TENNESSEE. (1) Neither Erie first preferred nor Wabash "B" preferred lends itself well to the partial payment plan. In buying stocks on instalment payments it is advisable to select sound, dividend-paying issues, such as Atchison, Southern Pacific, Baltimore & Ohio and Pennsylvania. (2) Erie common, as a strictly speculative proposition, is perhaps attractive to one who will buy the stock outright. This is also true of Wabash. The Wabash has just come out of the hands of the bankers, bright, fresh, clean, and the preferred issues look speculatively attractive, though dividends seem now to be very far off.

T. J. W., INDIANA. True to its name, Ætna Explosives has exploded, the stock going down from 178 to 75 in a few weeks, to the consternation and loss of those who were foolish enough to buy such a highly speculative and risky issue. The company was formed four months after the war commenced to manufacture high explosives for the Allies. Various reasons have been attributed for the failure of the stock, none of which has received official sanction. It has been recently reported the company was making one hundred thousand dollars a day in net profits. This may be so but the stock was never any better than a gamble, and is not now, after a 90-point break.

MRS. E. N. R., WEST VIRGINIA. The farm mortgage business as conducted today is entirely different from that of twenty or thirty years ago. Whereas formerly the business was unorganized and pretty generally experimental, and largely in the hands of irresponsible firms, today the business is conducted in an organized manner, and many of the farm mortgage bankers possess large capital and are in every way reliable. We believe you need have no hesitancy in dealing with the firm you mention, as it is one of the largest in the country. The house claims that no investor with them has ever lost a dollar, though millions' worth of mortgages have passed through their hands.

F. M. R., PENNSYLVANIA. "Rock Island" stock, that is, the preferred and common stocks of the former holding company, the Rock Island Company, are now of little or no value. The stock now generally known as Rock Island is that of the operating company, the old Chicago Rock Island & Pacific Railway, now in the hands of receivers. This stocks is quoted around $17. It formerly sold as high as $207 per share. There will probably be an assessment. The annals of American finance contain no chapter quite so foul, quite so black, as the wrecking of the Rock Island. A few soulless scamps looted the property of $200,000,000. They are not in jail, probably never will be, and worse still are still "honored" members of polite society.

F. H. P., CALIFORNIA. (1) Your interesting letter regarding margins is every word true. The vast majority of margin stock speculators lose in the end. We will venture to say that few of the speculators who have made fortunes in the rise of war stocks will have a cent of their gains left a year from now. It is always the case—"easy come, easy go." (2) We can find no Amber Oil Company organized in 1865. Moody lists an Amber Oil & Refining Corporation, but this is a new company. Whether it is operating the properties formerly owned by the old Amber Oil Company we do not know. (3) The partial payment plan for the acquirement of good, dividend paying stocks commends itself to the prudent man who can afford to spare from his income a regular monthly sum and will regularly make the payments to the dealer as they become due.

D. L. P., DELAWARE. In endeavoring to get a home many people borrow on a straight mortgage whereby they agree to pay a certain sum at a certain future time, in the meantime paying interest on the entire debt, semi-annually or annually. This plan is often unsatisfactory and unwise. The mortgage falls due, the money to pay it is not on hand and a new mortgage has to be given. These renewals are annoying and expensive and sometimes the mortgage becomes due or is called at a time when it is difficult to get the money elsewhere. Interest consumes the resources of the family while the debt still hangs over the home. The best plan is to acquire ownership of your home through monthly payments through the agency of a local building and loan association whereby the homeseeker not only pays his interest but reduces his principal monthly as he goes along and in due time the home is free and clear.

A. S., CANADA. You tell us you have $4,000, which you have worked very hard to get, and that you would have to invest it in

The Standard Oils
For Maximum Income Yiel

¶ With prices of crude and refined products advanc ing, as they are, Oil stocks never looked more a tractive as an investment than right now,

¶ It is a public fact that thousands of investors hav become wealthy from their Standard Oil holding through receipt of handsome cash dividends an stock bonuses.

¶ And, moreover, thousands of investors are sti destined to become wealthy through the same chan nel. Therefore investment in Standard Oil issues i highly desirable.

¶ Our free Oil Special will help you in makin a proper selection. Ask for 9-C. H., includin booklet explaining

"The Twenty Payment Plan"

SLATTERY & Co
Investment Securities
(Established 1908)
40 Exchange Place New York

Postal Savings Syster
Savings Banks
The Investment Banke

Over 525,000 depositors, mostly foreign bor have entrusted the Postal Saving System wi $65,000,000. An average of $125 each.

Over 11,000,000 persons have abo $5,000,000,000 on deposit with the incorporat savings banks of the Country. An average about $500 each.

Savings banks' investments are averaged ov various classes and varieties of choice securiti The small investor is thus much better protect than he could possibly be by investing ind pendently.

The investor of large amounts should, in o judgment, pursue the same policy of diversi cation.

The average investor has neither the expe ence nor the knowledge to enable him to this unaided.

It is our province as investment bankers to guide our clients that they will obtain all t income possible commensurate with safet Our facilities are at your disposal.

Write Department 227

HARVEY FISK & SONS
62 Cedar Street New Yo

Chas. S. KIDDE & Co.
INVESTMENT BANKERS Est. 18

IN THE LONG RUN

You will be better satisfied with the investments you purchase from an established and reliable Banking House. Every Bond we offer to readers of the Christian Herald will stand the most rigid investigation. Why not invest your funds in sound Municipal Bonds bearing 5% to 6% and obtain the additional income over and above the 3% savings bank rate? Write for our latest list of attractive offerings in denominations of $100 and $500.

W.C.T.U. Bldg. Chicago.

L.R. LATROBE & Co.

STOCK EXCHANGE SECURITIES
STANDARD OIL STOCKS
ALL CURB SECURITIES

111 Broadway New York

Partial Payment Plan and Investor's Guide (270 pages), revised to date, also Market Letter mailed free on request.

HAVE YOU LOST YOUR MONE

Through unwise or ill-advised financial undertakin

Is SECURITY your main object, when you mak investment? If so, read "Investment Factors"—w tells the BEST WAY TO INVEST YOUR FUN whether you have $100, $500, $1,000 or more to plac

Ask us to send you our desirable 5% to 6% invest offerings regularly—be sure to request that your r goes on our mailing list.

BOWMAN, COST & COMPANY
Investment Bankers
615 Third Natl. Bank Bldg., St. Louis,

IF you are doubtful how to invest your surplus funds w safety and at Maximum interest returns, our bookl "Farm Mortgages as an Investment," will assist you solve the problem. Your postal card request will bring Founded in 1899. No-Loss

SPOONER & ROBINSON
FARM MORTGAGES
10 So. La Salle St. Chicago,

FORMAN FARM MORTGAGES

Your interest is our interest. Our 31 years without loss to a single investor is proof positive that our selection of Farm Mortgages is an ideal and sound investment for your money. Prepare for your next investment by writing us today.

George M. Forman & Company
11 So. La Salle St., CHICAGO

6½%
SOUND FIRST MORTGAGES

We pay 6½% Secured by Oklahoma Real Estate worth three times the value of the loan. The demand for these first mortgages in unsettled times indicates their unusual stability. First Mortgages do not shrink in value—they are safe and sure. Interest always paid date it is due. Over $1,000,000 loaned and not a single cent lost to any investor or a single foreclosure sale made. Isn't a first mortgage the right investment for you? Write for booklet describing methods, and lists of loans from $300 to $10,000.

AURELIUS-SWANSON CO., Inc.
40 State National Bank Bldg.
Oklahoma City Oklahoma

enty Years' Experience

he you buy Municipal Bonds from us you are tti the benefit of our twenty years' experience s cialists in Municipal Bonds.

et submit you a list of Municipal Bonds ee om the income tax (an increased tax is im in) and paying from 4% to 6%.

GER, MOSSER & WILLAMAN

9 LaSalle St.
C ago, Ill.
Organized 1894

our Savings

Will buy a good safe $100 Public Utility Bond on the installment or partial payment plan in less than 1 year.

$10 or $20 a Month Will Do It

Send for Booklet A and list of bonds

P. W. BROOKS & CO
(Incorporated)
ck Exch. Bldg.
Philadelphia
115 Broadway
New York

Does YOUR Church Need a New Organ?

Or new furnishings? How much is needed to complete the interest on the mortgage? What amount does the Missionary Society need to complete the fund they want?

We have a plan whereby $100.00 or over can be obtained through the members of your church. If interested address the

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT
CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House, New York

some form of security that you can depend upon when you get old—something "safe and sure." There is no absolutely safe investment, any more than anything else in life is safe. Every act or deed we perform in our journey through life is predicated to some extent upon uncertainty. It is so in making investments. The security was never invented that was exempt from all element of risk. The best a prudent man can do is to buy the bond that seems to be sound and when properly advised the investor has little to fear for the security of his principal. We believe you can buy one each of any four of the following $1,000 bonds with reasonable assurance of their soundness:

Penn. R. R. Con. 4½s	to yield	4.25%
Illinois Steel 4½s	" "	5.10%
Wabash Railroad 1st 5s	" "	4.70%
Adams Express 4s	" "	5.10%
Virginia Ry. 5s	" "	5.10%
St. Louis, R. Mtn. & Pac. 5s	" "	5.67%
Erie R. R. Genesee River 6s	" "	5.45%
Public Service Corp. 6s	" "	4.50%
Evansville El. Ry. 4s	" "	5.49%
Holyoke St. Ry 5s	" "	4.60%
Am. Pub. Service 1st 6s	" "	6.00%

N. O. O., VERMONT. Murchie Extension Mine is out of business, the stock worthless and the swindlers who sold the stock are in jail. The foolishness of buying mining shares is eloquently demonstrated by the following paragraph which appears in the Financial World:

"Having examined over 1500 mining propositions without finding a single one worth while developing, the Canadian Mining & Exploration Co., backed by wealthy New York and Canadian business men, has decided to dissolve and return its capital to its subscribers. Now if a company with a capital of over $5,000,000 finds it so difficult to get good mining properties, what earthly chance have the poor dupes who are told by the get-rich-quick mining promoter that mining is like a manufacturing business, all required being to locate the mine and then proceed at once to take out the ore and turn it into cash?"

C. D. B., IOWA. The recent report of the Secretary of the Interior shows that of the 1,240,875 acres under the reclamation projects only 761,271 acres were occupied, leaving some 500,000 acres unoccupied, but which the government is willing to water. According to the report the average return per acre of cropped irrigated land was $23.80, a yield altogether too small to provide an adequate payment for labor after payment of all overhead charges.

MRS. B. S. A., VIRGINIA. Instead of buying Western Maryland stock with your $700 buy seven good $100 bonds. Your attention is directed to the following, which may be obtained through any bond firm advertising in these columns:

Central Illinois, Ltd., 5s	to yield	5.50%
Denver Gas & Elec. 5s	" "	5.25%
Am. Gas & Elec. 5s	" "	5.50%
Beth. City Water 5s	" "	4.95%
United Lt. & Rys. 5s	" "	6.00%
Virginian Ry. 5s	" "	5.10%
N. Y. Central Deb. 6s	" "	5.00%

This page went to press January 13, 1916

A Week in the World's News

Continued from page 103

force was completely baffled. The firemen found their hose cut as fast as they could lay it. For a few hours the mob had complete control, looting stores and setting fires. Armed men under the command of the sheriff finally restored order. The governor of Ohio sent two regiments of troops to take charge of the situation. At last reports the situation was well in hand, and progress was being made toward a settlement.

NEW HAVEN JURY DISAGREES. The jury of the United States District Court of New York, before whom eleven ex-directors of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad were tried under the Sherman Act for conspiracy, the trial lasting from December 13 to January 7, found six of the directors not guilty but disagreed as to the innocence of five—William Rockefeller, Lewis Cass Ledyard, Charles F. Brooker, Charles M. Pratt and Edward D. Robbins.

MORE MERCHANT SHIPS. Under the leadership of C. W. Morse, who was released from the Atlanta Prison over a year ago by President Taft in order that he might die at home, a new corporation or group of corporations has been organized to operate vessels in the European and South American trade. Mr. Morse and his associates are reported to have obtained thirteen steamers at a cost of about $3,000,000 with a total tonnage of 8,179. Twelve of these steamers are to be operated at once between American ports and Archangel, Russia; the other ship will go into the South American service. The ships will fly the American flag.

DON'T SPIT. This is the warning on 200,000 cards distributed by the New York City Board of Health on January 12 as a part of a new crusade to rid the city of expectoration in public places. The rapid spread of the grip epidemic has made the Board of Health and the Police Department even more determined than usual to put a stop to the unsanitary and disgusting practice of spitting. During 1915 efforts toward enforcement of the ordinance were somewhat relaxed, and only 1,233 arrests were made. In the beginning of the campaign on January 12, five hundred arrests were made in one day, and those found guilty of a deliberate breach of the law were fined from one to five dollars each.

FOOD AND DRUG ACT UPHELD. On January 11 the Supreme Court of the United States unanimously upheld the constitutionality of the Sherley Amendment to the Food and Drug Act, which provides that any shipment will be held misbranded "if its package or label shall bear any statement design or device regarding the curative or therapeutic effect of such article or substances contained therein which is false and fraudulent." In the case at issue, a false and fraudulent statement had been contained in a pamphlet enclosed in a package in which the article was sold to the consumer.

WASTING THE CHILDREN. In its third annual report, the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor calls attention to the fact that three-fifths of the 30,000,000 children of the United States are rural children, and that the percentage of illiteracy in rural communities is in general double that of cities, the rate of illiteracy being highest where there is much child labor. According to the report, the physical dangers of child labor have never yet been measured, and the bureau urges the reasonableness of spending money to secure proper standards for the full and intelligent protection of the physique and mental powers of youthful workers. During the past year the bureau has been studying the social causes of infant mortality and doing constructive work for child hygiene. It has also been compiling various state laws relating to children and analyzing the administration of child labor in selected typical states.

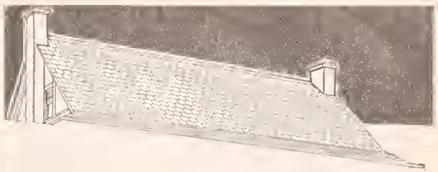
INSTRUCTION BY MAIL. The state of Massachusetts, through its Correspondence Study Division, is offering 66 courses of instruction, which will be conducted by correspondence. The subjects include elementary branches of English and mathematics, history, literature, a comprehensive list of engineering subjects, and financial and economic subjects.

LONG DISTANCE AUTO DELIVERY. An auto delivery service has been established between New York and Philadelphia, five-ton motor cars leaving each city at the same time each morning. With the improvement of the highways, there will no doubt be a wide development of such service throughout the country.

POSTAL SAVINGS. In a previous issue we noted the deficit of $11,000,000 in the receipts of the Postoffice Department for the fiscal year. In the same report the Postmaster General gave the number of depositors in Postal Savings banks on June 30, 1915, as 525,414 and the total of deposits at the same time as $65,684,708. Depositors born outside of the United States owned nearly 72 per cent. of all the deposits, and approximately 30,000 depositors had $500 accounts, the limit under the law for one account. Nearly 55,000,000 pieces of mail were registered, insured or sent collect on delivery during the year. More than 18,000,000 parcels were insured and about 5,000,000 packages were sent collect on delivery, which includes insurance.

TO MAKE PURE IRON. Dr. Trygve Yensen, of the Engineering Department of the University of Illinois, has announced a discovery, developed during an investigation of the magnetic properties of iron and iron alloys, which it is estimated will save more than $15,000,000 a year to the electrical industry of the country by the production of pure iron. The iron is melted electrolytically in a vacuum and has been proved to have high magnetic properties. This new iron will make possible a considerable reduction in the size of electrical units for the same power, and has been made free to the world by the discoverer.

BIG DRY DOCK AT PANAMA. The south leaf of the gate of the big 1,000 foot dry dock at Balboa, Canal Zone, was swung November 27, and it was expected that the other leaf would be in position before January 1. The gates are exactly like the gates on the canal locks, except that they swing on greenheart quoin posts and have greenheart miter posts where they meet, the lock gates having cast-steel posts faced with greenheart. The dry dock will accommodate any vessel which can use the canal. The new battleships under construction for the United States Navy, the Idaho, Mississippi and California, will have a beam of 97 feet, which gives them a clearance of only 12 feet and 8 inches in the canal locks. The battleship Ohio with a beam of 72 feet is the widest vessel that has yet used the Canal.



Asphalt Shingles
Make the Efficient Roof

LONGER LIFE with fewer repairs because made of Asphalt, Nature's permanent waterproofing. Many beautiful colors, low cost, three thicknesses, no leaking—these are some of Asphalt Shingle's many advantages.

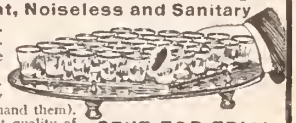
You will be agreeably surprised to see what a handsome and efficient roof they make, without increasing the cost.

Asphalt Shingles Destined to Roof the Nation's Homes

Every Home Owner Needs This Book

You can use Asphalt Shingles to re-roof your old house. This book tells how. It will save money for you if building a new home. Write for free copy of "The Roof Distinctive."

Asphalt Shingle Publicity Bureau
856 Marquette Building, Chicago



"The Sanitary" Individual Communion Cups
Convenient, Noiseless and Sanitary

The individual communion service permits an impressive ceremony. We introduced individual cups (many state laws now demand them). We make the finest quality of beautiful polished trays and supply thousands of satisfied congregations. Send for list of these churches and FREE CATALOG with quotations.

SENT FOR TRIAL

SANITARY COMMUNION OUTFIT CO., 67th St., Rochester, N. Y.

VIOLIN MANDOLIN GUITAR or CORNET GIVEN FINE TONE

To introduce our wonderful new system of teaching note music by mail, Violin, Guitar, Mandolin, Piano, Organ or Cornet, will give you a dandy instrument without cost and guarantee to make you a player or no charge; complete outfit given. Write at once. Special offer to first pupils. No obligation.

SLINGERLAND'S CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Dept. 142, Chicago, Ill.

WANTED in every town in the United States, an intelligent man or woman, boy or girl to represent The Christian Herald. This is an opportunity to build up a business of your own, which should grow more and more profitable year after year. Address:

Agency Dept., THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House, New York City

Army and Navy Liquid Glue
Odorless, Clean, Mighty to Mend

The ONLY liquid hide and sinew glue. Send 10 Cents and we will send you at once anywhere, postpaid, a large self-sealing container of this REAL glue.

Name of your dealer appreciated
STANDARD GLUE CO., Dept. C, Baltimore, Md.

ORCHARDS in Famous Fruit Belt of Virginia. Low price—easy terms—on railroad, near market. Write for list. Farm lands $15.00 per acre up. Mild summers, short winters, good markets. If you will send names of two friends interested in Virginia or North Carolina will enter your name for year's subscription free to Southern Homeseeker. Write F. H. LaBAUME, Agrl. Agt., Norfolk & Western Rwy., Room 327, N. & W. Bldg., Roanoke, Va.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

MONEY FOR YOUR CLUB OR SELF
Sell new household necessities to Club members or your neighbors in spare time. No capital or experience needed. Large profits. Easy sales. Permanent business. Send postal for particulars and free catalog
HAMILTON CO., Dept. 27, TOLEDO, OHIO

YOU CAN AFFORD Familiar Songs of the Gospel (No. 1 or 2). Round or shape notes. $3 per hundred; samples, 5c each. 83 songs, words and music.
E. A. K. HACKETT, FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

INVENTORS Do Not Sacrifice Your Inventions
Get full money value. RELIABLE Book Free! Write
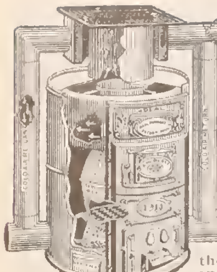
R. S. & A. B. Lacey, 610 Barrister Bldg., Washington, D.C.

58 BREEDS Fine pure-bred chickens, ducks, geese and turkeys. Northern bred, very hardy, vigorous and beautiful. Fowls, eggs and incubators at low prices. America's pioneer poultry farm. 22 years exp. Large fine catalog free. F. A. Neubert, Box 654, Mankato, Minn.

KIDDER'S PASTILLES For 50 yrs. Standard Relief for Asthma (Inhalation) All Druggists; or by mail, 35c.
STOWELL & CO., Manufacturers, Charlestown, Mass.



Save $30 to $50
ON THIS COMPLETE FURNACE

No extras of any kind — no bricks to lay —no pipes to fit—no labor to hire. $82.50 and a day's time will comfortably warm and ventilate your entire house. The greatest furnace bargain in the country. Our enormous output makes possible the low price of $82.50 for an Ideal. You cannot buy a different furnace as good as the Ideal for less than $125 to $150. Ventilates as well as heats. Delivers large volume of pure warm air instead of small amount of over-heated air. No shrunken furniture—headaches, cold and other discomforts. Plenty of heat even in zero weather.

Write Today for 30 Days' Free Trial Offer

Ideal Pipeless Furnace

Burns Wood, Coal or Coke

SAVES FUEL, MONEY AND TIME

Lessens danger of fire; eliminates dust, dirt, wear and tear incident to stoves. One fire to keep up instead of several. Simple—easy to operate. Nothing complicated. Fitted with patented triangular anti-clinker grates—practically indestructible. In revolving, grates cut up ashes, chop them and grind clinkers. Deep ash pit. Large heavy heat radiator. Corrugated fire pot adds strength and heating surface. Special pipes take cold air to furnace. Thus cold air goes down and then up after heating, insuring correct heating and ventilation, not obtainable by any other process. Big fuel feed door. Positive easy operating drafts. Vapor pan to keep air moist. In fact an A-1 furnace from start to finish at a very low price. Cole Reed, Ind., wrote us last year, "Have your furnace in my nine room dwelling and temperature doesn't vary five degrees. During a week or ten days of zero weather it performed splendidly." Write today for full particulars, different sizes, large descriptive picture, showing principle of operation, etc. Why not have the comfort, convenience and safety of an Ideal Pipeless Furnace, all winter long.

IDEAL FURNACE CO., 401 Ideal Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

Paint Without Oil

Remarkable Discovery That Cuts Down the Cost of Paint Seventy-Five Per Cent.

A Free Trial Package is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.

A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. Y., has discovered a process of making a new kind of paint without the use of oil. He calls it Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powder and all that is required is cold water to make a paint weather proof, fire proof and as durable as oil paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and costs about one-fourth as much.

Write to Mr. A. L. Rice, Manuf'r., 109 North St., Adams, N. Y., and he will send you a free trial package, also color card and full information showing you how you can save a good many dollars. Write to-day.

35 CTS. PAPERS A BIG ROOM

Just think—only 35c for enough beautiful four color bronzed side wall, ceiling and border to paper a big room. Write today for our Free Book of over 100 big samples of wall paper and see this dandy paper. Also, our exquisite 1916 papers consisting of plain and rich, heavily embossed gold, oatmeal, grass cloth, leather, tiffany, silk and creton effects at 3c to 55 cts a double roll of 16 yards. Finest varnished tiles, 22c a double roll. Combination matched with cut-out borders ready for hanging at 1c a yard up. Wall paper for all rooms direct to you cheaper than dealers buy at in carload lots. See for yourself—don't wait. Get samples now—today—and see our beautiful art paper and marvelously low prices.

OVER 100 SAMPLES
WALL PAPER
3¢
DOUBLE ROLL UP
16 FULL YARDS

PAINT on FREE TRIAL. Try it at home; if it suits keep it, if not return at our expense. LOWEST PRICES: SEE—House paint 98c gal. Barn paint 59c gal. in 50 gal. bbls. If interested send for free book showing 124 colors of paint for all purposes. Write today.

JOHN M. SMYTH MDSE CO. 703-747 Washington Blvd. CHICAGO

There is the same marked difference between fresh Olive Oil and Olive Oil packed months ago as there is between a newly-laid egg and an egg months old. Insist on
POMPEIAN

$3.25 Special Offer $3.25

Christian Herald ($1.50 a Year) - -
Youth's Companion ($2.00 a Year) -
Remaining issues of 1915 FREE
McCall's Magazine (50c a Year) -
(including choice of a 15c pattern FREE)

$3.25
Save 90c

ADDRESS

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Young People's Topics for February 6

The Consecration of Influence

B. Y. P. U. Topic. Heb. 10 : 19-25 (Consecration Meeting)

THE fact of influence is something many people would like to run away from. They do not like the idea that the character and deeds and destiny of other people are affected by what they do. But much as we may dislike this fact, we cannot change it. An aching tooth may say: "I can ache all by myself and not bother my neighbors in this body." But it can't carry out the proposition. "If one member suffer all the members suffer with it," said Paul (I Cor. 12 : 26), and no anatomist could have put it better. "No man liveth to himself," he said at another time, "and no man dieth to himself." (Rom. 14 : 7.) So whether we like it or not we are bound up inextricably with multitudes of human lives, and what we do will have more to do than we can possibly estimate with what they do and what they become.

The new school of psychotherapy has made some startling, it is hardly too strong to say shocking, discoveries and demonstrations about the power of one life to influence another. Not only the conduct of a child's parents before the child's birth, but their conduct to and treatment of him during his earliest months and years, his first observations of cruelty, his first impressions of unfairness, his first knowledge about some of the fundamental facts of life, his first sensations of too much petting or too much punishment—all these things go into the making of the man or woman that is to be. Not only parents and members of his own household, but his companions, the people he sees casually —all these leave their impress upon the developing personality.

And this continues in greater or less degree all through life. How many of our opinions, our convictions, our habits, we get from others. We are constantly giving and receiving impressions that mold and change and fashion and produce events which reach only God knows how far.

Now, what is to be done with this stupendous power of influence? There is only one safe and wise thing to do with it. Consecrate it to Christ. He is the world's one great safe and helpful Influencer. He will make our lives sound and wholesome and productive of good.

"Let us consider one another," our Scripture passage urges. "Let us provoke unto love and good works." That is an odd and striking use of the word "provoke." It is usually connected with strife. But just as some persons provoke others to anger or jealousy and misdeeds, Christians are to provoke others to love and good works. Challenge them; set them an example; stir them up; lead them—to kindness and helpfulness.

Notice that this topic is studied next week by the Christian Endeavor Societies, and that today's Christian Endeavor topic is considered next week by our societies.

Fidelity and Force

Christian Endeavor Topic, Matt. 25 : 31-46 (Christian Endeavor Day)

ON the first Sunday of every February, Christian Endeavor forces throughout the world take account of stock, look back to see just what has been done, compare it with what might have been done, ask why what was done did not tally more accurately with what might have been done, and particularly look ahead and make the kind of plans and preparation that will ensure a more completely satisfactory year.

Two words are suggested for next year's program: Fidelity, Force.

What are we to be faithful to?

We might make a long list of loyalties and say that we must regard them all, but they are all included in one: We must be faithful to Christ. To be faithful to him involves being faithful to truth, faithful to our conscience, faithful to our work, faithful to our opportunities, faithful to our duty to others.

Faithfulness to Christ means not only faithfulness in our thought of him, faithfulness in our affection for him, but it means faithfulness in our deeds for him. "Why call ye me Lord, Lord," he asks, "and do not those things which I say?" (Luke 6 : 46.)

He laid down certain great principles of personal conduct and principles of social organization, and to be true to him means that we shall strive to the utmost that is in us to realize those principles in life.

The sources of the Force we may and must have is the same as the object of our Fidelity—Christ. "I can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth me," Paul boasts. (Phil. 4 : 13.)

The motto of the great International Sunday School Convention at Chicago in 1914 was "Jesus Shall Reign." Those words gleamed day and night above the convention platform and inspired the hosts of Sunday school workers gathered there. Alas, that within a few weeks from the time that assembly dispersed a whirlwind of hate broke forth in Europe which is raging yet!

It happened because Christian nations were not faithful to the Christ whose name they bore; it happened because they trusted in another sort of force than the force he stands for and supplies.

How will it fare with our world-wide society? How will it fare with our nation? How will it fare with our local organization? How will it fare with your individual life and mine? Well or ill, successful or futile, fruitful or barren, triumphant or defeated, according as we are willing or unwilling to be faithful to Christ and willing or unwilling to let his Power flow through our souls.

Look at the B. Y. P. U. notes and save them till next week. Our topic then will be the one they are considering today.

When It Costs to Be True

Epworth League Topic. I Sam. 20 : 27-33; 31 : 2, 3; II Sam. 19 : 23

AS mankind goes, just about nine hundred and ninety-nine thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine men out of a million would have been furiously jealous if another man had come into their father's household as David came into the home of Jonathan and his father Saul. Jonathan was the prince, but David was the popular idol; Jonathan would have been king, but the throne had been promised to David. If David could be gotten out of the way or kept down, Jonathan might yet inherit that throne. But day by day Jonathan was true to David; spared him, saved him, helped him—loved him. Jonathan took toward David the attitude John the Baptist assumed toward Christ: "He must increase, but I must decrease."

Now we are met with a stern fact, a hard challenge. Jesus demands that every follower of his adopt that same high standard of love and service in his relation with every other person that this brave, high-souled Jonathan adopted toward David. "In honor preferring one another"—that is Paul's summing up of the standards of Jesus. (Rom. 12 : 10.)

Jonathan was true to David when it meant loss—loss of throne, loss of life—for he knew when he died in battle for Israel that he was dying for David's kingdom, not his own. Would we be true to Christ even if it came to that test? Shall we be true to our duty to others even at such cost as this?

The great word is Love. It was love that made Jonathan give up all for David. Great love for Jesus, which will come to us as we give ourselves to him and trust his grace; great love for others, which he will put in our heart if we will let him; this will keep us true to him and keep us faithful and efficient in our service for others in his name.

The last reference is clearly an error. It should be, evidently, II Sam. 1 : 19-23. Read also I Sam. 23 : 16-18.

CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOK

Two Books by a Famous Pasto

Rev. J. H. Jowett, D. D., has been a described as the most spiritual preache
America. He has written two volur
"Thirsting for the Springs," and "Brc by the Traveler's Way."

These two volumes, aggregating 530 pa handsomely bound in cloth, will be sent toge with the Christian Herald for one whole postpaid, for $2. Or, we will send to old subsc ers, FREE, as a reward, these two volumes sending us one new yearly subscription to Christian Herald with $1.50.

Margaret E. Sangster's New Bo

"Real People and Dreams" conta about eighty poems and thirty-two sh stories and sketches.

We will send this new volume by Margare Sangster, Jr., handsomely bound in cloth, gether with the Christian Herald for one w year, postpaid, for $1.85. Or, we will send to subscribers, FREE, as a reward, this volume sending us one new yearly subscription to Christian Herald with $1.50.

"Forty Thousand Beautiful Quotations'

Some years ago the Christian Her published a work entitled "Forty Th sand Sublime and Beautiful Thought
We have had so many inquiries for it t
we have decided to republish it.

We will send you this volume, together with Christian Herald for one whole year, for $3.00
we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a rewa
"Forty Thousand Sublime and Beaut Thoughts" for sending us two new yearly s scriptions to the Christian Herald with $3.0

Luther in Light of Recent Resear

While there are several lives of Luth
Professor Heinrich Boehmer's fam work, which has attracted universal tention in Europe, is one of the best t has ever appeared.

The Life of Luther, handsomely bound in cl will be sent together with the Christian He for one whole year, postpaid, for $2.25, or we send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, volume for sending us two new yearly subsc
tions to the Christian Herald with $3.00.

A New "Do Something" Book

Did you read "Janice Day," which offered with the Christian Herald l year? The success of the book was su that the author, Helen Beecher Lo wrote a sequel entitled "The Testi of Janice Day."

We will send "The Testing of Janice Da
310 pages, attractive cloth covers, together w
the Christian Herald for one whole year for $2.
or we will send to old subscribers, FREE, a reward, "The Testing of Janice Day," for send us one new yearly subscription to the Christ
Herald with $1.50.

Our Art Calendar for 1916

This beautiful calendar is a reproducti of that remarkable picture of Christ wa
ing beside the plowman in the field, titled "Lo, I Am With You Alway."

We will send this superb calendar together w
the Christian Herald for one whole year for $1.
or to old subscribers sending us their renewal a one new subscription to the Christian Hera
we will send two copies of this calendar mail to separate addresses if desired, FREE.

A Companion to the Bible

"555 Difficult Bible Questions A swered" is another book which has h a wonderful success during the past ye

We will send "555 Difficult Bible Questio Answered" together with the Christian Hera for one whole year for $1.85. Or, we will send old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, this volu for sending us one new yearly subscription to t
Christian Herald with $1.50.

A Story for the Family Circle

We do not know when we have h quite as much pleasure in reading any bo this year as "Little Sir Galahad."

"Little Sir Galahad," 376 pages, illustrated a handsomely bound in cloth, will be sent postpa with one yearly subscription to the Christi Herald for $2.00. Or, we will send to old su scribers, FREE as a reward, this volume for sen
ing us one new yearly subscription to the Chri tian Herald with $1.50.

Our 1916 Almanac

Add ten cents to your subscription to t
Christian Herald and we will send you the Chri tian Herald Almanac for 1916 postpaid.

Our Red Letter Bibles

The Only India Paper Red Letter Bible in th World

The only genuine edition of the Red Letter Bib is the Authorized or King James Version, u changed save for the variation of the color in t type. Two colors (Red and Black) are employe in accordance with the simple plan devised by t late Dr. Louis Klopsch, the Originator of the R Letter principle applied to the Holy Scriptures.

1—In the Old Testament the passages quote by our Lord, or directly related to incidents which he referred, are Printed in Red.

2—In the New Testament, the words un versally accepted as those of the Saviour a Printed in Red.

3—A Red Star (★) immediately following verse in the Old Testament indicates that th verse embodies a prophetic reference to Chri
as the coming Messiah.

Contains Full References; also a Concordanc Subject Index, and Dictionary, Helps, Maps, an Numerous Illustrations.

Large type, bound in American Levant, ove lapping edges, red-under-gold, weight 20 ounce
We send this superb Bible prepaid, together wi the Christian Herald for one whole year
for $3.0

OR: We will send it to old subscribers Free as reward for sending us two new yearly subscrip tions to the Christian Herald with $1.50 each.

Bound in Genuine Morocco, Calf Finish, Leathe Lining, Silk Sewed, will be sent, prepaid, wi the Christian Herald, for one year FOR ONLY $4.0

OR: We will send it to old subscribers Free as reward for sending us three new yearly sub scriptions to the Christian Herald with $1.50 each

Our Red Letter Testament

Only New Testament which contains all th words spoken by our Lord printed in Red. Boun in American Levant, with over-lapping edges—red under-gold—with book mark. Issued in both th
Authorized and Revised Versions, and is Sen
Prepaid, together with the Christian
Herald for One Year FOR ONLY . . $2.0

Or: We will send it to old subscribers Free as reward for sending us one new yearly subscrip tion to the Christian Herald with $1.50.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York, N. Y

A Voice in the Wilderness

Continued from page 113

bl turn of the day, and would have o polized her if she had given him al chance.

Te trunks, two delightful steamer uts, and a big packing-box with her os arrived the next morning and ud great excitement in the house- ol Not since they moved into the house had they seen so many things ri. Bud helped carry them upai while Cap ran wildly back and rt giving sharp barks, and the minis- r ood by the front door and gave efctual and unpractical advice to the a who had brought them. Margaret al the man and Bud exchanging e opinion of West in low growls in all as they entered her door, and uldn't help feeling that she agreed it hem, though she might not have exed her opinion in the same terms.

Te minister tapped at her door a tt later and offered his services in ng her box and unstrapping her uts, but she told him Bud had al- a performed that service for her, thanked him with a finality that de him to linger.

It all such compunctions were pres- it forgotten in the work of making her room.

Te trunks, after they were unpacked repacked with the things she would t need at once, were disposed in o of the two windows with which gly little room was blessed. She ved them with two Bagdad rugs, of her college days, and piled sev- a ollege pillows from the packing-box ch, which made the room instantly ne a homelike air. Then out of the ox came other things framed pic- of home scenes, college friends and as, pennants and flags from football, ball and basketball games she had ded, photographs, a few fine prints re paintings simply framed, a roll se-bordered white scrim like her ins at home, wherewith she trans- ed the blue shaded windows and tiff little wooden rocker, and even a valance and bed-cover over pink ric for her bed. The bureau and stand were given pink and white s, and the ugly walls literally dis- red beneath pictures, pennants, ers and symbols.

Ven Bud came up to call her to din- she flung her door open and he ed in wide-eyed amazement over the formation. His eyes kindled at a f golf sticks, a hockey stick, a ten- acket, and a big basket ball in the r; and his whole look of surprise so ridiculous that she had to laugh. oked as if a miracle had been per- d on the room, and actually ed back into the hall to get his h and be sure he was still in his r's house.

"I want you to come in and see all my res and get acquainted with my ls when you have time," she said. I onder if you could make some more es for my books and 'elp me un- and set them up."

"Sure!" gasped Bud heartily, albeit with awe. She hadn't asked the minister; she had asked him—Bud! Just a boy! He looked around the room with anticipation. What wonder and delight he would have looking at all those things!

Then Cap stepped into the middle of the room as if he belonged, mouth open, tongue lolling, smiling and panting a hearty approval, as he looked about at the strangeness for all the world as a human being might have done. It was plain he was pleased with the change.

THERE was a proprietary air about Bud during dinner that was pleasant to Margaret and most annoying to West. It was plain that West looked on the boy as an upstart whom Miss Earle was using for the present to block the progress of his acquaintance, and he was growing most impatient over the delay. He suggested that perhaps she would like his escort to see something of her surroundings that afternoon, but she smilingly told him that she would be very busy all the afternoon getting settled, and when he offered again to help her she cast a dazzling smile on Bud and said she didn't think she would need any more help, that Bud was going to do a few things for her, and that was all that was necessary.

Bud straightened up and became two inches taller. He passed the bread, suggested two pieces of pie, and filled her glass of water as if she were his partner. Mr. Tanner beamed to see his son in high favor, but Mrs. Tanner looked a little troubled for the minister. She thought things weren't just progressing as fast as they ought to between him and the teacher.

Bud, with Margaret's instructions, managed to make a very creditable bookcase out of the packing-box, sawed in half, the pieces set side by side. She covered them deftly with green burlap left over from college days like her other supplies, and then the two arranged the books. Bud was delighted over the prospect of reading some of the books, for they were not all schoolbooks by any means, and she had brought plenty of them to keep her from being lonesome on days when she longed to fly back to her home.

At last the work was done, and they stood back to survey it. The books filled up every speck of space and overflowed to the three little hanging shelves over them, but they were all squeezed in at last except a pile of schoolbooks that were saved out to take to the schoolhouse. Margaret set a tiny vase on the top of one packing-case and a small brass bowl on the top of the other, and Bud after a knowing glance scurried away for a few minutes and brought back a handful of gorgeous cactus blossoms to give the final touch.

"Huh!" he said admiringly, looking around the room. "Now you wouldn't know it fer the same place!"

To be continued

Church Efficiency in Indiana

Nthe issue of your paper for October 7 is an item regarding "Efficiency hurch Work," and the suggestion this is the first of its kind. There a Church Efficiency Congress held avenport, Iowa, in 1913, by the Dis- s of Christ. Last year another such ress was held in Hammond, Ind., ist 30 to September 3. This was l a "Congress of Church Efficiency Church Expansion." It was held lammond because the Hammond stian Church has adopted a policy f urch expansion under the leader- of C. J. Sharp, minister, in planting v church every year. For the past ears this has been done, and today e Calumet region there are a num- f Christian churches that have been red by the Hammond church. h Congress was attended by about 5) workers, including ministers, evan- ts, elders, deacons, teachers, super- idents, etc. There were five schools, singing, evangelism, church effi- y, Bible school, and the organized ests of the church. There were thing like fifty classes each day, together with sermons and addresses by prominent workers of the Disciples of Christ. At the close of the Congress plans were made for other similar meetings to be held in the near future, when "church efficiency and doctrine" will be emphasized.

J. HARRY BULLOCK.

◆

EVANGELIST HENRY W STOUGH closed a successful evangelistic campaign in Buffalo on December 19, and there were more than 6,000 conversions in the series of meetings which lasted seven weeks. Evangelist Stough opened a series of meetings in Atlantic City beginning January 2. Dr. Stough is booked for two campaigns ahead and is also now filling dates for 1916.

THE Floating Committee of the Northeast Branch of the Philadelphia Christian Endeavor Society is busily engaged holding religious services along the wharves of the Delaware River. On Christmas day they held service on all the boats docked along that river, and distributed to the seamen on board "comfort bags" and other gifts. Many of these seamen were thousands of miles away from their own homes during the holidays.

ONLY 25c

The Aluminum
Cooking Utensil Co.
Dept 34. New Kensington, Pa.
(or if you live in Canada) Northern Aluminum Co., Ltd., Toronto, Ontario.
Send prepaid, 1-qt. "Wear-Ever" stew pan. Enclosed is 25c in stamps or money to be refunded if not satisfied. Offer good until March 20, 1916, only
Name
Address

WEAR-EVER TAC
ALUMINUM
UCO
TRADE MARK

For this 45c One-quart

"Wear-Ever"

Aluminum Stew Pan

If coupon is mailed on or before March 20, 1916

Do you know why so many women prefer "Wear-Ever" aluminum cooking utensils? If not, see for yourself the difference between "Wear-Ever" and other kinds of aluminum utensils—and enameled utensils. Aluminum utensils are NOT "all the same."

Replace utensils that wear out with utensils that "Wear-Ever"

Send for your "Wear-Ever" Stew Pan today!

The Aluminum Cooking Utensil Company, Dept. 34, New Kensington, Pa.

Delicate Girls and Women are too often dosed with drugs when their blood is really starved. They need that blood-strength which comes from medicinal nourishment. No drugs can make blood.

SCOTT'S EMULSION is a highly concentrated blood-food and every drop yields returns in strengthening both body and brain.

If you are frail, languid, delicate or nervous, take Scott's Emulsion after meals for one month. No Alcohol.

SCOTT & BOWNE, BLOOMFIELD, N. J. 14-62

NO "FRILLS"

Just a Statement about Food

Sometimes a good, healthy commercial traveler suffers from poorly selected food and is lucky if he learns that Grape-Nuts food will put him right.

A Cincinnati traveler writes: "About a year ago my stomach got in a bad way. I had a headache most of the time and suffered misery. For several months I ran down until I lost about 70 pounds in weight and finally had to give up a good position and go home. Any food that I might use seemed to nauseate me.

"My wife, hardly knowing what to do, one day brought home a package of Grape-Nuts food and coaxed me to try it. I told her it was no use but finally to humor her I tried a little and they just struck my taste. It was the first food that I had eaten in nearly a year that did not cause any suffering.

"Well, to make a long story short, I began to improve and stuck to Grape-Nuts. I went up from 135 pounds in December to 194 pounds the following October.

"My brain is clear, blood all right and appetite too much for any man's pocketbook. In fact, I am thoroughly made over and owe it all to Grape-Nuts. I talk so much about what Grape-Nuts will do that some of the men on the road have nicknamed me 'Grape-Nuts,' but I stand today a healthy, rosy-cheeked man—a pretty good example of what the right kind of food will do.

"You can publish this if you want to. It is a true statement without any frills."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Deafness Mastered

The day of imperfect hearing is past. Science rivals nature in the marvelous new 1916 Mears Ear Phone, thin receiver model—the world's greatest hearing device. It transmits sound without blur. Write today for our 15 days' free trial offer.

Perfect Aid to Hearing

The Mears is the only scientific instrument for the deaf. It marvelously covers 96 degrees of sound, every range of tone of the human ear.

Write for Free Book Our free book is a highly valuable treatise on deafness. Write for it today—learn all about our 15 days' free trial offer and low direct laboratory price. If convenient to New York call for demonstration.

FREE Book

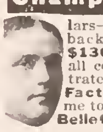
MEARS EAR PHONE CO.
Desk 2491 45 W. 34th St., N.Y.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D. C.

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen patents Send for 3 free books; inventions wanted, etc. I get patent or no fee. Manufacturing facilities.
RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Bldg., Washington, D. C.

25 Times World's Champion

402,000 in Use

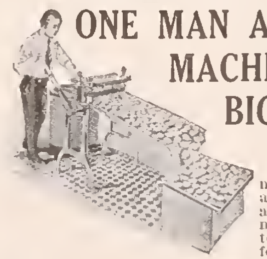


Freight Prepaid, 1, 2 or 3 Months' Home Test

Get all facts, proofs, particulars—my low prices—money-back guaranty—also my $1300.00 Gold Offers—all come with my big illustrated Free Book "Hatching Facts," in colors. Write me today. Jim Rohan, Pres.

Belle City Incubators and Brooders

Belle City Incubator Co., Box 127, Racine, Wis.



ONE MAN AND THIS MACHINE CAN MAKE BIG MONEY DAILY

Not a dream—not a myth—but a reality. If you are honest—earnest, and anxious to go in business for yourself, I will help you. I have helped lots of men to make big money. It's an honorable business—can be started most anywhere, in any town of over 500 population.

A GOOD BUSINESS PROPOSITION

You want a business of your own. Go into the Popcorn Crispette business—there is a fortune in it. All you need is a machine, a few dollars and a good location. You can learn to make Crispettes in a day. They sell everywhere for a nickel a package. You make almost four cents profit.

Dollars and Sense
Crispette Business

Send for Free Book

It tells the whole story—how and where to start, how to succeed, gives experiences of others, etc. It's worth reading, even if you don't start. If you're looking for a good thing and easy money, write today for FREE BOOK.

Eakin started a fortune with a Long Crispette Machine in a store window. You can do equally as well or even better. His experience is interesting—inspiring—Write for it.

W. Z. LONG CO.
1135 High St.
Springfield, Ohio.

W. Z. LONG CO.
1135 High St., Springfield, O.

Without any obligation at all, please send me free, your book, "Dollars and Sense in the Crispette Business."

Name..................
Address..................

Bible Picture Contest!

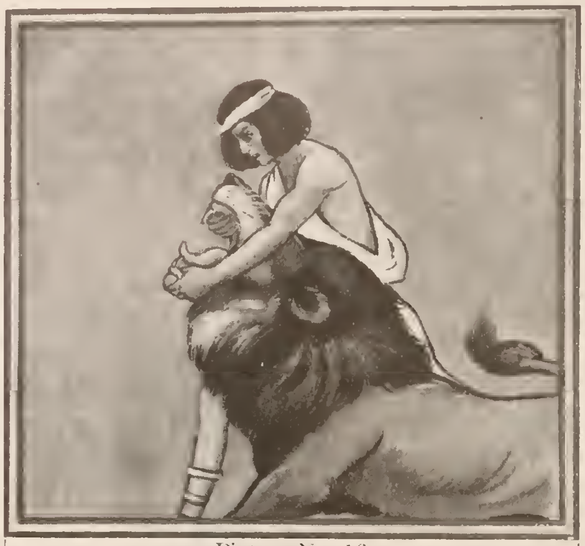
A Competition to Pick the Most Suitable Texts in a List, for Sixty Pictures

YES

EVERY ONE IS ELIGIBLE

INDEED every member of the family, and certainly every one in the Bible class, club, friendly society or other group, can compete in the Bible Picture Contest individually, at the same time that some or all of the other members do likewise.

The Contest will remain open until after all the sixty pictures have appeared. As no answers will be accepted before then, all contestants are on an equal footing. However, make sure that you're not leaving too much for the end. It is best to find Bible verses for the pictures as the pictures appear, three each week. You can catch up very soon, if you haven't begun yet. All the back pictures are given FREE with the Bible Picture Contest Outfit (see offers below) if you ask for them. Then you will have all the Contest tools and be fully prepared to compete.



Picture No. 16

NO

INSURMOUNTABLE DIFFICULTIES

THE pictures you see on this page may appear familiar to you and they may not; and the same may be said of the other pictures to come; BUT none of them present insurmountable difficulties, as far as finding a more or less suitable answer is concerned, for the simple reason that you are given a list of eligible answers and the selecting is totally a matter of fitting verses to the pictures. The judges will decide which verses fit best.

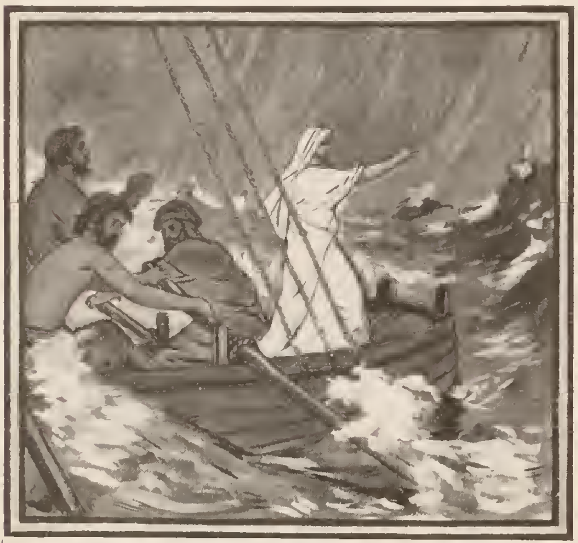
Not erudite Bible knowledge, but common sense and alert observation are the qualities to be tested in this competition. As soon as you start looking for answers to the pictures, you will find yourself enthralled; and at the same time you will know you are engaged in doing something worth while. Also—you can suit your own convenience, attending to the Contest whenever you have a spare quarter or half-hour.



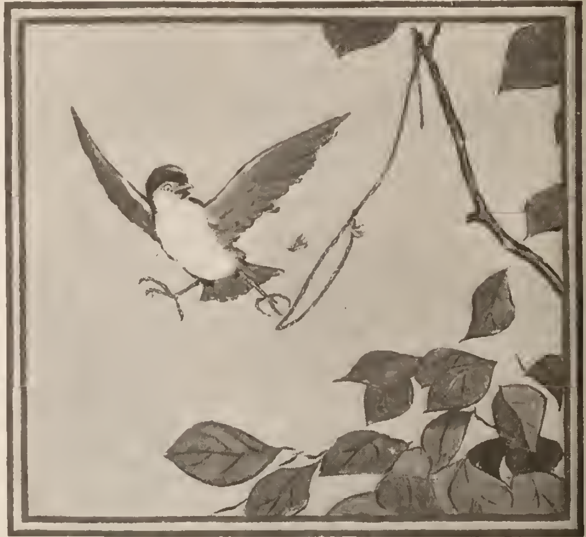
Picture No. 17

5

FOR ONE PERMITTED

YOU may submit, for a particular picture in the Contest, just one answer (one Bible verse constitutes an answer); or, if you see fit, you may submit, for that identical picture, two, three, four or five different answers. The same holds true for every one of the sixty pictures. Therefore your complete set of answers will consist of at least 60 Bible verses and not more than 300.

Search the standard list and locate all the texts which apply to the pictures. Select those which apply most closely.



Picture No. 18

$3,500.00 in 419 Cash Rewards

First Reward	$1,250.00	Second Reward	$625.00
Third Reward	$350.00	Fourth Reward	$250.00
Fifth Reward	$150.00	Sixth Reward	$100.00
Seventh Reward	$75.00	Eighth Reward	$50.00
Ninth Reward	$20.00	Tenth to twenty-fourth rewards, inclusive, each $2.50	$37.50
25th to 419th Rewards, inc., each $1.50	$592.50

Total of 419 Rewards, All Cash, Aggregating $3,500.00

Remember $1,250 is First Reward

HERE WE TELL YOU

How to Solve the Pictures

TWO THOUSAND verses from the Bible have been taken as a uniform list from which all contestants are to choose the verses which fit the pictures. This makes a comparatively short limit of selection. You can locate the verses in your own Bible, and submit them, or you can secure the handy volume called "Gems from the Bible," which contains this very list of verses you want. "Gems from the Bible" makes a fine little book for you to own, in more ways than one; and in the present Contest you can see for yourself that it ought to prove invaluable.

You can quickly and conveniently enter all your answers, as you find them, in the practical Reply Book, given with "Gems from the Bible." All you need submit in the Reply Book are the verses. You don't have to draw any of the pictures—not when you use the Reply Book method of submitting your answers.

How to Obtain "Gems" and Reply Book

THE book "Gems from the Bible" and the booklet known as the Reply Book constitute the Bible Picture Contest OUTFIT, also including (if you so request) all the pictures, which have already appeared, absolutely free. The Outfit will be sent to you at once, on receipt of two dollars to pay for yearly subscription to the Christian Herald—new, renewal or extension. Or you can obtain the Outfit entirely free if you are a subscriber and will send us in behalf of some person who is not now a subscriber, a yearly subscription to the Christian Herald at one dollar and a half; or, if Contest Outfit is to go to that person also in addition to the one which will go to you, two dollars. Address: The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City.

In answer to many queries: You do not have to draw the pictures in the Reply Book. If you use the Reply Book method of submitting your answers then all you need submit are the verses themselves. You simply look at the pictures and write down in the Reply Book the verses you wish to submit as answers to them; then you submit the Reply Book with your verses in it and wait for the rewards to be announced. That is all there is to it when you use the Reply Book.

One Touch of Nature Still Makes the Whole World Kin

WHAT a fragrance must ascend to heaven from the great world-wide garden of hearts! Just as when in our gardens are bursting into full bloom, now re and now there and now every- e, so that in the season of flowers are always some blossoms nodding niling at us on their proud stems, so the Great Husbandman may own upon his creation and behold hearts blossoming in beautiful here, there, and everywhere, and times. And in the midst of so that is unlovely, that is repellent ad (just as in our gardens there insightly spots at times, and es to our plants), surely the heart Creator must be comforted by evidences that the seeds of divine he has planted in humanity are ng fruit.

Ewhere in this number of the ian Herald is an instalment of a ive which is appearing from week ek about Alaska. Doubtless all will have new ideas about that after we have finished that of articles. But just at the nt we do not associate flowers, those that grow on plants or those spring from human hearts, with a, especially with the Eskimos, are part of Alaska's population. et we are going to learn that very iful flowers grow in that land; and this past week we, in the Christian d offices, have learned anew how iful are the other flowers that in that corner of the great world-n of hearts. We received a letter which we quote portions below ly as written.

think the letter needs no explana- It is quite clear in its message, but ould like to point out that the which these people have done for elief of non-combatant sufferers e war in Europe was done despite act that that very war has dimin- their own scanty enough incomes educing the demand for their ipal article of commerce. But out further introduction, please this heart letter from a place far from the teeming life and activi- the pleasures and opportunities, e midst of which most of us live.

Quinhagak, Alaska.

I HAVE read in The Christian Herald of April 28 the story, 'Between the Millstones,' telling e conditions in Poland. Money we have very little here, as most trade is done in barter. One $1.00 bill I enclose and per Parcel Post I forward some baskets made here. I hope you can sell to some friends who wish such and add the proceeds to the Relief Fund.

"It was so in my mind that some weeks ago, in the Sunday School, I told our people about the conditions as described in the Christian Herald, and asked them whether they could not help in some way the awful suffering.

"Our people have not much to give. Fur is only caught in winter, and is, through the war, very low in price. At present they have only fish, which, when dry, they store away, it being their principal food. All what they don't use, they can sell as dog food.

"A number came and brought such fish. Some giving twenty-five cents' worth for themselves and for some of their children. The total is $6.25, which I forward per Money Order, asking you to add to the Relief Fund for Poland and Galicia, hoping that some of these poor people may in some way be helped, and see that the love of God unites his children, although far away." (The baskets mentioned above brought $16, so that the total contribution to the fund is $23.25.—Editor.)

"Our mission work during the past year has been carried on as usual. As there is a small population, and rather scattered, we cannot report additions of great numbers but can say that the heathen are less and less. The former almighty medicine men lose their power, and in our older villages they are already for a long time a thing of the past. If, among new converts, occasionally in sickness or severe trouble one asks a Shaman to help, I personally cannot as a rule scold them too strong. I do in no way excuse it, but what are the actual conditions? No doctor here to whom they can go, for 20 to 100 miles no missionary near, or at times, like fall and spring, unable to travel and go for help. To that must be added, that the knowledge of God is small, and the faith is weak. If now a beloved child is sick, or a relation or provider, will not every one try and do anything to get help? The medicine man is known as powerful and is near, while our Saviour's power is not known.

"Many a time I have had to speak to such struggling souls, and found it always the best way to show them the wonderful love of Christ, and his power and compassion, his tender care and abiding presence, until they can trust him fully at all times. Surely a Saviour who died and arose for us certainly can never, never leave us. Impression wakes also, when they see how our prayers are heard.

"In November last a little girl here was badly bitten by dogs. Humanly speaking there was not much hope for recovery. All over her body, except on her left arm, the teeth had left their ugly marks, but the worst wounds were on her head, where pieces had been torn away. How glad we would have been to have a doctor here. It is at least a comfort if a doctor is near, as everybody confidently believes the doctor knows how to do the best. Even if he can't save the life one thinks all that was possible to do was done. But we have no doctor. Perhaps it is good so, too, so we cannot trust men, and have to go to our great Physician with our care. In this case, we asked his help too, as no other help was here. And how did he help? In three months the little girl came to school again, and is now fully restored. No fever nor blood poisoning has set in. Such experiences strengthen our faith, and we know many, and therefore have courage.

"In conclusion I would express my gratitude for the contents of the Christian Herald. We all like it, and give it along to others.

"All minds are occupied more or less with the war. Our Eskimos have to suffer from the effects too. Fur prices have gone down very low, while other articles, imported, go up. Our prayer is, the Lord may end it soon, and bring his Kingdom, in which his will be done so willingly and gladly, as it is done in heaven.

"With all good wishes,

"A. STECKER."

AND now we give you the privilege of reading another letter, a letter received through the Christian Herald Relief Committee in London. This, too, has the beauty and the fragrance of a flower-of-the-heart—that rather rare flower, gratitude, which has a fragrance all its own. How marvelously beautiful, even to the eyes of the Creator of beauty itself, must be the blossoming here and there and everywhere, and at all times, of these heart-flowers of sympathy, and of help, and of gratitude!

SIR ROBERT PERKS, Chairman of the Christian Herald Committee in London for the Relief of the Widows and Orphans of the War, in a letter just received writes: "I think your readers may like to see the enclosed. The writer is a widow aged thirty-five whose husband was drowned on H. M. S. S. Cressy. She has three young children. Her husband was a naval reserve man and was called to the fleet at the outbreak of war." The letter which he encloses says:

"Last week I received a letter from Mr. Dent of S. E. & C. Railway telling me of the great kindness the New York Christian Herald War Relief Committee were showing toward my little children and myself by granting me £10 ($50), which the company would pay me in sums of five shillings weekly. I am indeed grateful to the committee. It means much more to me than I can explain, especially now that living is hard and expensive. I do not know why the committee should have singled me out to be one that should benefit, but I'm so thankful, and it seems that God himself has undertaken to look after us in our hour of need.

"My dear husband had the pleasure of going to New York and other places across there when the fleet visited a few years ago. We have had some nice letters from Auntie Campbell (she was to the American Navy what Miss Westors is to ours). He also spoke very highly of some American Christian friends whom he met—Miss Gould (afterwards Mrs. Shepherd), Fanny Crosby, the blind authoress, among them. He also had the pleasure of speaking a few words at the Brooklyn Y. M. C. A., for he was one of Agnes Westors' secretaries. And now this kindness to us, who are left behind, seems but another link in the chain of Christian love and sympathy.

"Dear sir, please don't think me too bold in writing this letter, but I felt the committee would perhaps be interested to know that their kindness had found its way to one who had heard such a lot about the Lord's people across the ocean. Please let the committee know that this money has come just when I have needed it most, for you know what the winter will mean to us. My pen cannot explain all I feel, but I hope you will understand just the same. It's a very grateful heart that says 'Thank you' to all the kind friends who have taken my case up.

"Yours very respectfully,

"ELIZABETH EAST."

Please address all gifts to the Widows and Orphans Relief Fund, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

In Gratitude for the Joys That These Have and Are, Their Otherwise Almost Joyless Parents Have Given Help to Such as These, Earth's Homeless Refugees

Additional Gifts for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

Gifts of $2.50 Each

ed. S. Goodell; Jr. Model Christian y, Sharon Ref. Presby. Ch.; Morning Iowa; J. L. Caldwell; Union S. S., Wash.; Mrs. L. A. Turnbull.

na J. H. Printz; Mr. and Mrs. A. L. E., llo, Mo.

Gifts of $2 Each

McCarthy; A. T. Tornholm; Agnes h; Whatsoever K. D. Circle, Foxboro, s.; M. Blume; A. Friend, Clintonville, ; Mrs. Rachel Watts; Mrs. W. A. helford; Mrs. M. T. Foster; W. T. on; Mrs. C. E. Logan & Children; Mrs. iet Jeffery; Mr. & Mrs. J. C. Ghold; . Sherrill; Miss M. E. Kennett; Mrs. . Fisher; G. S. Stancliff; Ira Clynick; , Tenafly, N. J.; Anna Soderberg, Mrs. . Cleaver; Mr. T. A. Cleaver; Mrs. J. H. Wakeman; Mrs. Anna Hodgson; Mrs. M. A. Lucas; Mrs. Lou P. McMaster; Miss Ettie E. Wise; "Sympathy"; W. Cleveland; W. F. Chase; E. N. Sanford; J. G. & E. D. Viser; A Friend, Chester, Va.; M. & E., Wichita, Kansas; Mrs. M. E. Forsyth; H. L. Carpenter; "W.", Muncy, Pa.; C. E. Shepard; Mrs. Polly Reynolds; A. S. Foster; I. C. Clutter; Mrs. E. Whitney; R. C. Tubbesing; B. Rosted; Elizabeth Wagner; A Friend, Bryon, Okla.; George Long; Warren Beard; Miss Mary Miller; W. C. T. U., Walton, N. Y.; Mrs. H. H. Ault; M. G. Greeley; Mrs. A. C. Logan; Susan E. Nicklas; Mrs. M. J. Auld; "A Friend," East Hampton, N. Y.; H. C. Thompson.

Gifts of $1.50 Each

——, Hamilton, Mont.; Friends, Tappan, N. Y.; Mrs. M. Rostad.

Miss M. E. Gilchrist; Edwin Bennett; Mrs. H. F. Steinmeier; Gardena S. S., Touchet, Wash.; Mrs. E. E. Bryson; Mrs. Hardill.

Mrs. M. J. Daniel

Gifts of $1 Each

Mrs. Sabina Barber; Ella Faloon; Mrs. C. L. McDermid; G. C. Mason; Mrs. Geo. Franklin; Mrs. H. E. Brownlee; Jay Wornwood; Lida Cunningham; C. M. Covell; Catharine Buller; Mrs. H. Jeffrey; Mrs. Hardell; Elizabeth Campbell, A. H. Holland; Rosa Logan, Jas. D. James.

Gifts of 50 Cents Each

S. C., Saco, Mont.; Mrs. Jas. R. Joseph; Zillah Bramwell; Mrs. W. C. Ford; Miss Vina Knowles; Julia Prufert.

Mrs. P. Goodrich; Mrs. Letty J. Hall; Miss Gertrude MacRae; Mr. Jas. Harrison; Mrs. J. L. Bahl; Mrs. S. Root; Mrs. E. T. Williams; Mrs. Fred Dipman; Friend, New York City, N. Y.; Maria A. Kendall; Mr. Peter Richards; F. M. Thompson.

Iva Mercer, Mrs. T. Donovan, Mrs. Mary B. Greene, C. E. Sherwood, ——, Utica, N. Y.; Mrs. G. L. Sturdivant, Mrs. John Krueger, George White Logan.

Mesdames Ida Gibson & Lottie S. Culf, Mrs. James McGonigle; "In His Name," Calais, Me.

Mrs. A. Peterson; Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Webb; Bertha Lucas; ——, Middle Island, N. Y., Mrs. E. C. Jenkins; Mrs. Jos. E. Corbin Martha Colwell, Mrs. Rhoda Cretzmeyer; Fred Schumacher; Mrs. A. L. Toogood; Mrs. Mary E. W. Linn.

Gifts of 25 Cents Each

Frank Waters; A Friend, Findley, Ohio.

Additional acknowledgments will follow.

CONGOLEUM
RUGS

Something new for the home

EVERY reader of The Christian Herald will be glad to hear about the new Congoleum Rugs. They have many wonderful features because they are made by an entirely new process.

Congoleum Rugs are washable and sanitary. They are low in price. They lie flat and firm without requiring fastening of any kind, hugging the floor so tight that you cannot kick up the edges if you try.

How Congoleum Rugs save you money

First. Because you don't have to cover the whole floor, but only the exposed part.

Second. Because you don't have to bother with fitting and laying. A Congoleum Rug is simply unrolled on the floor and there it lies all ready for business.

Third. Because they are durable.

Fourth. Because they cost less than anything of a similar character.

Beautiful patterns—for every room in the house

There are many Congoleum Rug designs, in all the popular sizes, square and oblong, for bed rooms, bath rooms, kitchens, sitting rooms and porches. The colorings are rich and designs in the best of modern, artistic taste.

Sizes and Prices

Prices of these goods in the far West and Canada are slightly higher than those quoted. Notice how low these are. They are the same for all patterns:

3 x3 feet,	$ .60	4½x 6 feet,	$1.80
3 x4½ feet,	.90	6 x 6 feet,	2.40
3 x6 feet,	1.20	6 x 9 feet,	3.60
4½x4½ feet,	1.35	6 x12 feet,	4.80

Congoleum Two-piece Rugs

Congoleum Rugs in large sizes are made in two pieces with a seam that is invisible when the parts are laid together.

This is a real achievement in rug making. It makes possible practical rugs for good sized rooms. The prices are as follows:

9 feet x 12 feet,	$7.50 each
10 feet x 12 feet,	8.50 each

Prices of these goods in the far West and Canada are slightly higher than those quoted.

Be sure the name "Congoleum" is on the back of every Rug

This is your real protection. Congoleum Rugs are being widely imitated but they cannot be equaled except in certain superficial details altho there is often a similarity of appearance. Therefore, insist on seeing the name "Congoleum" on the back.

Rug Chart, in colors, Free

Send us your name and address and we will send you free our Colored Rug Chart showing various designs in miniature. It will show just what patterns you want to ask your dealer for.

Congoleum Rug Borders

These are wonderful imitations of quartered oak flooring to be used around the borders of a room underlying the edges of large rugs. Polished or dull finish. Several shades. Sold by the yard, 36 and 24 inches wide. Rug Border Circular sent on request.

Congoleum-by-the-Yard

Congoleum by the yard, 72 inches wide, in over 40 patterns. More durable and less expensive than printed linoleum. Floor Covering Circular sent on request.

UNITED ROOFING & MANUFACTURING COMPANY
Department of Barrett Manufacturing Company
Philadelphia Chicago Boston Los Angeles San Francisco Seattle Montreal
Toronto Winnipeg Vancouver St. John, N. B. Halifax, N. S. Sydney, N. S.

The R shown on floor, ran in size f
3x4½ fee
6x9 fe sell for f
90c. eac
$3.60 accor
to

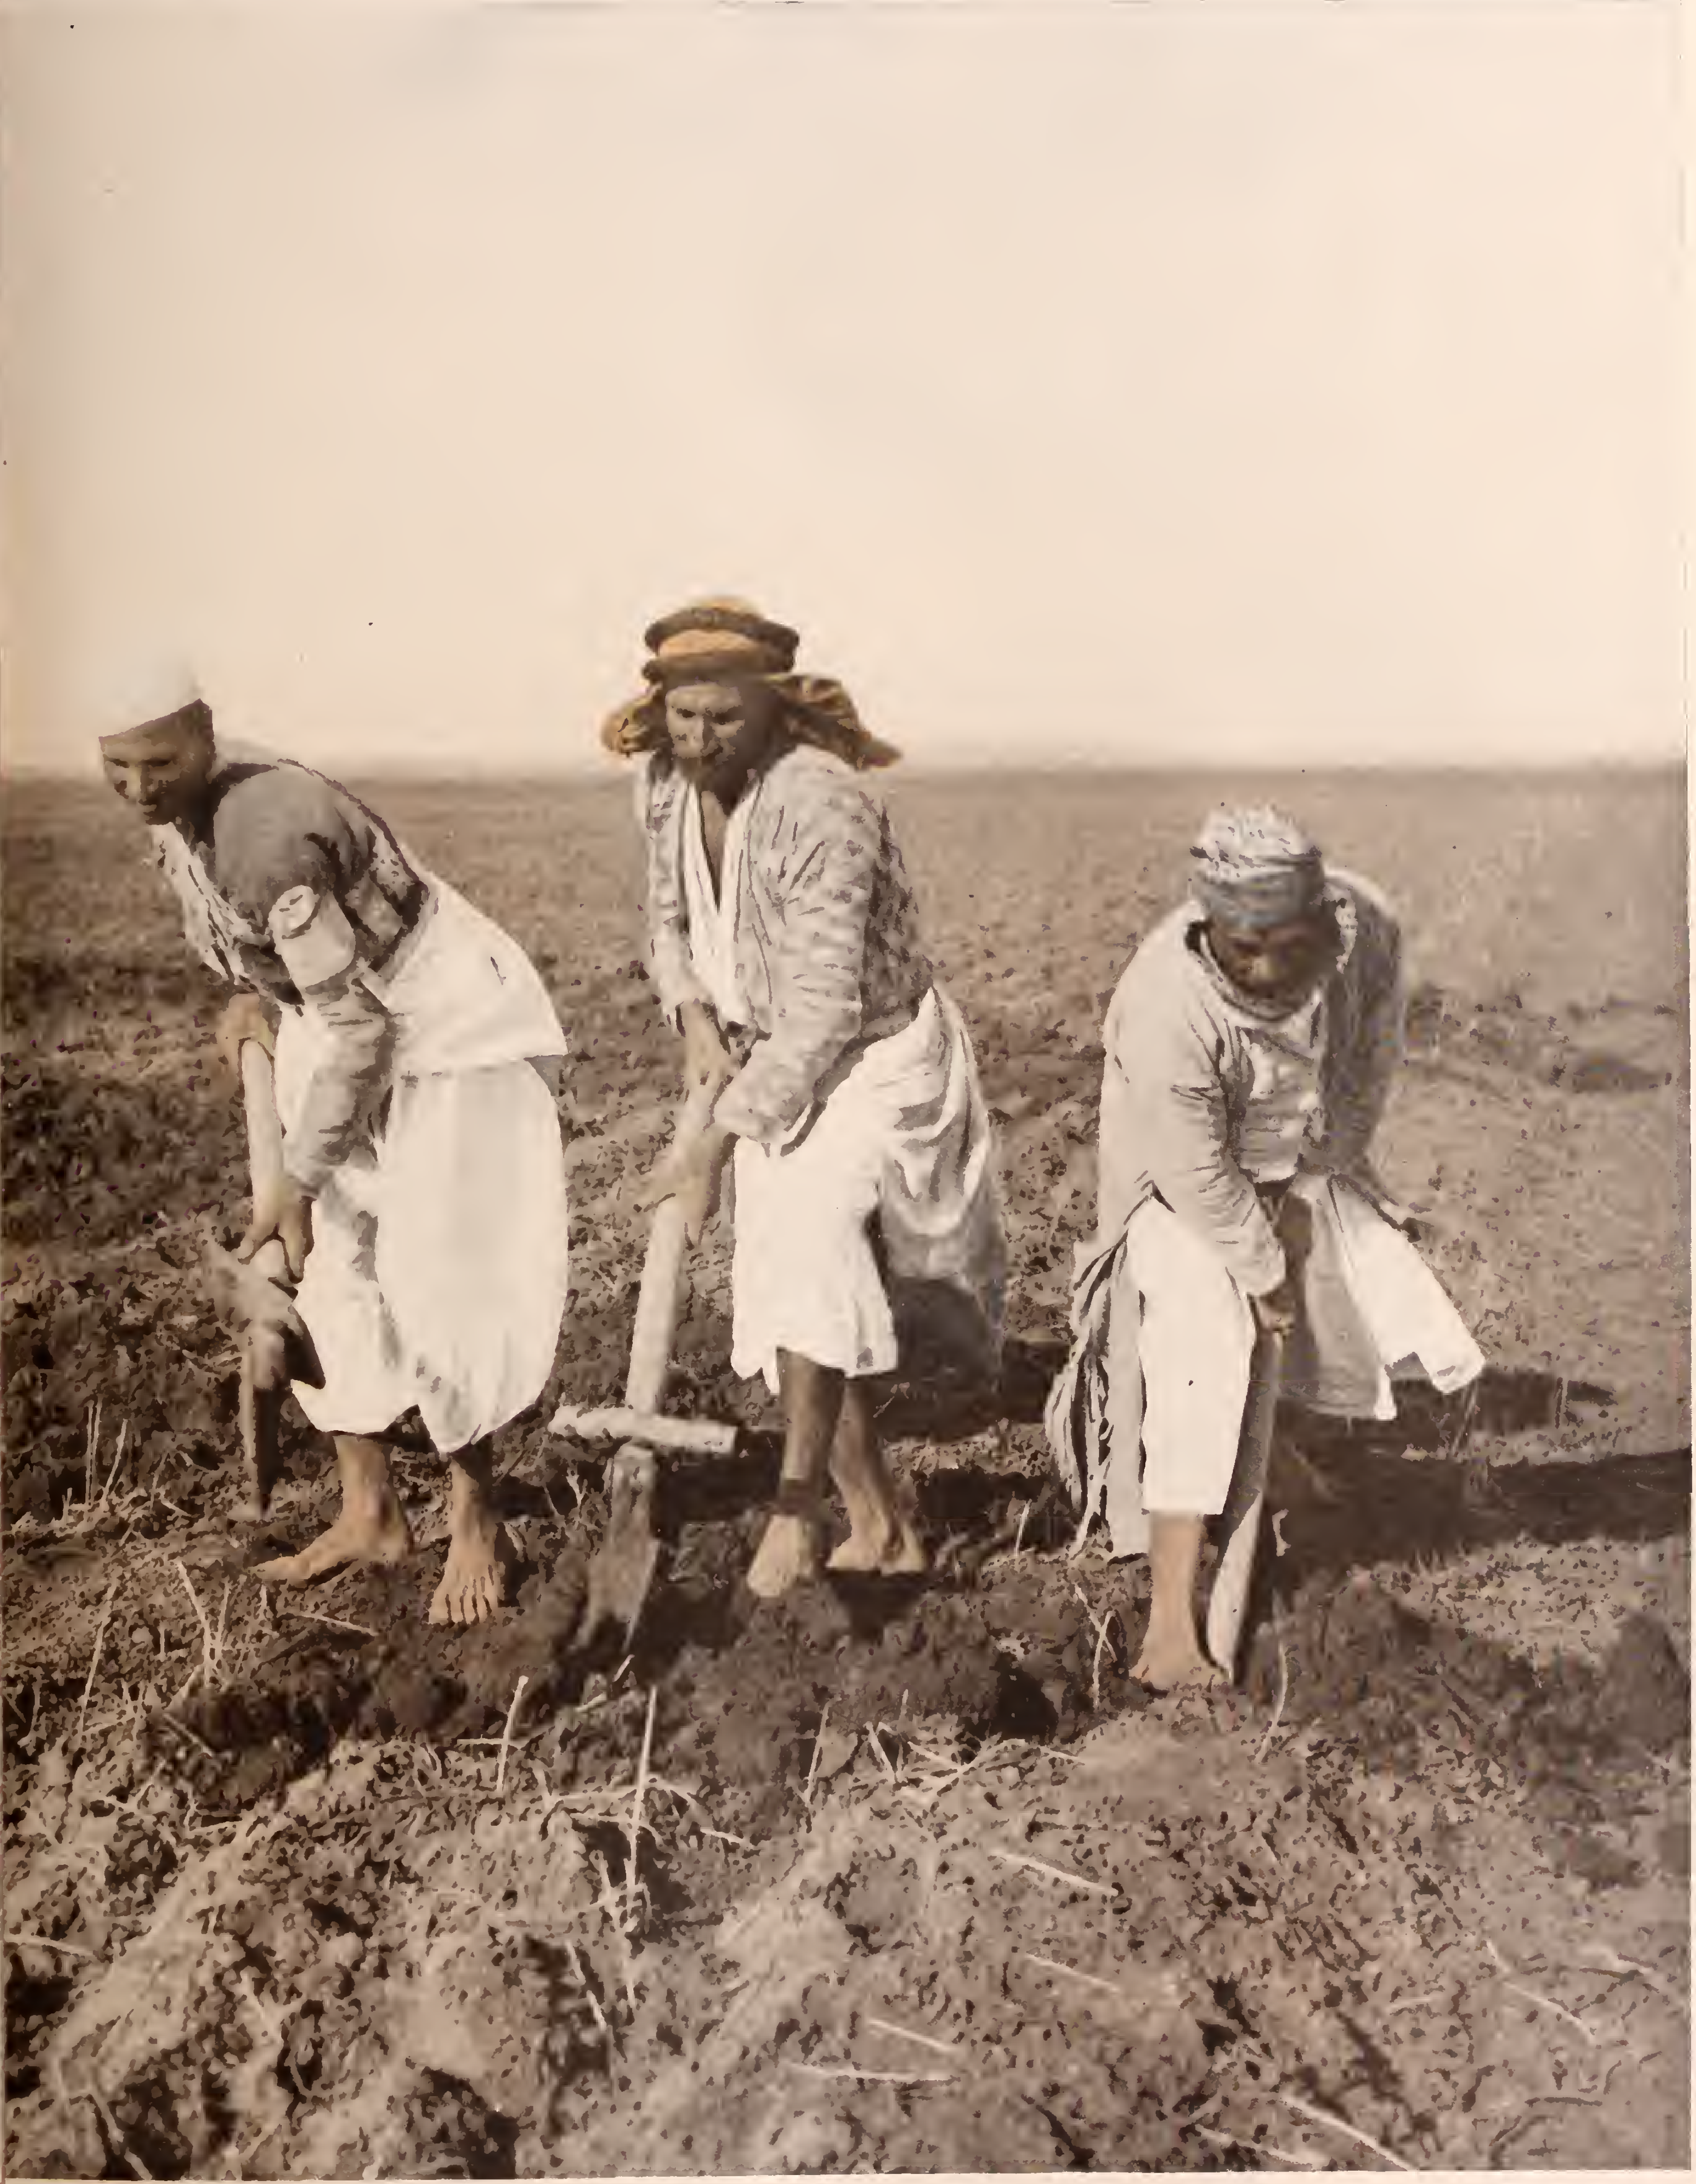
Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1916, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

BSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
BLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 2, 1916

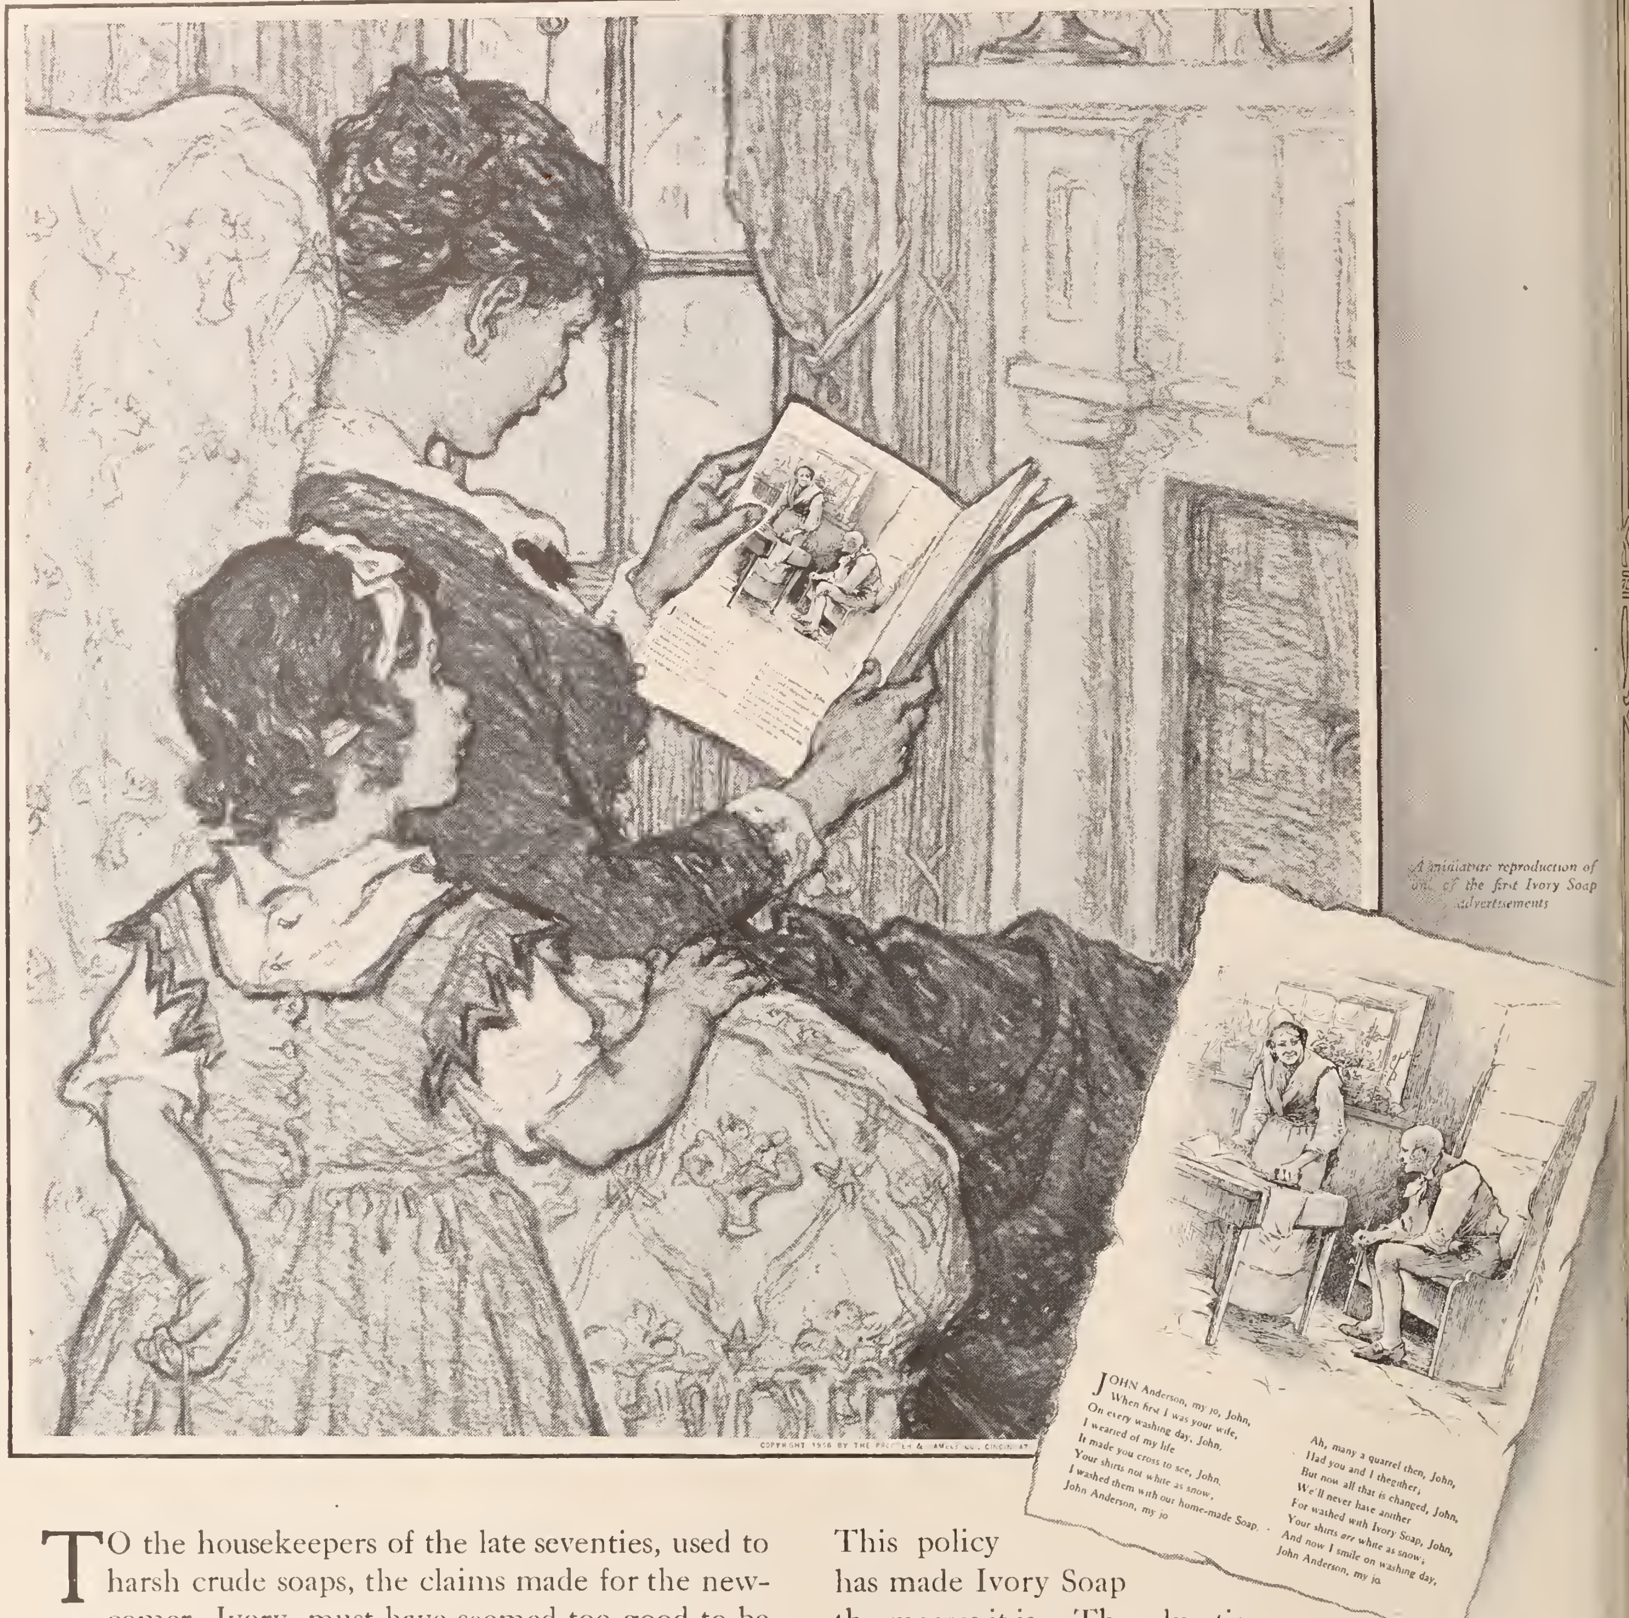
VOL. 39—NO. 5. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



(See description inside.)

Photo © Underwood & Underwood

TILLERS OF THE MESOPOTAMIAN SOIL



COPYRIGHT 1916 BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINCINNATI

A miniature reproduction of one of the first Ivory Soap advertisements

JOHN Anderson, my jo, John,
When first I was your wife,
On every washing day, John,
I wearied of my life
It made you cross to see, John,
Your shirts not white as snow,
I washed them with our home-made Soap.
John Anderson, my jo

Ah, many a quarrel then, John,
Had you and I thegither;
But now all that is changed, John,
We'll never have anither
For washed with Ivory Soap, John,
Your shirts are white as snow;
And now I smile on washing day,
John Anderson, my jo

TO the housekeepers of the late seventies, used to harsh crude soaps, the claims made for the newcomer, Ivory, must have seemed too good to be true. But they were true and have continued to be true ever since.

The manufacturers of Ivory Soap believed that in the long run the quality of a product measures the effectiveness of its advertising. They determined to make a better soap than any on the market before they began to advertise.

This policy has made Ivory Soap the success it is. The advertising of superior mildness, purity and quality has been inducing people to try Ivory Soap from the time the grandmothers of today read the first announcement. But it is the fulfillment of every claim in the advertising that soon makes every user consider Ivory a necessity, second only to water itself, for bath, toilet, fine laundry and all particular cleaning.

This Story Book Free to the Children

A jolly tale of adventure in rhyme by John Martin the gifted editor of the well known juvenile publication "John Martin's Book". Send for a copy to The Procter & Gamble Co., Dept. 2-B, Cincinnati, Ohio.

IVORY SOAP . . . . $99\frac{44}{100}\%$ PURE

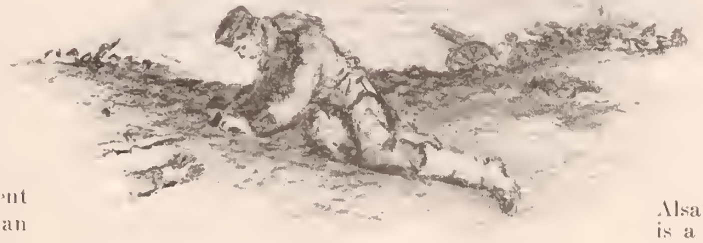
IT FLOATS

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD
An Illustrated News Weekly for the Home

Voices Through the Storm

By HEDGAR PLUVIANNES, Editor "La Bonne Revue," Digne, France

Ts seldom that a manuscript at once so iritual and so intensely touching as is rom this French author, in the heart e war zone, comes to our hands luviannes is the editor of the only ostant magazine of its kind in France, onne Revue, a thoroughly evangelical ation, which is read by many of the lers in the trenches, from whom, as he is us, he has "hundreds of letters, full atitude for blessings received." The incident led in the article below, he assures us, is "an nticated document of the war."—The Editor.



THE October day has risen, pale and golden, with this exquisite shade of things, which, before it dies, throws a sweeter light. The scene is in a large hospital at Bordeaux. a of the white beds along the cold walls con-in a mortally wounded soldier. The ward is l and silent. A sigh, a moan, the low and affec- te word of a nurse . . . that is all. The Great s or roams around the suf- ri ones.

I this room (would you be- vit, to see the gentleness and r of all, doctors and nurses?) e hmen and Germans are i l.

I re the dark head of a South- n; there, the fair hair of a n f Pomerania. Enemies yes- rdy, these men today com- ucate in the same Pain. In ner one calls: "Maman! a an!" In another you hear tter! Mutter!"

A d the voice is the same. It t desolate plaint of a heart h laims a last caress and the a rnal shoulder, to die more s.

I t how far off they are, the o ers of those dying men! o powerless to relieve their i ren, to bring them the least y comfort . . . their remem- a e in this remoteness, bring- g the wounded an additional i

O! if Mother were here!

I t she is not, and the head ll back, paler, more tired, ier; and along the cheek hin—glide some tears, the o desperately sad the soldier ver shed.

I a corner, well sheltered, have put the sickest of all. h have drawn the curtain, o depress the others.

Ts an "enemy of yesterday"; at has hatred in France ever u ved for the vanquished who ging to die?—for the prisoner h in a strange land, will e, all alone, his last breath? , no! The nurses, the doc- are around him and watch i sympathy the yellow, thin across which passes at ns a spasm of pain.

is quite young—hardly fy—and his plaintive voice ssantly calls:

"Mutter! Mutter!"

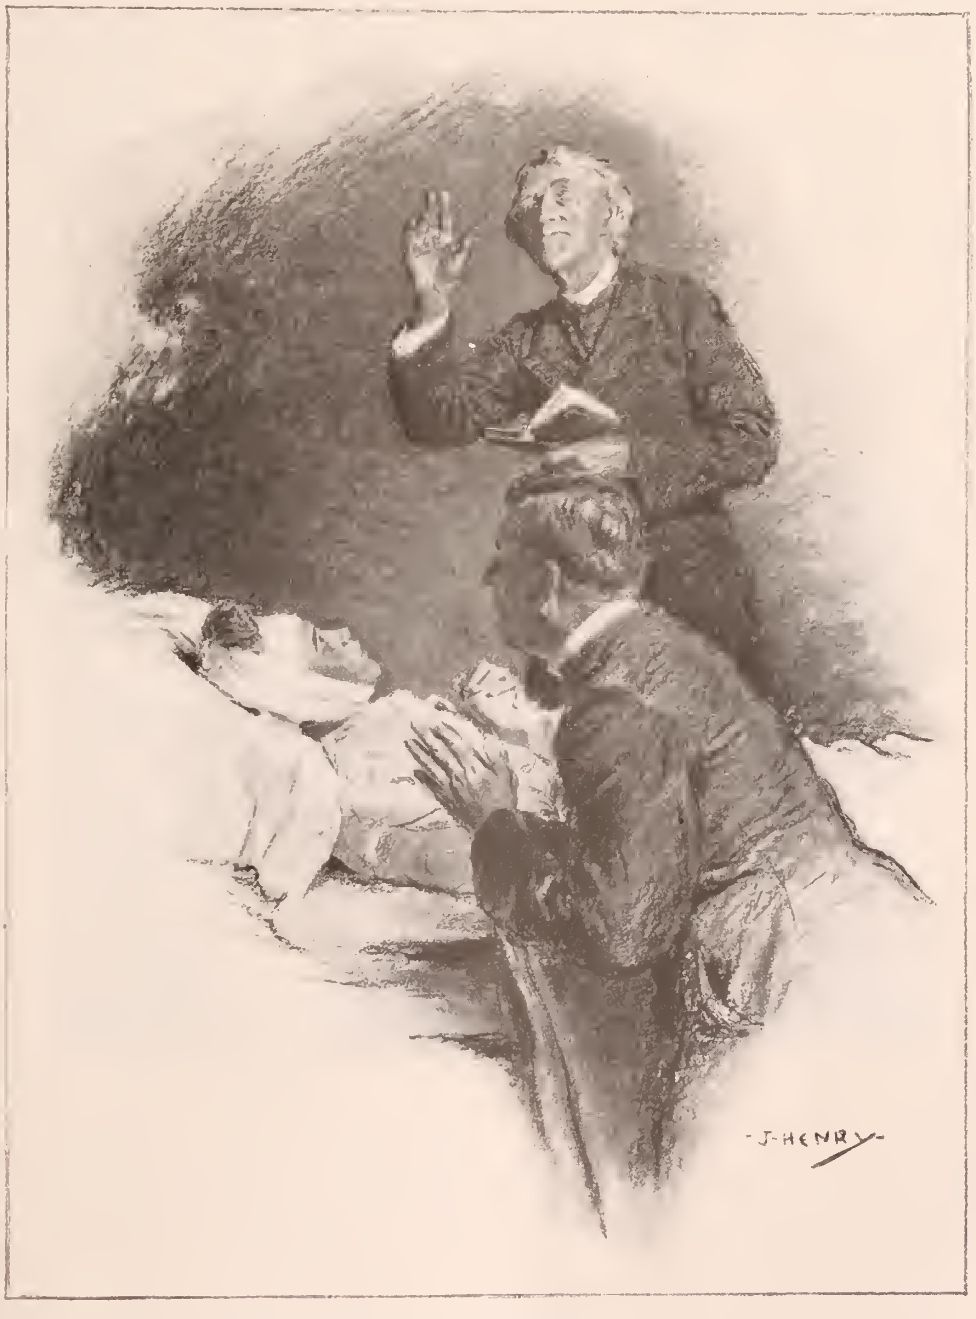
shivers under his white a lages, waits a minute and al again. But the "Mutter" o not come, and the child his life going. Then he mnurs:

"Gott!"

his time the call will be d. The nurse bends over him.

"Will you see the pastor?" (They know he is a Protestant.)

The wounded assents. They run to fetch a servant of God, who at this hour always comes to the hospital to visit the French soldiers. He comes. His face is grave and gentle. He bends over the dying man, says a few words; but the wounded Germans near by make a sign to intimate he does not understand.



"He looks with grateful surprise. . . . 'Through the valley of the shadow . . . thou art with me.' . . . Very gently, he sleeps."

The pastor stands up, deeply distressed. He does not speak German and this soldier does not understand French! Is it possible that, for this miserable difference of language, this man will enter eternity without hearing the words of life?

A silent prayer goes up from the French pastor's heart.

AT the other end of the room, speaking with a low voice to a patient, an Alsatian priest has heard this short dialogue. His is a broad mind, a generous heart. He comes forward and proposes himself as interpreter. Help has been granted.

Then they saw a strange and beautiful scene: The Protestant pastor, bending on one side, pronouncing the words which called to repentance and speaking afterwards of comfort and peace; on the other side, the priest translating them faithfully in the dying man's ears.

At last the shriveled features relaxed. The pastor then turned the leaves of the Book to the Twenty-third Psalm:

THE Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.

WITH his high, rather singing voice, used to litanies, the priest repeats the sacred words.

The German has opened his eyes for the last time.

He looks, with a grateful surprise, on those two men, with such different ideas and attire, who nevertheless, for the love of his soul, have joined together a moment to help him to die.

HE cannot speak any more. The death-rattle has begun. But he thanks them with his eyes and then shuts them again forever to the light of earth of this earth he found beautiful and desirable only a few weeks ago, but which he does not regret now. He has seen too many horrors and iniquities. Gradually the death-rattle becomes more distant and shorter. The little German soldier's face has lost its rigidity.

Divine peace has taken the place of awe. If his mother has not come to his call, he has seen by his bedside the Great Shepherd who brought him back to the fold.

And, very gently, he enters the supreme sleep.

THE priest and the pastor have watched the last sigh. When all is finished, above the little German soldier's bed they shake hands without a word.

Through Gates of Pearl

Augusta Albertson

CHAPTER IV—Continued

IT was while I was musing on these things, and probably it was because I was meditating upon the fate of those who could not claim entrance by virtue of sanctity, or innocence, or godly service, that my guide now said, "Come with me, and we shall view another portal."

So swiftly we moved that instantaneously I found myself far from the Ambassadors' Gate, beside an entrance which opened on the eastern boundary of the City. On either side was a pillar of emerald-colored stone. The gate itself was of red, but not the deep red of the Martyrs' Gate, and it lacked the quality of pulsing fire. It was the red of the garnet rather than of the ruby. The pillars were carved, but I saw no lily-work at the top. Above the portal was an inscription, the fourth Beatitude: "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness." "What gate is this I see?" I asked. "It is the Gate of Great Desire," was the reply. Thus saying, he led me to a place beneath the very arch of the gate, where, standing, I could see multitudes ascending the crystal stairway, approaching the Holy City, and about to enter it through the only portal I had thus far seen through which I felt that I myself had any right to pass.

What occurred to the visible person of Jesus on the Mount of Transfiguration has never yet been told in words sufficiently clear and copious to convey any satisfactory idea of his appearance. We read that "his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light." It was given to me, standing there within the Gate of Great Desire, to see repeated in the face of every approaching pilgrim the transformation that can be called by no better name than transfiguration. As moonlight falling upon a troubled sea transfigures it, as clouds shot through with sunset light transfigure a mountain, so something transfigured the faces of those who ascended this stairway. They seemed to have brought with them through the outer gate all the sadness of lifelong, unsatisfied yearning. Their faces were unutterably weary. But their sadness and weariness dropped from them and it was as if they already saw, through the opened upper gate, the fulfilment of all hope and the satisfaction of all longing.

The metamorphosis in every case was so marvelous and so sudden that I wondered whether it was possible for them, while they were yet outside the entrance, to see farther into the realm they were about to possess than my still earth-clouded vision had been able to penetrate. My guide caused me to descend the stairway for a little distance, and then to turn and approach the entrance as though I myself were one of the newly-liberated spirits seeking admission. Then I saw what they had seen, the transfiguring vista. As sometimes through a cloud-rift one can see a vast expanse of sky, through the Gate of Great Desire I saw what seemed a veritable endless prospect. Not the fruitful plains of the Promised Land, as it stretched out before Moses' hungry eyes in his last earthly vision, could have been half so entrancing as the view that burst upon my sight. There was the most soul-satisfying landscape imagination can conceive. Artists would call it a composite landscape. Between mossy banks there flowed a fourfold river. On either side of the river were groves of stately trees. My guide explained, "They are the trees of life whose leaves are for the healing of broken hearts." Back from the stream on both sides as far as the eye could reach were spacious buildings. "Are these the many mansions of the Father's house?" I asked. He said, "These are among the dwelling-places of the blest. Each one of the occupants has built the mansion for himself while still in the mortal life; he has built it by the character of his aspirations. They that set their desire upon noble things build nobly. They who have no spiritual desires have no place here. Indeed, such cannot enter through this gate. But those who do enter and those who are entering now already recognize in the distance the mansions they have been building." So it was borne in upon me that poverty and riches, after all, are of the mind alone.

Having had a glimpse of the vision resplendent, led by my guide I re-entered the City, and under his direction followed one who, having entered, passed swiftly toward a mansion in the distance. Crossing a branch of the river over a bridge of agate, he made his way to a stately structure apparently with all the assurance of one who had often been there before. He paused for a moment on the threshold with bowed head as if in prayer. "May I enter with you?" I inquired. He smiled sweetly and pointed to an inscription above the door. There I read, "Ask, and it shall be given unto you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." The door swung open and we entered the vestibule. We paused before an inner door. Upon a golden plate in its center I read the words, "The House of Fulfilment." This door opened into a chamber the dimensions of which made it a perfect cube. The light that filled the place was like the light of the City, soft but indescribably brilliant. An angelic servitor appeared to conduct us through the mansion.

HE explained: "This is the chamber of Good Intentions." No pictures hung upon the walls, but they were themselves pictures; the ceiling was a picture, the floor was a picture in mosaic. The old proverb which affirms that hell is paved with good intentions is a falsehood. Heaven is beautified with good intentions. No picture gallery of earth contains such glorious things as were portrayed upon the walls, ceiling and floor of this room. Virtue, courage and benevolence were here in concrete form. It was not mine to read in detail the record of that life—the interior record. I saw it synthetically rather than analytically, but with sufficient distinctness to see that it was strong, and brave, and beautiful. This was evidently what the soul designed to be. Presently we ascended a jeweled stairway and came to an upper room—the Chamber of Withheld Completions.

One of the profoundest mysteries, as well as one of the deepest sorrows, of earth is the death of the young. In many cases, it has been as though the sun had gone down at noon. Young men and young women have fallen just as they stood upon the threshold of their power. These events have always seemed to me anomalies in the providential order and have challenged my faith to the straining point. Some one has called such untimely deaths "interrupted processes." I now saw that there is no such thing as an terrupted process of life. Death is a mere inc ent Growth is not arrested by the change o es dence from one world to another. It is e tl so of plans and purposes, which having ee begun have had to be discontinued. Upc the walls of this chamber I saw in colors far ore beautiful than any tapestry the com ted circle of every broken arc in the life of th sou whose mansion it was. What he had dc or earth was but the fragment of a statue; he the statue was complete. I saw the meaning f it all No part of my vision had been mor on solatory. As I left the room I looked bac and read what had escaped my vision as I er red the chamber. Above the doorway, fixed an opalescent transom, there flashed the ds "Whatsoever God doeth, it shall be fo er nothing can be put to it, nor anything ken from it; and God doeth it that men shoul ear before him."

CHAPTER V

I LEFT my new-made friend in the l use of Fulfilment, and found my celestial id awaiting me just outside the entrance We passed down the stately avenue, which lis covered was paved with gold. And yet i was not metallic gold, but gold of the softn of velvet, gold that yielded gently to our foo eps and made me think of forest aisles in au n Were these golden leaves beneath our et? Certainly we trod on innumerable lea like forms. From the branches of the trees ile there came the low notes of doves. Th ky above us was like the glow of sunrise ove the Alps. At the end of the avenue rose an e ice roofed with intertwining trees. "It is the Sa u-ary of Explanation," said my guide, as I lc ed in that direction. Its spires rose to imme ur-able heights with airy delicacy, yet with sta ng distinctness.

Swiftly moving, presently we stood l ore another gate, the sixth I had seen, the nort n-most gate on the eastern side of the City. ere I noted for the first time that the gates wei ot of equal width. This was the widest gate ad thus far seen. The pillars on either side ere of the color known as royal purple. om pillar-top to pillar-top there stretched a gra ful arch. Again, as at the Gate of Great Des , I was permitted to pass through and stand ou de the entrance. The inscription on the arch as but a single word, "Inasmuch." Crowds ere coming up the stairway and thronging i studied their faces and there seemed to be ur-prise in their eyes as that word flashed b ore them.

One who approached the portal paused it reluctant to go in. Then ensued a convers on very much like that recorded in the twenty th chapter of the Gospel according to Matt w This soul could not believe he was entitle to admission by virtue of anything he had dor on earth. I heard him say, "When saw I ee sick and in prison and visited thee?" A V ce from within the City made reply. How c I describe that Voice? It was the same I ad heard at the Martyr Gate bidding one ente n. Can there be a luminous voice, a leaning ve? Lover-like in its accents of tenderness, yet r al in its tone of authority, the Voice spoke: "I ve you no memory of a stormy day when you c ne a ome of sickness and of want? An epidemic as aging in the city. Two of my children were . You ministered to them. You buried my ad Until you came I thought the Father had rsken me. You delivered my soul from espir." "I had forgotten that," he modestly pl d.

T Voice continued then, "It is recorded re that you lost friends on earth because of ou passionate protest against social and corre iniquities which involved the welfare of ilen; for every friend you lost on earth ecse you lent your strength to weakness, you av made a thousand friends here. Enter in." s passed through the gate I heard the music a eraph choir with accompaniment of trumets and saw the singers, circle within circle, ioh words fail me to repeat or describe the ar med yet rhythmic sweetness of the song. hrngs of children greeted the newcomer and hs who were admitted with him. Flocks of il nt-plumaged birds hovered over them or at red around them. I noticed a white dove erced upon the shoulder of one child, and ioer child held in his hand and fondled a u ird.

A group of white-robed spirits, buoyant, and nt mmeled by corporeal weight, greeted ioer newcomer. "These were lepers on the ri wful planet," said my guide. "They ited the City through the Martyr Gate and av come hither to welcome him who minisre to them." "Was not he, too, a martyr?" ased. "No," he answered, "but he was one hrist's most faithful servants."

OME with me," said my escort, "and see the Court of Gentle Service." Thither e ssed through a garden which stretched far beyond my vision. The air was rich with perfume. Here the path was rimmed with blue-fringed gentian. A placid lake reflected from its surface the foliage and bloom of tulip trees. Surrounded by a veritable forest of palms and pines I saw a canopy-like edifice of diaphanous blue. Above it in the soft breeze there floated a banner of deep crimson. Entering I perceived a multitude of mortals who had put on immortality, and immortals who had never worn the veil of human flesh. Here as elsewhere there were many children. I recognized one, the child of a neighbor of years ago, a girl who died when she was eleven, and whose death, I think, caused no great grief, because she had been weak in intellect. She approached me. Her eyes were bright and a beautiful smile was on her face, as she recognized me and said, "You gave me a book once, and I did not know enough to thank you; but I thank you for it now." (Then I recalled that I had given her a picture-book. It was not a particularly generous act on my part, for I did not want the book myself. Now I see that no seed of kindness, dropped even by a careless hand, can fail of fruitage.) Smiling and singing, the child left me.

Then I heard a conversation between one who had been in heaven a dozen centuries and one who had recently come. The latter asked, "Have all these I see ministered in Jesus' Name?" The other explained, "Yes, if they have ministered in his nature. To minister in Christ's character is to minister in his name. It is exactly so of prayer. To ask the Father in the Son's name is to ask him in the Son's character. How slow we were to learn this in the other world! And how slow mortals are still to learn that a Christlike deed prompted by a Christlike motive is none other than an expression of Christ's own Spirit! As many as are led by his Spirit are his children."

WHILE these two were conversing, another group approached, upon the face of one of whom I saw the only sign of sadness or anything like sadness which had met my vision within the City. But yet it was not sadness, though at first it seemed so in contrast to the gladness all about. It was rather regret. Pensive memories of the earth-life rested, for a time at least, upon that spirit. I heard him say: "As one escapes from a wrecked vessel, with little save life itself, so I reached this Land, almost without treasure. If it were possible for me to return, how much more wisely and generously would I distribute my goods! How nearly I came to missing the way entirely! My generosity in the other world, if aught there is to my credit, was a matter of mere impulse, caprice. I acted upon no fixed principle of service or sacrifice. So, for me, there was no abundant entrance here; no peal of trumpets greeted me; no bells chimed forth their welcome from airy towers."

I said to my guide, "Did not this spirit enter through the Gate of Gentle Service? Surely one who was admitted through that portal failed not of an abundant entrance!" He replied, "No; he was admitted through the Gate of Penitence." "May I not visit it?" I asked. "Presently," he answered, "but see you do not miss the lessons here."

To be continued

THE first chapters of this remarkable vision have appeared in preceding numbers of the Christian Herald which, so long as they last, can be obtained on request by any new reader receiving this copy as the beginning of his subscrpition.

Social Washington

WASHINGTON is in the midst of one of the busiest seasons the national capital has ever known, but its activities are y means confined to the statesmen nd he important happenings which are kig place under the capitol dome. h statesmen's wives and daughters e ually busy, for the social round is f swing at Washington.

I official Washington, social affairs, ke everything else, run on schedule. su ly during the week following h ksgiving, the congressional famies turn from all parts of the country nd stablish themselves for the session. h iomes of the cabinet families are oed before this date; as early, in et as the secretaries of the departie s return from their summer outings. e nber is devoted to débutante ar s of the daughters who are to a their bows to society, and to ffial calls. The wise woman whose us nd is a member of either the en e or the House, and who atents to make the official calls, gets s any of them done as possible ur g the Christmas month. The ec sity of this can be appreciated h it is realized that with the cabinet, n with many of the congressional os sses, these "duty" calls number v al thousand every season. The is hostess knows also that the calls n be gotten off as much as possible December, because January and el ary will bring an endless round of in rs, luncheons, receptions, and teas, it numberless musicales and plays t webbed with lecture courses, and h religious, philanthropic and scienifi meetings that are constantly in es on at Washington during the winer

th January, the formal official nt taining begins. Formerly the seaor pened with the popular New Year's e tion at the White House to which v body was welcome, but President i n dispensed with the New Year es ity the first winter of his admin-stration and has not revived it. The ir official function, consequently, has been the diplomatic reception; but this, on account of conditions arising in the diplomatic corps from the war in Europe, was replaced this year by the Pan-American reception. The usual official program at the White House provides for the diplomatic reception during the first week in January, followed a week later by the President's dinner to the cabinet. During the alternate weeks until Lent there occur successively the diplomatic dinner (and this winter, on account of the war, two diplomatic dinners will be given), the judicial reception, the Supreme Court dinner, the reception to Congress, the dinner to the Speaker. The official state functions close the week before Lent with the reception to the army and navy, the most spectacular of all the official festivities of the winter. During this same period the Vice-President and the members of the cabinet give a dinner, at their respective houses, each succeeding week, in honor of the President and Mrs. Wilson. Of late years it has become a custom for the cabinet hosts to invite out-of-town guests only to meet the President.

The East Room, Scene of Most White House Public Functions

The White House is always in gala dress for the state functions. After the restoration of the mansion in 1903 President Roosevelt made the innovation of serving refreshments at the receptions, which, while it is a very pleasant feature of the receptions, adds infinitely to the expense,—an expense, it must not be forgotten, which comes out of the private pocket of the chief executive.

The first of the receptions this winter—that to the Pan-American Congress—was the largest ever given in the mansion. Many of the most distinguished scientists of two continents were present. Forty-three hundred invitations had been sent out for the reception, and more than four thousand were present. The guests of honor, the South and Central American delegates to the congress, and those who were to assist in entertaining them, were invited in the Green Room to await the coming down stairs of the presidential party. Many of the other guests formed in a double line in the East Room, a line that extended down the stairs and out the full length of the East Corridor, while hundreds waited for nearly two hours in their conveyances before they could be admitted to the mansion.

Promptly at half past nine the buglers of the Marine Band rang out the call and the same instant the musicians began playing "Hail to the Chief." To the inspiring notes the presidential party came down the wide granite stairway—first the President's military aides, and directly behind them came the President and his bride.

By the time the reader is perusing these lines, official Washington will be at the height of its gay winter. Some delightful musicales are scheduled for the East Room a little later in the season. Many informal luncheons and teas are being dispensed already by the new mistress of the executive mansion. She is to be the honor guest on the afternoon of January 24 at the capital's most exclusive woman's organization, the Washington Club. On the evening of St. Valentine's Day will occur the great event of the season for the Congressional Club, when the ladies are to have the President and wife as the guests of honor at the new club house.

ABBY GUNN BAKER.

A Week in the World's News

STRAIGHTENING THE MEXICAN TANGLE. Congress on January 17 again took up the Mexican problem. A dispatch from Mr. Silliman told of a decree issued by the Carranza government providing for municipal elections to be held throughout the country shortly after April first. A portion of the band which was guilty of the massacre at Santa Ysabel was captured and executed. An attempt on Tuesday to force a report by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations on one of the resolutions authorizing the President to use armed force in Mexico failed. The Mexican bandit Baca-Vales, who had been Villa's executioner, was himself executed in Juarez on January 18. Villa and his leaders Rafia Castro and Pablo Lopez were outlawed by Carranza and made subject to immediate death on capture. Villa has been several times reported taken prisoner; he is surrounded in the rough mountain country of western Chihuahua. It was reported on January 20 that about 4,000 malcontents were operating near Torreon, shouting for Felix Diaz, who has been reported as preparing a new revolt against Carranza. It has been several times suggested that Carranza's failure to go to Mexico City was due to his distrust of his leaders in that part of Mexico. On January 21 it was announced in a special cablegram in the New York Times that the Carranza government had chosen Dolores Hidalgo in the state of Guanajuato to be the new capital of Mexico. Dolores is a small town and was the birthplace of the Creole priest Miguel Hidalgo y Costilla, who on September 15, 1810, called his followers together by ringing a church bell and pronounced the famous cry of Dolores, "Long live our holy mother of Guadalupe; long live America, and death to bad government." This was the beginning of Mexican "independence." The old bell is now hanging in the National Palace in Mexico City. It is planned to sell the government buildings of Mexico City except the Palace of Chapultepec, the Governor's Palace, and one or two other principal buildings, and to use the proceeds of the sale in building new and modern buildings at Dolores, which will be laid out as a model capital. On January 22 another American, a cattle man, who had followed bandits over the line to recover stolen cattle, was killed on Mexican soil.

UNPRECEDENTED FLOODS. A deluge of rain in the Mississippi Valley has caused destruction and damage all the way from Illinois to Oklahoma. In Chicago the sewers and the Chicago River were backed up, polluting the water supply. Illinois Central tracks along the Lake front were under a foot of water. Telephone service was crippled, schools were forced to close. Fox, Desplaines, Illinois, and Rock Rivers were out of their banks, and at Joliette, Ill., two thousand persons had been made homeless by the flood. In Kansas City, Mo., the breaking up of the ice carried out the false-work of a new bridge under construction. The rapid rising of the Kansas River threatened further damage. At Oklahoma City five persons were drowned. Much property was destroyed and train service was demoralized.

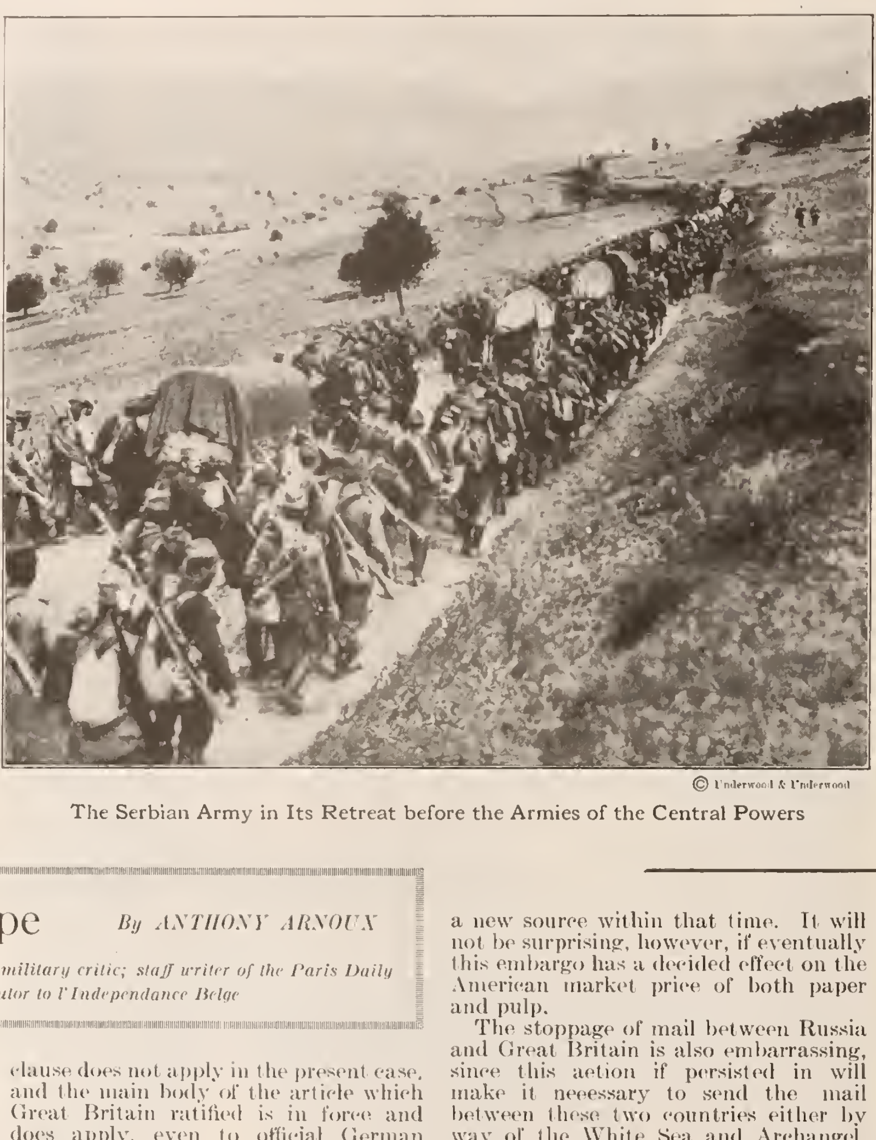
WILL THEY POUR OIL ON THE TROUBLED WATERS? With the Mexican Petroleum Company as the directing corporation, an amalgamation of a number of big oil concerns is being effected to be known as the Pan-American Petroleum and Transit Company, capitalized at $150,000,000. Properties which will be combined in this merger are those of the Associated Oil Company, a subsidiary corporation of the Southern Pacific Railroad, the Union Oil Company, and possibly the California Petroleum Company, besides over one hundred small independent companies now operating on the Pacific coast. The central corporation of this great oil trust was incorporated in Delaware in 1907 to operate in any part of the United States and Mexico, and at present controls some 600,000 acres of oil lands, principally in Mexico. The aggregate capacity of these plants is at present 70,000 barrels of oil per day, and besides twenty-six completed oil wells the Mexican Petroleum Company owns railroad lines, pipe lines, and oil tanks with immense storage capacity, and much land at Tampico. The American oil fields of the other companies are said to have an estimated minimum production of over 600,000,000 barrels a year. Many subsidiary corporations are included in the Associated Oil Company.

THE RIGHTS OF NATIONS. The American Institute of International Law, composed of five delegates from each of the twenty-one American Republics, has prepared a Declaration of the Rights of Nations in five articles, in substance as follows: 1. Every nation has a right to exist, to protect and to conserve its existence. But this is held not to permit unlawful acts against innocent and unoffending states. 2. Every nation has the right of independence and freedom for self development, but no right to violate the just rights of other states. 3. Every nation is in law the equal of every other state. 4. Every nation right to exclusive jurisdiction within boundaries. 5. Every nation is en have its rights respected and protect other nations.

REBELLION HALTS MONARC was reported on January 19 from Pek the coronation of Yuan Shi Kai as em China has been postponed indefinit postponement being due to disturba some of the southern provinces.

SUBMARINE ACCIDENT PRI ED. The investigation into the caus fatal explosion in the United States su E-2, referred to in last week's Christian determined that the explosion was d excessive amount of hydrogen gas give the new Edison batteries which we tested. Lieutenant Charles M. Cook States Navy, commander of the sul testified that on September 9 last, dressed an official communication thr proper channels asking that the E-2 plied with hydrogen-detecting apparat the time of explosion the cells wer given a very strenuous test, which p greatly increased the amount of hydr given off. The ventilating apparatus submarine was shown to have been v

GRUESOME GIANTS. The peopl United States may well bestir thems lay low those prevalent diseases which, ing to the Bureau of the Census, are r ble for most of the recorded deaths. area in which data were gathered, deaths in the year 1914 are accounted these causes: heart diseases, tubercul pneumonia stalked, three abreast, at t of this group of giants, and among t count for thirty per cent. of the total, disease 99,534, a considerable increa 1900; tuberculosis (chiefly of the 96,903, a decided drop in the percentag last ten years; pneumonia, 83,804, w said to be the lowest rate chargeable this disease on record. Following the ers in this onslaught against the race, first, Bright's disease, then malignant (including cancer), diabetes, typhoid, e apoplexy, arterial diseases, and dip Children's epidemics swept nearly children and adults into eternity in th tration area in 1914, measles and wh cough competing for first place. Suic the number of 10,933 were reported. pears to be the conviction of certain min national good health can be assured b pulsory physical examination of ever vidual at least once a year, by politic pointees of politically constituted boa health. Excepting the ignorant and t cious in our population, the compulsory ical examination that is necessary i examination. The race will be subj years to come to the ravages of disease, rests with every individual to protect h



© Underwood & Underwood

The Serbian Army in Its Retreat before the Armies of the Central Powers

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Independance Belge

THE quarrel between Great Britain and Sweden over Great Britain's holding up steamers from America and elswhere, containing mail for Sweden or via Sweden, on the high seas, taking such steamers into a British port and there removing the mails, has attracted much attention during the past week. The rule formulated at The Hague on this subject runs as follows:

Convention IX, adopted October 18, 1907, Article 1. "The postal correspondence of neutrals or belligerents, whatever its official or private character may be, found on the high seas on board a neutral or enemy ship, is inviolable. If the ship is detained, the correspondence is (to be) forwarded by the captor with the least possible delay."

"The provisions of the preceding paragraph do not apply, in case of a violation of blockade, to correspondence destined for or proceeding from a blockaded port."

But as Great Britain has refrained from describing her procedure in regard to Germany as a "blockade," this last clause does not apply in the present case, and the main body of the article which Great Britain ratified is in force and does apply, even to official German correspondence. Great Britain has seized Swedish mail in Swedish vessels on the high seas. After a resultless remonstance, Sweden retaliated by seizing the British mail to and from Russia, which necessarily crosses her territory, and continues to hold the same though, curiously enough in view of her prior seizures, Great Britain has remonstrated against this act by Sweden.

This reprisal not producing the desired result, Sweden has followed it up by another and even more drastic step, that of placing an embargo on all wood-pulp exports from Sweden to Great Britain or her allies. About seventy per cent. of the paper on which British newspapers are printed is made from Swedish pulp. There is presumably a stock of this pulp in Great Britain which will last for the next five or six weeks, and it does not seem possible for England to arrange to obtain supplies of pulp from a new source within that time. It will not be surprising, however, if eventually this embargo has a decided effect on the American market price of both paper and pulp.

The stoppage of mail between Russia and Great Britain is also embarrassing, since this action if persisted in will make it necessary to send the mail between these two countries either by way of the White Sea and Archangel, or via Canada, Vladivostock and the Trans-Siberian railroad, either route taking much longer than that through Sweden.

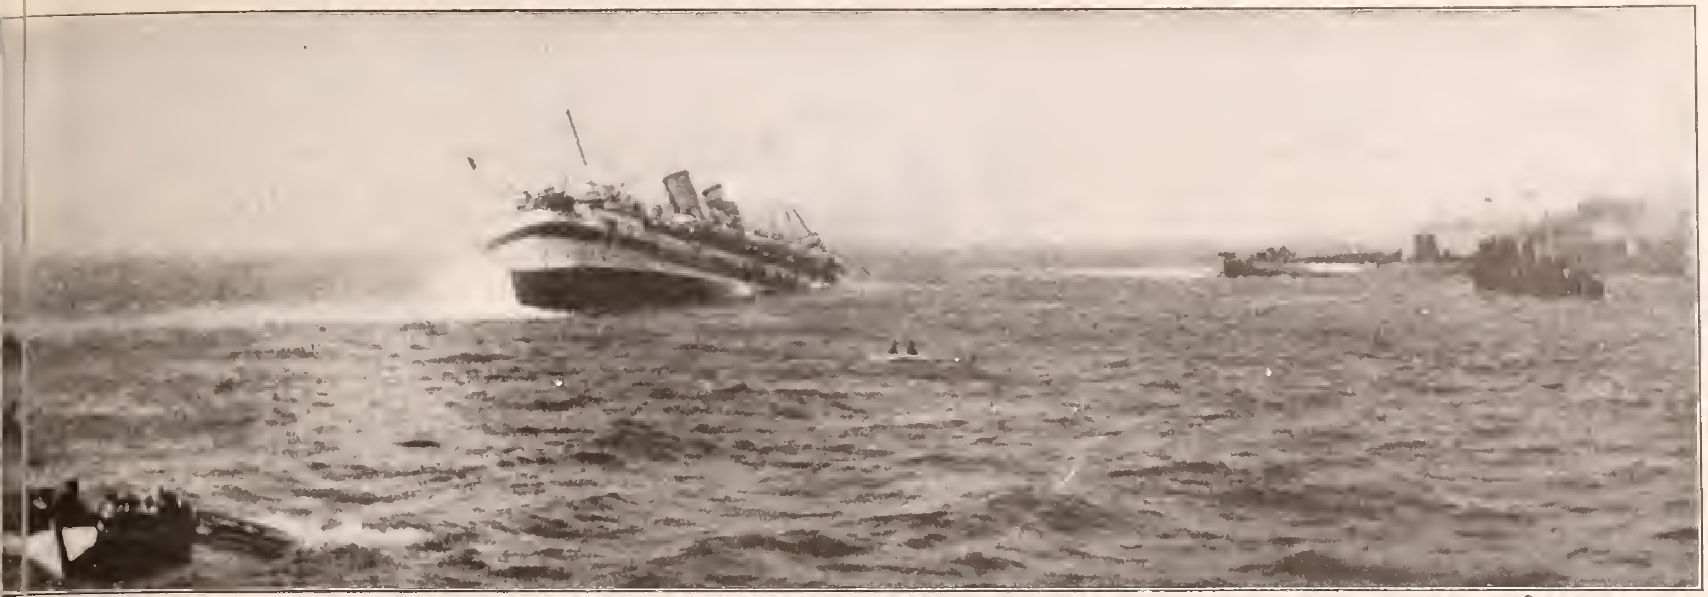
The Greek situation still remains extremely involved. The seizure of Salonica and of the Island of Corfu by the Allies has been followed by the landing of troops at several other places on the Greek coast, but the places chosen and the numerical strength of the forces landed we do not know. It must be remembered that all means of communication with Greece are controlled by the Allied powers. There have been reports that the Port of Piraeus, six miles from Athens, has been seized, as well as the Isthmus of Corinth and the Corinth Canal, but there is little certainty that these seizures have actually taken place.

Italian sources are responsible for a story that in the event that Constantine does not concede all the Allies re of him, including the use of the army against the Central Powers a Bulgarians, the Allies intend to det him and constitute a Greek rep placing Venizelos at its head. The politically is weak, in that Venize a Greek, and even his political en concede that he is actuated by pat motives, so that his policy has keynote the advancement of the i ests of Greece. Besides, Venizelos Cretan, that is, an islander, and Greek continental people have followed an islander far in any d action.

On the Salonica front itself, all been quiet and there are absolutel signs that an attack on that ei contemplated at the present tim the Teutons. Indeed, it would h seem good strategy on their part so. They are solidly entrenched o border between Greece and Serbia, can afford to wait there for an as by their adversary.

The Allies continue to fortify Salonica position and to destroy bridges, viaducts, et cetera, on railroads leading north to the Ser border, so as to interpose all pos obstacles to a German advance from this frontier. Greece has for

Continued on page 147



© American Press Association

Sinking of the British Hospital Ship Anglia in the Channel on November 17, About Eighty Men Out of Nearly Four Hundred Being Lost

d. he be at the head of a household, the em ers of his family, against these giants of espr by wise living.

"HEY HAVE THEIR REWARD IN HI WORLD." There is such a verse in the ri ures, but we do not know for a certainty at was prophetical of the announcement t press of January 21 that common stock hlehem Steel had for the first time rn a dividend, the amount being $30 per ar the total being $4,500,000 on $15,000,- 0 outstanding stock, the payment being id represent "only about a single month's t ofits of the corporation from its ar siness and sales of steel to domes- nsumers." The price of Bethle- m teel fluctuated from 478 down ro h 460 and up again to 479 on ec of the announcement in Wall re Only a month before the war art you could have bought all the et hem common stock you wanted $ a share. Immediately after the r arted, Charles M. Schwab made re d trip abroad and returned with ntracts which have been so prof- ab It is also claimed that this cor- ra on, of which Mr. Schwab is the ad spent in the neighborhood of 2, 0,000, taken out of the year's rn gs, for new construction to meet e eds of war contracts, and that rt similar expenditures aggregat- g 0,000,000 in the next three years e ntemplated. The news item at in addition, that "for several on s 500,000 shells, complete in si powder and bullets, have been ip d every thirty days, and scores ca on have come down to New York m Bethlehem to crowd the decks o going steamers." . . . On the m lay it was announced that the at al Acme Manufacturing Com- n of Cleveland, Ohio, was about to st ute a stock dividend estimated f m 50 to 100 per cent. This com- as just purchased the Windsor ac ne Company of Windsor, Vt., yi $1,100 per share for its stock.

JA AN ON THE WIRE. In De- m r a great celebration was held in ok in honor of the twenty-fifth ni rsary of the opening of the tele- o service in Japan. On the 16th D ember, 1890, service was opened Ja an with two exchanges, at Tokyo d saka, the two exchanges having 0 bscribers. At present there are 10 xchange offices and 210,000 sub- ri s, the service being a government-owned ili . The first installation was made by pa se, who got their instructions in the ni States under John J. Carty, and Mr. ar was hailed at the celebration as the th of the Japanese telephone.

S EDEN LOCKS HORNS WITH BRIT- N The British action in stopping all neu- al ails and in holding parcel post packages f ght and not entitled to the military ex- np ons accorded to first-class mail, has been se ed in all the Scandinavian countries, rt ilarly in Sweden. The Swedish govern- en s stopping all parcel post shipments from ng d to Russia as a means of reprisal, pend- g e settlement with Great Britain of its ot ts against the stoppage of its mails. s a additional measure of reprisal the Swed- h vernment on January 21 laid an em- ar on the exportation of wood pulp. Great rit imports nine-tenths of her pulp for ap making from Norway and Sweden.

P TTING DRINK TO A GOOD USE. he rohibition of the sale of spirits in Russia as ft on the hands of the Russian govern- en a stock of 260,000,000 gallons of vodka. h uestion of what to do with it is a large and as yet unsolved question. Some members of the Duma favor the immediate destruction of the stock, others feel that that would be an unwarranted waste, since chemists are working on a scheme for the use of the spirits mixed with naphtha in internal combustion engines and also in the manufacture of artificial rubber. The government is now engaged in drawing up a bill providing for the maintenance of temperance for all time, but that does not solve the question of what to do with the stock on hand.

EENY, MEENY, MINY, MO. It was announced in Washington on January 19, by Representative Bailey of Pennsylvania, that William J. Bryan would shortly take the stump, traveling throughout the country and speaking in many cities in opposition to the plans for preparedness which Mr. Wilson will present to the country on his speaking tour in February. Mr. Bryan takes the position that there is no disloyalty to the party in disagreeing with its titular head upon questions which have not yet been made a matter of party policy. Mr. Bryan and a great many Democrats believe that the President is wrong in his attempt to increase the military forces of this country. Each spokesman will present his case ably, and the unique "home" game of tag will end at the Democratic national convention at St. Louis. But who will be "It" is more than we can prophesy.

© Underwood & Underwood

Bergen, Norway, the fishing center that was swept by fire January 16, making 2,000 homeless, as reported in last week's Christian Herald. The conflagration was said to be the worst ever recorded in Norway. The business section with its old wholesale houses, several of the largest of the hotels, a number of schools, the electric plant and banks and newspapers, were in the section destroyed. The battleship "Eidsvuld" has gone to Bergen with provisions and clothing, and a corps of engineers to build sheds for the homeless people.

ACCUSATION BUT NO TRIAL. Some months ago, American sailors saw an engagement between an English patrol boat, the Baralong, and a German submarine off the coast of Ireland. The American seamen made affidavit on arrival at New Orleans that the English patrol boat had refused to accept the surrender of the submarine's crew, and had continued firing until both crew and boat were destroyed. The German government, acting through Ambassador Page, called the attention of the British government to the affidavits in their possession and asked that proper action be taken. The British government agreed to submit the Baralong question to a board of neutral naval officers if Germany would include in the investigation the British complaint regarding the destruction in Danish waters of the British submarine E-13 by a German torpedo-boat destroyer, and two other cases in which the British admiralty held that the German naval commanders had failed to observe the rules of war. The German government issued a statement in defense of its commanders in the cases at issue, and refused to accept investigation by a neutral board. Germany refused to include the English complaint with her own, and the question stands as it did before.

McKINLEY SOUVENIRS. On January 18 a committee of the House of Representatives reported favorably a bill authorizing the coinage of 100,000 McKinley gold dollars, which the McKinley Birthplace Memorial Association is to be permitted to sell at a premium to help pay for the memorial building to be erected at Niles, Ohio.

WISH THIS CHAIN BROKEN. A few months ago two young women in New York, impressed with the untold agonies which soldiers were undergoing through operations without anesthetics, started a chain letter asking twenty-five cents from each person receiving a letter, and asking each recipient of a letter to send identical letters to four other persons. The quarters were to be sent to Miss Elizabeth Whitman, Eye and Ear Hospital, Thirteenth Street and Second Avenue, New York City. The letters were sent out without Miss Whitman's knowledge. The sum of $5,000 had been received on January 19, and all money received has been properly accounted for and turned over to various war relief organizations under the Red Cross. But the handling of the money is a serious inconvenience to Miss Whitman, and it is greatly desired that the chain should be broken.

NURSE SHARES PRIVATIONS. Because of lack of transportation facilities, Miss Sybil Eden, who was attached to the Christian Herald Relief Committee in Serbia, followed on foot the flight of the Serbian refugees which began last September. Miss Eden walked a total of 360 miles through mountain passes filled with snow. The weather was intensely cold, the Serbian soldiers, who also were in flight, had very meager rations, and the Red Cross nurses, who were following the retreat and ministering to the soldiers, would have starved if the soldiers had not shared with them their own scanty rations.

PROHIBITION MOVES TO THE CITY. Until January 1 no city of much over 100,000 population had come under absolute prohibition. Prohibition is now being tried in the cities of Denver, of 250,000 inhabitants, Portland, with 260,000, and Seattle with 335,000.

POPULAR FOR MANY REASONS. The census taken in the state of New York last June has been submitted to the legislature by the Secretary of State and shows the exact population to be 9,687,744, of whom 5,047,221 live in Greater New York; 83.2 per cent are citizens. In ten years there has been an increase of 20.86 per cent. in total population, aliens increasing more than four times as fast as citizens.

"I CANNOT SING THE OLD SONGS." The school children of Boston may be humming and singing and whistling the song that bears this caption pretty soon, if the Hebrew portion of the city's population succeed in their effort to have a recently adopted song book for younger children excluded from the schools on the ground that it contains a number of songs of the Christian religion, especially the Christmas hymns and carols such as "Silent Night," "It Came Upon the Midnight Clear" and "The First Noël."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE $1 50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

THE MISSING PIECE

A SERMON

By

*REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

TEXT—Matt. 11:4, 5. "Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see. The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the Gospel preached unto them."

THAT is a most pathetic list. It represents the army of the incomplete. Every member of the army is characterized by some conspicuous defect. Something is wanting. In every one there is a black gap. The blind, the lame, the leper, the deaf, the dead, the poor! Every one has something missing: every one gropes for his lost piece of silver: and my text affirms that every one finds the missing piece in Christ. "The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the Gospel preached unto them." Says the apostle Paul, "We are complete in him." The Christ fits into our need, and fills us out to perfection. "In him was life." All the missing pieces of life are discovered and recovered in him.

That is the supreme proof of the Messiahship. "Art thou he that should come?" "Go and tell John that men and women are turning to me in their imperfections and deformity, and they are all finding in me the thing they seek. They are discovering themselves in me! The blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear! Every man realizes himself in me, and rises out of partialness and deformity into divine completeness."

Let us state the evidence again in a word. Every man who comes to the Master with an empty vessel goes away with it filled. What then is the claim? That he is all fulness; that no emptiness which can be presented to him can take him by surprise; that we can discover no scantiness in his resources; that the great gap which yawns in infirmity and disease and death can be filled up out of his infinite plenteousness.

That is the vast claim which lies behind the words of my text. Every human need may be interpreted as an index of the Master's wealth. Every need has its complement in him. Am I blind? In him I may find sight. Am I lame? In him I may find energy. Am I deaf? In him I may find hearing. Am I leprous? In him I may find health. What does this mean? It means that all restoring and reviving forces center in his personality, and issue from the energy of his own transcendent will. It means that he claims to be the fountain, ever creating, never impoverished. "Before Abraham was, I am!" "I am"; not "I was"; "I am!" With him there is no past. It is one eternal present—one eternal, brimming fulness—ever the fountain. "I am!" "All power is mine in heaven and on earth." "I am the fountain." "Ye are complete in him."

SUCH is the claim. Is his entire life consistent with the claim? One might be almost reluctant to apply such an exacting test. Was he always the fountain? Was he always strong, creative, authoritative, full? Was he never an empty cistern? This we know, that all other men are only occasionally fountains. The water ofttimes fails them. Poets are not always fountains. The inspiration often flags. The muse is very capricious. Any one with a sensitive spirit may know when Wordsworth's fountain is playing and when the silvery strain has ceased. You pass from apocalypse to commonplace, from divine afflatus to merely congregated words. It is not otherwise with all the members of the literary host. They have their hours of ecstasy and their months of commonplace. Now the fountain is playing, and now the precious flow has ceased. You know how we express it in our familiar speech. We say, "Men are not always at their best." They have their moments on the mount, but they travel many flat, monotonous miles before they reach the mount. They are not always at their best. You can make comparisons between their several days, and the comparison reveals distinctions as of twilight and noontide.

How was it with the Christ? He was always at the best! There is only one mood at your disposal when you judge the Christ. The positive and the comparative moods are obsolete. You can only use the superlative. The fountain is always flowing, always full! There is no room for comparison between one day and the next. They are all days of the Son of Man, and they are all full. I cannot tell you the painful jar which sounded through the chords of my heart when I read in a certain very powerful and popular book on the teachings of Christ this strangely unsuitable word: "On one occasion, in a moment of brilliant inspiration!" "A moment of brilliant inspiration!" When were the moments of the Master not filled with brilliant inspiration? "God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him." He was always inspired, always brilliantly inspired, always full. The day is never poor. He is always consistent, ever at the best, always the fountain.

I WILL watch this Man who claims to be the fountain, "the fulness of the Godhead," when he comes face to face with the three black presences which terrify me, filling me with paralyzing dread. I will watch him when he encounters guilt, when he confronts devilry, and when he faces death. Will his demeanor be consistent with his claim? Will his power slacken, will his inspiration flag? Or will he be the fountain, full, authoritative, original? Will he reveal himself as the all-complete? Here is a man with will and conscience clogged by lustful deposits of many years. The angel within him is being petrified by the accumulated past of untold sins. He is brought face to face with the Master. Will the Master hesitate? Will he shrink? Will his speech trickle out in uncertain timidity? "Thy sins be forgiven thee!" That is enough. It is the voice of the fountain, and grandly consistent with the Master's claim.

Here is another man in the grip of an unclean spirit. I care not now to particularly inquire as to the nature of his possession. Sufficient to know that he is devil-possessed. He is in the bondage of a mighty, present devil. He is brought face to face with the Master. Will the Master be consistent? Will he evade? Will he delay? Will he wait some moment of "brilliant inspiration?" "I charge thee, come out of him, and enter no more into him!" That sounds like the voice of the fountain! There is nothing uncertain or derivative about it. It is the utterance of the final authority, of the executive personality, creative and full. Let us go now to a closed grave. The conditions are sufficiently exacting. "Lord, by this time he stinketh, for he hath been dead four days!" Will the fountain fail? Will the tone of authority tremble into uncertainty? Will he be original here, adequate here, full here? "Lazarus, come forth!" It is enough life is consistent. The tone is persistent. It voice of the fountain. "The river of God is water." He is always ready, always adequate, full. No need takes him by surprise. "Art t that should come, or look we for another?" John what ye see and hear. Tell him to wh evidence points. The fountain never fail fulness is the complement to every emptiness. blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are up. and the poor have the Gospel preache them." "Ye are complete in him."

WELL, he claims then to be the fountain and he claims that his dealings with me stantiate his claim. "I am come that ye migh life, and that ye might have it more abundantl'

Now let me turn your minds to a slightly d angle of the subject. I have already referre but let me now give it more definite expressio is the fountain of life, and see how the gift t the individual need. It enters and it fills out n peculiar emptiness—sight for the blind, hearing deaf, purity for the unclean, vital energy for the

The Christ is a specialist in every direct human need. Just as the great ocean flows i differently shaped creeks and crannies and c our wide-stretching shores, and fills them w fulness, so the fulness of the creative life flov our very varied and many-shaped vessels, and forms them from defect and poverty into pa of the divine completeness. "He knew what man," says the apostle John: he knows ou points, and the fountain sends its restoring a viving influence straight away to the gapin That is the great glory of the Christian r Every man may find in Christ the remedy own defects. Virtue goes out of the Lord, a vivifying, saving health makes for the part maimed or diseased or dead. Art thou blind? thou not see the beauty of the beautiful, or th ness of the unlovely? What is thy defect? Wh. thou need? "What wilt thou that I should d thee?" "Lord, that I might receive my s "And immediately he received his sight, and fo Jesus in the way." Art thou lame? Shou, name be Mr. Halting? Is there no firmness, cision in thy step?

Has thy will no resoluteness? Dost thou rer paralyzing inactivity? Take thy defect to the tain, and the virtue of thy Saviour shall stra minister to thy need. He maketh the "lame to He changes infirmity into firmness. "He mak feet like hinds' feet," swift and sure-footed, a tablishes us in the pure and lofty place. Ar leprous? Is thy spirit loathsome? Is thy sty, when it was purposed to be a temple? dost thou need? "I will; be thou clean." The tain sends the waters of life right away to the need, and the individual emptiness is swallov by the divine fulness. "Of his fulness have received, and grace for grace."

What dost thou lack? What is missing? W thy lost piece of silver? Thou hast been sw for it and seeking for it amid the dust-heaps world. "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto, Every one finds the missing piece in him.

---

*Pastor Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York.

News of Men and Missions

PROFESSOR J. P. XENIDES, of Marsovan College, Asia Minor, is now in the United States on a brief visit. He is a Greek, eminent in scholarship, and has been engaged in missionary work for many years. Professor Xenides is thoroughly familiar with the present situation in Turkey, Greece and the Balkans. He is a clear and forcible speaker, and any church, Christian Endeavor or other allied organization can secure his services for address or lecture by writing to him in care of this journal.

YESURAJUDASS ("the slave of Jesus") was once the heir of the chief devil-priest of this district. Just as he was about to be initiated with the mystical and dreadful rites, he boldly declared himself a Christian, and his long sacred hair, that had never been cut since his birth, was shaved off and I baptized him in the presence of all the priests of this district and all the members of his family. He is now an evangelist and is working with me in the villages around Medak.

During the last few weeks we have had a most interesting meeting with another important devil-priest on the opposite side of my circuit. He is now an old man and owns a large number of fields which were given to his forefathers. This old man knew that we had come to his village to preach to his people, yet to our astonishment he gave us a welcome and invited us to come and eat in his house. After that he followed us to the service and after our evangelist had spoken, he urged his own people most strongly to become Christians, publicly owning that he had no faith in his own gods, by whose service he secured his living, and saying that but for his "great possessions" he himself would "follow Jesus." Now he has just offered me one of his houses for an evangelist to live in. I am anxious to place Yesurajudass, our converted devil-priest, in this house. Twenty years ago if any one had told me that we should have two or three evangelists who had once been devil-priests, and that we should be invited to eat and live in the house of the chief priest of one of our districts, I could not have believed it. God has wonderfully opened our way and we have baptized more than 20,000 Christian converts in this district in the last twenty years: yet I remember the time when we had only a handful of brave beginners.

CHARLES D. POSNETT.

REV. A. C. DIXON of the Metr Tabernacle, London, writes Christian Herald that the institutions f by Charles H. Spurgeon, and which ha a means of blessing to great mul Americans among them, are suffering terial decrease of funds owing to th The Pastors' College and Colportage A tion are greatly hampered by such a sit It would be a positive misfortune if th fulness were seriously impaired, even rarily. Any reader of this journal interested in the maintenance of the which Pastor Spurgeon devoted a lar of his life can learn all particulars by to Rev. Dr. Dixon, Metropolitan Tab Newington Butts, London, S. E., Eng EVANGELIST JOHN S. HAMILTO party closed a successful camp Hastings, Neb., December 12, with 177 sions. Dr. Hamilton and party are n gaged in a meeting in Shelbyville, Ind.

Daily Meditation

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY

J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

The School of Hunger

SUNDAY, February 6. Deut. 8:3. "I led thee, and suffered thee to hunger . . . to teach thee that man shall not live by bread alone." What a strange school is this school of hunger! We e d into the discipline of deprivation in order that ay know the relative values of things. We sc er the true place of a thing when it is taken from . nce it seemed to occupy the front rank, to be e the primaries of life; and when it was removed, und something else in the chief seat, and the is g thing was seen in a secondary place. The at ial slips away in order that the spiritual may be v ed. We lose a princeling in order that we may d king. "In the year that Uzziah died I saw the r" Even in the school of bereavement we come o the Lord of life.

Al this, too, is another lesson in the school of pr ation: "I suffered thee to be deprived of success o teach thee that man does not live by success on" We live by disappointment as well as by ta ment. Nay, in our disappointments we can in finer attainments. The cloudless skies make ha. It is the strangely mingled weather, with its l ss and cold, searching mists and rains, which k the "green and pleasant land." We cannot live ccess alone. Success alone would make us hard d ry. We need the softening ministry of disp tment. We need the enlarging ministry of l . We need the mysterious tonic of defeat.

Al this, too, is a lesson taught in the school of n r: "I suffered thee to be deprived of joy to e thee that man doth not live by joy alone." We d y exalt our feelings, and we come to think of st es as the normal mood of a wholesome Christian . Ve seek to live in happy feelings, rather than in a h ous and steadfast will. And so the bread of joy ta en away, and we are left to travel a piece of the d n dry obedience. It is a lesson of infinite value— f hfully walk the King's road when we cannot ar he song of a solitary bird! Man doth not live ppiness alone: he lives in every changing move, or he is traveling toward the Holy City, intent on e ng its gates before the sun goes down. J. H. J.

Strength for Every Day and Every Duty

NDAY, February 7. Isa. 58:1-14. "Then thou shalt delight thyself in the Lord." In Ps. 37, w tells us to delight ourselves in the Lord. It is e ary to ask ourselves how far we have obeyed t njunction. We pray to him, serve him, and e his will and appointment; but do we delight in n Can we look up into his face with a smile when n go awry, and the sky is dark with clouds? If f d it hard to do so, let us give heed to this parap It will afford a clue of immense value.

W are bidden generally to keep the Sabbath of the e life, i. e., to live in that deep Sabbath-keeping i is the theme of Heb. 4. It is the rest of faith, a e by faith we receive from God grace, strength d isdom, for every duty and demand that devolve n and by faith also hand over to the concern of d ll those worries, anxieties and temptations i so easily assail. The habit of handing all things G l and receiving all things from God is the secret h rtsease. When this is our constant practice, h e leisure to delight in God.

B more particularly, we are bidden not to do our n ays, not to find our own pleasure, not to speak r n words. The stress is on our own. We must e he cross in our hearts and crucify the self-life a its forms. It assumes Protean shapes, follows l e a shadow, intrudes into our holiest hours. w an we delight in God, so long as we delight in rs ves? Die to self-congratulation, to the praise of n o the flattery of your friends, and live only for d "Well done." and you will find a new joy in d elling up in your soul. F. B. M.

The Onward Impulse of Human Life

USDAY, February 8. Ps. 84:7. "They go from rength to strength." A stationary engine is very in resting. We had much rather inspect a great, t, ffing locomotive that has just whirled a limited n nto the station from a distant city. The throb of s m and the impression of its reserve that seems e or another run move us—it is a moving, onward n it has an eager forward power.

So is it with genuine human life; its motion, its variety, its very vicissitudes give it flavor and attractiveness. The mind dislikes stationariness. A life would be well-nigh unendurable without progress, or without work for unattained ends. The joys of existence are the passage from ignorance to knowledge, from toil to rest, from enslaving sins to freedom.

Men at times dread death because it seems at first thought to suggest stoppage of the onward march to ideals as yet unreached; it suggests cessation from labor and the adventure of living. Dr. William Harper, dying, said that his great hope in looking forward to heaven was in having more work to do. Jowett wrote to Lady Tennyson, when the poet was suffering from a severe malady, intimating that the poet might find comfort in meditating on all the good he had accomplished by his writings. But great suffering souls are not so likely to enjoy such retrospect as much as the anticipation of what they will do after their trial has passed, or perhaps in sorrowing over all they might have done.

These human hands, these hearts and minds, are made for the active, onward life. Unaccomplished desires drive us on; there are hopes to be fulfilled in life's tomorrows; there are sins to be requited by virtues and ideas never yet expressed, struggling within us, impelling us onward. Driven by fears or enticed by dreams, we must be moving always onward. It is the call of nature; it is the command of God. C. S. C.

Jesus' Love of Flowers

WEDNESDAY, February 9. John 19:31-42. "Now in the place where he was crucified there was a garden." It was befitting that our mother earth should escort her Maker and Redeemer to the end of his redemptive work (so far as the cross was concerned) by the odors of her sweetest flowers. The Lord loved flowers. From his boyhood days, when he trod the green carpet of his native hills, and throughout his brief life, he loved to consider them as they grew. To his pure eyes they were more beautiful than Solomon would have been in all his glory; and this by the pure beneficence of his father. They could neither toil nor spin; their beauty was due to the pure love of beauty, which is an element of the divine nature; they were the free pensioners on his everlasting beneficence. It was fitting then that they should mingle their fragrance with the lingering scent of the precious ointment that Mary had shed on him for his burying. Probably there is no cross, no bed of pain, no sorrowful experience, without a garden somewhere near from which wafts of fragrance may come to the dying, if only they are sensitive to its ministry.

Is it not also true that when the cross is borne in the spirit of Jesus it creates a garden? Consider the sufferings of apostles, confessors, martyrs, and missionaries in all ages of church history, and as they pass before our thought we realize that no cross has been erected for fellowship with the sufferings of Christ that has not produced a garden the fragrance of which is in the world today. No suffering can be rightly borne without its adequate compensation; and although this life is too short to allow us to see the wildernesses burst into rose-gardens, such discoveries will be among the delights of heaven. F. B. M.

The Bible and Citizenship

THURSDAY, February 10. Ps. 127:1. "Except Jehovah keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." There is an increasing tendency to relate the Bible to everyday life. No faraway mystic or theological interpretation of Scripture satisfies the modern man. We in these United States especially are a practical people, and we require from our religion, as from everything else, a serviceable aid in the matters nearest at hand. Action is our keynote. A business man said to a pastor who asked for his membership in the church, "If I can do something definite and worth while, I will come in; but I don't want to come in just to sit around and sing."

Citizenship is a very practical and important matter at present, and there is much in the Bible regarding it. In the Old Testament laws and procedure, politics and religion were closely intermingled. Jehovah was the God of the nation as truly as of the individual. Jesus made the meaning of citizenship even more clear, not simply by obeying the laws of the land, but also by showing the detailed sweep of its teaching in the common life of the individual.

It is here taught that good citizenship is a personal matter, a matter of honesty, paying one's debts, cultivating a keen conscience toward our neighbors, being unpartizan and developing the traits of mercy, peace and righteousness in all our dealings. The old sexton at Amesbury, Mass., fulfilled these conditions. He was asked his creed: he answered, "I try to shovel a straight path; I shovel it wide; I shovel it clean." A good citizen, whether he shovels snow or sells merchandise or builds bridges, is a man of conscience in his work. Citizenship is more than casting a ballot; it is a life of righteousness.

The Master taught that the Christian citizen was marked by serving. His was the ministry of washing his disciples' feet, of healing, of going the second mile. It was the democracy of service, and the constitution of the Christian state was written in love. A great citizen is one who makes his life not a career simply, but a mission. This was what the psalmist called, "Keeping the city." C. S. C.

Manifestations of Grace

FRIDAY, February 11. Titus 2:1-15. "The grace of God has appeared. . . . Looking for the appearing of our great God." Here are two appearances or manifestations, the one of the grace which has taken place, the other of the glory which will take place. We live between the two. The radiance of the grace which came to our world in Jesus Christ has not yet died off the world: but ere long a still brighter light is to flash on the cloud and illumine the world's midnight. This is our blessed hope.

In the meanwhile we are bidden to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and live soberly in our self-estimate, righteously to our fellows, and godly toward our Father in heaven. It is a high ideal, which would fill us with despair were it not for the Holy Spirit, who helps our infirmities and forms Christ within us. With God all things are possible. His commands are enablings. Whatever task he sets before us engages his utmost help and cooperation.

And notice that his grace has brought salvation within the reach of all men. We are not told that all are saved, but all may avail themselves of salvation. The air is around that we may inhale it. The sweet waters of life are at our feet that we may dip them up. The table is spread, but we must sit at it. The salvation is at hand, sufficient for the greatest possible demand we can put on it. The deposit is in the bank, placed to our account; but we must draw on it without stint, for it is God's desire that we should be redeemed from all iniquity and be separate for his use.

F. B. M.

The Miracle of Divine Power

SATURDAY, February 12. Acts 1:8. "Ye shall receive power." What a difference between a fence wire and an electric wire! One is dead, the other is wonderfully alive. One is simply to mark a line of ownership, while the other stretches across continents and passes under oceans, communicating messages to millions, or flashes its light, illuminating cities, moves commerce and machinery and sends the very tone of the voice thousands of miles. The wires are the same; the difference lies in their relation to power. Are there not too many fence wires around our churches—ecclesiastical fences, built to keep from mingling in each other's pastures? If we would lift up the wires from formalism and bigotry, so as to connect them with the dynamo of God's power, a world of sinners might soon be brought into the Kingdom.

Is there not wire enough in the fences to reach from glory to every sinner on the footstool? Enough to illuminate all the dark places of cruelty? Enough to thrill mankind with the messages of love and mercy? The mere electric wire remains unchanged, it being only a pathway for the hot footsteps of the lightning, only a dead instrument; while Christian men are living, loving, thinking agents, only a "little lower than the angels," conscious of the divine magnetism as the holy fire passes through the soul to others of our fellows lost in sin. E. W. C.

◆

There is a good, a better and a best,
And we should not contented be, nor rest,
Until our good is better, and our better best.

The Garden City Preparatory Conference

By PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

MINISTERS of all denominations were advised quite a while ago that there was a movement on foot to unite the Christian churches of the world. The movement is known as the "World's Conference on Faith and Order." It is likely that if the war in Europe had not broken out, the world would have learned ere this of greater efforts to unite the divided parts of Christendom than those that were made January 4, 5 and 6 at Garden City, Long Island. It was at this place that an august gathering of many prominent men took place for the purpose of arranging the preliminaries for the calling of a world's conference, which will probably be held in the city of New York in the not distant future.

True, the gathering had not from the start the active support that had been anticipated or wished for it. Only seventy-six of the invitations that had been issued for it had been accepted when the meeting was called to order, while fifty-four invitations had been declined, nine had been answered in a non-committal manner, and sixty-six had brought no reply at all. But those who did report for the opening session of the conference or arrived while the conference was in progress were all men of high standing in their respective communities—able, earnest and responsible men.

The Protestant Episcopal Church had the largest representation, five of its bishops alone being present. It was within this church, we believe, that the movement originated, and clergymen and laymen of this church have been most active in furthering the movement. The late Mr. Morgan a few years ago donated $100,000 to defray the expenses of four representatives of the Episcopal Church who were to tour England, Scotland, and Ireland and urge the Anglican communities to work for a World's Conference on Faith and Order. It was reported, too, at the time that Mr. Morgan stood ready to defray the expenses of similar deputations from America, representing the Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, or other bodies, to their coreligionists in Europe.

The Baptists, the Congregationalists, the Disciples, and the Methodists had likewise sent prominent men of acknowledged ability to the conference. There was a representation of the Lutheran Church present, in the persons of three divines from the General Synod, and to one of these had been assigned the difficult task of outlining the basis on which the Christian churches of all the world may be united.

The absence of some of the invited guests has been noted in the press reports as a rather significant feature. There was no representation from the Roman Catholic nor from the Greek Catholic communions, the only non-Protestant faith represented at Garden City being the Old Catholic Church, which, because of its refusal to recognize the supremacy of the Roman Pontiff, is regarded as schismatic.

IN a previous issue of the Christian Herald the attitude has already been noted which the Church of Rome has assumed toward this movement of universal church-union. The presentation of the facts given in that issue, with their interpretation, receives not a little strengthening by certain additional remarks of Cardinal Gasparri, which even more plainly than his letter reveal the true mind of the Roman Curia on the World's Conference. Permission having been asked of him to give his letter to the conference some publicity, the Cardinal acceded to the wish with these words:

> The august Pontiff kindly permits that copies of my letters which, though a faithful, are yet but a faint portrait of the pontifical love, shall be sent to all to whose welfare and peace you believe they will contribute. It is a pleasure to repeat the encouragement that the aid and earnest prayers of the Roman Pontiff will never be lacking to any one who, having freed himself from prejudiced opinions, with a true and sincere will strives with all his strength that the unity of faith and fellowship instituted by Christ and built upon Peter may be restored, and that all who are enrolled in the name of Christian may betak selves to the bosom of the one most church, and may be joined and associ members with Christ the Head.

These remarks of the papal Sec of State are a masterpiece of refusal. Rome is careful, whe vised that the cordial letter of th to the Preparatory Conference is published, to dissipate any doubt the letter might have left in some as to the terms on which union i sidered feasible with the Chu Rome. Union with Rome ca come when "the unity of faith a lowship instituted by Christ an upon Peter is restored," and whe again "betake themselves to the of the one most loving church." that separates them from this at present is declared a "prej opinion" from which they must themselves." To this end the pra the Pope are vouchsafed the I tants. Rome will do everythi mooth the way for the return of gal Protestantism.

A CURIOUS point had to be lated when paragraph 9 plan for organizing a council o missioners came up for discussion. paragraph reads: "When a comm is established by law as the state of any country, the head of th

Continued on page 146

Alaska's Three Gateways

CONTINUING FRANK G. CARPENTER'S NARRATIVE

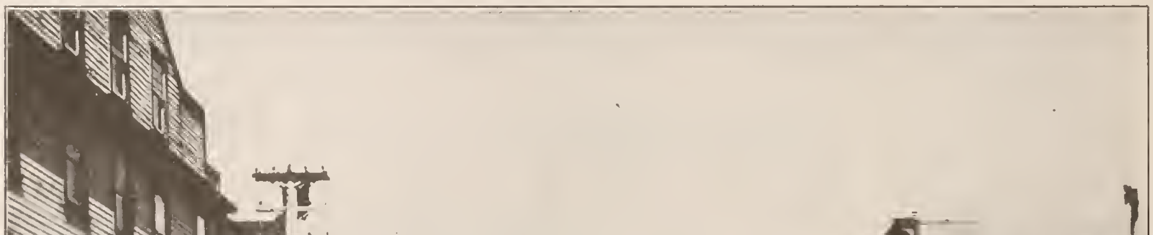
Copyright, 1916, by Frank G. Carpenter

DURING the past few weeks I have visited each of the three principal water gates to Alaska. I sailed north from Seattle, the chief port of the Pacific northwest. The city has seven transcontinental railways over which goods destined for the Far North come from all parts of the United States, and its business with Alaska is greater than that of any other port. It is the bank, the department store and the barn of the territory. As to the banking, it handled in 1914 something like $28,000,000 of Alaskan exports and imports, and as to its department store business the goods sent north were of every description, and they sold for more than $14,600,000.

Seattle has one of the finest harbors of the world. It has twenty-nine wharves and docks with a frontage of thirteen miles. It has elevators which will store four million bushels of grain, and flour mills with a daily capacity of seven thousand barrels. Among its many steamers are eleven lines that go to Alaska and five others that ply along the ports of British Columbia.

The second water gate to Alaska is Vancouver, at the end of the Canadian Pacific Railway on Puget Sound. That port has also the Great Northern and the Northern Pacific railways, which carry out goods there in bond to be shipped to Alaska, and it will in a short time have also the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, which is to build southward to Vancouver. The Chicago, Milwaukee and Puget Sound Railway is planning a branch into Canada and in time there will be six transcontinental roads terminating at Vancouver.

As to the steamers, there are now only two lines that go from Vancouver northward. These are the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Pacific, both lines being owned by the railroads of the same names. The Alaskan business of Vancouver is a bagatelle in comparison with that of Seattle. Its chief trade is with the Yukon territory and especially with Dawson, to which city almost $4,000,000 worth of Canadian goods are shipped every year.



Third Avenue, the Main Business Street of Prince Rupert

Shorter Route Around the World

THE third and last water gate to Alaska is Prince Rupert, the new terminal of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. This is the farthest north of all the doors to our territory, being in fact only forty miles south of the international boundary. It took me less than six hours to come here (Prince Rupert) by ship from Ketchikan, and a fast ocean steamer could go in two hours from here to Dixon Entrance or the Portland Canal, where Alaska begins.

Prince Rupert is more than 500 miles north of Vancouver, and more than 600 miles north of Seattle. It is about two days nearer Alaska by rail than any other port, and its people think it offers by far the best route from the eastern and southern parts of our continent to the United States of the Far North.

I have just had a talk with the mayor of Prince Rupert. He claims, and rightly, that the port will eventually give the shortest route to the Orient and that it will cut down the stea trip to Yokohama, Japan, more 500 miles. The chief reason fo is because Prince Rupert lies north on the globe, and therefo a shorter water route to the Far

"It is only about four days fro rope to Halifax, Nova Scotia, the Grand Trunk Pacific Railw gins," to use the words of the

"The road runs, there in one cont line across the American contin Prince Rupert o Pacific. It crosse ada far north Great Lakes to Win then cuts throug wheat belt to Edn and goes on to the Rockies by grades than any road that crosse continent. It has ents by various c tions to all of the States cities, a promises to be th freight route for able products be Alaskan waters a rest of the contin

I wish I could you Prince Rupert town lies on a be bay guarded by is Its harbor is fo miles long, and enough to hold a fleets that will ev at any one time t Bering Strait. minds me of Jaffa port for Jerusalen is right on the sea the buildings clin and down the mountains of rock to the shore. The chief differen tween them is that the hills of are all bleak and bare, while th Prince Rupert are wooded and c perpetual green.

Seven years ago the site of thi was a forest. Pines and cedars co the mountains, and today the st rising out of the sloping town lot ik the black bristles of an unshaven chi. The town has 6,000 people. I ve ure it has more than 60,000 stumps. Th stumps are rooted in the crevices of e bed rock, and the space between h is matted with muskeg, a mossy ve tation two or three feet in depth ha holds the water like a sponge, and na es it impossible to go across country without thick boots or rubbers. Th muskeg covers the whole region ab t and it was one of the difficulties ha had to be conquered in laying out m building the city.

Town with Roller-Coaster Streets

ANOTHER and still greater difficulty was blasting the rocks from h sides of the hills and making level pla es upon which streets might be laid an houses be built. The site was all roc mountain, and every bit of the tow is founded on the bed rock. The sev rs have had to be blasted from the sid of the hills and built up in the valey The same is true of the roadways n he business part of the town, the wh e having required proportionately al ost as much grading and blasting as he Culebra Cut of the Panama Ca al.

the residence section the streets ar of planks resting upon a trestle-wo or upheld by posts. The town sit which covers about 2,000 acres, is ma e up of sharp hills, which run back to ooded mountains over 2,000 feet hig. The place is so rough that to bu l solid roads through it would bank-ru the city many times over, and so th roadways are wooden, looking like in of continuous bridges. The streets ru up hill and down and they are sixtee feet wide. They rest upon posts of arious heights, according to the gra es and the valleys. In some pla s the planks are spiked to a trestle wo from ten to twenty feet high, and in hers they lie on the bed rock of the hil The planks are three inches thi and the roads are substantial en gh for heavy teams and the score or ore automobiles owned in the town. Pr ce Rupert has twenty-one miles of su roads, and in addition many miles m e of pathways of boards five or six eet in width. The latter connect th main roads with the houses.

was in company with Mr. J. H. Pi bury, the civil engineer who laid ou Prince Rupert, and Mr. M. J. Hobin, a ember of the board of trade, that I to an automobile ride through the to . We had a two-ton seven-passe er car which seemed to me unusually wi , and I expected a collision every ti another car passed. The plank ro was so narrow that turning-out pl es have had to be built at the cross-st ts and curves, and the inclines are su that we flew up and down as though w vere going over the track of a giant ro r-coaster. Now we would shoot ar nd a curve where a slight skidding of he car might have hurled us into a vine; and now climb a hill with the po s and the trestle-work trembling be eath us. At one time we rode for so e distance through "Lovers' Lane," a rt of the ninety acres of forest that fo s the public park of the city, and at nother we climbed the steep slope of cropolis Hill, although Mr. Hobin suggested we had better walk, for the road was a bit old, and the posts might be too weak to support the automobile.

An Aerial Baseball Park

IT was on top of Aeropolis Hill that we inspected the water works of the city. The supply comes from Lake Woodworth, on a little mountain five miles away; and it is brought in an eight-inch pipe across country to this reservoir. The reservoir has been dug out of the bedrock, and it contains more than a million gallons of water in addition to the usual needs of the city.

On another part of this same hill are the municipal tennis courts and baseball park. These have been made at the expense of the citizens, it having cost $25,000 to blast out the rock and level the space for the baseball diamond. It will take $5,000 more before the ball ground is as the mayor says it should be. The park is so situated that the hills about it form the grandstand, and consequently there is free admission. The pay of the players is collected by passing the hat. The municipal tennis courts have been made by laying a level plank floor upon the uneven surface of the rocks, and erecting about it fences of wire netting so high that the balls cannot possibly fly over it and roll down the steep slopes of the mountain.

Standing upon Aeropolis Hill, one has a good view of Prince Rupert. Off to the front is the harbor, sparkling in the sunlight and backed by mountainous islands of green. At the back are forest-clad hills, lost in the clouds, and between is the city, its business section made up of two and three story frame buildings, painted in modest colors, with roofs red, brown and black. Here and there the spire of a church rises above the roofs; and should you take your glass you might pick out the signs of banks, stores, real estate offices, and, I regret to say, of saloons. As to the morality of the city, the mayor tells me that it is just medium, not too good and not too bad. He asserts, moreover, that during his three years of administration, although vast sums—a million dollars last year—have been spent in public improvements, there has not been one nickel of graft. I wonder!

The private residences of Prince Rupert include many comfortable homes. They are one and two story frame cottages, rising out of the uneven green of the muskeg. Many have blasted out the stumps in making the foundations and some of the people have built up level yards about their houses and have lawns as green and smooth as those of old England. All kinds of vegetation grow luxuriantly. The town has many beautiful flowers and the whole country is green from one end of the year to the other.

Prince Rupert Boys on Their Way to the War. The Town Has Twenty Miles of These Board Walks

The climate of Prince Rupert is milder than that of Baltimore, Richmond, or St. Louis. It is not so cold in the winter and it is more mild in the summer. The mean temperature in summer is about 60 degrees Fahrenheit, and in winter the thermometer seldom falls to below eight or ten above zero. As to rain, the town reminds me of southern Chile, where they say it rains thirteen months every year. The rainfall in some years is 110 inches or more, and just now it showers all the time. There is but little snow in the winter, although you may have two feet within a few hours. The snow melts quickly, however. There are heavy frosts on account of the moisture. The frosts sometimes cover the plank roadways to a depth of three inches, and then the people have coasting and tobogganing parties on the roller coaster highways I have described.

Abreast of the Times

PRINCE RUPERT is a healthful city. There were less than thirty deaths last year in the 6,000 population, and the births were 150. It has good public schools, including a high school, with a building of four stories. It has three daily papers, and a public reading room, and its people are quite as intelligent and much more progressive than those of similar sized towns in the east.

For instance, the town believes in municipal ownership. It has a hydro-electric plant that cost more than a half million dollars, from which it not only supplies the several public utilities, but also sells power to factories and individuals at $13 per horsepower per annum. The town has its own telephone and electric light plants. The telephone rates to business houses are $4.50 per month, and the plant pays a profit to the municipal treasury. The mayor tells me he hopes to put on municipal jitneys.

Prince Rupert believes in the single tax, and the most of the revenues of the city come from a tax on land only. Improvements pay nothing. The Prince Rupert Hotel, for instance, cost $125,000 to build. It is on a lot 100 x 200, and this lot is valued at $50,000. The tax is levied on the lot only. There is nothing paid on the building. Just across the way is a vacant lot of the same size, and it pays just as much taxes as the big hotel. The result is that people cannot afford to hold valuable real estate without improving it. The present taxes are a little over twelve mills on the dollar of assessed values, which are about 60 per cent. of the real values.

Prince Rupert started with a boom. It was all planned and partially developed before a single lot was offered for sale. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway decided upon a site, and sent its engineers to clear the land, level the hills and lay out the city. The company had 24,000 acres of land, including the town site, and the first subdivision covered one-twelfth of that area. The woods were cut away, the land cleared, the business part of the city excavated and leveled and plank roads made. The future city was advertised and then auctions were held in Victoria and Vancouver. The first lots brought high prices, and the boom continued, until the present financial stringency began. Now hard times have reduced the prices and progress is halted. The war has stopped business in all parts of Canada, money is tight, and the people are so much affected by what is going on in Europe that they do not think or talk of anything else. Within a short time a large number of volunteers have been equipped here and sent to the front, and the same is true of Dawson in the Klondike.

There is no doubt, however, that Prince Rupert is bound to be a city of considerable size. The people believe that it will be a great port, and that within a short time after peace is declared it will start on its way to becoming a city of 100,000 or more. With a view to the future the city is now erecting the largest floating dry dock on the Pacific coast. This dock will cost over $3,000,000. It will handle ships up to 600 feet in length and 20,000 tons capacity. The dock is almost completed.

(To be continued)

How Hills Block the Projected Streets, and How the Obstructions Are Removed

Our Editorial Forum

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

The Cross-Bearers

WHEN the multitude compelled Simon the Cyrenian to carry the cross, they forced upon him what they regarded as a gross indignity. They little knew that they were thrusting on him the greatest honor. Simon the stranger thus became the first of the cross-bearers, and the great type of those Christians in all the ages to come who were destined to follow Jesus in carrying the heavy burdens of opprobrium, suffering and self-denial. There are men whom all of us know who are cross-bearers. They carry the burdens of others, and spend their strength and substance in their behalf. They have the sick, the poor, the erring, the spiritually weak to bear upon their hearts continually. They have trials that the world knows not of. Many a life has been turned from evil to good by their unselfish sacrifice; many a shame has been vicariously and bravely borne to save others from going down to a deeper depth. Yet these might have escaped it all if they had put self first. But they took up the cross, and in crucifying self they honored the Master, as they walked with firm and unwavering tread in his footsteps.

It is the finest part of Christian discipline to learn to carry the cross, not as a penance as some do, but as a mark of high honor and distinction. One writer has likened the soldier on the field of battle to a cross-bearer, but there are nobler similitudes. Paul gloried in the suffering and "the shame" of the cross. Every scar and disfigurement he had ever received at the hands of a persecuting world he held to be the marks of the Lord Jesus—the visible physical testimonies of his cross-bearing. So we may esteem what the world views as losses to be real gains when they are gotten in his service. We may lose name and fame and wealth and friends, but if we lose them for his sake and for the well-being of others we are really the gainers by such a loss.

Counting the Cost

SOMEHOW or other the military and naval alarmists are not making the headway they expected. Congress, after weeks of desultory discussion, has made no practical progress on the subject of preparedness. Peace and War clash in the congressional speeches. Meanwhile both branches of Congress are at sea over the problem of raising larger revenues.

The plain truth is that the advocates of preparedness, overconfident of their ability to stampede Congress, have shot beyond the mark, and now they find their plans in danger of going to pieces. Congress simply refuses to be stampeded. Such clear-brained, outspoken men as Gore, Works, Jones and O'Gorman in the Senate, and Hensley, Tavenner and a long line of others in the House, are not to be scared by the stage thunder of the militarists, nor silenced when they speak for the nation in questioning the sincerity of the agitators for preparedness. They have demanded that the people should know the truth—whether there is a Munitions Ring, and whether, beneath the surface of the concerted movement for national defense, there are not clumsily concealed stock-jobbing schemes, which should be brought to the light by a public investigation.

While the preliminary skirmish goes on in Congress, the prospects of the Administration program being defeated have moved the President to decide on a speaking tour to convert public opinion. It is understood that he will take a wide "swing around the circle," taking in New York and the Middle West. Simultaneously comes the announcement that the views of those who oppose the extravagant schemes of the "preparedness" agitators and favor a sane and sensible policy will be presented in public addresses throughout the country by Professor Nicholas Murray Butler, Professor Hull of Swarthmore, Hamilton Holt and others, who will begin their aggressive campaign of public enlightenment immediately.

Few if any of those who are now most clamorous for a huge increase of armaments have given to the country anything like a truthful estimate of the cost of preparedness. The reason is that they dare not count the cost and declare it publicly. They know that were they to set down in cold figures the vast sums which would be needed, annually and indefinitely, to carry out their program, there would be a universal storm of dissent. They would be instantly compelled to abandon their project and go out of business. Even the Administration program is making no headway. The Continental Army scheme has been shelved at the outset, and the rest of the general plan has been reduced by the Military Committee to a purely tentative proposition. Congress is clearly sensible of the fact that the load of taxation is already so onerous that any attempt to saddle new burdens on the country will meet with opposition all along the line. The real task which lies immediately ahead of us is preparedness, not for war, but for the problems of peace that will have to be dealt with after the war.

Lincoln as a Poet

WHILE the literary ability of Abraham Lincoln has been widely acknowledged, as revealed in his masterly addresses on various occasions, in his state papers and most of all in the famous Gettysburg speech, which has come to be regarded in the light of a modern classic, very few Americans know that he was a poet. In a volume just issued, Osborn H. Oldroyd, an old soldier who has devoted many years to the collection of literary and other memorabilia of Lincoln, discusses for the first time the poetic talent of the martyred President. In the forties, Lincoln conducted a literary correspondence with a friend, William Johnson, and from time to time sent him pieces of original verse. One of these productions, "My Childhood's Home," contains certain retrospective passages that are marked by genuine poetic feeling. Two verses of this early poem will give an idea of the writer's mood:

As dusky mountains please the eye
  When twilight chases day;
As bugle-notes that, passing by,
  In distance die away;

As, leaving some grand waterfall,
  We, lingering, list its roar—
So memory will hallow all
  We've known but know no more.

While only two poems by Lincoln have been preserved in any form of completeness, there would seem to be good grounds for assuming that he had written more. In one of his letters to Johnson (enclosing the second of his admittedly original poems, which dealt with the tragic case of a friend who had lost his reason) Lincoln wrote: "In my poetizing mood, I could not forget the impression he had made upon me." It is probably true, as a writer has remarked, that in his moments of quiet reflection, Lincoln's mind gravitated toward the weird and the somber. While in his happier moods he loved to quote from Holmes's "Last Leaf," his acknowledged favorite above all others was the poem "Oh, Why Should the Spirit of Mortal Be Proud?" written by William Knox a century ago. He would repeat this with eyes half closed and in the saddest tone imaginable. But such a mood was exceptional. He had a reserve fund of quaint humor and a keen appreciation of it in others. In one of his letters he discusses a comic parody on Poe's "Raven" in a way that shows clearly that he would have been pleased to have written it himself.

Lincoln had the mind of a poet though he lacked the training. His passion for poetic expression grew with the years and with experience in public affairs. It may be said of him with absolute truthfulness that he sat at the feet of the prophets, and that the study of Scripture furnished the inspiration for many of his noblest utterances, which were naturally cast in free poetic mold, independent of metrical restrictions. To illustrate this, the biographer refers to the immortal Gettysburg speech, with its "classic perfection of ordered thought," to which new force and beauty are given by presenting it in the form of vers libre, as it may have originated in the mind of Lincoln:

But, in a larger sense,
We cannot dedicate—
We cannot consecrate—
We cannot hallow this ground.
The brave men, living and dead,
Who struggled here,
Have consecrated it far above our poor power
To add or to detract.
The world will little note nor long remember
What we say here,
But it can never forget
What they did here.

One of Lincoln's famous "spread-eagle" passages is recalled, which has in it enough of both poetry and patriotism to deserve to be quoted at this time, when our nation is talking of possible European complications. It occurred in the course of a speech on the perpetuation of our political institutions:

All the armies of Europe, Asia, and Africa combined,
With all the treasures of earth (our own excepted) in its military chest:
With Bonaparte for a commander,
Could not by force take a drink from the Ohio or make on the Blue Ridge
In a trial of a thousand years!

Winter and the Homeless

"WHO can stand before his cold?" as Psalmist in one of those splendic scriptive passages that deal wi forces of nature. For many da icy, penetrating cold of winter has had a large the continent in its grasp. It is a season that most heavily upon the homeless and the unem At night they flock into the municipal shelters larger cities, benumbed and half frozen, some o literally ready to perish. They come in a s increasing stream to the midnight meal of the B Mission Bread Line. Some are in clothing that better than rags, and almost all are so thinly c that they are unfit to face the biting winter Moved by the instinct of self-preservation, the dle together for warmth. When the doors are o they shamble in from the icy darkness, to be g with good cheer and words of welcome. On nights, when the temperature is hovering nigh t the big rolls and the mugs of steaming hot coffee the best banquets. There can be no better i ment nor one that could give greater satisfactio a dollar or two put into the Bread Line. Th this, ye who sit at your own cozy firesides, wit loved ones "curtained and closed and warm." can, if you wish it, be the host of a dozen or a or half a hundred of these unfortunates, for a will feed twenty men and a five dollar bill will feast for a hundred of the unemployed and ho ones who have somehow missed the right road in the path that leads to true success and happiness. is the middle of the social season, when invitatio entertainments are in vogue. We question w any formal social function would afford you a fr of the heart satisfaction you could derive from a midnight meal to the Bread Line. Send in gifts to the care of the Christian Herald, and th will be literally going out into the "highways a ways" for the guests whom you desire to sit at table and enjoy your hospitality.

Warden Osborne's Fight

CLEAN-MINDED, high-souled, strong- people East and West are rallying t defense of Thomas Mott Osborne, in warden of Sing Sing prison. It will difficult matter to place the guilt in the plot that to have been formed against him. The offici charge of the actual prosecution may be thoro sincere in believing the preposterous affidavit mitted against him; even if they believe them f is doubtless their duty, now that they have made, to present them for what they are wor jury and courts. But somewhere back in the t will be found the powers of corruption and determined to block and overthrow the work of ing the old prison system of its gigantic evils.

So far as the gruesome and unspeakable ch made against Mr. Osborne are concerned, Mr. Jay Chapman, writing to the New York Times, gests a means of weighing them fairly: "The ch recently preferred against him can be paralleled i life of every great reformer from Socrates d Mr. Osborne himself he aptly characterizes "He is a man of genius, one of those single-m reformers whose fate and fortune it is to excit antagonism of powerful interests and to face p cutions, conspiracies and hatreds as deep as life

Not even Mr. Osborne himself would claim th has already actually attained the ideal for a p régime. But not only Mr. Osborne, but every of fair play believes that he should have a longe fairer chance to work out his noble experime the rehabilitation of the law-breaker. Enough already been accomplished to prove at least th is on the right track. The other night a convict had escaped from prison, after an all-night confe in New York City with recently discharged con took the train back to Ossining and surrendered self. Another man, a discharged convict, tes that it was the memory of Warden Osborne's that is keeping him straight. These are but iso cases among hundreds. In many cities and towns are found who are trying to live life "on the le because of the fairness and kindness of "Tom Bro the prisoners' friend.

Every decent citizen of the United States calls for fair play for this brave man in his fight to p himself pure and honest, and in his efforts to other men back to cleanness and honor.

The Bible and Newspaper

CONDUCTED BY
FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Paper from Grass

THE United States Bureau of Plant Industry has issued a statement claiming that a new substance for the manufacture paper had been discovered in zacaton, kind of grass growing wild in abundance in Mexico and Central America. Year by year, the demand for other material besides wood and rags becomes more urgent. Each year 4,500,000 cord of wood are consumed as wood pulp for paper. Our forests are needed wholly for the water supply and the fertility of the soil, that it will be fortunate for the manufacturer and the public as well if the fiber of cotton-stalk and wild grass that can be raised commercially can be successfully used as substitute for wood in the making of paper. The use of these new substances would be going back to first principles. The earliest method of making paper by the Egyptians out of strips of the stalk and pitch of the papyrus plant, from the name of which our word "paper" comes. The leaves were moistened, pressed, dried and polished, and fastened together to make a roll or volume. The Jews made their writing-paper out of the skins of animals, of cotton cloth, and of the papyrus plant. The best records were on prepared skins which were fastened together and rolled around a wooden stick. "And Baruch wrote from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the Lord, which he had spoken unto him, upon a roll of a book." (Jer. 36 : 4.)

Pensions for Ministers

A MEETING was held at the residence of J. Pierpont Morgan the other day to organize a committee for the raising of $5,000,000 as a pension fund for the veteran ministers and the families of deceased Episcopal ministers. Mr. Morgan, William H. Truesdale, president of the Lackawanna Railroad, and Bishop William Lawrence of Boston were made the general committee for the whole country, and a committee was also selected for New York City. All of the parishes will be asked to contribute seven per cent. of the ministers salaries to the endowment fund. It is proposed to raise the amount by April 1, 1916. The fund was authorized by the General Episcopal Convention of 1913. The church is rich and will raise the money. Other churches are engaged in a similar proper benevolence. It is the church voicing the divine care. "And even to your old age . . . will I carry you." (Isa. 46 : 4.)

Fox Farming

FOR many years fox farming has been a profitable industry in parts of Canada, especially in Prince Edward Island. A bulletin on Silver Fox Farming issued by the Agricultural Department at Washington gives some interesting facts with reference to the industry in this country. It says that fox ranches are now established in Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Oregon, Washington and Alaska. The natural home of the red and silver fox is the greater part of North America from Central United States northward to and including the treeless tundras. The bulletin gives directions for raising these fur animals. The silver fox is so valuable that extraordinary precautions against their loss are taken. On the more important ranches the animals are attended by a doctor and guarded by watchmen, dogs and burglar alarms. Cats are kept to mother the orphan cubs. Fox hounds are trained to catch and hold without injury foxes that have escaped, and bloodhounds are employed to track thieves. Wild foxes were in abundance in Bible lands. "And Samson went and caught three hundred foxes, and took firebrands, and turned tail to tail, and put a firebrand in the midst between two tails. And he let them go into the standing corn of the Philistines." (Judges 15 : 4, 5.)

© International Film Service, Inc.

Thessaloniki's People Reach Port

THE 171 passengers who were forced to abandon the sinking Greek steamship Thessaloniki at sea arrived in New York January 7 on the steamship Patris of the same line and gave vivid descriptions of the hardships they suffered during the five weeks that the foundered vessel was battered by gales. On Christmas Day, passengers said the supply of meat was exhausted, only a few gallons of water were left, and the ship's officers began to portion out short rations of the meager supply of food which remained. The Thessaloniki first sprang aleak when she encountered a hurricane which raged for twelve hours on December 21. The boiler and engine rooms were partly flooded, and a call for assistance was sent out. After the hurricane subsided, the steamer used the pumps and proceeded on her voyage. Rough seas raged from December 22d to the 26th. Then the S. O. S. was sent out, in answer to which the Patris, United States, Florizel, responded with offers of help. The Florizel offered to take the passengers and crew and carry them to Bermuda. Captain Goulandis declined the offer. He, however, on New Year s Day transferred the imperiled passengers to the Patris, the baggage being left behind. Lines were fastened to the Thessaloniki by the Patris, with the hope of towing her to New York, but the fierce storm snapped them, and the ship with water inside and engines dead drifted off to the southeast in a terrible hurricane, accompanied by a blinding snowstorm. The naval patrol boat Seneca made a dangerous but futile search for the derelict to destroy it; the belief is that the vessel finally sank. The Patris brought her freight of precious lives into the harbor at New York. Some of the passengers claim that the peril and agony had been prolonged unnecessarily, and that relief should have been called for louder and accepted sooner. The wrecked ship bore the name of the ancient city of Thessalonica (now known as Salonica), immortalized by Paul's two letters, which begin with these words: "Paul and Sylvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians, which is in God the Father, and in the Lord Jesus Christ. Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ." (I Thes. 1 : 1.)

Calamity Cures Skepticism

HORATIO W. BOTTOMLEY, editor of John Bull, and a pronounced skeptic of London, in a statement renouncing his unbelief recently said: "In my fifty-fifth year, and after a very strenuous life, I now believe in God, and in the immortality of the soul of man. The great world war has done it. In it there is a mighty alchemy transmuting the base metal of human experience into the pure currency of faith. In these soul-searching days no man can be content with a mere negative philosophy. The doubter must go to the wall. Pure rationalism, however scientific, has no word of comfort for weary watchers, or of solace for broken hearts." When Lord Ashburton visited the home of Dr. James McCosh in Ireland before he came to the presidency at Princeton, he told him that his wife had died and that he had gone, for some source of comfort, to his friend Thomas Carlyle, who recommended Goethe's "Wilhelm Meister," but that no ease came to his soul. Dr. McCosh told him that neither Goethe nor Carlyle, but Jesus Christ alone, could give him help in such an hour. The troubles, the tragedies of life scatter unbelief to the four winds and sweep the soul into Christ as a refuge. The apostle thus announces this ministry of affliction: "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." (II Cor. 4 : 17.)

Did Not Find Gold

A UNITED STATES post office inspector, who had been sent to the interior of Peru by federal authority to search for a fabulously rich gold mine to secure evidence for a court trial, returned without finding any trace of the treasure. Of course, the natives near the headquarters of the Amazon had never heard of the mine. The only persons who had any knowledge of it were those who floated a big corporation on the strength of it, and those who paid the cash for the worthless stock. The few who went to California, Colorado and Alaska "struck it rich," the rest came home penniless. They could not find the mine. The best gold mining is to tickle the earth with the plow, work at one of the mechanic arts, pursue some line of business, or follow a profession. Let the young man banish forever the idea that he is to find a gold mine that will make him fabulously rich, but let him see that out of his brain and muscle and character he is to coin the gold that is to afford him permanent wealth. "The hand of the diligent maketh rich." (Prov. 10 : 4.)

Count Okuma Escapes Bomb

COUNT OKUMA, Japan's premier, had a narrow escape from death at the hands of assassins January 13. He was returning from the royal palace and was approaching his own residence when two bombs were hurled at his automobile. The premier was not injured. His chauffeur caught a glimpse of the man in the act of throwing the bomb and put on the power and the explosion occurred behind the car. The next bomb failed to explode. The Count said that twenty-eight years ago there was an attempt on his life. In perfect calmness the old hero said: "Whatever happens, I shall continue to do my duty to the empire." A nation is rich to have such a man as premier. Duty in the face of peril or of death if need be. The preparation for the future by the discharge of duty even at the sacrifice of life is thus expressed: "For I am now ready to be offered and the time of my departure is at hand." (II Tim. 4 : 6.)

Student Killed in "Sport"

ON January 12 seven hundred young men fighting desperately in the annual "bowl fight" between freshmen and sophomores at the University of Pennsylvania suddenly stopped their struggle in horror as they found William Lifson, a freshman, lying dying in the mud, crushed by the weight of the men who had piled themselves on top of him. He was only seventeen years old. They heard the boy call out feebly, "They are killing me." Young Lifson was the first student ever killed in the bowl contest; it ought to be the last tragedy of the kind. Sport in reason is healthful, in madness a peril to be prevented. The college classes took this view, the sophomores the day of the accident passing resolutions asking for the abolition of all class fights, and the seniors, juniors and freshmen adopted similar resolutions the next day. A college representative said the bowl and all other class fights would be abolished, but that the students themselves would take the responsibility of the action. For seventy years it has been considered one of the greatest honors to have the hand on the bowl when the game was over. Lifson was found with his hand outstretched, touching the bowl. What a superb young man! He had it in him to win in the fight of life. This keeping the eye on the goal and pressing toward it, so necessary to success in life, is also necessary to success in the spiritual realm, thus referred to: "I press toward the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 3 : 14.)

As a Greek Sees Greece

By PROFESSOR J. P. XENIDES

[The writer of this article is a professor in Marsovan College, Asia Minor, and is eminent for his scholarship. His views, which of course represent solely his own observations, are of especial interest in connection with the developments now taking place in that country. How nearly his analysis of the mind of the Greek people coincides with the trend of events, our readers must decide for themselves. For example, the news on the day this article is sent to the press states that the Greek people will exclude the Allies and that Venizelos may form a republic. The fact of the matter is, almost anything seems possible today in Greece, and even the best informed citizens of that country may fall short of the mark in forecasting the future. Certain it is that the sympathies of the whole world are with a people so torn by conflicting interests as are the present inhabitants of that historic and much fought over territory. -THE EDITOR.]

ONE reads all sorts of ideas and opinions concerning Greece and her attitude in the present crisis. In general, people make the Queen of Greece, the sister of Emperor William, responsible for the turn of affairs. Many think she, in her dislike of Venizelos and his policy, has upset his plans and brought about the present situation. It is certainly a mistake to make her responsible for the whole situation, which is very complicated and difficult, and many elements enter into it.

Let us look at some of these factors. The queen's influence is certainly to be taken into consideration. She is German, the sister of the emperor, whom she adores. She would help by all means to save Germany from disaster, without jeopardizing Greek plans. This feeling of adoration on the part of the queen was not reciprocated at one time by the emperor. When the queen, as Princess Sophia, left the Lutheran Church and joined the Greek communion, undergoing the various rites of confirmation with unction, she incurred the disapproval and disfavor of her brother; there was coldness and separation for some time before they were reconciled.

It is difficult to read people's motives. Some said she joined the Greek Church out of conviction that that was the true church; others thought it was done out of policy, in desire to be one in all things with her adopted people. Whatever the purpose was, it did not bring any popularity to her. The Greeks are extremely democratic; there is no aristocracy in Greece, excepting the aristocracy of wealth, just as it is in America. But the queen is highly aristocratic. She aims at creating an imperial court in Athens; she is haughty and proud, cold and distant, and knows how to despise a person. The people cannot help feeling the contrast between her and Queen Olga; they cannot forget the times of the popular King George, when both the king and queen went in and out with the people, quite intimately. Although at times even they were not appreciated, yet now, in contrast with the present aristocratic court, they feel the difference and remember the past with great vividness, and long for the "good old times." So the present queen's influence alone could not produce the present turn of affairs.

We should also add that family relationships do not play a great rôle in this European War. King George of England is a first cousin of Emperor William. King Constantine of Greece is a first cousin of King George, and a very near relative of the Czar. So the Greek court is allied to the English and the Russian courts as well as to the German.

King Constantine's characteristics must be taken into consideration. He was very unpopular when he was Crown Prince. Prince George, his younger brother, was the idol of the people. Not for any fault of his, but as a matter of fact, the army failed in the Greco-Turkish War, 1896, when he was commander-in-chief. There were many reasons for the inefficiency of the army; there was favoritism, party spirit, want of discipline, injustice to those really worthy of promotion. Being at the head, all the blame was heaped upon him.

© International Film Service, Inc.

A Salonica Jew Voting at the Recent Election

Then came the military revolution or rebellion of 1906, when some of the leaders in the army, chiefly young men, demanded reforms and a new régime. They also demanded that Eleutherios Venizelos, a Cretan, be called to the leadership of state affairs. A new era really began. All the royal princes were ousted from the army. This grieved the royal family deeply. Prince Constantine with Princess Sophia left Greece, some thought never to return. When in Patras he made a speech, full of complaint of the ingratitude of the people. He is not at home in the arts of oratory or diplomacy, in which things his father far excelled him. Ve then was at the head of affairs. Constantine forget nor forgive the slight he suffered as prince; he is proud, obstinate, resentful. He Venizelos, the people's idol and hero. King as a good statesman forgot and forgave all, a operated with Venizelos in peace and harmony

VENIZELOS, however, as a truly great studied Constantine and discovered ex qualities in him, and when the proper occasion he restored him to the highest position of hon power in the army at the beginning of the War, 1912-13. Then Constantine displayed th in him, and proved to be a really able and general and strategist, with the cooperation excellent staff. The victory of the two Balka made him a popular idol and hero. He is li adored; until recently he was universally app
as the great benefactor, the slayer of the Bulg

Even today the people are divided in their l while the majority approve Venizelos and his not a few, not a despisable minority, are wi king; even the majority in following Venizelos forget Constantine, the hero of the Balkan Many are in suspense and at a loss how to
I have heard many hot discussions over the and the puzzle continues unsolved. It will strange if even a revolution takes place, shou king continue opposing Venizelos indefinitel the people are heart and soul with their real

The party spirit and division among the must be taken into consideration. "Where th two Greeks, there will be three opinions," proverb. The rivalry, dissension and strif were in ancient Greece, that spirit of disagre that divided Greece into two fighting camps, and Sparta, that spirit of independence which d Greece into many city states, which hindered from becoming one great state, the same spiri work even today. Greece cannot agree. Diss and division are manifest in all civil and ecclesi affairs. There are many parties and party lea and every one wants to be the chief, (though th no real political parties in Greece based on d principles).

Venizelos struck a blow at all these petty div and put true patriotism above all else. He doubtedly the greatest statesman that Greece, say Europe, possesses at present. The old leaders, while differing among themselves, all to oppose the idea of a Cretan coming to Old and taking the leadership. His policy, wh inherent virtue it may possess, must be oppose

As the papers announced, after the second lution of the Greek parliament by the king Venizelos or Liberal party leaders and friends a hundred—met at the house of Venizelos a cided not to take part in the coming election, b they considered the dissolution unconstitutiona that an election during mobilization, when 385, the voters are under arms and far from their h and chiefly the weak, decrepit, and those una serve under arms would vote, would not expre

Continued on page 149

A Voice in the Wilderness

By GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL LUTZ

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

MARGARET EARLE, school teacher, "tenderfoot," mistaking a water stop for her station and discovering her mistake just too late, was left behind on the desert plain of Arizona. A passing half-drunken rancher told her that her station was twenty miles away. She started to go to the rancher's camp, but she found his company less desirable than loneliness. The rancher left her sobbing in the sand beside the trail and reported his erstwhile passenger to his wife and the eight men in the bunk house. One of them was young and "different." It was a subtle difference that they all felt unconsciously and that kept them in some awe of "the Boy," as they called him. The Boy saddled two horses and went in search of the girl. He found her, reassured her, set her on a horse and returned with her to the ranchhouse. On the way, Margaret and the Boy talked of the wonders of the Arizona night, and she discovered in him an indefinable something that she could not penetrate. The first sight of the bunk house was not very reassuring, but the Boy had told her that "Mom" Wallis would look after her and there was no alternative but the desert. The Boy left her at her boarding-house late the next afternoon, but left with her promise to see him again. Afterward she met the Rev. Frederick West and a dog. She liked the dog. Margaret and the dog and "Bud" Tanner, the son of the house, became fast friends. "Bud" gave all the help needed in the important business of getting settled, and the Rev. Mr. West found his help unnecessary and the road to better acquaintance somewhat difficult.

CHAPTER VIII

MARGARET had arranged with Bud to take her to the schoolhouse the next morning, and he had promised to have a horse hitched up and ready at ten o'clock, as it seemed the school was a magnificent distance from her boarding-place. In fact, everything seemed to be located with a view to being as far from everywhere else as possible. Even the town was scattering and widespread and sparse.

When she came down to breakfast she was disappointed to find that Bud was not there, and she was obliged to suffer a breakfast tête-à-tête with West. By dint, however, of asking him questions instead of allowing him to take the initiative, she hurried through her breakfast successfully, acquiring a superficial knowledge of her fellow boarder quite distant and satisfactory. She knew where he spent his college days and at what theological seminary he had prepared for the ministry. He had served three years in a prosperous church of a fat little suburb of New York, and had taken a winter off from his severe strenuous labors to recuperate his strength, get a new stock of sermons ready, and possibly to write a book of some of his experiences. He said that he should probably take a large city church as his next pastorate when his health was fully recuperated. He had come out to study the West and enjoy its freedom, as he understood it was a good place to rest and do as you pleased, unhampered by what people thought. He wanted to get as far away from churches and things clerical as possible. He felt it was due himself and his work that he should. He spoke of the people he had met in Arizona as a kind of tamed savages, and Mrs. Tanner, sitting behind her coffee pot for a moment between bustles, heard his comments meekly and looked at him with awe. What a great man he must be, and how fortunate for the new teacher that he should be there when she came! Margaret drew a breath of relief as she hurried away from the breakfast table to her room. She was really anticipating the ride to the school with Bud. She liked boys, and Bud had taken her fancy. But when she came downstairs with her hat and sweater on she found West standing out in front holding the horse.

"Bud had to go in another direction, Miss Earle," he said, touching his hat gracefully, "and he has delegated to me the pleasant task of driving you to the school."

Dismay and rage filled Margaret's soul. Bud had deserted her and le in the hands of the enemy! And sl thought he understood! Well, the nothing for it but to go with this much as she disliked it. Her fa daughter could not be rude t minister.

She climbed into the buck quickly to get the ceremony over, f escort was inclined to be too off about helping her in, and someho couldn't bear to have him touc
Why was it that she felt so about
Of course he must be a good man.

West made a serious mistake a very outset of that ride. He took granted that all girls like flattery a proceeded to try it on Margaret.
Margaret did not enjoy being tol delighted he was to find that inst
the loud, bold "old maid" he ha pected she had turned out to b beautiful and young and altogethe genial"; and coolly ignoring his co ments she began a fire of questions

She asked about the country be that was the most obvious topic of versation. What plants were those grew by the wayside? She foun knew greasewood from sage-brush that was about all. To some o questions he hazarded answers were absurd in the light of the exp hese latest style rods

re easier to put up

he brackets are very simple, strong, and isible in use. Once up, Kirsch Flat ds never come down by accident. They er sag or tarnish—show off your curs to the very best advantage—make sible any desired draping effect, from n single curtains to elaborate overpe and valance combinations. The flat pe makes Kirsch Rods strong and holds nch headings erect without the need buckram or other stiffening. French ding or plain rings used if desired.

Kirsch (Patented) Flat Rods

e guaranteed never to sag or tarnish

u'll find the guarantee slip inside every . They give years of perfect service. de in satin brass, Vernis Martin, oxidized pper, white or colors. The curves permit ceful draping clear to casing, concealing r woodwork, setting off beautiful woodrk. Kirsch Flat Rods are sold only in inly labelled, sealed packages, containing rything complete for one window. See se latest style rods at your dealer's. They e better draping results. Are far more sim- and durable. Also ask your dealer to w you

KirschKraft Novelty Curtains—Guaranteed to hang straight ways cut by the thread. Hems turned by thread and pressed by hand. Mitering rfect. Painstakingly made in every way. ld always one pair to the sealed package. large selection of latest materials and patns. To assist you in the effective drap- of your home we've prepared a book, ich we offer you, free.

Write today for newest ideas on window draping e'll send at once—"The Rod and Drapery yle Book." Illustrates a large number of autiful windows; some simple, some elabote. Full information given as the style of rod used, color emes followed — everyng, in fact, that you wish know. Write today and sure to mention dealer's me.

Kirsch Mfg. Co.
30 Prospect Avenue,
TURGIS, MICH., U. S. A.

The ROD and DRAPERY Style Book

It's Free

No. 4A Rod—this rod made possible the draping effect shown above.

Var on Prices

WAR cut off the supply of aluminum from Europe —prices in America skyrocketed. While preparing to meet these conditions, by advancing my prices, I made a fortunate buy of aluminum at less than present market value which enables me to offer

10,000 Rapid Fireless Cookers
riced Way Down

ill be a year at least before I can again offer the Rapid ny present special low prices. I am giving you this reme opportunity to get a Rapid Fireless Cooker plete, equipped with pure Aluminum Cooking Utens at less than before-the-war prices. Write today for special offer.

) Days' Trial in Your Home on My ersonal Money-Back Guaranty

ant you to use the Rapid eless Cooker this way for days. Then I want you ake a vote of the entire ily and yourself. If all you don't say that you er had better meals, more olesomely cooked, I want to return the Rapid and return your money at e.

d for big FREE Book

special low price offer ook of 150 recipes by ous chefs FREE. Send tal today.

Wm. Campbell, Pres.

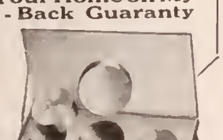
he Wm. Campbell Co.
ept. A-2, Detroit, Mich.



Aluminum Lined Throughout
Full Equipment "Wear-Ever" Aluminum Cooking Utensils

tions given her by Gardley two days before. However, she reflected that he had been in the country but a short time and that he was by nature a man not interested in such topics. She tried religious matters, thinking that here at least they must have common interests. She asked him what he thought of Christianity in the West as compared to the East. Did he find these Western people more alive and awake to the things of the kingdom?

WEST gave a startled look at the clear profile of the young woman beside him, thought he perceived that she was testing him on his clerical side, flattened his chin in his most learned, self-conscious manner, cleared his throat, and put on wisdom.

. "Well, now, Miss Earle," he began condescendingly, "I really don't know that I have thought much about the matter,—Ah!—You know I have been resting absolutely, and I really haven't had opportunity to study the situation out here in detail, but on the whole I should say that everything was decidedly primitive, yes—ah—I might say—ah—well, crude—Yes, crude in the extreme! Why, take it in this mission district. The missionary who is in charge seems to be teaching the most absurd of the old dogmas such as our forefathers used to teach. I haven't met him, of course. He is in the East with his wife for a time. I am told she had to go under some kind of an operation. I have never met him, and really don't care to do so, but to judge from all I hear he is a most unfit man for a position of the kind. He is teaching exploded doctrines. Of course in one sense it really matters very little what the poor Indians believe, or what such people as the Tanners are taught. They have but little mind and would scarcely know the difference, but you can readily see that with such a primitive, unenlightened man at the head of religious affairs, there could scarcely be much broadening and real religious growth. Ignorance, of course, holds sway out here. I fancy you will find that to be the case soon enough. What in the world ever led you to come to a field like this to labor? Surely there must have been many more congenial places open to such as you."

He leaned forward and cast a sentimental glance at her.

"I came out here because I wanted to get acquainted with this great country, and because I thought there was an opportunity to do good," said Margaret coldly. She did not care to discuss her own affairs with this man.

"It can't be possible that the schoolhouse is so far from the town," she said suddenly, looking around at the widening desert in front of them. "Haven't you made some mistake?"

"Why, I thought we would have the pleasure of a little drive first," said West with a smile. "I was sure you would enjoy seeing the country before you got down to work, and I was not averse myself to a drive in such delightful company."

"I would like to go back to the schoolhouse at once, please," said Margaret, decidedly, and there was that in her voice that caused the man to turn the horse around and head it toward the village.

"Why, yes, of course," he said, "if you prefer to see the schoolhouse first we can go back and look it over and then perhaps you will like to ride a little further. We have plenty of time. In fact, Mrs. Tanner told me she would not expect us home to dinner, and she put a very promising-looking basket of lunch under the seat for us in case we got hungry before we came back."

"Thank you," said Margaret, quite freezingly now, "I really do not care to drive this morning. I would like to see the schoolhouse and then I must return to the house at once. I have a great many things to do this morning."

Her manner at last penetrated even the thick skin of the self-centered man, and he realized that he had gone a step too far in his attentions. He set himself to undo the mischief, hoping perhaps to melt her yet to take the all-day drive with him. But she sat silent during the return to the village, answering his volubility only by yes or no when absolutely necessary.

He hoped she would change her mind when they got to the school building, and he even stopped to praise it in a kind of contemptuous way as they drew up in front of the large adobe building.

"I suppose you will want to go through the building," he said affably, producing the key from his pocket and putting on a pleasant anticipatory smile, but Margaret shook her head.

"It is not necessary," she said again coldly. "I think I will go home now, please." And he was forced to turn the horse toward the Tanner house, crestfallen.

He set her down silently at the Tanner door, and drove off, lunch basket and all, into the wilderness, vexed that she was so stubbornly unfriendly.

CHAPTER IX

SHE watched him furtively from her bedroom window, whither she had fled from Mrs. Tanner's exclamations. Margaret, in her indignation, could not help comparing him with the young man who had ridden away from the house two days before.

"And he to set up to be a minister of Christ's gospel and talk like that about the doctrines of our faith!" She had lived her faith and proved it. She turned to her Bible now to get a bit of calmness.

As she fluttered the leaves her eye caught some of the verses that her father had marked for her before she left home for college, in the days when he was troubled for her going forth into the world of unbelief.

"As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him: rooted and built up in him, and stablished in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving. Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ. For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. . . . "

How the verses crowded upon one another, standing out clearly from the pages as she turned them, marked with her father's own hand in clear ink underlinings. It almost seemed as if God had looked ahead to these times and set these words down just for the encouragement of his troubled servants who couldn't understand why faith was growing dim. God knew about it, had known it would be, all this doubt, and had put words here just for open hearts to be comforted thereby.

"For I know whom I have believed"—how her heart echoed to that statement—"and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day."

And on a little further:

"Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his." There was a triumphant look to the words as she read them.

She knelt beside her bed for a strengthening word with the Christ who since her little childhood had been a very real presence in her life.

When she arose from her knees she heard the kitchen door slam downstairs and the voice of Bud calling his mother. She went to her door and opened it, listening a moment, and then called to the boy.

There was a dead silence for an instant after her voice was heard and then Bud appeared at the foot of the stairs, very frowning as to brow, and very surly as to tone:

"What d'ye want?"

It was plain that Bud was "sore."

"BUD!" Margaret's voice was sweet and a bit cool as she leaned over the railing and surveyed the boy. She hadn't yet got over her compulsory ride with that minister. "I wanted to ask you, please, next time you can't keep an appointment with me don't ask anybody else to take your place. I prefer to pick out my own companions. It was all right, of course, if you had to go somewhere else, but I could easily have gone alone, or waited until another time. I'd rather not have you ask Mr. West to go anywhere with me again."

Bud's face was a study. It cleared suddenly and his jaw dropped in surprise; his eyes fairly danced with dawn-

CRISCO
The Ideal Cooking Fat

For Frying

FOODS fried in Crisco look appetizing. Crisco does not burn and leave black specks. These foods taste delicious. Crisco does not soak in and make them greasy. And Crisco is so delicate, odorless and tasteless that you enjoy the natural flavor of each dish.

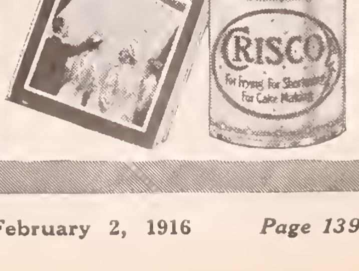
For Shortening

PASTRY shortened with Crisco is light, flaky, tender, crisp. It is easy to digest because Crisco is a pure and strictly vegetable product that cannot tax the stomach. It is easy to make successfully because very little handling is required to combine Crisco with flour.

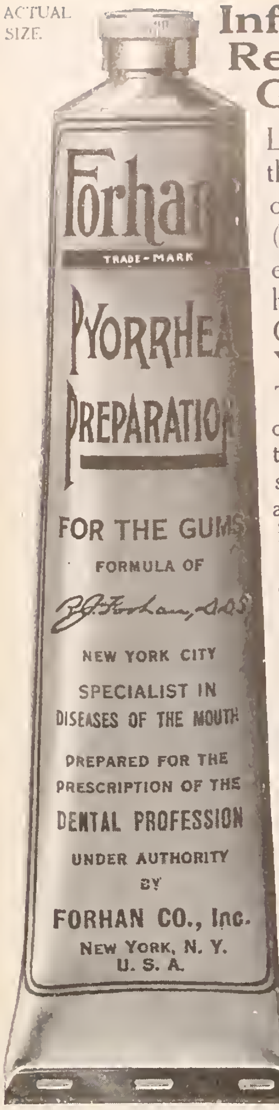
For Cake Making

CAKE made with Crisco is unusually rich and tasteful and stays moist and fresh a surprisingly long time. It costs less than usual too because Crisco sells at half the price of butter and is so much richer that a fifth less is needed.

The above is merely a brief statement of Crisco's advantages. But these few claims, when you realize their full meaning, prove so startling and important that you who do not use Crisco should be eager to learn all about it. Marion Harris Neil's "Calendar of Dinners" will give you in addition to 365 menus and 615 tested recipes the complete story of Crisco. Enclose 5 two-cent stamps with your name and address and you will receive this handsome, cloth-bound, gold-stamped book by return mail. A paper-bound edition without the calendar of dinners but with 250 recipes is sent when postage is not enclosed. Address The Procter & Gamble Co., Dept. S-2. Cincinnati, Ohio.



"A Calendar of Dinners" with 615 Recipes
The Story of Crisco
CRISCO
For Frying For Shortening For Cake Making



ACTUAL SIZE.

Inflamed, Receding GUMS—

Loose teeth — these are signs of Pyorrhea (Riggs' Disease). If you have them, CONSULT YOUR DENTIST without delay. He will tell you how to save your teeth and avoid suffering. The majority of leading dentists prescribe Forhan's Pyorrhea preparation with their treatment. It is the standard prescription for Pyorrhea—remember that no ordinary "dentifrice" or "tooth powder" has any curative effect upon this condition. If used daily like a dentifrice, however, Forhan's will prevent Pyorrhea, and it gives prompt relief in most cases. Pleasant to the taste.

Large tube (as illustrated), 50c. If your druggist hasn't it send his name (with price) to Forhan Company, 21-27 Elm St., New York, who will see that you are supplied.

Forhan's
TRADE-MARK
PYORRHEA PREPARATION FOR THE GUMS FORMULA OF
NEW YORK CITY
SPECIALIST IN DISEASES OF THE MOUTH
PREPARED FOR THE PRESCRIPTION OF THE DENTAL PROFESSION UNDER AUTHORITY BY FORHAN CO., Inc.
NEW YORK, N. Y. U. S. A.

Cash or Credit— Unbeatable Quality

We pay freight and ship within 24 hrs.

Write for Wholesale Price

on this beautiful Kalamazoo Mission Range—and 500 other styles and sizes of stoves and ranges shown in our new catalog—latest improvements—the best of quality—at low factory-to-you price. 30 days' trial—360 days' approval test. We also make Malleable Steel Ranges. Ask for catalog No. 103.

KALAMAZOO STOVE CO., MFRS.
Kalamazoo, Mich.

"A Kalamazoo Direct to You"
Trade Mark Registered

ACORN UNI-LITE FREE

Turns night into day. 300 candle power. Carry as a lantern; use anywhere as a lamp. Weather proof. For house, barn, garage, camp and around the farm. Write for big free offer. Special opportunity to farmers, stockmen and motorists. Agents make big money. Write tonight.

Acorn Brass Mfg. Co., 950 Acorn Bldg., Chicago

To introduce our new Fancy Work Catalog we will send this One Piece Corset Cover design (brassiere style) with cutting outlines; stamped on fine quality nainsook including enough lace for edges and embroidery cotton to work for special bargain price (postpaid, any size) 25c

HOME DECORATIVE CO.
Desk N, 12 East 12th St. New York

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it, write THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

ing comprehension and pleasure, and then his brow drew down ominously.

"I never ast him" he declared vehemently. "He told me you wanted him to go, and fer to get out of the way, 'cause you didn't want to hurt my feelings. Didn't you say nothing to him about it at all this morning?"

"No, indeed!" said Margaret with flashing eyes.

"Well, I just thought he was that kind of a guy. I told ma he was lying, but she said I didn't understand young ladies and of course you didn't want me when there was a man, and especially a preacher, round. Some preacher he is! This is the second time I've caught him lying. I think he's the limit. I just wish you'd see our missionary. If he was here he'd beat the dust out o' that poor stew. He's some man, he is. He's a regular white man, our missionary! Just you wait till he gets back."

Margaret drew a breath of relief. Then the missionary was a real man after all. Oh for his return!

"Well, I'm certainly very glad it wasn't your fault, Bud. I didn't feel very happy to be turned off that way," said the teacher, smiling down upon the rough head of the boy.

"You bet it wasn't my fault," said the boy vigorously. "I was sore's a pup at you, after you'd made a date and all, to do like that, but I thought if you wanted to go with that guy it was up to you."

"Well, I didn't and I don't. You'll please understand hereafter that I'd always rather have your company than his. How about going down to the schoolhouse sometime today? Have you time?"

"Didn't you go yet?" The boy's face looked as if he had received a kingdom, and his voice had a ring of triumph.

"We drove down there, but I didn't care to go in without you, so we came back."

"Wanta go now?" The boy's face fairly shone.

"I'd love to. I'll be ready in three minutes. Could we carry some books down?"

"Sure! Oh—wait! That guy's got the buckboard. We'll have to walk. Plague take him!"

"I shall enjoy a walk. I want to find out just how far it is, for I shall have to walk every day, you know."

"No, you won't, neither, 'nless you wanta. I c'n always hitch up."

"That'll be very nice sometimes, but I'm afraid I'd get spoiled if you babied me all the time that way. I'll be right down."

They went out together into the sunshine and wideness of the morning and it seemed a new day had been created since she got back from her ride with the minister. She looked at the sturdy, honest-eyed boy beside her and was glad to have him for a companion.

Just in front of the schoolhouse Margaret paused.

"Oh, I forgot! The key! Mr. West has the key in his pocket! We can't get in, can we?"

"Aw, we don't need a key," said her escort. "Just you wait!" and he whisked around to the back of the building and in about three minutes his shock head appeared at the window. He threw the sash open and dropped out a wooden box.

"There!" he said triumphantly. "You c'n climb up on that, can't yer? Here, I'll hold yer steady. Take holt o' my hand."

And so it was through the front window that the new teacher of the Ridge school first appeared on her future scene of action, and surveyed her little kingdom.

Bud threw open the shutters, letting the view of the plains and the sunshine into the big dusty room, and showed her the new blackboard with great pride.

"There's a whole box o' chalk up on the desk, too, ain't never been opened yet. Dad said that was your property. Want I should open it?"

"Why, yes, you might, and then we'll try the blackboard, won't we?"

Bud went to work gravely opening the chalk box as if it were a small treasure chest, and finally produced a long smooth stick of chalk and handed it to her with shining eyes.

"You try it first, Bud," said the teacher, seeing his eagerness; and the boy went forward awesomely, as if it were a sacred precinct and he unworthy to intrude.

Shyly, awkwardly, with infinite painstaking he wrote in a cramped hand: "William Budlong Tanner," and then, growing bolder, "Ashland, Arizona," with a big flourish underneath.

"Some class!" he said, standing back and regarding his handiwork with pride. "Say, I like the sound the chalk makes on it, don't you?"

"Yes, I do," said Margaret heartily, "so smooth and businesslike, isn't it? You'll enjoy doing examples in algebra on it, won't you?"

"Good night! Algebra! Me? No chance. I can't never get through the arithmetic. The last teacher said if he'd come back twenty years from now he'd still find me working compound interest!"

"Well, we'll prove to that man that he wasn't much of a judge of boys," said Margaret with a tilt of her chin and a glint of her teacher-mettle showing in her eyes. "If you're not in algebra before two months are over I'll miss my guess. We'll get at it right away and show him."

Bud watched her, charmed. He was beginning to believe that almost anything she tried would come true.

"Now, Bud, suppose we get to work. I'd like to get acquainted with my class a little before Monday. Isn't it Monday school opens? I thought so. Well, suppose you give me the names of the scholars and I'll write them down and that will help me to remember them. Where will you begin? Here, suppose you sit down in the front seat and tell me who sits there and a little bit about him, and I'll write the name down, and then you move to the next seat and tell me about the next one, and so on. Will you?"

"Sure!" said Bud, entering into the new game. "But it ain't a 'he' sits there. It's Susie Johnson. She's Bill Johnson's smallest girl. She has to sit front 'cause she giggles so much. She has yellow curls and she ducks her head down and snickers right out this way when anything funny happens in school," and Bud proceeded to duck and wriggle in perfect imitation of the small Susie. Margaret saw the boy's power of imitation was remarkable and laughed heartily at his burlesque. Then she turned and wrote "Susie Johnson" on the board in beautiful script.

Bud watched with admiration, saying softly under his breath:

"Say, that's great, that blackboard, ain't it?"

AMELIA SCHWARTZ came next. She was long and lank with the buttons off the back of her dress and hands and feet too large for her garments. Margaret could not help but see her in the clever pantomime the boy carried on. Next was Rosa Rogers, daughter of a wealthy cattleman, the pink-cheeked, blue-eyed beauty of the school, with all the boys at her feet, and a perfect knowledge of her power over them. Bud didn't, of course, state it that way, but Margaret gathered as much from his simpering smile, and the way he looked out of the corners of his eyes as he described her.

Down the long list of scholars he went, row after row, and when he came to the seats where the boys sat his tone changed. She could tell by the shading of his voice just which boys were the ones to look out for.

Jed Brower, it appeared, was a name to conjure with. He could ride any horse that ever stood on four legs, he could out-shoot most of the boys in the neighborhood, and he never allowed any teacher to tell him what to do. He was Texas Brower's only boy and always had his own way. His father was on the school board. Jed Brower was held in awe even while his methods were despised by some of the younger boys. He was big and powerful and nobody dared fool with him. Bud did not exactly warn Margaret that she must keep on the right side of Jed Brower, but he conveyed that impression without words. Margaret understood. She knew also that Tad Brooks, Larry Parker, Jim Long and Dake Foster were merely henchmen of the worthy Jed, and not negligible quantities when taken by themselves. But over the name of Tim-

The Clear Delicate Complexio of Childhood
may be retained by the woman who properly cares for her skin.
Hind
HONEY AND ALMO
Crea

A few drops of Hinds Cr used every day keeps the skin s smooth and fine-textured; prev Roughness, Chapping and Windb in any climate. Fine for sensi skin in cold weather.

Selling everywhere, or postpaid by us on receipt of price. Hinds Cream in bottles, 50c. Hinds Cold Cream in tubes, 25c.

Samples sent for 2c stamp to pay p

Do not take a substitute—Hinds Cream will improve the skin.

A. S. HINDS 291 West St., Portland,

Try HINDS Honey and Almond CREAM SO Refined, fragrant, beneficial, 10c and 25c. Trial size, 5c postpaid.

BORDEN'S CONDENSED MILK CO.
EAGLE BRAND
GAIL BORDEN
EAGLE BRAND
BORDEN'S CONDENSED MILK CO. NEW YORK U.S.A.

Gail Bord
EAGL
BRAND
CONDENSE
MILK
THE ORIGINAL

Guard your bab from sickness by g ing him Eagle "Bran —the food that for m than half a century built th sands sturc babie Even t most de cate ba can dig "Eagle Branc

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FRE

To try in your own home 30 days free, no matter w you live. Show your friends. Send it back at ou pense if you do not want to keep it. Hundreds of t sands in daily use. Perfect bakers, efficient heaters, of high grade material, beautifully finished, smoot sign, guaranteed for yea our Twu Million Dollar B

Ask your dealers to you Hoosier Stoves. for our big free book s ing photographs, descr. large assortment of and designs to select f explaining our free Send postal today. your name and adc plainly. No obligstions

HOOSIER STOVE C
164 State St., Marion,

POMPEIAN OLIVE OIL
ALWAYS FRESH
THE STANDARD IMPORTED OLIVE OI

OYSTER
Shucked daily as they c from the famous Chesap Bay with their natural water flavor.
SINGLE GALLON • • $1
THREE GALLONS • • 3
C. N. ROBINSON & BRO., Dept. 200, Baltimore,

Don't Throw it Away
MENDETS
A PATENT PATCH

Mend leaks instantly in all utensils, graniteware, aluminum, tin, hot water bags, etc. No solder, cement or rivet. Any one can use Send for sample box, 10c; large box, all sizes, 25c, postpaid. Ag Wanted. Collette Mfg. Co., Box 302 Amsterdam, N

HAVE You a Camera? Write for sar of my magaz American Photography and Popular Photography, w will tell you how to make better pictures and earn m
F. R. FRAPRIE, 865 Pope Building, Boston.

hy Forbes,—"Delicate Forbes," Bud explained was his nickname,—the boy tinged with that loving inflection of admiration that a younger boy will sometimes have for a husky, courageous, de ad. The second time Bud spoke of him he called him "Forbsy," and Margaret perceived that here was Bud's model of manhood. "Delicate" Forbes could outshoot and outride even Jed Brower when he chose, and his courage with cattle was that of a man. Moreover he was good to the younger boys and wasn't above pitching baseball with them when he had nothing better at hand. It became evident from the general description that "Delicate" Forbes was not called so from any lack of inches to his stature. He had a record of having licked every man teacher in the school, and beaten by guile every woman teacher they had had in six years. Bud was loyal to his admiration, yet it could be plainly seen that he felt Margaret's greatest hindrance in the school would be "Delicate" Forbes.

Margaret mentally underlined the names in her memory that belonged to the back seats, and went home praying that she might have wisdom and patience to deal with Jed Brower and Timothy Forbes, and through them to manage the rest of her school.

She surprised Bud at the dinner table by handing him a neat diagram of the schoolroom desks with the correct names of all but three or four of the scholars on them. Such a feat of memory raised her several notches in his estimation.

"Say! that's going some! Guess you won't forget nothing no matter how much they try to make you."

To be continued

Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

A READER asks how to start and conduct a local Prayer League. She adds: "I so deeply feel the need of prayer in our church. It has merely become a social club. No one is seeking God; many are dropping out of church entirely." Many earnest souls feel this same lack and need of prayer in the church. And the very best way to overcome it is to organize a little group of people who really believe in prayer, who long for the privilege of prayer and who have learned the secret of talking with God about all the affairs of life, great and small. The organization of a local Prayer League is the simplest thing in the world. Three or four persons may plan to meet for prayer at any time and place. Spend a few moments in reading together a brief passage of Scripture, talk over the various things in which you are all chiefly interested, then pray audibly, one after the other, that the God of all mercies and kindness will answer the desires of your hearts. Meet regularly, punctually, inviting others to join who have a like desire for the deeper blessings of the spiritual life and wish to apply the principles of prayer to the practical and daily needs, and to ask for God's blessing upon the church and community. This is the way revival starts; this is the way great spiritual movements begin, as when the little group of Williams College students took shelter from the sudden storm beneath a New England haystack and there began the circle of prayer that led to the great modern American foreign missionary movement.

We hope to hear that many Prayer Leagues are being organized, and shall be glad to record the good news that the members will have to tell of prayers abundantly answered.

Mrs. J. P. J. writes: "I asked the Christian Herald Family to help me pray that I might hear from my son. Our prayer has been answered." Mrs. A. J. G. of North Carolina writes: "I asked prayer for a man who was killing himself with drink. He is now leading a sober life and goes to church." A Friend writes from Kentucky: "I have committed many sins in my life and thought I was past forgiveness; but I asked God to let me know that my sins were forgiven. I have heard that still small voice, and have had peace in my soul ever since." Mrs. H. J. M. of New York state sends the good news of a son saved from the drink habit.

Mrs. E. H. writes from Merkel, Texas: "In the early part of last year I enrolled in the Prayer League with a request that its members pray for the spiritual and physical restoration of my dear daughter's husband, who was stricken with the white plague. My faith makes me firmly believe that my request was received, acted upon and answered by a prayer-hearing God, for the dear one was spared, until he acknowledged God in deep repentance. He was reconciled to the terrible suffering for the joy of receiving full pardon and peace to his soul and a perfect willingness to go and be with Him who had died to redeem him. His beautiful death to the flesh and life in Christ at the last moment strengthens my faith and makes me praise Him who is able and willing to save to the uttermost." This same friend asks earnest prayer for the restoration of hearing for a sister who was a missionary in China for seven years but has been compelled to leave the work on account of deafness. She also asks special prayer for her widowed daughter, a younger daughter, and a son.

D. D. M. writes from Pocahontas, Tenn., to thank God for a revival in which several young people and children were converted. He also asks special prayer for a young wife who is unhappy and that her husband may be converted. A mother writes from Charleston, Mo.: "I asked your prayers for my brother, and they were answered." She asks for continued prayer for him and for her son. Mrs. C. H. O. writes from Massachusetts: "A dear one of my home has begun the new year with the resolve to break a bad habit. I wish also to return praise for strength and guidance in finding a new home." A reader writes from Casey, Ill.: "God has heard and answered my prayer in restoring a loved one to health. I ask an interest in your prayers." Mrs. I. H. writes from Elnora, Alberta: "Six months ago I asked your prayers for healing of neuralgia in my face. I am thankful to say that I have scarcely felt it for six months, and I had been in torture for twelve years." O. S. K. writes from Allentown, Pa.: "I requested you to pray for my wife, who went through a very serious operation. I want to thank God for his mercy and the League for their prayers. My wife is at home and is improving." Mrs. L. J. D. writes from Madisonville, Ohio, acknowledging the answer to prayer for restored health. M. H. B. writes from Burnside, Conn., acknowledging answered prayer for great relief from distress of mind. She asks special prayer for the conversion of her son. Mrs. R. J. writes from Utica, N. Y.: "I have had much help in reading the requests of others in the Prayer League, thereby seeing how much I was blessed and also in reading the praises of those whose prayers were granted. I join every day in asking God to give to each one just the blessing which will be best for him to receive." She asks special prayers for restoration of her mother's health and eyesight and for spiritual and physical blessing for her sister.

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have also been received from:

Mrs. B. O., Indianapolis, Ind.; C. L., F Washington, D. C.; Mrs. M. L., Avondale, Ala.; M. A. A., Petersburg, Pa.

While the material for this week's prayer department was being prepared a telephone message was received at the Christian Herald office asking the prayers of the League that a man who is the support of his family and who was stricken suddenly, suffering from a blood clot on the brain, may be spared to his family.

A very sad letter comes from Florida, written by an elderly Christian gentle-

PAIGE

The Standard of Value and Quality

FROM every angle the new Paige Fleetwood "Six-38," you will find, is the ideal Family Car.

And we want you to discover that and prove that to your own satisfaction.

In the first place, you will need POWER in abundance for the steep hills, for the long sandy stretches, for all sorts of road conditions. And you will find that POWER in abundance in the Fleetwood —and with it sturdiness and reliability supreme in the Light Six field.

You will need strength in every detail of design and construction—for that means safety as well as service. In excellence of materials and workmanship and design, in all that means quality, the Fleetwood is a Paige and that means acknowledged supremacy.

You will need comfort—and this Fleetwood seats its five adult passengers with luxurious roominess for all. Its wheelbase—117 inches—means spaciousness. Also, the magnificent spring suspension insures luxuriously easy riding.

You will need the most reliable and efficient system of control, of carburetion, of electrical lighting and starting and of ignition. In these the Paige Fleetwood again proves Paige Supremacy.

You can and should demand the finest of upholstery, the best of equipment. And in this magnificent Fleetwood you will find Paige Elegance and Paige Quality throughout.

But see the new Fleetwood—$1050—for yourself. Accept nothing but the evidence of your own eyes and your own judgment. Satisfy yourself that with this car and the seven-passenger Fairfield "Six-46"—at $1295—Paige literally is "The Standard of Value and Quality."

Page-Detroit Motor Car Company
Detroit, Michigan

Fleetwood "Six-38"	$1050
Fairfield "Six-46"	$1295
Cabriolet	$1600
Sedan	$1900
Town Car	$2250

f. o. b. Detroit

California Lemon Juice in a cup —of hot water before breakfast

Squeeze the juice of half a Sunkist Lemon into a cup and pour in the hot water.

This simple and convenient way to sweeten a sour stomach and tone up the liver has changed whole days from bad days into good days. For this hot liquid taken before breakfast acts as a gentle laxative also.

Try this health-recipe for one week. See what it will do.

California
Sunkist
Practically Seedless Lemons

Get Sunkist Lemons for all uses if you want the finest lemons grown. They are practically seedless, juicy and full-flavored—best for every culinary purpose. Sunkist are picked by gloved hands, then washed, then wrapped in sanitary tissue. Your dealer receives them absolutely clean.

Their cleanliness and beautiful, bright, waxy color make Sunkist Lemons most attractive to serve sliced with tea, or as a garnish for fish, game and meats.

How do you use lemons? Do you use lemon juice in place of vinegar? Write us, telling us your ways, and we'll send you free book, "Sunkist Salads and Desserts."

Sunkist Oranges and Lemons are sold by all first-class dealers everywhere at the same prices asked for ordinary kinds. (419)

California Fruit Growers Exchange
Co-operative— Non-profit
Eastern Headquarters:
Dept. A-86 139 N. Clark Street, Chicago man, who says that he is extremely unhappy and begs the prayers of the League that his heart may be filled with the joy of God.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Spring Green, Wis. (that the people of Wyoming, Wis., may not be indifferent to the call of Christ); Ringgold, Ga.; Elida, Ohio; Caribou, Me.; Utica, N. Y. (that a class of ten girls may be saved); Campbell, Ky. (that dancing may be stopped in this town); Crown Point, N. Y.; F. E. B., Passaic, N. J. (that in a New York village that is dead spiritually many careless ones may be won to active service for Jesus Christ); Lyndhurst, N. J.; Cowarts, N. C.; Gouverneur, Mo.; Lewistown, Mo.; Foley, Ala. (that the members of the Epworth Bible Class of the Foley M. E. Church may be individually wakened to God's service); Lititz, Pa.; Flint, Mich.; Greenville, Ill.; Ensenore, N. Y.; Star, Ore.; Smithshire, Ill. (for an outpouring of God's Holy Spirit on our work and baptism of the Holy Spirit on pastor and people); Newman Grove, Neb.; Middlebury, Vt.; Carnegie, Pa. (that six men may become Bible readers and churchgoers); Accord, N. Y.; Mrs. A. B., for a successful revival in Caneadea, N. Y.; Harman, Md.; Sycamore, Ohio; Scottsville, Ky.; Dos Palos, Calif. (that many may be saved at the Pottersburg, Kan., M. E. Church); Brunswick, Tenn.; Nashville, Tenn.; Noti, Ore.; Yoakum, Texas; C. A. M., Parker, Ind. (that church at Rehobeth may have a gracious revival this winter); Melrose, Wis.; Westbrook Conn.; Gravette, Ark.; Ruffin, N. C.; Bucklin, Mo.

Mrs. A. C. asks prayers that son's mind may be restored; D. C. H., Mrs. A. K., Mrs. B., ask prayers that their daughters' minds may be restored; Mrs. R., that mother's mind may be restored and that she may return; E. M. R., for mental restoration for himself and wife; Mrs. S. D. M., that mother's mind may be restored. Twenty other friends ask prayers for mental restoration and strengthening for relatives and friends.

Mrs. G. T., that sight of eye may be restored; E. B. L. and E. E. B., that mothers' sight may be restored. Sixteen other friends ask prayer for restoration and strengthening of sight for themselves or friends.

Seventy-two friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing. Mrs. C. T. (that God will give me strength to testify and pray in public).

Thirteen mothers ask prayer that sons may be saved from the liquor habit. Six wives, their husbands. I. N. T., a brother. A friend, that five men may be saved from the liquor habit. Twenty-four other friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be cured of the liquor habit.

E. C. B. and L. B. ask prayer that a young man may be cured of the drug habit; Mrs. S. S. that her husband may speedily be cured of the drug habit.

Sixty-three friends ask prayer that their sons may be converted. E., that three sons may be saved; forty-three wives, their husbands; one hundred and one other readers ask prayer that friends or relatives may be converted.

H. M. T., that brother who would like to lead a better life may have help and inspiration; M. H., that a husband and wife who have become separated through evil influence of others may become reconciled and have a lasting and devoted love for one another; twenty-four friends ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for relatives and friends.

One hundred and thirty-five friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be healed, including Mrs. M. G., that daughter may recover from an operation, and Mrs. M. E. P., that husband may be cured of nerve trouble that affects both body and mind; Mrs. A. C., that son's limbs may be strengthened; another that a young Jewish mother may be restored to health.

Ninety-eight friends ask prayer for healing for themselves, including An Anxious Mother, to be cured of heart trouble; another that I may regain the use of limbs.

Mrs. A. J. G., that three women be cured of deafness; Mrs. C. M. B., that son's and her own hearing may be restored; Mrs. E. B. and A Sister, their sisters.

Twenty other friends ask prayer for restoration of hearing for friends or for themselves.

Sixty-one friends ask prayer for help and guidance in financial affairs.

Sixty-five friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs.

This telegram from Mrs. H. C. R., of Wellsville, N. Y. is received just as we go to press. "Please have special prayer for my mother, who is very ill in Berkley Hospital, that she may get well."

A Rose for God

ON my table, one cold, stormy day in midwinter, there bloomed a bouquet of beautiful roses from the florist. While I was admiring their loveliness and enjoying their fragrance, I thought of the rose-bush at my door, which brings forth many perfect white roses each June. I could see it through the window. Its leafless branches were encased in frozen drippings from the roof. Stormclouds and rough winds had piled white blankets of snow above the hard earth at its roots. In those dreary days of midwinter my doorstep rose-bush had no beauty. And yet I knew that even then it was preparing, amid ice and snow and bitter winds, to bring forth blossoms as fragrant and as beautiful as those on my table.

But how different the environment! One bush was carefully shielded from rough winds and freezing cold. In the light and warmth of a hothouse, it had been nourished and watered by a wise and watchful florist, and had produced these beautiful roses in midwinter. The other bush, leafless and covered with ice, was exposed to bitter winds and cold storms. But, somewhere within, it kept secure the secret which would be revealed when these months of struggle were over and a genial sun shone in a warmer-hearted blue and soft south winds sang its evening lullaby. I knew that, when I should recall, in those serene days, the hardships which this brave little bush had endured through the bleak winter, it might one day bear a marvel of loveliness, each rose sweeter and dearer to me than were these from a sheltered bush.

John Fiske has, I think, likened the universe to a rose that is gradually unfolding. By a more personal simile, we might compare each individual to a rose bush in the great garden of the world. Through storm and sunshine, heat and cold, we grow and develop. And some day there is revealed to us the possibility and the power of producing something beautiful. Through this knowledge there is born a desire and then a purpose to bear to the world this beautiful thing. If the desire and the purpose abide through the dark, cold days, as well as through days of sunshine, then our lives will surely bring forth the beautiful rose of Christian character. Winds of adversity may blow upon us, cold misfortune numb us, and storms of bereavement bow us to earth; but the roots of the little rose-bush strike deep below the frost of circumstance. It cherishes its soul's purpose, unafraid, and at last it bears a beautiful rose.

Shall we not strive to offer to our Father, in the fair light of eternity's morning, a rose which it has taken our lives to grow? G.

◆

Luther in Light of Recent Research

WHILE there are several lives of Luther, Professor Heinrich Boehmer's famous work, which has attracted universal attention in Europe, is one of the best that has ever appeared. It comes most opportunely in view of the approaching celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the nailing of Luther's famous Theses on the gate of the old castle church at Wittenberg, which was the beginning of the Reformation.

The Christian Herald has had the good fortune to secure the exclusive American rights of this book and has had it translated by Professor Carl F. Huth, Jr., of the University of Chicago, who has succeeded in preserving the spirit and expression of the original in a remarkable degree.

The Foreword to Boehmer's work by Professor J. H. Robinson of Columbia University pays a high tribute both to the biographer and to the translator who has made this book so readable to the average American.

The Life of Luther, handsomely bound in cloth, will be sent, together with the Christian Herald for one whole year, postpaid, for $2.25, or we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward this volume for sending us two new yearly subscriptions to the Christian Herald with $3.00.

Experienc has taught good nurses, cooks a housekeepers everywhere the gre value of
Baker's Coco
One of the best known writers on d tetics says of cocoa:
"It is a perfe
food, as who some as deliciou
a beneficent r storer of exhaus
ed power; but i quality must good and it mu
be carefully pr
pared. It is hig
ly nourishing an easily digeste
and is fitted repair waste strength, pr serve health an prolong life."
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
CHOICE RECIPE BOOK FRE
Walter Baker & Co. Ltd
Established 1780
DORCHESTER, MASS.
Grand Prize, Panama-Pacific Exposition, 19
Grand Prize, Panama-California Exposition, 19

Four Weeks' Tri
Choice of 38
Yes, w ship you o weeks' abs ly free tri freight pr direct fro own fac your ch 38 new of the hi grade Piano or er Piano
No Mo
Down
no freight way—no se
One of 38 Styles
Use it and enjoy it fo
weeks; then, if you wish,
back at our expense. You alone are the judge will be amazed at our rock-bottom direct price on the Wing, guaranteed 40 years. Easy monthly payments or cash. Write tod Valuable Book—FREE "The Book of Compl formation About P sent free and postpaid. Valuable 136-page book. Tells how t pianos. Beautiful art catalog also sent and particulars of our gr Shipment Offer. Write today—now.
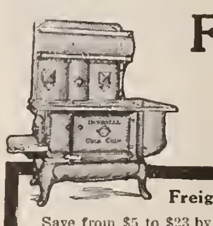
Wing & Son (Est. 1868), 9th Ave. & 13th St., Dept. 2492, N



Factory
Pric
Save $5 to
Freight Paid—A Year's T
Save from $5 to $23 by buying direct from fact 55 years' reputation back of every stove. Our l experience and big output gives you a better st or range at less cost.
Gold Coin Stoves and Rang
Use one for a year—money refunded if it does prove absolutely satisfactory. We pay freig guarantee safe delivery and send every stove re to set up. BIG FREE CATALOG—Send for it n
See why improved features of Gold Coin Stoves h you save fuel and bake better. Write today.
GOLD COIN STOVE CO., 11 Oak St., Troy, N.

Sisters

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

A MASTER poet once wrote a poem about an army post in India. As only a bit of the last concerns us, I will quote only that part:

What did the colonel's lady think?
Nobody never knew.
Somebody asked the sergeant's wife,
An' she told 'em true.

And then, after a few more lines, the poem ends surprisingly:

For the colonel's lady an' Judy O'Grady
Are sisters under their skins.

The colonel's lady and Judy O'Grady—the sergeant's wife! At an Indian army post the colonel's lady is just about the largest person, socially, that one is likely to meet. The sergeant's wife is not among the élite—in fact she is much more likely to be found over the housework than at the social tea table. The colonel's lady is marcelled and manicured, well dressed, tactful. The sergeant's wife is usually too occupied with many cares to "doll up." And yet the poet tells us that the colonel's lady and the sergeant's wife are at heart very much alike—that the colonel's lady is thinking the same thoughts that the sergeant's wife expresses. Do you agree with him?

This is in the nature of an introduction.

THIS morning I was standing up in the subway train. To New Yorkers the subway needs no explanation; but the out-of-towner may not know that during the rush hours at morning and evening the unfortunate commuter is shoved into the corner of a box-like, not very well ventilated car, and there jostled and pushed and bumped into until his station is reached. Then, if there is much left of him, he bolts out of the car and up to the street, where there is fresh air and space to move in.

This morning the train was just as crowded as usual. As I stood near the doorway I had room enough to turn my head and watch the folk who were reading their papers. In a line I saw four people who sat quietly, looking straight ahead. There were two girls, who were obviously society girls, one well-dressed business man, and one shabbily-neat colored woman.

The train jolted and came to a stop at one of the stations. Among the crowd of people who stumbled in when the doors were opened I saw a tiny old woman with wrinkled face, and white hair, and shaking, groping hands. Helplessly she reached for a strap; hopelessly she clung there. She was standing almost in front of the well-dressed business man.

Rather impatiently I waited for him to give up his seat, but with nonchalant air he gazed beyond the small swaying figure. With a sigh of disappointment I glanced at the two obviously society girls. They, too, were looking impersonally past the little old woman. I frowned angrily.

It was then that the neat colored woman stood up. The old old lady was [illegible] in front of her. With a tender hand she guided the feeble white woman to the vacant seat that she had left. Then, not waiting for thanks, she made her way up to the doorway of the car. Our shoulders touched, she was so close to me, and as she stood there I couldn't help feeling that I would rather know the colored woman with the kind heart than the successful business man or the two society girls. And as I stood there it swept over me that color and creed and race and doctrine are all very little things and that only the souls and minds and hearts of folk really do matter much.

It was then that I had the sister feeling. It was then that I appreciated Kipling's verse. It was then that I realized how the colonel's lady and Judy O'Grady were able to be sisters "under the skin."

FOLK, I think, are born with a conventional feeling of caste, and race superiority, and class distinction. On the surface they seem tolerant and kind and superior, but underneath they are not unlike the people of India who draw such a rigid line that a man of one station in life can not feed a starving man who belongs to another class. Underneath the thin top veneer, and the thick (thick as a hippopotamus hide) second coating, the real nature of the person shines out. It's only in the time of great danger or greater spiritual awakening that the thin layer peels off the top, and the thick coat drops off from underneath, and the real you shows itself. For in a time of danger or spiritual understanding race and creed and caste are very little insignificant things, and we are all sisters and brothers "under the skin."

I once heard of an almost shipwreck on a little seagoing yacht. The party was small and congenial, with the exception of one guest. She was the rather "nouveau riche" daughter of a merchant. She had been invited for matters of personal politics, and the other girls—secure in the thoughts of their grandfathers, and their inherited money, and their family trees—treated her coldly and silently and a bit contemptuously. The men treated her tolerantly, but they were frankly uninterested. Besides the guests there was a colored maid, a Japanese butler, and the cooks and sailors—who were just ordinary cooks and sailors.

The yachting party went on as merrily as most yachting parties. And then, finally, the climax came. There was a storm that dashed the dainty little boat up against the rocks.

It was an hour of grief and uncertainty and trouble. It was an hour of deep distress. And in that hour the little girl who had been tolerated, the little girl who had not been their equal, was the heroine. She helped the cook make coffee, she carried wraps to the hysterical guests while the colored maid was fainting, she laughed bravely and hummed a bit, and even joked while death—a death of storm clouds and hurricane and grinding rocks and dashing waves—stared her in the face.

It was an hour of grief and horror, but it grew to be an hour of understanding. In that hour the girls who had been neglectful and the men who had been indifferent felt their prejudices and veneers of caste swept away. When the ship floated free again, and the captain broke into thankful speech, and the colored maid was again at her duties, and the butler was coming out of his trance, the little girl fainted in a small white heap on the deck. And as the others carried her to her stateroom, they knew that family didn't matter very vitally, and that they were proud to know her.

Traditions and money and social importance are pleasant to own and experience—very pleasant. But they are not the greatest things in the world. Love, and truth, and helpfulness, and understanding are more important. A scrub-woman can be just as efficient at her work and just as worth while, and perhaps a great deal kinder and gentler, than many a society queen; a little shopgirl may have the same dreams and longings that touch the heart of the débutante who rides by the shop in her limousine; a colonel's lady—the biggest person, socially, that you are likely to meet on an army post—may think the same thoughts that the sergeant's wife voices over her washtubs.

Free Financial Booklets

OVER 525,000 depositors, mostly foreign born, have entrusted the Postal Savings System with $65,000,000, an average of $125 each. These and other facts are interestingly told in a booklet just prepared by Harvey Fisk & Sons, 62 Cedar Street, New York City, which will be sent free to Christian Herald readers who will write to "Department 227."

The Investor's Guide, containing current statistics, high and low prices of stocks and bonds, railroad, industrial and mining corporations listed on every stock exchange in the United States, may be obtained free by any investor who will write to L. R. Latrobe & Co., 111 Broadway, New York City.

Farm mortgage loans in pieces of $200 and $25 certificates of deposit, both paying the investor six per cent., are offered by Perkins & Co., Lawrence, Kan. Ask for Loan List 709.

Oats 25 Cents a Dish

Folks Get This Grade When They Pay That

At fine hotels, where oats cost 25 cents per serving, the dish is unforgettable. Of course, there's an air of luxury, dainty service, a deluge of rich cream.

But the flavor is also exquisite.

The flakes are large and luscious—made of queen oats only—rare, rich grains.

That means Quaker Oats grade. Fine hotels never buy a lesser grade for their patrons. And never a better grade. That is impossible.

Your own grocer offers that identical grade. And his price is 10 cents per package.

Every home dish can be like that hotel dish, if you'll ask for Quaker Oats.

Quaker Oats

The Delightful Vim-Food

We get of Quaker Oats only ten pounds per bushel—just to make this dish extra-inviting.

We do that because oats are the vim-food.

10c and 25c per package

Every modern woman wants her home folks to like them. So do we.

We make this grade to win them, and to foster the love of oats.

If that is your object, also, tell your grocer you want this brand.

Except in Far West and South

Cook Them In This

Aluminum Double Cooker Extra Large

We Supply It

We have made to our order this ideal aluminum cooker. It is large, heavy and enduring, intended for lifetime service.

It is made to cook Quaker Oats perfectly, without any loss of flavor. For that reason, we have supplied the Quaker Cooker to 700,000 homes. It will help you make this dish delightful.

Send us our trademark—the picture of the Quaker—cut from the front of five Quaker Oats packages. Send one dollar with the trademarks and this ideal cooker will be sent by parcel post.

The Quaker Oats Company
1708 Railway Exchange, Chicago

Save $300 on this
LEWIS-BUILT-HOME
The Vallejo $1190
Complete Cut-to-Fit
Artistic Semi-Bungalow

100 Homes To Choose From

Our new 1916 catalog of Homes should be in the hands of every prospective home-builder. Send 4c in stamps for your copy today!

This Ideal Up-to-Date Lewis-Built Bungalow
THE WAUNETA
$582

Better Homes for Less Money

Homes from $298 to $3,000. Not portable or knock-down, but of the best permanent construction. Warm–substantial–modern. Our designs are architecturally correct; our plans offer every known convenience; our specifications include a complete list of necessary materials.

LEWIS-BUILT HOMES are the result of 20 years' experience in home-building. Our honesty, courtesy and square dealing, always giving superior material, workmanship and service, have brought us hundreds of satisfied customers. 60% of our sales are made to friends of Lewis Home Owners. One Lewis-Built Home sells others.

All the lumber for your home is furnished.

CUT-TO-FIT

—saving 40% of your carpenter labor. Buying all materials complete from us at lowest wholesale, factory prices saves you all middlemen's, jobbers' and retailers' profits. We own our mills and timber. This assures best grades of lumber; no waste material; no delays; no shortages. Our precise, accurate instructions prevent mistakes of any kind, and enable you to erect your home in one-half the time necessary by the old-style methods.

Customers tell us of $200 to $900 savings on completed cost of their homes. This must appeal to you. Why not make this saving on your home?

Send for Our Book

Four cents in stamps will bring you our large HOME CATALOG. Over 100 attractive designs—the pick of thousands. Write today and learn how to build the best home in the quickest time at the lowest cost.

LEWIS MFG. COMPANY
Dept. 293 Bay City, Mich.

WE FURNISH EVERYTHING

Highest grade Lumber (Cut-to-Fit). Clear Lumber for all exposed woodwork. Bronze Door Locks, Best Hardware. Kitchen Cabinet, Glass, Shingles, Craftsman Trim, Nails, Plaster, Paint, Varnish — everything complete and finest quality. Note full specifications in our big catalog.

LEWIS-BUILT HOMES
DIRECT TO YOU CUTS COST IN TWO

NEW KEROSENE LIGHT

Beats Electric or Gasoline

MEN WITH RIGS OR AUTOS MAKE BIG MONEY

10 DAYS FREE
Send No Money

We don't ask you to pay a cent until you have used this wonderful modern light in your own home ten days—we even pay transportation charges. You may return it at our expense if not perfectly satisfied after putting it to every possible test 10 nights. You can't lose a cent. We want to prove to you that it makes an ordinary oil lamp look like a candle; beats electric, gasoline or acetylene. Lights and is put out like old oil lamp. Tests by Government and 33 leading Universities show it

BURNS 50 Hours On ONE GALLON

common kerosene (coal oil), and gives more than twice as much light as the best round wick open flame lamps. No odor, smoke or noise; simple, clean, no pressure, won't explode. Several million people already enjoying this powerful, white steady light, nearest to sunlight. It's GUARANTEED.

Get FREE Book

Won Gold Medal

Aladdin MANTLE LAMP

No Money Needed
We Furnish Capital

Without any sales experience, yes even without capital, you can make a big success by placing the Aladdin on trial. If you haven't capital we will help you with our liberal credit plan.

Every home wants and needs this wonderful light, that from half the usual amount of oil produces the brightest, mellowest light obtainable. To sell the Aladdin is a simple matter of getting the light into people's hands. After a trial nobody wants to go back to old feeble lighting methods. Here are two letters just like thousands we receive from enthusiastic men who are profiting by distributing the Aladdin:

"Out of eight calls I sold six. Then ordered in four dozen lots and sold five lamps a day. My patrons all say they are fine after using them a year."—H. B. Stewart, S. Dak.

"Between Jan. 2 and Feb. 20, I sold about 275 lamps. I never saw anything that would sell equal to it."—Charlie Conrad, Ohio.

Get One FREE We want one user in each locality to whom we can refer customers. Be the first and get our special introductory offer under which you get your own lamp FREE for showing it to a few neighbors and sending in their orders. Write quick for beautifully illustrated FREE Book and get full particulars. Address nearest office

Sample Sent Prepaid—10 Days FREE to responsible men. Tell us what territory you prefer, whether you have a rig or auto so you can work in country, how long you have lived in the community, etc., so we can give you full information, agency terms, credit plan and sample lamp for free trial.

MANTLE LAMP COMPANY, 1189 Aladdin Building, CHICAGO
Largest Kerosene (Coal Oil) Mantle Lamp House in the World
Also Offices and Warehouses at: New York City, Portland, Ore., Montreal and Winnipeg, Can.

LUDEN'S
MENTHOL CANDY
COUGH DROPS
In the "yellow box" 5c

GIVE QUICK RELIEF
NET WEIGHT 1⅛ OZ.
LUDEN'S Menthol Candy COUGH DROPS
LUDEN'S NAME ON EVERY DROP
LUDEN'S

SAFETY FIRST

For your children—means LUDEN'S at first sign of cough or cold, and is safe, because LUDEN'S contain no narcotics, no coloring. Have many uses. Try LUDEN'S—you'll praise LUDEN'S.

Wm. H. Luden, Manufacturing Confectioner Reading, Pa.

FRUIT TREES SMALL FRUITS IN LARGE OR SMALL LOTS AT GROWER'S PRICES, direct from nursery to planter. Safe delivery, personal attention and satisfaction guaranteed. APPLE TREES TOP BUDDED TO FIVE VARIETIES—just what's needed for the home garden. Buy at rock-bottom prices of the grower and save disappointment at fruiting time. Get our illustrated catalog, mailed free upon request. SHRUBS ROSES

WELLS WHOLESALE NURSERIES, 25 Wellsley Avenue, Dansville, N. Y.

Humbled and Exalted

International Sunday School Lesson for February 1
Phil. 2: 1-11

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By REV. F. B. MEYER, D.D.

"Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." II Cor. 8 : 9.

It is quite clear that the poverty here mentioned does not primarily refer to the actual finances that our Lord handled. As regards these, the very tramps in our streets, or that sleep under the hedges, are as well provided as he was. His mother, when she presented him in the temple, brought the gift of the poor, and when the soldiers stripped him at the cross, there was no coin in his wallet. But this poverty which our Lord experienced was not the means of enriching the Corinthians to whom these words were addressed. It was rather the poverty of laying aside the use of those divine prerogatives which were his native right in order to accept our human limitations, hunger, th and need, that having shared our hu lot, we might share his divine abunda Thus it has befallen that, by the obedie of the one Man, the grace of God h abounded to many. Have you ava yourself of your share of the inherita There are piles of unclaimed money national banks. People have never he that money had been willed to th and have never applied for their o But what vast multitudes have ne claimed or appropriated the help comfort of which the apostle spea Certainly their lives are not rich in fa or love or power.

A Prisoner Writes About Kindness

By Arthur H. Howland

MANY things were going on in the big city of Rome on the day that an under-sized, near-sighted prisoner sat down to write a letter to some friends of his at Philippi. If there had been daily papers in Rome the reporters would have taken no note of this letter. Whatever reference would have been made to the prisoner at all would have been made long before this and would have consisted of only a few lines on an inside page saying that a fanatical, half-crazy Jew who had offended his fellow countrymen by some strange theological opinions, and who had appealed to the emperor, had reached the city under guard. The business, the politics, the law-making, the war-planning, the temple worship, the verse and story making, the amusements of the city went on; slaves toiled, patricians schemed, ladies idled and talked—while the unknown prisoner, perhaps chained by the wrist to a Roman soldier, dictated this letter in the ears of his friend Epaphroditus to his Philippian friends.

But now all that was done in that city on this day is forgotten, while this letter of Paul's is read, studied, pondered by millions of devout and thoughtful souls all over the world, and its teachings are recognized as presenting the highest ideals toward which the human soul and the human race can strive.

Paul remembers that first time he went to Philippi as a proclaimer of Jesus. He remembers how he saved the mad girl from her torments, thereby depriving her masters of the profits they had made from her fortune-telling. He remembers how they had him arrested, beaten, and put in prison; how he and his companion Silas, unable to sleep because of the pain of their wounds and the discomforts of the stocks in which their feet were made fast, sang hymns at midnight, were miraculously freed, and in the midst of the confusion of the hour were able to lead the jailer to the way of salvation. He remembers his friend Lydia, who housed them after their adventure. He remembers his subsequent visits to the city and the faithfulness of the little group of believers there.

After his imprisonment at Rome he had been sick, and these Philippian friends had sent him a gift-package. Who knows what was in it? Perhaps some comfortable clothes, perhaps a book or two, possibly some table delicacies, and doubtless a considerable sum of money. It was a love gift. And when Epaphroditus had brought it from Philippi to the lonely prisoner at Rome his heart had overflowed with gladness and thankfulness. Since then Epaphroditus had broken down from overwork in his efforts to be of service to Paul. The Philippian Christians had heard of this and had been sad and anxious. Paul writes now to tell them that their friend is well again, a express in hearty terms his than their present, and to give them c in matters of Christian doctrin conduct. The dominant note c letter is joy. Paul was happy wanted his friends to be so too.

The part of the letter we stud cially today is of great impo both for its doctrinal teachings a practical advices or commands will help you in the mastery o lesson, whether teacher or pup write down word for word all o eleven verses. Write it out as a paragraph, not separating the v It will make simply a paragra scarcely 200 words. Look now at of these words and phrases. Co tion; comfort; fellowship; tender cies and compassions (American vision); "That ye be like-mi having the same love, being of on cord, of one mind. Let nothin done through strife or vainglory, in lowliness of mind, each cou other better than himself."

Can you imagine that any wor precious, so mighty, so revolutio were spoken in Rome that day? would the city of Rome have been if suddenly every one in the city begun to carry out this sugges The world is still trying to measur to that standard he set. Just nov are passing through a horrible n mare, which has been caused by fact that Christians did not unders that this same law of unselfish which must be followed by indivi Christians must also be followe groups of Christians. The idea been that though Christian men sh live the unselfish life in indivi matters, when it came to nati matters they must be selfish and r derers. Their selfishness and mu were given the name of patriot and this was supposed to excuse t from the demands of the Chris life. The future progress of soc must be made by applying to nati the same Christian standards that required of individuals. Presid Wilson said a couple of years ago s very noble things about this, remind the American people that the hig duty and destiny of any nation is serve the other nations of the wo declaring that our flag must not sullied by national selfishness.

Paul has often been accused by critics of failing to teach the pure practical altruism of Jesus. He w to be sure, a vehement controversiali but the watchword of his life was lo He loved the Christ who had cal and saved him; he loved the chu Christ had founded; he loved the wo for which Christ had died. And message to all men was that they must submit their lives to the sway love. It is all summed up in this se tence from his letter to Philippi: " lowliness of mind let each esteem oth better than himself." This is perf altruism: living for that other man, t alter, rather than for self, the ego.

Now Paul reaches the climax of gument. He gives them the stan- ard perfect example of this altruism: Le this mind be in you, which was so n Christ Jesus." Then he tells a the wonder of that sacrifice of su He tries to tell how richly that er ce will be rewarded when "at the an of Jesus every knee shall bow."

T be practical, there are three things have to do. We must go on e hing "Jesus Christ and him cruci- d. Altruism as a philosophy has t power to save the world. The o is to be saved by the preaching e Gospel of Christ. Students of ogy and economics who do not li e in Christ as we do are never- e s discovering that his philosophy a orrect; that altruism is the only n le and hopeful program for human ei s to adopt; but the altruism that ill egenerate the world must have the ical, infinite, irresistible power of h t in it. And it is our duty to tell about that Christ, to tell them who e to show them how they may find is lvation, to lead them to the joys n energies of his companionship.

e second thing that we have to do. f urse, after having personally ac- p d Christ as Saviour, Master, a tifier, Friend, is to carry out this ri iple of unselfishness literally and ra ically in our own lives. Are we ct lly living for others? It is easy y that we are. It is easy to think a we are. But are we really doing so? ld it not be a good plan while we re ll studying this lesson to find out h acts of this case? Is the mind that a in Christ Jesus really in us? Do eally consider others rather than u lves? Do we care for the comfort n success and cheer of others rather h our own? This is what it means to e follower of Jesus.

e third thing we have to do is to a to the very limit of our strength o y to get the whole world to adopt hi love program. For the adult la es the discussion doubtless will u off into some of the burning ques- io of today. What about our send- n war supplies to Europe? Would st sanction that if his advice were s d? What about the schemes for r nizing a huge army and navy, r ed to handle the implements of n der, and supplying them with the r and preposterous implements of a? What about the whole spirit of u commercial life? What about the n strial system which destroys child- l, despoils womanhood, and crushes n hood; that allows needless poverty unemployment and creates a thou- a sorrows? What does Jesus think of th whole fabric of our civilization that p luces such a horror as the European w and that lets Christian America p mote and prolong that horror, and al ws the people of our own States to s r needless grief and want?

ut after all, we must not be dis- c aged. At that name of Jesus every k e shall some day bow. To that sub- li , simple philosophy of kindness w ch he taught and for which he is re ly to supply the power, every mind w some day yield.

◆

THESE facts are gleaned from the proceedings of the Home Missions Council in New York in January. There will not s be lack of new frontier fields, for the U ted States government is naming eighty- t post offices each month. There are now 1 00 home missionaries working under the o nized societies represented in the Council; t annual income of these societies is $21,- 0 000. In the immigrant work the Gospel is eing preached in over thirty languages; y while the immigrant work is well or- g ized at the ports of entry, it is not yet s sfactorily linked up with the work of the s eties in the interior. Four-fifths of the I ians in the United States are not in the f of any Christian church, those enrolled n bering about 67,000, and there are seventy I ian communities or tribal divisions among w m no missionary work is done. Many t es are in extreme poverty and many are i orant of hygiene and proper protection a inst disease. The death rate among I ian children is so high that the Indian eau of the national government is urging e rgetic measures of prevention.

◆

truly thank the Lord for what the paper i doing for me. The Daily Readings, Ser- ns, Mall Bag; in fact, all of it is my delight.

MRS. G. E. VERMILLION.

TIMKEN
AXLES & BEARINGS
2833
67741

Both Boosters

Timken puts highest quality and engineering skill, plus Timken experience, into every axle, regardless of size or price

Both these men know that when it comes to human safety there should be but one standard for big car or little.

And they both know that though Timken Axles may differ in size, they all have the same substantial Timken quality—which never has been, and never will be, limited by pocket book considerations.

Motor cars, will, of course, differ in price—and justly—according to their power, size and capacity, the number of their conveniences and the luxury of their appointments.

But both the buyer and the builder of any car, big or little, want—and know that Timken gives them—the utmost safety and long-service value in their car's foundations, the axles, and bearings.

Whether a Timken front axle supports a light or heavy, medium priced or high priced car, it embodies the same precautions against any possibility of breaking at any point.

Whether a Timken rear axle is big or little, whether it is fixed hub type or full floating, whether it has helical bevel or worm drive, you can absolutely depend on it—for it has back of it all the engineering skill and manufacturing ability of a great organization of axle building specialists.

Every part and piece of every Timken-Detroit front or rear axle, large or small, is made of a steel selected with the same care, proved to be the best possible for its purpose, heat-treated by the same processes, machined to size, ground, gauged to the same limits, and assembled under the same system of continuous testing and inspection followed by every member of the Timken organization with the same sense of responsibility.

Furthermore—in motor car axles certain broad principles of design have become established through Timken experience with motor cars of every size and type. Among these are the proper size and weight of front axle I-beams and steering knuckles for cars of various types, the tapering shank of the steering ball, the pressed steel housing of the rear axle, the splined ends of the axle shafts, and the curved teeth of the helical gear. These are but a few of many cases where Timken assures the car owner of the very best up-to-the-minute engineering practice in axle building.

Finally—and this is worth noting—the Timken Axles in your car, no matter what its size or price, were selected and installed only after many conferences between Timken engineers and the engineers of the car builder. Every detail that could add to your security and satisfaction has been foreseen and provided for.

No motor car owner should ignore the part played by axles in good motor car values. The facts make mighty interesting reading and are yours for the asking. Write for the Timken Primer D-3 "On Axles," sent free, postpaid, with a list of Timken equipped cars on request to either address below.

DTA CO THE TIMKEN-DETROIT AXLE COMPANY, DETROIT, MICH.
THE TIMKEN ROLLER BEARING COMPANY, CANTON, OHIO RB CO

1916

Elcar

114-Inch Wheel Base
30-35 Horse Power

$795

In Either Five-Passenger Touring Car or Three-Passenger "Clover Leaf" Roadster.

"The Car for The Many"

Roomy, Comfortable and Powerful

Our 1916 ELCAR is built for those who want comfort, style, power, speed, durability and all-round satisfaction and dependability at a moderate price. Four Cylinder, 30-35 Horse Power, high-speed, long-stroke Motor, longer wheel base than many cars costing several hundred dollars more, and body designs equal to any car at any price.

Electric Starting and Lighting

The ELCAR has electric starting and lighting, vacuum gasoline feed, demountable rims, full-floating axle and every up-to-date feature and equipment that goes to make any car complete. Write for FREE catalogue showing illustrations and giving every specification in detail. You will then better appreciate the wonderful value that is offered in the 1916 ELCAR.

Elkhart Carriage & Motor Car Co., C 776 Beardsley Ave., Elkhart, Ind.

Burpee's Sweet Peas

Six Superb Spencers

For 25c we will mail one regular 10-cent packet (40 to 50 seeds) each of ELFRIDA PEARSON, a lovely pink, of gigantic size; KING WHITE, the best of all White Spencers; MRS. ROUTZAHN, rich buff, suffused delicate pink; VERMILION BRILLIANT, the most brilliant scarlet Spencer; WEDGWOOD, a beautiful light-blue shade. Also one large packet (90 to 100 seeds) of the BURPEE BLEND OF SUPERB SPENCERS for 1916, the finest mixture of Spencers ever offered. Purchased separately, would cost 60c. The Burpee leaflet on Sweet Pea culture is enclosed with each collection.

Burpee's Annual for 1916

The Fortieth Anniversary Edition of the Leading American seed catalog—is brighter and better than ever before. It is mailed free. Write for it today and please mention this publication.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO.
Burpee Buildings Philadelphia

LAWN PARK BROOD COOP

"LAWN PARK" COOP

Saves Your Chicks

The Wire Park, which pulls out like a drawer, gives hen and chicks fresh grass, air and sunshine during the day; closes at night and in storms. This coop meets every demand; portable, with removable floor for easy cleaning; roomy, light, durable, sanitary.

IT TELESCOPES! PROOF Against Hawks, Rats, Weasels, etc.

Made of galvanized metal; repels vermin. Size, open, 18 in. x 24 in. x 48 in. Pays for itself in chicks and labor saved. Write today for free circulars, special prepaid offer and how to turn work into pleasure and profit.

CYCLONE MFG. CO., DEPT. C; URBANA, IND.

FACTORY to RIDER

Saves you big money. Buy direct and save $10 to $20 on a bicycle.

RANGER BICYCLES in 94 styles, colors and sizes. Greatly improved; prices reduced. Other reliable models, $11.95 up.

WE DELIVER FREE to you on approval and 30 days trial and riding test.

Our big FREE catalog shows everything new in bicycles and sundries. A cyclopedia of information which every person should have. Write for it.

TIRES, lamps, wheels, parts and supplies at half usual prices. A few good second hand bicycles taken in trade $3 to $8 to clear.

Do not buy a bicycle, tires or sundries until you write and learn our wonderful new offers, low prices and liberal terms. A postal brings everything. Write now.

MEAD CYCLE CO. DEPT. G-71 CHICAGO

Do You Love FLOWERS?

FREE my handsome 1916 Flower List. Send a dime and addresses of 3 flower growers and I will include art study of

ROSES IN NATURAL COLORS

for framing, a full packet of my lovely new Peachblow Aster and coupon good for 10c on a 50c order. My methods are to your advantage. Try me

MISS EMMA V. WHITE, Seedswoman
3027 Aldrich Ave. So. Minneapolis, Minn

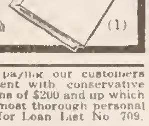
Grow your own Vegetables

Cut down living expenses. Easy to save time, labor and money by using

Planet Jr Garden Tools

This No. 4 Planet Jr combined Hill and Drill Seeder, Wheel Hoe, Cultivator, and Plow includes practically every tool needed to plant and cultivate a large or small garden. Can be used by man, woman or boy. Costs little. Lasts a lifetime. New 72-page Catalog (184 illustrations) free! Write postal for it.

S L ALLEN & CO Box 1202D Philad'a



Big Yearly Net Profit Per Hen

$4.22 net per hen. That's what I've made on my backyard lot. My book tells how I did it, contains complete instructions, shows you how to make money raising table eggs. Send 50 cts. today, learn how—instructions simple, everyone can do what I have done. Get this book now. 50 cents brings it

H. H. Rappalye, 81 S Staunton Ave., Detroit, Mich (1)

6% NET

For 36 years we have been paying our customers the highest returns consistent with conservative methods. First mortgage loans of $200 and up which we can recommend after the most thorough personal investigation. Please ask for Loan List No 709.

$25 Certificates of Deposit also for saving Investors

PERKINS & CO. Lawrence, Kans

PRAYERS For Public Worship, Private Devotion and Personal Ministry. A Complete Guide to Devotion. This book is helpful to all, for home and public use. Cloth, postpaid to any address, $1.00. M. E. MUNSON, Pub., 77 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

AGENTS—Steady Income Large manufacturer of Handkerchiefs and Dress Goods, Etc., wishes representative in each locality. Factory to consumer. Big profits, honest goods. Credit given. Send for particulars. FREEPORT MFG. CO., 32 Main St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED in every county in U. S. to sell an "Instructive Missionary Game." Good Seller. Commission 20 per cent. Orders by mail direct, 25c postpaid. Inquire of
REV. C. E. DOANE, Strongsville, Ohio

Garden City Preparatory Conference

Continued from page 134

shall be invited to send one or two personal representatives to the conference in addition to those who shall be appointed by the ecclesiastical authority of the church." When the discussion of this provision began, another serious obstacle to the union movement was revealed. The provision brought out vigorous protests: some argued that it would be unfair to the free communions of America and France, where there has been no governmental interference with the churches, to give the emperor of Russia or the emperor of Austria representation in the council. A St. Louis judge disapproved on principle of admitting additional representatives of crowned heads of Europe. A Chicago bishop reminded the conference of the age-long prejudice against the mixing of church and state which exists in our country. This was, without doubt, the best argument. Others, however, held that the refusal to permit special representatives of the political rulers from countries having state churches would close the door of those countries entirely against the World's Conference on Faith and Order.

IN the closing hours of the Preparatory Conference a threefold plan of arrangements for the proposed world conference was adopted. The plan provides, first, for administrative work through a council of commissions. It creates, secondly, a Preparation Committee, composed of theologians, canonists, and others, whose duty will be to gather data showing wherein the various denominations agree and wherein they differ. This part of the arrangements is unquestionably the most useful, because the most necessary: it goes to the core of the matter. Conscientious work done by the Preparation Committee will go a far way to give to the discussions of the World's Conference definite point and realizable purpose.

The third phase, we are told, is complete, viz., the adoption of a universal platform which is to accommodate every phase of Christianity. Too little has been divulged so far of this universal platform to justify the expression of a final opinion. Perhaps comment on this part must be reserved until it is possible to take a comprehensive view of all that is stated and implied in the platform. What is known of it so far is not very reassuring. The opening paragraph is a concealer rather than a revealer: "The basis of the proposed world conference is the faith of the whole church as itself created by Christ, resting on the incarnation and continued from age to age by his indwelling life until he comes." If "the faith of the whole church" means the points of agreement, in all the confessional declarations now extant, of the various organized bodies of Christians, we require some one to exhibit them. Evidently this will be the work of the Preparation Committee. However, in that case the platform is as yet inconclusive: it depends on an interpretation to be furnished later.

A spirit which we are almost inclined to call commendable was displayed when the discussion reached the section of the platform which defines the method of the conference. The section reads: "It is for each communion to think and act in terms of the whole. The method is positive, for, in and through our relations to the whole church, we may rightly and finally determine our relations to one another. It is negative only in so far as it protests against the sin of continued schism." The expression "sin of schism," having been strongly objected to, was changed to "fact of schism." While this change does not affect schisms, it certainly is a call to schismatics to reflect on what they have done, and will lead to the fixing of guilt for the production of schisms. This will be useful, because any genuine union, being a spiritual effort, must proceed, like every other Christian act, on the way of repentance and faith.

IN the opening address the following fundamentals were named on which Christian unity must be based: (1) The divinity of Jesus; (2) the propitiatory sacrifice of Jesus (Jesus Christ and him crucified); (3) the resurrection of Jesus; (4) the fact that Jesus established a church, a spiritual entity, which must have an organization, a body. The speaker held that the differences between the two wings of the church—the Protestant and the Catholic—arise over a varying emphasis as to the relative importance of faith and order, one wing holding that order is on a par with faith in importance. The Reformation rejected this idea and made faith of greater importance. Our duty is to try to enforce unity, bringing about the right balance between the two ideas. The differences, we fear, lie much deeper. When in the discussions at future conferences the delegates will call for definitions on such terms as "grace," "faith," "atonement," "sacrament," "church," etc., a very formidable battleground will open up before the members of the conference. This is not said with the intention of deterring anybody from the effort of reaching an understanding and a settlement of controverted points, but to clarify the prospect of the workers. It is good, very good, if the conflicts of the fathers four generations ago are gone over once more by honest, truth-loving men.

Among the larger questions to be discussed in the world conference the following have been announced: (1) The church, its nature and functions; (2) the Catholic (ecumenical) creeds as the safeguard of the faith of the church; (3) grace and the sacraments in general; (4) the ministry, its nature and functions. "Subsequent to these primary subjects for conference, the chief practical questions to be considered in church unity may be summarized in these three particulars: (1) A clergy so authenticated that, without violations of the principles of any, their standing may be regarded as regular by them all. (2) Complete intercommunion of believers upon some agreed principle and orderly method. (3) Sufficient administrative coordination to enable churches, without loss of desirable home rule, to act as a whole." This is such an ambitious program that one hardly cares to add anything to it on the practical side. However, many who have read of the proceedings of the Preparatory Conference have, no doubt, asked: What of the Bible in this movement? The state of public teaching regarding the origin, character, and authority of the Holy Scriptures in the various Christian bodies is such in our day that a clear statement of creedal form and force on the Bible is an indispensable requisite for any union of Christians. The modern church would practice a guilty sort of self-delusion if, pointing to the Apostolic Creed, which contains no statement regarding the inspiration, authority, etc., of the Bible, it would say: We purpose to reproduce the pristine purity of apostolic Christianity, and will say neither more nor less than was said in the first centuries of the church when people were asked what they believed. The reason why the Apostles' Creed says nothing about the written Word of God and its normative and authoritative character was, because that matter was not in any way controverted in those days. Not to say anything on the Bible in a modern confessional statement would not be primitive Christian simplicity and a silent revelation of the general a priori conviction of Christians that the Bible is word for word a communication from God, but it would be a weakness and an evasion. However, on this, as on other matters connected with this most significant movement in the modern Christian Church, we may have occasion to speak again, as we follow the evolution of the movement.

◆

I received the book "555 Difficult Bible Questions Answered" and I know I shall enjoy reading it. I have wanted it ever since I saw it advertised in the Christian Herald, and it just seems like providence that you should offer it to me on such easy terms. I know it will be a blessing in our household.

Aldan, Pa. Mrs. W. J. C.

COFFEE WAS IT

People Slowly Learn the Facts.

"All my life I have been a sl coffee. I kept gradually losi health, but I used to say 'nonse don't hurt me.'

"Slowly I was forced to adn truth and the final result was th nervous force was shattered.

"My heart became weak and un
in its action and that frightene
Then my physician told me that stop drinking coffee or I could expect to be well again.

"I thought of Postum but could bring myself to give up the coffee.

"Finally I concluded that I owe myself to give Postum a trial.
a package and carefully followe
directions, and what a delicious, n ing, rich drink it was! Do you k found it very easy to shift from to Postum.

"Almost immediately after I ma change I found myself better, and days went by I kept on improving nerves grew steady, I slept wel felt strong and well-balanced. No old nervousness is gone and I an once more."

It pays to give up the drink tha on some like a poison, for health greatest fortune one can have.
given by Postum Co., Battle Creek,

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—be well boiled. 15c and 25c package

Instant Postum—a soluble pow dissolves quickly in a cup of hot and, with cream and sugar, makes licious beverage instantly. 30c an tins.

Both kinds are equally deliciou cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum
—sold by Gr

The Truth About Pou y

Get the Facts Reading The One Man Pou Plar

Successful Methods of Men on Farms or Small Acr
Complete in twelve parts; printed in one volume

By DR. N. W. SANBORN

REAL work, with real poultry, on a real New E Farm. This is a simple story of what has bee by a man, at forty-five years of age, town bred an educated, getting out of practice of medicine, bu small farm in the hill country, and making a succ the venture. Not only is the rearing of chicks a management of adult fowl completely covered, b interesting side issues of fruit growing, grain and the production of milk, that cannot be escap a real farm. You get rugged facts — rarely fo print. The truth about poultry as found in actu on a one-man poultry farm.

You Can Do the Same, Book Tells How

OUR SPECIAL OFFER—The One-Man Poultry in twelve parts (book form), and the American P Advocate, one year, for only 50 cts., book and Adv three years, for only $1.00, if order is sent at once.

Our paper is handsomely illustrated, practical, gressive and up-to-date on poultry matters. E lished 1892. 44 to 132 pages monthly. 50 cents a 3 months' trial, 10 cents. Sample copy free. Cata of poultry literature free. Address

AMERICAN POULTRY ADVOCATE
580 Hodgkins Blk. Syracuse,

$15 95 Upward ON TRIAL American FULLY GUARANTEED CREAM SEPARATOR

A SOLID PROPOSITION to send new, well made, easy running, perfect skimming separator for $15.95. Skims warm or cold milk; making heavy or light cream. Bowl is a sanitary marvel; easily cleaned.

ABSOLUTELY ON APPROVAL

Different from picture, which illustrates our large capacity machines. Western orders filled from western points. Whether dairy is large or small write for handsome free catalog. Address:

AMERICAN SEPARATOR CO.
Box 4184 Bainbridge, N. Y.

WHITE Campines, GOLDEN Campines, SILVER Campines SPECKLED Suss SICILIAN Buttercu BLACK Orpingtons (bob-Empress Strain). Eggs, Dayold Chicks. Pound Chi BUFF Orpington Pound Chicks from prize winners ready for livery NOW. Standard Brooder Stove $13. Catalogue Stamps appreciated. THE NABOB CO., Gambier, Ohio.

S mmer Blooming
Bulbs

There are wonderful results to be secured both in garden effects and for household cut flowers with Gladioli, Cannas, Dahlias, Montbretias, etc., and at such a small outlay of time and money! Just try an assortment of our imported-to-order bulbs this year. By planting in proper combinations and intervals you can have an abundance of eau l flowers steadily from spring till frost, and with ract lly no trouble at all.

Our Plan Saves You Half

Th s our plan. You tell us what bulbs you wish. We rde em for you directly from the growers in Holland, her he best bulbs come from. Long experience and requ visits to Holland and personal acquaintance with he wers enable us to buy each kind from the best peci t in that variety, and as your bulbs are packed by he g ver and then forwarded to you as soon as they each is country, you get much better bulbs and at much ess t they would cost you if passed through the usual idd en. Thousands of customers buy their bulbs hrou us every year and they can tell you. You need ot p for your bulbs until after delivery, nor take them f no atisfactory. (References required from new cusome) But remember—

You Must Order Now—
Not Later Than March 1st

O rices and the quality of bulbs secured depend upon uyi direct from the growers for April and May delivery. hes re just a few of the prices our plan secures you:

	Dozen	100
Gl oli America, 1st sized bulbs .	$ .25	$1.40
Gl oli XXX Mixture, finest offered	.30	2.00
Ch est Named Dahlias	1.00	6.00
Ch est Large Flowered Cannas .	.85	5.50

Fo rices on other items and on smaller quantities, send oday r our Import Price List. It is Free, write for it now.

eds We have a limited quantity of specially selected, pedigreed seeds representing choice arie of everything grown in Mr. Elliott's private garen, t this year, for the first time, are offered for sale, nd a o advance in prices. These are highest grade seeds rod d. Write for list and prices of flower and vegetable eed once.

Ell tt Nursery Co. 351 Fourth Ave. Pittsburgh, Pa.

ED MARECHAL NEIL FIRE KING
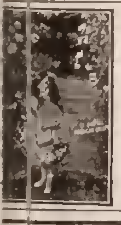
NEW ORCHID FLOWERED
GIANT SNOW QUEEN

E F L SIZE PACKAGES, rv us and striking iet Gigantic in size, es nd unique colors.

PANSIES

N 10 CENTS to help pay postage and packing and receive this In ductory Collection of Pansies; guaranteed le , and our handsome Seed and Plant guide. he you grow the biggest and finest ver e will mail you our Pansy booklet FREE nti this paper. Send to-day. Don't wait.

AT RTHERN SEED CO., 2307 Rose St., Rockford, Illinois



"Fairies in Roseland"

a beautiful view in colors for framing and coupon good for 25c on first $1 order from our free 1916 Rose and Floral Guide, for only 6c, the cost of packing and mailing. This 98-page Guide offers nearly 400 of the world's best roses and other flowers, 14 in natural colors. All Roses guaranteed to bloom. Send 6c today.

The CONARD & Jones Co. WEST GROVE Box 140 Pa.
Rose specialists. 50 years' experience

REEN'S TREES PLANTS, SHRUBS

Plants for the Home Garden. Buy direct from Green, and pay wholesale prices. We have dealt square for 36 years, and we are going to keep on. Strong-rooted, healthy Apple, Peach, Pear—all fruit trees, small fruits. Plants, Shrubs. Write for catalog and book, "How I Made the Old Farm Pay."

GREEN'S NURSERY CO., 1P Wall St., Rochester, N.Y.

RGAINS IN SEEDS

undreds of special offers in seeds and ants at bargain prices. Don't buy until seen our beautiful new catalog and special ffer, mailed free if you mention this paper.

eed Co., Dept. E., Des Moines, Iowa

SHOEMAKER'S POULTRY
BOOK AND ALMANAC FOR 1916

Has 200 pages; with many colored plates of fowls true to life; tells about chickens, incubators, poultry houses, etc. Price 15c. Money back if not satisfied. C. C. Shoemaker, Box 905 Freeport, Ill.

SAMPLE OUR SEED

Three earliest vegetables in cultivation for 10c. One packet each, Robinson's Earliest Tomato, Earliest Round Red Radish, Earliest Lettuce. 10c to new customers. Regular price 30c. CATALOG FREE.

C. N. Robinson & Bro., Dept. 64, Baltimore, Md.

The War in Europe

Continued from page 130

protested against these acts, but without avail.

During the week troops from Salonica, supported by a fleet, made a couple of attempts to land at various points on the Bulgarian coast, but without success. This attempt may be regarded more as a feeling out of the strength of the enemy's positions than as serious attempts to land at the present time. Eventually, however, as the line of railway connecting Nish with Constantinople runs closer to the Bulgarian coast than it does to Salonica and the neighboring Greek coast, it will not be surprising if the Allies make a determined effort to possess themselves of one of these ports, and using that as a base, attempt to seize the railroad and thus cut the communication between the Central Empires and their ally, Turkey.

The real status of Montenegro as to whether she is at peace or at war is a problem. Originally it was officially announced both in Austria and in Montenegro that the Montenegrin army, being in a position of extreme danger and lacking food, clothing and ammunition, had unconditionally surrendered, and that 37,000 infantrymen and 1700 artillerymen had laid down their arms. At the same time it was also said that two Montenegrin generals, one of whom is named Martinovitch, refused to obey the king's orders to surrender, and with a couple of thousand men escaped into northern Albania. For a few days nothing further was heard from Montenegro, and it was supposed that the surrender and the discussion of terms were following the usual course.

Suddenly the papers announced that the peace negotiations had been broken off and hostilities resumed, which statements were denied by Austria. Then the French papers began to give details, and announced that the Montenegrin army, under General Martinovitch, had retreated to Scutari and joined Essad Pasha, who a short time ago proclaimed himself provisional president of Albania (his authority not being generally recognized in Albania, however), and declared war on Austria and was at Scutari with 20,000 men. In view of all the precedent facts, it seems probable that this Paris report has reference only to that portion of the Montenegrin army which escaped with Martinovitch.

Albania itself has been very quiet during the week. The Bulgarians in the interior of central Albania are waiting for reinforcements, which to the extent of 30,000 are now reported as being en route from Monastir, before advancing to the coast. The Italians are stated to be withdrawing from the coast towns, but it cannot at present be said that this report is well founded.

In the middle of the week the British army advancing to the relief of the force under Gen. Townsend, besieged at Kut-el-Amara, in Mesopotamia, defeated the Turks between it and its objective at Orah, a point twenty-five miles down the Tigris River from Kut-el-Amara. The Turkish force astride the river at this point was attacked by the British, under Gen. Aylmer, on the morning of January 13 and after hard fighting began to move northward on both sides the stream the same evening, which movement continued the next day. The British are pressing the enemy closely, particularly on the north and east, but late reports announce that the Turks have stopped the advance of the relief expedition.

The Austro-Italian campaign has been, as usual, featureless. The campaign in the West all through the week was featureless also. Even in the old storm centers, the Vosges, the Champagne, and the Artois region, the cannonading was intermittent and light. Bitter complaints reach us, from both sides, of the mud, which is said this year to be even worse than it was last year, and this has not yet reached its climax, which will come in the February thaw.

The east coast of Kent, the county in which London is situated, was raided twice on January 23 by German aeroplanes. One person was killed and six injured.

Goodyear Means Tire Economy

SINCE tires are usually the largest single item of a car's upkeep, it is a matter of simple economy to buy those which last longest.

Families which use Goodyear tires with this end in view find their annual tire cost considerably reduced.

They need fewer tires. They have less tire trouble. Repairs are less frequent.

Tires that are lower in price than Goodyear—and they are many—do not attract them.

For these, lacking Goodyear quality and Goodyear service features must fall short also of Goodyear satisfaction.

Is there a moral here for you?

GOODYEAR
AKRON
TIRES

UNDERWOODS
At Less Than 1/2 Price

10 Days' Free Trial 5-Year Guarantee

RENTED APPLYING RENTAL on PRICE, or SOLD
for CASH or on EASY PAYMENTS

A typewriter is almost as much a necessity in the home as in an office. Let us send you one on 10 days' free trial. Get a world famed Underwood. Ask for circular No. 71. Write for agency proposition.

TYPEWRITER EMPORIUM, Chicago (Est. 1892)

RED COMB
POULTRY FEED

Feed For Eggs!

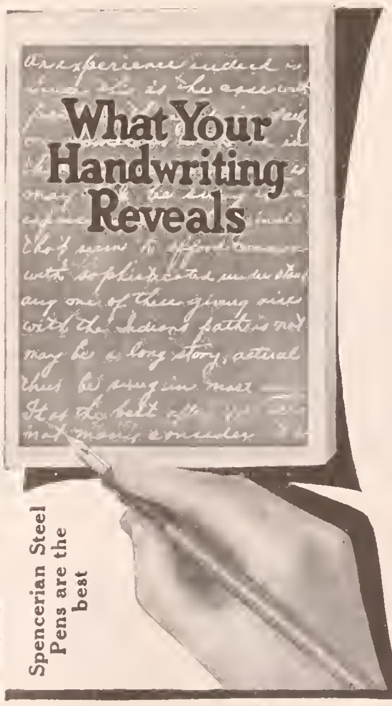
Now is the time to make your layers produce—while the price of eggs is soaring.

Free Book
By Experts

Just out. Tells how to feed for eggs—how to develop poultry for market and show. Your name on postal brings it. Get the book. Then go to dealer near you who handles Red Comb. Ask for Red Comb Meat Mash—the great egg-maker.

Edwards & Loomis Co., 343P No. Elizabeth St., Chicago, Ill.

Also Manufacturers of the Famous Red Horn Dairy Feeds



What Your Handwriting Reveals
Spencerian Steel Pens are the best

Know a man by his "hand"

This book gives the clues to character revealed by every person's penmanship, as described by William Leslie French, the celebrated Graphologist. It is illustrated with fifty specimens of handwriting. You will probably recognize yours among them.

A new edition is now being printed to supply the great demand. If you desire a copy, it will be sent with twelve different patterns of Spencerian Steel Pens on receipt of ten cents.*

SPENCERIAN PEN COMPANY
349 Broadway, New York

SPENCERIAN PEN COMPANY
349 Broadway, New York 2

I enclose ten cents for twelve different kinds of Spencerian Pens and a copy of the book, "What Your Handwriting Reveals."

Name________

Street No.________

City________

State________

THE MIND THAT THINKS
and
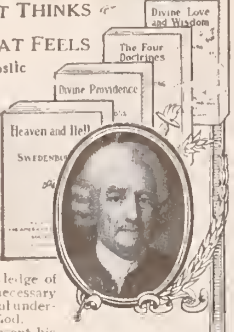
THE HEART THAT FEELS of Orthodox or Agnostic are equally touched and stirred by Swedenborg's profound interpretation of

THE HOLY BIBLE



Swedenborg's interpretation of the Holy Word is simple, reasonable and cogent. Knowledge of his devout teachings is necessary to a new and more beautiful understanding of the Word of God.

Whether you freely accept his claim: "It has been granted me to associate with angels and to talk with them as man with man" or whether you frankly challenge that "it was permitted me to see what is in the heavens and what is in the hells" — you must in either case find his philosophy strikingly lucid, his presentation of the relations of the "Now" and "Then" wonderfully appealing.

Wherever his voice reaches—a new, more intimate, a gladdening understanding of the Bible's teachings must grow. It is the function of this Society, liberally endowed, to make his works accessible to every one.

Swedenborg's Works
5 cents each volume, postpaid

Printed on excellent paper, in large readable type, substantially bound in stiff paper cover

"Heaven and Hell"	632 pages
"Divine Providence"	629 "
"The Four Doctrines"	635 "
"Divine Love and Wisdom"	618 "

Free distribution would involve unwarranted waste so we make a nominal charge of 5 cents for each volume, postpaid.

Address all orders to

The American Swedenborg Printing and Publishing Society
Room 720 3 West 29th Street, New York

HAVE YOU AMMUNITION?

The nations of Europe now at war are calling for more great guns and more destructive ammunition. A great gun is worth more than a regiment of men, and one high-explosive shell will put a company of men out of action.

Systematic Bible Study

By correspondence is the only way by which many Christians can get the great guns and the destructive shells for their warfare. The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago is now providing eight courses of study that have been tested and proven worth while. The majority of these courses is Bible Study, the remaining courses being on methods of Christian work and allied subjects.

The Scofield Bible Correspondence Course

Is now owned and controlled by the Moody Bible Institute, and is the most comprehensive course ever prepared for correspondence work.

If you are within reach of the mails these courses can be taken in your homes, more than 2,300 students now taking them. 1,368 new students enrolled in the last year.

Full information will be sent on application to the

Correspondence Department
The Moody Bible Institute
Dept. F-8, 153-163 Institute Place, Chicago, Ill.

BUY THE 50¢ SIZE

8 times as large as 10c size
2⅔ times as large as 25c size

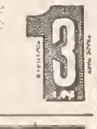
Get a Half-Pint of 3-in-One Oil for a Half Dollar and practice economy. 3-in-One is the original and the leading lubricating oil for sewing machines, bicycles, talking machines, guns, reels, locks, clocks and scores of other things.

Best preparation for cleaning and polishing furniture. Also absolutely prevents rust on metal surfaces indoors and outdoors. Never turns rancid and will keep indefinitely.

FREE Ask us for a generous sample bottle—no cost. Also get the 3-in-One Dictionary—free.

Sold by all Good Dealers

3-IN-ONE OIL COMPANY
42 CT. Broadway, New York



1/3 SAVED Buy Direct From MANUFACTURER

Do Your Own Plumbing and Heating — NEW HARDIN EASY WAY

Get our "HANDY-MAN" FREE BOOK. Every home needs it. Shows new home improvements and everything in plumbing and heating supplies EXCLUSIVELY at wholesale prices. Any handy man can install our goods with this Free Book and Free easy installing plans. $500,000 plants behind our guarantee. WRITE TODAY.

The Hardin-Lavin Co. 40 yrs at 4555-65 Cottage Grove Ave. Chicago

Young People's Topics for February 13

The Mystery of a Minority's Might

Epworth League Topic. Judges 6: 11-16.

EVERY great victory for truth starts with a minority. Truth and right are at first unpopular. We believe in democracy, but democracy means the power of the majority, the right of the majority to rule. Yet even in democracy it is often the minority that is right. A few people see the truth, love it, grasp it. They are willing to live for it, to declare it, if necessary to die for it. They are unpopular, despised, persecuted, perhaps slain. They have little power, but the truth has infinite power. Therein lies the mystery of the minority's might. The power that is in the truth slowly but steadily overcomes opposition, and the truth that was accepted by the minority of one age becomes the will of the majority of the age that follows.

The abolition of slavery was at one time a desperately unpopular topic. It was really not quite respectable to talk about; many people thought seriously that it was irreligious to be on that side, for the Bible seemed to sanction slavery. But that abolition minority had the truth on its side, and so it was invincible. The majority of today recognizes that that minority of yesterday was right, and extols as heroes those whom the earlier majority despised and persecuted.

The same history is repeating itself in the progress of the prohibition movement. A cause that seemed a few years ago fanatical and preposterous is now recognized far and wide as reasonable, wholesome, just, righteous and possible. Thousands are laboring valiantly to make true the slogan of the temperance forces, "A Saloonless Nation by 1920."

The history of Christianity itself is the story of the power of the minority. Persecution and slaughter could not block the truth that was on the lips and in the lives of those earlier followers of Jesus. And although the war in Europe has been a frightful setback, the principles that Jesus taught are still gaining ground and will one day win the world.

Gideon is one of the favorite Bible heroes. God taught him the lesson that the quality of the minority is more important than its quantity. First the faint-hearted were sent home; then those who were too thoughtful of self and not keen and hasty enough in their great tasks. Then with the three hundred brave and obedient men that he had left, Gideon saved his nation.

There are two kinds of great men. Most great men are said to interpret their own age. They gather up into their own personality the hopes, the fears, the faith, the doubts, the longings of their time. They embody and fulfil the will of their fellows. Other great men looked far ahead. It is sometimes said that they were born ahead of their time. But they were not. They were born to show their age its error; they were born to gather around them a brave minority who would be true to the truth and who would make possible the acceptance of the truth by the majority of the age to come.

We cannot all be great, but we can all search for truth, and as we find it we can cling to it and proclaim it and insist upon it and spread it and help forward the day when it shall prevail.

The Consecration of Influence

Christian Endeavor Topic. Heb. 10:19-25

THIS subject was considered last week by the B. Y. P. U., and the Christian Endeavorers who read this page were asked to save the notes of that lesson for use this week.

A practical way for each individual to deal with this subject will be to make two lists of acquaintances, one list of persons upon whom you would like to believe your life is having some influence; the other, a list of those who are influencing you most strongly. Are you making it a matter of the gravest and most careful concern that your influence upon the first group is wholesome, helpful, uplifting, spiritual? Are you helping them to be pure, honest, kind, thoughtful, industrious, self-sacrificing, efficient? As for the other group, are there some companions who have been influencing you to let down your standards, to change your principles and beliefs, to be a little less earnest and consecrated?

These are things to consider carefully here at the beginning of the new year. Do not admit into intimate friendship those that would lead you from life's truest and best ideals; take care to live so that all who know you will feel that your life is a call, a challenge, an inspiration, to the things that are right and true and eternal.

"Who is efficient for these things?" No one, except as Christ himself is welcomed into the soul to become Saviour, Master, Sanctifier, Friend.

Christian Fidelity and Force

B. Y. P. U. Topic. Matt. 25: 31-46.

THE Christian Endeavorers studied this topic last week. Try to find the notes upon it published in last week's Christian Herald. Fidelity to Christ and reliance upon him for the force that we need to make our life triumphant, these were the points brought forward.

But an added word of warning might not be out of place about that matter of trusting to Christ for our power. We must not think this means to rely upon him in a lazy, careless way and expect that he will do our work for us. God gives us the physical power we need, but he expects us to develop that power by personal exercise and to make that power fruitful by right down hard work. It is so with spiritual power. Christ provides us with the power, but it remains for us to apply it to our tasks. It is our lips that must do the speaking, our feet that must do the running, our hands that must do the helping. He promises to fill our lives to the full with his infinite power, but we must be about his business, bringing his salvation and his cheer to all whom we can reach.

The faithful and forceful life! Who would not have such a life? And every one may have it who will.

◆

Our Cover Picture

MESOPOTAMIA is a land with a mighty past, but it is just as certainly a land with a mighty future. At times its rich soil has supported great populations, and at other times it has been swept by marching armies or on account of lack of protection from the Bedouin and other nomadic races has been given over to pasturage. But the same rich, deep soil is there today, only awaiting a stable government and a larger population to make it blossom again as of old, when it supported some of the world's wealthiest monarchs.

A good idea both of the extreme richness of the soil and of the primitive methods of cultivation used can be gained from the cover picture which depicts the sturdy inhabitants tilling the soil near Haran, where Abraham and his family dwelt after leaving Ur of the Chaldees on their long pilgrimage to the south. Haran is situated on one of the smaller tributaries of the Euphrates and was once the meeting place of the Syrian, Assyrian and Babylonian caravan routes, joining Damascus, Nineveh and Carchemish and their tributary lands. As the seat of the Moon-God Sin, Haran had a religious significance.

Today Haran is one of the fine new stations on the Bagdad Railway, and at this point a branch line is to run to Urfa, farther north. So far, the irrigation schemes of Sir W. Willcocks have not affected Northern Mesopotamia, but being situated on the through line of the new railway between Europe and Bagdad, and the junction point to the city of Urfa, with its 55,000 inhabitants, Haran is likely to come again into its own.

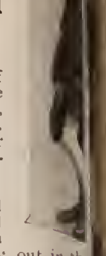
The houses in Haran are built in the shape of a beehive, as neither stone nor wood are available, and this form of hut does away with the necessity for roof timbers.

The heavy, clumsy shovels shown in the picture may soon be supplanted by modern gangplows and reapers, for, unlike Syria and Palestine, Mesopotamia has thousands of square miles of level alluvial land, which will respond quickly to modern methods of agriculture, while up-to-date transportation methods and adequate protection will encourage settlers.

Even under the present primitive methods, Mesopotamia exports large quantities of grain and in the event of a prolonged war will be Germany's principal hope for additional food supply. As there are only nine inhabitants to the square mile, Mesopotamia will be a fertile field for colonization in the event of the break-up of Turkey.

M. O. W.

Knee Crippled Now Walks



Gladys Mitchell, because of Tubercular inflammation of the knee, had a badly deformed limb, as you see in the photograph. The photograph below, and her parents' letter, tell you the results of her treatment at this Sanitarium.

"Gladys now walks back and forth to school (five blocks) and is improving every day. Wish you could have seen her today, out in th snow with her sled giving a little neighbo girl a ride, and later in a snow ball fight It gives us great pleasure to recommen your institution."

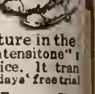
Mr. & Mrs. Guy L. Mitchell
424 East 9th St., Newton, Kans.

For Crippled Children

The McLain Sanitarium is a thoroughly equipped private Institution devoted exclusively to the treatment of Club Feet, Infantile Paralysis, Spinal Diseases and Deformities, Hip Disease, Bow Legs, Knock Knees, Wry Neck, etc., especially as found in children and young adults. Our book, "Deformities and Paralysis;" also "Book of References," free on request.

The McLain Orthopedic Sanitarium
923 Aubert Ave.,
St. Louis, Mo.

Deaf?



The day of imperfect hearing is past. Science rivals nature in the velous new 1916 Mears Ear Phone, "Intensitone" —the world's greatest hearing device. It tran sound without blur. Write today for our 15 days' free trial

Perfect Aid to Hearin

The Mears is the only scientific instrumen the deaf. It marvelously covers 96 deg of sound, every range of tone of the human

Write for Free Book Our free book is a ly valuable treat deafness. Write for it today—learn all our 15 days' free trial offer and low laboratory price. If convenient to New call for demonstration.

FREE Book

MEARS EAR PHONE CO., Desk 2492 45 W. 34th St.,

Learn Musi At Home!

Lessons Free

New Method—Le Play By Note— Organ, Violin, B Mandolin, Guitar, C Harp, 'Cello or to Special Limited Offer weekly lessons. You pa for music and postage, is small. No extras. ners or advanced pu Everything illustrated. simple, systematic. Fr tures each course. 16 success. Start at once. for Free Booklet Today- U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC, B 225 Fifth Avenue, New Yo

Sunshine Lamp
300 Candle Power
To Try In Your Own Home

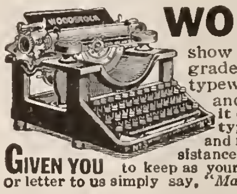
FRE

Turns night into day. Gives better light than gas, electricity or 18 ordinary lamps at one-tenth the cost. For Homes, Stores, Halls, Churches. A child can carry it. Makes its light from common gasoline. No wick. No chimney. Absolutely SAFE.

COSTS 1 CENT A NIGHT

We want one person in each locality to whom we can refer new customers. Take advantage of our SPECIAL FREE TRIAL OFFER. Write today. AGENTS WANTED.

SUNSHINE SAFETY LAMP CO.
695 Factory Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.



WOULD YO show this standard grade 42 key fully vi typewriter to your fri and let them see whe it excells any other typewriter, if by doin and rendering other sma sistance, you could easily hav GIVEN YOU to keep as your own? Then by post or letter to us simply say, "Mail Particulars."

WOODSTOCK TYPEWRITER CO., Dept. J176, Chica

WANT A WEEKLY INCOME?

You can earn a regular income in your spare tim showing Queen Fabrics' exclusive designs. D Goods of Silk, Linen, Cotton, Worsted. "From Mills to the Millions." Permanent business— ordinary canvassing. Experience unnecessary. structions ready. Be first in your locality.

Queen Fabric Mfg. Co., Dept. 429, Syracuse, N.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SIMPLE TE TO PATENT. tect your ideas may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventi and "How to Get Your Patent."

RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D.

ANITAS
MODERN WALL COVERING

ANNOT collect dust or germs and you can wipe it an with a damp cloth.

de in every style and design to har-nize with the furnishings of every
m. Your decorator will show you t patterns.

have helpful booklet and assortment samples ready for you.

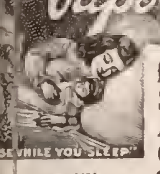
ite for it today.

IE STANDARD
CLOTH CO., Inc.
Broadway, N.Y.C.
Dept. 3

Vapo Cresolene



for Whooping Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Asthma, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Catarrh.

ABLISHED 1879.

D t fail to use Cresolene for the distressing, and often atal ections for which it is recommended.

It a simple, safe, effective and drugless treatment.

V rized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping ou nd relieves Spasmodic Croup at once.

It a boon to sufferers from asthma.

T air carrying the antiseptic vapor, inspired with every rea makes breathing easy, soothes the sore throat, and op e cough, assuring restful nights.

C lene relieves the bronchial complications of Scarlet Fev nd Measles and is a valuable aid in the treatment of pl ria.

C lene's best recommendation is its 36 years of success ise. Send us postal for Descriptive Booklet.

For Sale by Druggists

T Cresolene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated throat, omp of slippery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene. They an t m you. Of your druggist or from us 10c. in stamps.

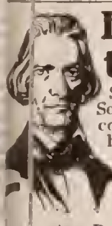
THE APO-CRESOLENE CO., 62 Cortlandt St., New York
Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada



Learn How to Talk New idea. Easy method.

Send for our special opportunity. Scientific, simple, easy Calhoun course in speaking. Teaches you how to convince people. Makes you earn more. Send for particulars.

At Home Learn at home in your idle m ents. Become a public speaker. Learn h to talk in business. For salesmen, lawyers, m chants, mechanics, farmers and all busi-n men, young men and women. The good ta r succeeds in all walks of life. Post yourself. Send fo l particulars of special opportunity. Write today.

C houn Corporation Old Colony Building, Dept. 7446 Chicago

"ION'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. 'How?' With the MORLEY PHONE. I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right.

"The Morley Phone for the

DEAF

is to the ears what glassses are to the eyes. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Any e can adjust it." Over one hundred thousand old. Write for booklet and testimonials.

TH MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Bldg., Phila.

L ARN TO DRAW

Illustrators—Cartoonists—Designers are in demand. Many of our pupils obtain paying positions before completing the course. Personal Instruction by artist of 30 years' experience. Correspondence and local school. Send sample of work for free criticism, and 60c in stamps for illustrated book. Artists' outfit FREE to enrolled students.

WASHINGTON SCHOOL OF ART,
961 F St., N.W., Washington, D.C.

M ONEY FOR YOUR CHURCH

Your Church Organizations can make money through our very liberal proposition on the well known SKAT soap products. Write SKAT CO., Hartford, Conn.

As a Greek Sees Greece

Continued from page 138

people's will, and would simply be a mockery. [The election resulted in approval of the court program of neutrality.]

German propaganda and fear of the German arms is another factor in the present situation. German propagandists have been widely at work in many lines. German organs have been playing all sorts of tunes in order to arouse feelings against the Allies, and have been entering into every circle and have gradually gained ground. Newspapers like Nea Himera or Hesperine, that were strong supporters of Venizelos and his policy, changed sides very suddenly and became bitter opponents; such an instantaneous conversion is unaccountable.

NOTHING succeeds like success, says the proverb. The success or rather doings of the Germans in Belgium, Poland and Serbia, those little nations that dared to resent the will of German militarism, were kept in all vividness before the eyes of the Greek people. While the people expressed their will clearly and strongly, approving Venizelos and his policy, the force of the situation made many to acquiesce in the policy of the king, supposing, under the circumstances, neutrality, if possible, would be the best plan.

As to the real leaning and preference of the Greeks, whatever be the leaning of the king and his general staff, the people are out and out for the Allies. If it comes ultimately to choose between the Entente and the Central Powers, there remains no shadow of doubt with which the people will throw their lot. The only element that would cool their enthusiasm will come from Italy, as we shall explain soon. Austria has always been the enemy and opponent of Greek interests. Austria always has an eye upon Salonica, she may still cherish hope to come down to the Ægean Sea. As to Bulgaria and Turkey, their interests are so conflicting with Greece that it seems an impossibility they should agree. The Bulgarians are the bitterest enemies of the Greeks. Should the Bulgarians enter upon Greek soil, all questions of neutrality will be at an end.

The real policy of Greece may be sought in the possibilities of the realization of the Greek Idea. The Greeks have a certain great idea. They have a big dream for the future, they cherish great hopes for their race which may be realized some day. Only a small section of the Greek race is in Greece proper, while the great part still continues to be under foreign yokes. The Greeks would unite in that combination of Powers which would and could help them most in the realization of their hopes. The Entente Powers are friendly to Greece; they are her patrons. But new elements enter into the situation, that complicate the Greek position. Italy is a new factor: her ambition comes into conflict with the Greek Idea. She has plans for Albania and the coasts of the Adriatic, that conflict with Greek plans. She has an eye on the islands, and territories in Asia Minor, that Greece regards as her lawful heritage. Greece must have strong guarantees as to her own share, before she can throw her lot out and out with the Entente. The mere promise of Cyprus would not suffice.

Another phase of the matter is the future of Constantinople; that is a jewel that many run after for possession. Little Greece dares to ask questions before joining an enterprise which might defeat her own ends. She must have guarantees as to the ultimate fate of the City of Constantine. The dream of the Greeks looks to Constantinople and its St. Sophia. However absurd that may appear to the wise and the great of the world, makes no difference to the children of Hellas. Even the common people talk of historical parallelism, such as this: Constantine XI gave Constantinople to Mohammed II, now Mohammed V will give it back to Constantine XII; Constantine gave, Constantine will take it back; Mohammed took, Mohammed will give it back.

Postal Life, N.Y.

ROOSEVELT
Life Insurance increases the stability of the business world, raises its moral tone and puts a premium upon those habits of thrift and saving which are so essential to the welfare of the people as a body.

TAFT
A man in office without means must abandon the hope of making the future luxuriously comfortable. All a man can do under existing circumstances to safeguard his family is to get his life insured.

Photos by Pach Bros. N.Y.

WILSON
If a man does not provide for his children; if he does not provide for all those dependent upon him, then he has not opened his eyes to any adequate conception of hu an life.

Let the Postal Solve Your Life Insurance Problem

DECIDING upon the kind of life-insurance policy to take out should not be a hasty matter; but you can not resolve too quickly that you will take out some kind of policy.

Read what the above distinguished advocates say, but consider carefully just what kind will best meet your needs.

Service

Your decision as to which policy is best will not take long if you go about it in the right way—the direct way—as made possible for you by the Postal Life Insurance Company. It sends no agent to solicit you, but it forwards by mail full official information regarding any standard policy-form. The Company will also send you on approval the policy itself, so that you may see just what you will get, and when you are once a policy-holder it will continue to be at your service for consultation and advice—personally or by letter, which also includes the services of the Company's Health Bureau for policyholders.

Saving

Besides service you will find net cost low in the Postal—lower than ever before because the Company's actual underwriting experience has enabled it now to make a

10% premium-reduction with a continuance of its annual guaranteed policy-dividend of 9½%

Besides these savings, the Company pays the usual contingent dividends, depending on earnings.

Safety

The Postal is safe because it sets aside the full reserves required by law and necessary for the payment of all policy-claims now and in the future. The Company's resources are now more than $9,000,000, including surplus, reserves, and immediately available funds at interest in leading banks, and a special deposit of $100,000 with the State of New York, where the Company is chartered. Though only a little over ten years old, it now pays—and promptly more than a million dollars a year to beneficiaries throughout the Union and elsewhere, under policies issued through the Company's direct non-agency method of doing business and under those assumed in its reinsurances.

Find Out What You Can Save At Your Age

It will pay you to write today for the Company's Official Booklet, "Sound Insurance Protection At Low Net Cost," also official figures for your age, on any form of policy—Whole-Life, Limited-Payment-Life, Endowment, Joint-Life, Child's Welfare, or on a Monthly-Income Policy. The Postal issues all the standard forms and all these are approved by the strict New York State Insurance Department. Just write and say: "Mail official insurance particulars as per The Christian Herald for February 2nd." In your letter be sure to give

1. Your full name. 2. Your occupation. 3. The exact date of your birth

No agent will be sent to visit you; the resultant commission-savings go to you because you deal direct.

POSTAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
WM. R MALONE PRESIDENT
THIRTY-FIVE NASSAU STREET NEW YORK

TYPEWRITERS FACTORY TO YOU

Look at these bargains! Typewriters Rebuilt in our own Factories, and guaranteed for one year.

Underwoods $25 to $70 Royals $25 to $65
L. C. Smith $30 to $55 Olivers $20 to $45
Brand new No. 2 Smith Premiers $45
Special this month
Remington Visible No. 10, $38.50

We have others, of course. Send for catalogue describing them. Branch offices in principal cities.

AMERICAN WRITING MACHINE CO., Inc., 345 Broadway, N.Y.

Guaranteed
Everbearing
Strawberries

Free for Testing

A pair of mated EVERBEARING STRAWBERRY PLANTS FREE if you will report as to your success with them. Will bear loads of big, red berries from June to November. We have counted 480 berries, blossoms and buds on a single plant. A postal will bring the plants, also enough seed of the new CEREAL FETERITA to plant a rod square of ground. Also a pkt. of perennial ORIENTAL POPPY seed. Send 10 cts for mailing expense or not, as you please. Write today and get acquainted with

THE GARDNER NURSERY COMPANY
Box 769, Osage, Iowa.

$3.25
Postpaid

LADIES! Ease your feet. Send for free catalog telling all about our Neat, Noiseless, Flexible, Comfortable, unlined Vici Kid O'Sullivanized PILLOW SHOE. New shoes easy as old ones. No breaking in required. Fit and feel like a kid glove. O'Sullivan's Rubber Heels on all styles.

PILLOW SHOE CO., Dept 3
184 Summer Street Boston, Mass.

PIANO TUNING AT HOME

A LUCRATIVE PROFESSION easily acquired. Anyone can learn. Our PATENTED TUNE-A-PHONE METHOD makes success more certain than best oral instruction. Guaranteed. Write for FREE BOOKLET, telling how our STUDENTS MAKE BIG MONEY.

Niles Bryant School of Tuning, 22 Inst. Bld., Battle Creek, Mich.

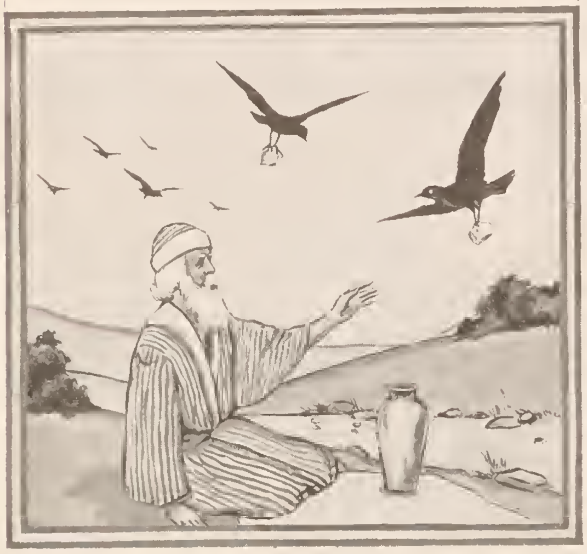
Test Your Efficiency—

Solve a Simple Problem, Every Other Day. Test Yourself, in Competiti n with the Rest of our Readers

OBSERVATION, JUDGMENT AND CONCENTRATION PLEASANTLY BROUGHT INTO PLAY—A D YOU MAY, AT THE SAME TIME,

EARN $1,250, $625, $350, $250, $150, $100

Picture No. 19



OR SOME OTHER OF THE 419

REWARDS

to be given away in our

Bible Picture Contest

THIS fascinating home recreation, which you know to be worth while in subject ma r and a good mental exercise too, is for all ages and both sexes, allowing participa n whenever and wherever suits your convenience and by one or more persons at a time.

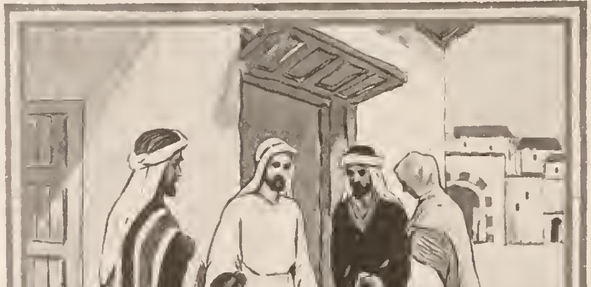
The test consists in looking at a picture and then picking the most closely descriptive tex t of a given list of such texts. These texts are Bible verses. Do the same for each pic e in the series.

From now on through April we shall publish three Contest pictures in each week's i e of the Christian Herald. That means that you can solve a picture every other day; or u can do the week's stint on some particular evening; or proceed at your own convenie . You have plenty of time, as no answers will be accepted until the end—when the tota f 60 pictures have appeared; yet you sho d not put off too long. The best way i o keep up with the order of appearance.

If you haven't started at all yet, it wil e a very easy matter for you to catch up y solving the pictures which have already peared. You might do it in a couple of sp e hours, more or less; and you would en y doing it. If you have those early pictu s, well and good. If not, you can get th .

The way to obtain the back pictures, u o date, is as follows: First, you may obt n the past six issues of the Christian Her l, at five cents each. Or, second, you m y have reprints of the eighteen pictures t the nominal price of one cent each (add g two cents to cover mailing to you)—send g the amount in one or two cent stamps. , third, you will receive the back pict s free on request in connection with the Bi e Picture Contest OUTFIT of the bo s "Gems from the Bible" and Contest Re y Book, as explained below.

Picture No. 20



THE ANSWERS

for the Pictures are in a convenient little book, called

"Gems from the Bible"

THE exclusive and official list of eligible answers (solutions), for the Contest pictures, comprises 2,000 Bible verses suitably arranged in an attractive pocket volume known as "Gems from the Bible." This list will be regarded as standard by the Committee who will judge the sets of answers sent in by contestants. The best answers submitted will be approved as winning, but no answers will be accepted unless they can be found in "Gems from the Bible." Thus everybody is placed on an equal footing. This arrangement makes the Contest practicable and pleasurable for all; and good sense will win.

The "Reply Book" constitutes a convenient form in which contestants can submit their answers.

How to Obtain "Gems from the Bible" and "Reply Book"

OFFER No. 1: "Gems from the Bible," together with the booklet known as "Contest Reply Book," in which you can write your answers, will be sent on receipt of $2.00 for yearly subscription to the CHRISTIAN HERALD (new or renewal).

OFFER No. 2: "Gems from the Bible" and "Reply Book" will be sent FREE to any subscriber who sends us $1.50 for a new (not renewal) subscription to the CHRISTIAN HERALD.

OFFER No. 3: "Gems from the Bible" and "Reply Book" will be sent FREE to any subscriber who sends us $2.00 for a new subscriber who enters the contest. The new subscriber will receive the CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, "Gems from the Bible" and "Reply Book" and the present subscriber sending the new subscription, will receive as a present from us, "Gems from the Bible" and "Reply Book" FREE.

By special arrangement the CHRISTIAN HERALD makes the following combination offers with the Contest Outfit:

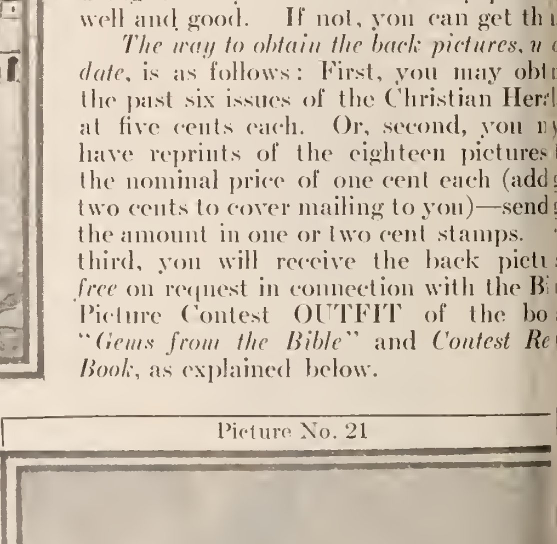
OFFER No. 4: "Gems from the Bible" and "Reply Book" will be sent on receipt of $2.50 to pay for one year to the CHRISTIAN HERALD (new or renewal) and one year to THE MODERN PRISCILLA, a national monthly magazine for the needlewoman, the housewife, and the mother. The Modern Priscilla is a distinctive publication.

OFFER No. 5: "Gems from the Bible" and "Reply Book" will be sent on receipt of $2.50 to pay for one year to the CHRISTIAN HERALD (new or renewal), and one year to the ORANGE JUDD AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST (or its edition published for the subscriber's own section of the country). The American Agriculturist, also a weekly publication, is a splendid farm magazine, helpful to the farmer, and interesting to the whole household.

Picture No. 21



Send All Orders to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York Cit

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

H editors of the Christian Herald will be gd to answer any question addressed to the il ag provided it be of general interest and rely personal. Correspondents may use a n plume to identify the question, but all ers must contain name and address of the de in addition to the nom de plume. No at- tic will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

S BSCRIBER, Minneapolis, Minn. 1. Did Paul do right in going into the emple to purify himself, after preaching salvation by faith, without the rks of the law? (Acts 21:20-26). 2. what way can a Christian be made all ings to all men in order to bring them Christ? (I Cor. 9:20-22.)

1. aul made no compromise with his n le in this act. What he stood for, first al was religious liberty. What he could terate in the Jewish ceremonial law was i a that these ceremonies were necessary s vation. He preached that men are e by faith in Christ alone and that the er nial law was no longer binding on be- ve in Jesus. He remained always a Jew, w r; was proud of being a Jew; and was li not only because of his own personal f nces, but because he wished to do all it could do consistently to convince the s f the reasonableness and righteousness hi essage about Christ, to honor the forms t worship of his fathers. The vow that s men had taken upon themselves as sc ed in the passage to which you refer s purely voluntary vow. It was custom- earnest souls to take such a vow as s. vidently the Nazaritic vow. It was a for a brief period, ordinarily thirty ys. The passage in Acts 18:18 shows that u imself had taken just such a voluntary w s this, wishing, doubtless, to give him- f r a time to specially fervent prayer. e se of Peter (Gal. 2:11-21) was different. l taken the position that Jewish Chris- n ould eat with Gentile Christians, and e stricter Jews came from Jerusalem to ti h he repudiated that stand. This im- e oing back to the rigorous requirements t law; it must have grieved greatly those n Christian companions of Peter; it g have led to their complete alienation m he church and to their loss of faith in r. So Paul rebuked Peter with terrible e ess. The one great consistent purpose P l's life was to bring to the knowledge and e f Christ all the people he could reach. d would not allow for himself or tolerate ers any act that might wound or grieve h der those for whose complete salvation arned. 2. We are to take this same a m. Anything not contradictory to the r law becomes right for us when it is n with the pure purpose to win a soul for s A tender conscience and earnest a for divine guidance will save us from i astray so long as we are moved by that r g desire Paul had to constrain men to m to Christ. We must make no compro- is with conscience or with principle, but e not to be hindered by prejudice or st n or tradition from doing anything a seems wise and right to win a soul for o

M C. C., Wausaukee, Wis., sends this v suggestion: "The locust plague that s en devastating Palestine could be made s ce of income. Pay the natives so much r ound for catching them, then kill and m ate with formaldehyde, grind and sack d hip to this country for chicken feed. uld sell for at least $3 per sixty pounds, it ould pay even if you could only get $3 r he hundred pounds. It would make the e egg-laying product ever produced." o formation regarding M. C. C.'s request n rning a soldier's widow, she should ri to the Information Bureau, War De- r ent, Washington, D. C., and if that o l prove ineffective, advertise in some a g Wisconsin newspaper.

Ir A. L., Mason, Ia. What books are best or young folks to read?

ung people would far rather read fiction a any other kind of literature, and they d be encouraged to read the best. They d become familiar with the best novel- t Dickens, Scott, Hawthorne; some of e ge Eliot, some of Thackeray. George onald's books are good; also those of beth Charles. Jean Ingelow was a o ist as well as a poet, and her books are x ent. Among recent writers Gilbert a r and Winston Churchill touch a high o l note. Ralph Connor tells the Gospel n ory. Kathleen Norris's books are de- ig ful and helpful. Nor should we forget or Porter, the creator of Pollyanna. A as for poetry should be encouraged—Tennyson, Mrs. Browning, Robert Browning (if they are willing to dig for pearls), and our own poets, Lowell, Whittier, Longfellow. They should, of course, know something of Shakespeare. But they should be especially encouraged to read history and biography and to learn something of philosophy. Those with a bent to science will enjoy books describing the natural sciences. For the religious life, such books as "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life," by Hannah Whitall Smith, the works of Andrew Murray, J. R. Miller, Dr. Jowett, Dr. Meyer, Robert E. Speer, John R. Mott, S. D. Gordon, and Daniel Steele are of great value. Keep in touch with the missionary movement by reading the lives of the great missionaries and following the publications of the Missionary Education Movement and the various denominational boards. Keep track also of the developments in sociology, studying some standard textbook on economics and following this with such works as those of Professors Raushenbusch and Ely and Dr. Josiah Strong.

Reader, Columbus, Ohio If a sinner be truly converted, while he may slip and fall, God will not let him be "utterly cast down."

TO-AN-INDIAN-CHILD

by Margaret E. Sangster Jr

Your tribe sits idle-weaving baskets maybe-
The brave triumphant songs of other days
Are swept away into the past, no longer
Do painted red men own the prairie ways:
Their cornfields glitter golden in the sunlight
The smoke curls peaceful from a sordid heap
Of fagots piled by braves; their fathers, chanting,
Went to their graves, as though they went to sleep.
You lean against your doorway, hair rolled neatly,
A placid, docile, chubby little form -
And gaze with thoughtless eyes across the valley
Seeing the sunshine-dreaming not of storm-

Your tribe sits idle gossiping together
And yet, oh! daughter of a dying race,
You do not dream of by-gone glories, trusting,
You stand and smile into the futures face.

We have the promise of being strengthened and kept amid temptation, if we ask him who is both able and willing to keep us. Pray against falling into wilful sin. Backsliding is an evidence that conversion has not been thorough, and we know from Scripture that the backslider is a difficult problem. If there had been complete dedication there would have been no apostasy. One who fears he has so fallen should pray for forgiveness, and if he continues daily in prayer he will be received and accepted. Indeed, the very fact that his conscience troubles him is evidence that he has not fallen beyond hope, for the absolute apostate has no such fears. His heart is hardened, as the restraining influence of the Holy Spirit is withdrawn from him, leaving him in his sins.

Many of our friends write to the Mail-Bag concerning the war and its issues as they affect this hemisphere, and particularly our own land. Mrs. S. L. R., West Kennebunk, Me., writes: "I like the stand you take in regard to the war, and wish all in America would do the same, and not send implements to continue the awful struggle. I do hope peace may come soon."

Another reader, Rev. S. M. Davis, Keystone, S. D., writes: "I have been an interested reader of your paper for many years and feel a little proud to be connected with the Christian Herald Family. I write to congratulate you on your plain, square, Scriptural stand on the war question, and greatly rejoice that the Christian Herald is the first religious paper to take the forward step in the transformation of religious life that God is requiring of this generation. Your position is sound and Scriptural, and establishes beyond controversy the associated fact that the determination of moral character is not what a man believes, but what he does. 'Ye shall know them by their fruits.' Your article of December 8 has the right ring. All honor to your courage in leading Christian thought in these troublous times."

S. P. P., Oahe, S. D. Please tell me who the apostle had in view in speaking of the "creature" in Rom. 8:19-22. Does he include the brute creation, or refer only to human beings?

This word is translated "creation" in the Revised Version. This makes its meaning clearer—the whole creation or universe. We are parts of a universe which is "groaning and travailing" in pain. Everywhere is restlessness, conflict, pain. The sons of God have caught a glimpse of the "new heaven and new earth," the "new creation," and know themselves to be already a part of it.

D. J. H. A. Z. S., Grant Pass, Ore. There are many things which the Bible does not mention specifically, yet which, from a Christian standpoint, are entirely proper and commendable. God's Word lays down broad and comprehensive general rules of conduct; only in a few instances does it descend to details. With regard to your inquiry as to where the Bible endorses church organizations, choirs, choruses, official posts such as stewards, presbyteries, etc., festivals, sermons, singing evangelists, missionaries, etc., you should have little difficulty in finding these all dealt with in Scripture, by inference if not directly, in such passages as I Cor. 4:2; I Tim. 4:14, and others. All the prophets and spiritual leaders, from Moses to Paul, were preachers, and many of them missionaries and evangelists. As to music, it has been a prominent feature in worship through all the ages. In the Jewish temple service in the days of the kings, the instrumental music, the singing of the choirs, and the responsive singing of the great audiences, were doubtless the finest and most impressive the world had ever known up to that time. In early Christian days, even amid trials and persecution, the church did not forego its music (see Eph. 5:19; Col. 3:16). Nor should it be forgotten that on that last night, after the Supper, it is said in Mark's Gospel (14:26) of Jesus and his disciples that they "sang a hymn." As for church societies, we have unquestionable evidence that even in the earliest days they were organized for relieving the poor, clothing the naked, sheltering the fatherless and doing much good work of the same class that the church is now doing on modern lines. (See Lev. 25:35; Ps. 146:9; Acts 9:36, etc.)

Earnest Reader, Minnesota. As I understand the Bible we are required to fast as well as pray. If this is so, will you please explain how it should be done, also how often?

In the three New Testament passages which seem, in the authorized version, to recommend fasting, Matt. 17:21, Mark 9:29, and I Cor. 7:5, it has been found that the word "fasting" was not mentioned in the earliest manuscripts, but is a later addition. In all three of these passages the Revised Version omits the word altogether. Paul uses the word twice in relating his apostolic sufferings (II Cor. 6:5 and 11:27), but clearly he is here referring to involuntary fasts. He fasted simply because he could get nothing to eat. It is certainly significant that in the Epistles, the one place where the believer finds the most practical directions about the duties of daily life, there is no exhortation to fasting and no reference to it. Turning to the Gospels we find five references to fasting. One is to the unblessed Pharisee, who boasted: "I fast twice a week" (Luke 18:12). One is the question of the Pharisees to Jesus: "Why do thy disciples fast not?" (Matt. 9:14, Mark 2:18, Luke 5:33), and Jesus' explanation that his disciples were too happy to fast. He said they were happy because he was with them, but that when he left them they would be sad and would fast. Here again the fasting is not commended, but the simple statement made that for a time they would be too sad to eat. The third reference, Luke 2:37, is the fasting of Anna, who lived, of course, under the old dispensation and would naturally keep the Jewish fasts. The same is true of the fasting of Jesus himself (Matt. 4:2), and of his directions as to the proper spirit in which to fast (Matt. 6:16, 17). It is significant that there is no reference to the fasting of Jesus after his period of temptation. It was evidently not a part of his normal, regular life, nor that of his disciples. There is one reference to fasting in the Acts, the fasting of the apostles as they prayed before sending Barnabas and Saul as missionaries. The reference to the fasting of Cornelius (Acts 10:30) is found, by noting the Revised Version, to be spurious, though if it were not it would not affect our argument, because he was simply a devout pagan, seeking the light, but never having heard of Christ. To sum up, fasting is nowhere in the New Testament commanded, exhorted, or even commended. It is in fact opposed to the very principle of the Gospel. Paul was horrified at the thought that we could please God by making ourselves uncomfortable. This was the pagan idea of religion, and to some extent the Jewish: but the Gospel antagonizes and completely repudiates this whole idea. We are not saved by making ourselves uncomfortable, but by trusting the grace of God as revealed in the death of Christ. The very basis of the original idea of fasting, which was that demons entered into one's system with the food devoured, is also abhorrent to the Christian. Jesus said what a man ate or drank did not make him clean or unclean. And he never meant to teach or imply that it was holier not to eat than to eat. The Christian eats to make and keep his body an efficient instrument for doing his Lord's work. He must not eat too much, so that his strength is impaired; nor must he eat so little as to impair his strength. Christianity is a businesslike proposition. We are called to be at our best for God's service all the time. But now, after all this has been insisted upon, it remains true that there are times when prayer becomes so earnest and vehement that a Christian prefers not to eat. He does not think of eating because of the intensity of his desire. Just so, a day of united fasting may be helpful when some great sorrow is upon a community or a nation, just as a sinner seeking salvation is often too sad to eat, or as a saint or group of saints will be sorrowful when praying for the conversion of the unsaved. But the normal Christian attitude is that of the disciples, which made the Pharisees wonder why they did not fast. Our souls are full of joy because of the presence of our risen Lord, and the sorrows of fasting are out of place. But this résumé of the subject of fasting would not be complete without the statement that many, Christians and unbelievers alike, eat far more than is for their good, physically, morally, or spiritually. Fasting is commended by physicians to relieve certain disorders.

A. J. H., Tacoma, Wash. The passage in Matt. 13:12 to which you refer is clearly meant to imply that whosoever has a possession or gift which he prizes, and which he puts to its right uses, will be rewarded by an increase of what he values so highly; while, on the other hand, one who lets his possession, or influence, or opportunity lie idle, instead of using it as he should, will suffer the loss of it as he deserves. It is a principle of great importance in a spiritual sense, and was uttered by our Lord on several occasions and in different connections. Moral principles become stronger by exercise, while their disuse results in weakening them, even to the point of extinction.

A. J. C., Elizabeth, N. J. The incident of Abraham and the stranger who visited his tent and asked no blessing is not from the Bible, but from some ancient tradition preserved in Jewish writings, and was employed by Professor David Smith to illustrate his talk on forgiveness.

Quality and Reputation

All of the seeds, plants and bulbs that you purchase are bought on the reputation of the seller. Even the most thoroughly trained seedsman or horticulturist is unable to give a satisfactory opinion without exhaustive tests, and with this fact in mind it is always desirable to first investigate the reputation of your seedsman. The business of Peter Henderson & Co. was established in 1847 and has been built to its present proportions by the most careful attention to quality.

The third generation of Hendersons are in charge today and there is something more than just a plain business relationship existing between themselves, their employees and their customers. When you buy Henderson's seeds you buy 69 years of experience; you buy the prestige and reputation of years of successful seed raising and selling; you buy seeds that have behind them the sentiment brought out by many years of careful, conscientious attention to our customers and their wants. The very smallest part of the cost is represented by the seeds and it is by far the most important. Try the Henderson way this year and see if there isn't a difference.

"Everything for the Garden" is the title of our annual catalogue. It is really a book of 206 pages, handsomely bound, with a beautifully embossed cover, 16 color plates and over 1,000 halftones, direct from photographs, showing actual results without exaggeration. It is a library of everything worth while, either in farm, garden or home.

A Remarkable Offer of Henderson's Seed Specialties

To demonstrate the superiority of Henderson's Tested Seeds, we have made up a Henderson Collection, consisting of one packet each of the following six great specialties:

- Ponderosa Tomato
- Big Boston Lettuce
- White Tipped Scarlet Radish
- Henderson's Invincible Asters
- Spencer and Eckford Mixed Sweet Peas
- Mammoth Butterfly Pansies

In order to obtain the largest possible distribution for our annual catalogue, "Everything for the Garden," we make the following unusual offer: Mail us 10c and we will send you the catalogue, together with this remarkable "Henderson Specialty Collection" and complete cultural directions.

Every Empty Envelope Counts as Cash

This collection is enclosed in a coupon envelope which, when emptied and returned, will be accepted as 25c cash payment on any order for seeds, plants or bulbs amounting to one dollar or over.

PETER HENDERSON & CO.
35-37 Cortlandt Street, NEW YORK CITY

Peter Henderson & Co.,
35-37 Cortlandt Street, New York City.

I enclose herewith 10c, for which send catalogue and "He son's Specialty Collection," with complete cultural direct as advertised in The Christian Herald.

____

____

____

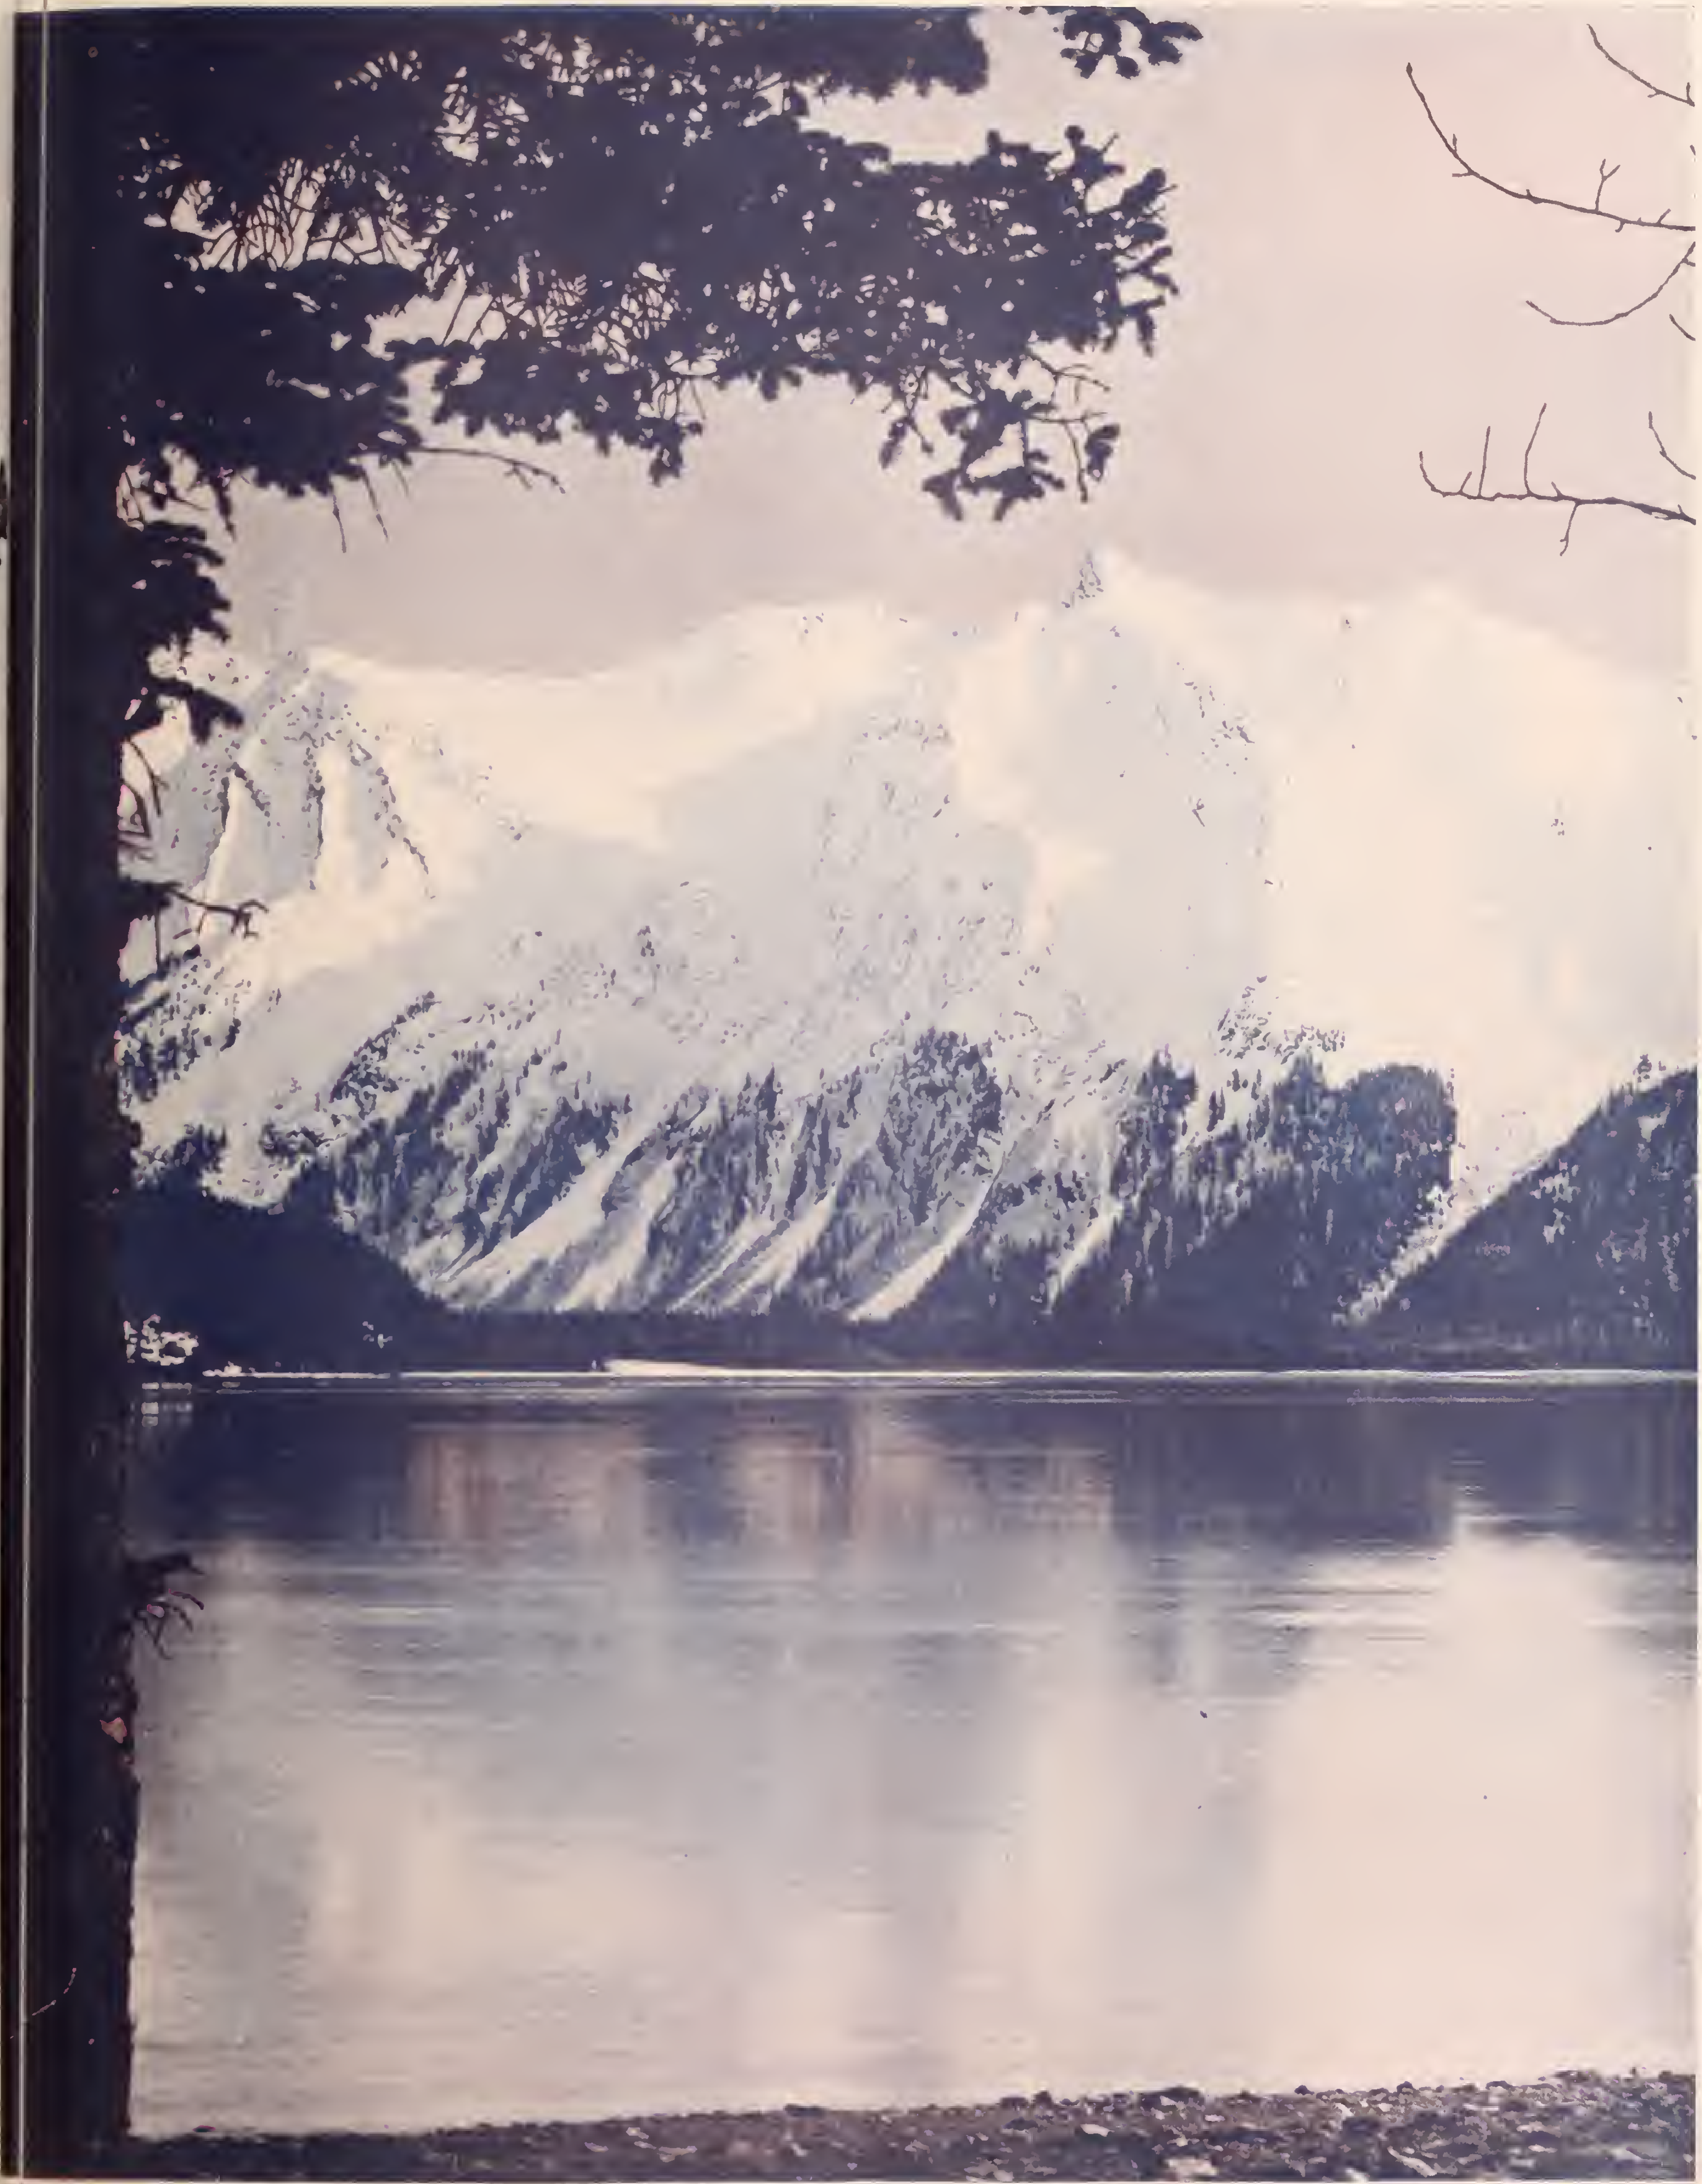
Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1916, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

UBSRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
UBISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 9, 1916

VOL. 39—NO. 6. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



Photograph by Frank G. Carpenter

RESURRECTION BAY, ALASKA, ON WHICH SEWARD, TERMINAL OF NEW GOVERNMENT BUILT RAILROAD WILL BE SITUATED

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

The editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

W. L., Chicago. Recently I heard a Bible teacher say that we could tell by two tests whether or not we are Christians. First, "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself" (I John 5: 10). Second, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren" (I John 3: 14). But, as to the first test, we hear many say that they are not sure of their salvation. I had always thought we could advise such to take Jesus at his word and believe they were saved just because he said so, even though they had no other evidence in themselves. The teacher explained the second test by saying that it meant loving the church and its members. But I cannot help believing that many outside the church are saved.

It is always dangerous to apply tests and lists and limits to the work of the Holy Spirit in human hearts. Jesus himself warned against this. He compared the Spirit to the wind that "bloweth where it listeth." No single passage should be studied alone, but in connection with other related passages It is an indisputable fact that many real saints have not received this gift of "assurance" of their salvation. You are quite right in saying that a seeker should trust the promises for forgiveness and acceptance, without waiting for any witness. But, after all, the simple statement of the passage is that he that believeth on the Son of God has the witness that he does so believe, or the witness that Jesus is indeed the Son of God. One might have this inner witness without having the assurance that his own sins are forgiven. But it is also true that many do receive the gracious assurance that their sins have been forgiven, their souls cleansed, and that they are the children of God. As to the second test, again you are undoubtedly right in thinking that there are many children of God outside the actual membership of the church. The Christian Herald has conceded this repeatedly, but always advises converts to connect themselves with the organized church. But this fact would not cancel the other fact, that as soon as one has been born again there is instantly a new love for those who have taken the name of Christ and are living for and with him.

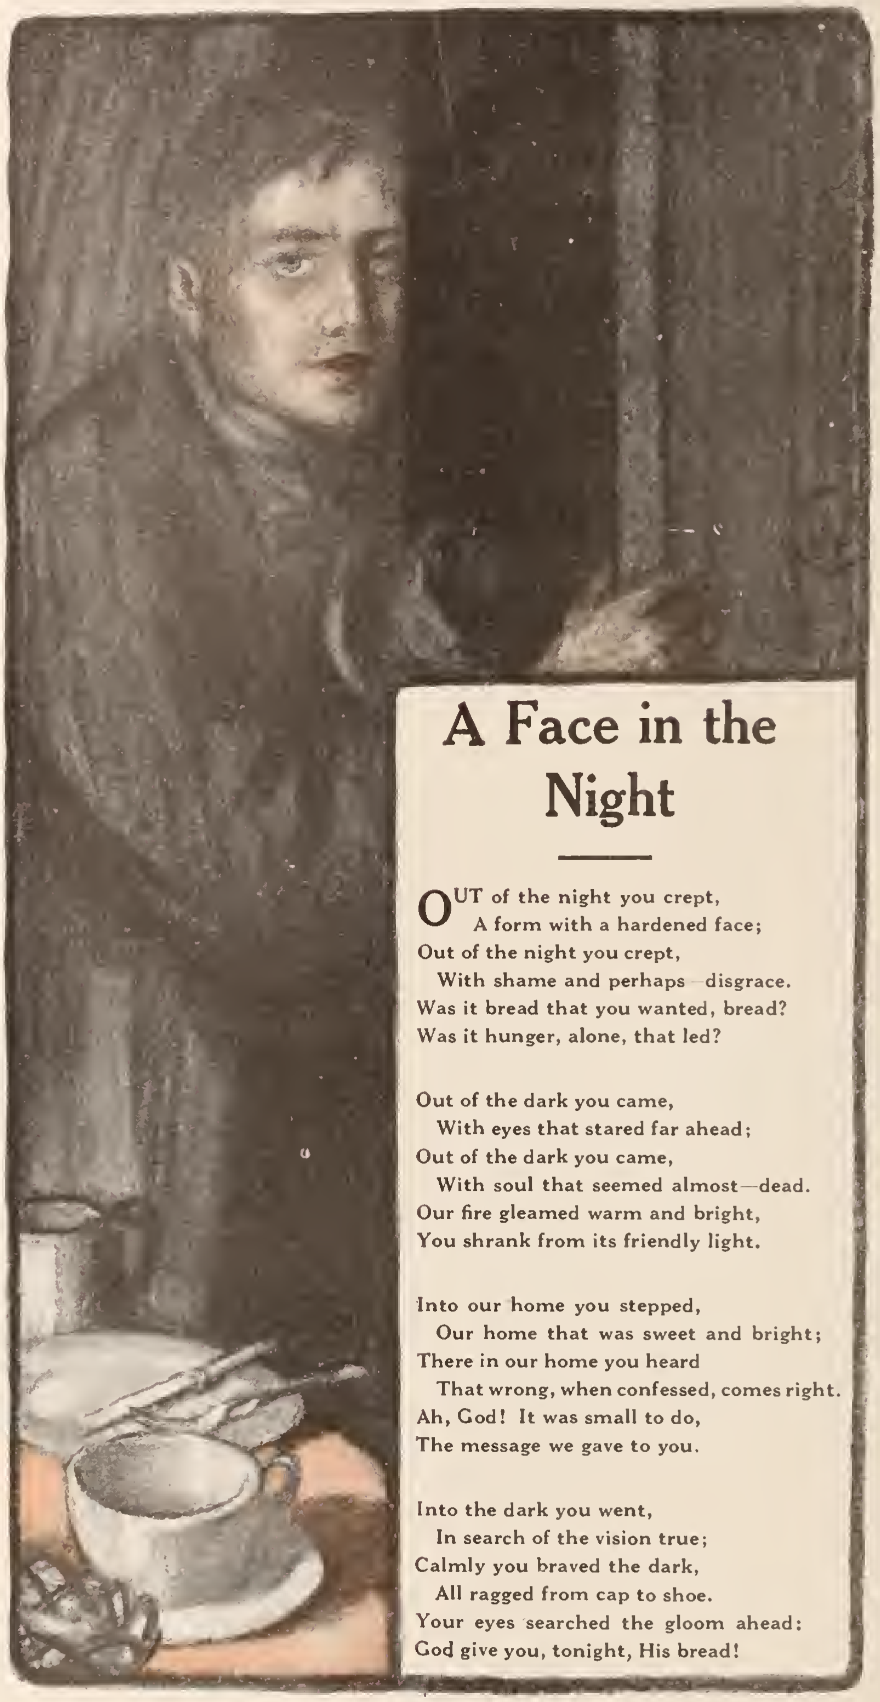
V. H. J., Robin, Man., Canada. 1. The passage in Eccles. 11: 3, to which you have reference, is interpreted as meaning that when death overtakes us, our character and destiny are unchangeably fixed. (See Rev. 22: 11.) Therefore, now is the time for repentance and reformation, and for beginning that new life of faith and obedience which comes with a full acceptance of Christ as Saviour and Redeemer. 2. We are not to judge others. It is doubtless true that there are very many good Christian soldiers in the armies now fighting each other. We have seen many letters from the front which show this to be the case.

Mrs. O. E. M., Hudson, Mich. The Lord's house should not be made a place of barter and sale. While it may be admitted that there was a special sacredness connected with the Jewish temple out of which Jesus drove the money-changers and sellers of doves, still we ought to take to ourselves the lesson of that remarkable instance, and weigh well our actions, lest we dishonor God's house, however humble it may be in comparison.

H. M. B., Lakewood, Ohio. The statement made by the Sunday school teacher that there was not a nation on earth that could go to war without first asking the Jews, was rather an extreme one. No doubt he meant that the Jews were men of large influence in the financial world. Wars cannot be made without money. The statement that the two persons mentioned in your letter are descendants of the Jews is, however, absurd.

F. A., Oriskany, N. Y. 1. The first Bishop of Rome who used the title of "Pope" as his exclusive title was Siricius, 384 to 398 A. D. The word, in Latin "Papa," which before that was used promiscuously, meant "father." 2. The doctrine of purgatory was first officially sanctioned by the Council of Ferrara-Florence in 1438. 3. Celibacy was first made a law of the church during the pontificate of Pope Siricius. 4. The "Ne Temere" decree forbids marriages between Catholics and Protestants. 5. Protestant marriages are not recognized as valid by the Catholic Church. 6. The Catholic Church recognizes baptism by any person, whether priest or layman, Catholic or "heretic," in cases of necessity, such as those of children dying, etc.

J. C. M., Tipton, Ga. "Ben Hur" was published in 1880. It describes Palestine and its people in the time of Christ. The author, General Lew Wallace, died in 1905.



A Face in the Night

Out of the night you crept,
  A form with a hardened face;
Out of the night you crept,
  With shame and perhaps—disgrace.
Was it bread that you wanted, bread?
Was it hunger, alone, that led?

Out of the dark you came,
  With eyes that stared far ahead;
Out of the dark you came,
  With soul that seemed almost—dead.
Our fire gleamed warm and bright,
You shrank from its friendly light.

Into our home you stepped,
  Our home that was sweet and bright;
There in our home you heard
  That wrong, when confessed, comes right.
Ah, God! It was small to do,
The message we gave to you.

Into the dark you went,
  In search of the vision true;
Calmly you braved the dark,
  All ragged from cap to shoe.
Your eyes searched the gloom ahead:
God give you, tonight, His bread!

We have been asked to give the authorship of "Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep." We shall be thankful to any one who may give us the information.

L. R. T., Abbeville, S. C. Chewing-gum is made of chicle, which is the milk-like juice of the sapodilla, a tree which is extensively cultivated for its fruit in tropical America. The other ingredients are essences, such as wintergreen, etc.

E. M., Fergus, Ont. 1. The history of the modern kingdom of Greece may be said to begin with the recognition of its independence from Turkey in 1829. 2. The king who immediately preceded King George was Otho, second son of the king of Bavaria, who was placed on the throne by the powers of Europe. He was deposed in 1862, and Prince George of Denmark was chosen in his stead. 3. The British troops were allowed to land at Salonica because the Greek government was not strong enough to prevent it 4. The reign of King George was marked by a disastrous war with Turkey, and he was assassinated during the recent Balkan war.

L. B. T., Indiana. We can find no trace of the quotation in our collections.

J. J. McD., Wilmington, Del. W agree with those who decry the " preacher," so-called, because he re various novel plans to draw the mu Paul said that he made himself "all t all men," if by such means he might w He was as willing to descend in the so as he was to ascend; to speak to the c tively ignorant as to the learned. He f Gospel adapted to all sorts and cond men, and took for his model the great whom "the common people heard There is a tendency to belittle the " preacher; but he fills a real want and t criticize him do so without due thou often unjustly. He is the very anti the type of minister who goes on, y year, preaching in a poor, diluted, timi fashion, that cannot raise a ripple in t He is afraid of his limitations and o offense, so the years pass without convert.

C. M., New York. "The best retor read was the response of Richard when on receiving from the Po day the brief command, 'Release he sent the armor of an insurg imprisoned bishop to Rome, panied by the concluding words 37: 32. As there was no Kin Version in that dark age these w course, were in Latin. Will one readers help me to recall them?"

The words referred to are as follows: invenimus: vide utrum tunica filii tu non," which mean, "This have we fo whether it be thy son's coat or no."

J. H. R., Huntington, Ind. The pa II Thess. 2: 9-12 refers to the co Antichrist, with his wonderful clai demoniac miracles, his deceptions an hoods, dazzling and misleading the mu until his power is suddenly broken stroyed.

Mrs. C. J. O., Meridian, Idaho. Can me if the Methodists in any conferences voted to allow pe dance?

In the General Conference held a more in 1912, the bishops, in their qua episcopal letter, did recommend t wording of the famous "amusemen graph" be changed. That paragraph the method of procedure against memb indulge in conduct unbecoming a C As the paragraph stands, the list of which proceedings may be brought a member includes dancing, attending t and circuses, and playing at games of There has for a long time been a current of opinion in Methodist circles would be better to omit this list of items on the ground that it is impos make a comprehensive, thoroughly s tory list, and that in the making of a list some things would be left out whic just as objectionable as those include bishops recommended that the entire stricken out, leaving simply the d against any acts or amusements whic not be performed 'in the name of th Jesus." Vote on this particular recom tion of the bishops was delayed until the end of the conference: there was co able misunderstanding and confusion time of the vote, and the motion to ad bishops' recommendation was lost. paragraph therefore remains at unchanged.

Several Readers. The Anti-Pr League may be addressed at Ware, Rev. Roland D Sawyer, Founder and tary.

G. H. L., Boyds, Md. 1. The pass John 18: 36 was discussed in the Ch Herald of December 8, 1915, page 12 Unfortunately for the world's condit cannot be said that there is any st government now in existence that is con on the spiritual lines that Jesus had in although there are some that are clo those lines than others.

Miss M. E. R., Lore City, Ida. We h statistics on the subject, although ther been a good many appointments of th mentioned.

P. S., Pittston, Pa., writes: I read letters on "preparedness" you publish. to see anything in the verses referred D. F. Easton, Luke 14: 31-32, to sustai claim that Christ taught that war is Christians do not fight with swords, g cannon or any other murderous wea When a man enlists in the army wit intention of killing men, he bids good- Christianity, if he ever had any. There a line in any of Christ's teachings that war.

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

An Illustrated News Weekly for the Home

What Would Lincoln Do?

FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

NELLIGENCE, Patriotism, Christianity, and a firm reliance on Him who has ver yet forsaken this favored land, are still competent to adjust, in the best way, o present difficulty." Abraham Lincoln.

"e must stick to American principles concerning the rights of neutrals."— raim Lincoln.

N he midst of one of the most complex periods in the history of the world. Linln was a simple child of nature, close to the ground with its restfulness and life, th an ear to the forest stream, an eye to the wild flower, and a keen vision the stars. Without schools or libraries or society, he was trained by the de university of nature and solitude. He never got the grooves of the ax d ow handles, which he counted a badge of honor, out of his gg palms, and every enterprise involving hard work of body nd would today have his sympathy and support. Far what he had to say on this line: "No men living nre worthy to be trusted than those who toil up from vey—none less inclined to take, or touch, aught which ey ave not honestly earned. Let them beware of surding a political power which they already possess, d hich, if surrendered, will surely be used to close e or of advancement against such as they, and fi now disabilities and burdens upon them till o liberty shall be lost." And again: "I agree th ou, Mr. Chairman, and with the address yr constituents, in the declaration that orkgmen are the basis of all governen . . . I hold that the value of life to nprove one's condition. Whaters calculated to advance the ndion of the honest, struggling oong man, so far as my judgen will enable me to judge of a rrd thing, I am for that thing."

Araham Lincoln would be at e refront of every effort for um betterment. The Emanpar was one of the greatestard men who ever lived. Lincoln da would cooperate with all such gazations as the Society for the evation of Cruelty to Animals. e ked an intimate friend of Linln early manhood to tell us a nn story which had never been ind, and he related this incident:

"One moonlight night, when walkg ith Lincoln in the country, we ie a litter of pigs in the road that d ost their mother. We helped them d er. And he said to me, 'I never see e these little creatures that I do not in of my first pet. When six years of age, nehbor gave me a little pig. The only garen I had on was a little shirt my mother wove. sted at the neck with a wooden button my father d made. In the front of that garment I wrapped y g and carried him home. It took me a week to teach m eat. Meanwhile, I carried him back to his mother for s eals. He was my constant companion and we played a games together. I can see his little face now,' said indn, 'peeping around the side of the cabin as we ayl hide-and-go-seek. I carried him everywhere till t too big to carry, and then I made him carry me, which he did so uply everywhere to the ploughed ground, and to the woods where I helped un nd the nuts. One day father said, "We're going to kill the hog today." aed, "What hog?" He said, "Yours." I answered, "Would you kill my reous pet?" and cried with agony. But my wit served me, for when father rnd his back I jumped on the hog and ran him as fast as he could go into the ocs, where I stayed all day; and the hot water in the big kettle was not used.. hext day I undertook the same game, but father was too smart for me. He ckd the pig up in the smokehouse, and I couldn't reach the button to get in at . nd I got sick. Could not eat any breakfast; went off into the woods and ayd all day, and when I came in at night I saw my pet dressed and hanging from p near the house, and I began to blubber. They never could get me to take b of the meat, neither tenderloin nor rib, nor sausage nor souse. And months ft when the cured ham came on the table, it made me sad and sick even to look t i The next morning I went out into the yard and scattered soft dirt over the lo y spot, where they had killed my pet. Whenever I see a pig, like these little ll s we have just met in the road, my heart goes back to that pet pig, and to held home and my dear ones there.'"

Incoln could not help being tender, any more than the songbirds about his al could keep from singing, or the sweetbrier his mother planted could keep ro being fragrant. It is easy to see how a boy who was so tender to his first etnight grow to be the great man who lived "with malice toward none, with hty for all."

This Picture of Lincoln and "Tad", His Little Son Who Died, Is One of the Nation's Favorites

LCOLN, the Great Benefactor, would today lift up his voice for the easing of pain, the curing of disease, and the reforming of character. After an adhre at a Lincoln memorial service in the Delaware Avenue Methodist Church in Bulo, Dr. Hill, a trustee of the church, said that he would tell us a story that had not been made public, illustrating Mr. Lincoln's sympathy for the suffering, and also his faith in divine providence. The Doctor said:

"I was a member of the Sanitary Commission during the Civil War, and at a meeting of that organization at the White House I congratulated the President on having originated such a great benevolence. He replied: 'You must carry your thanks to a higher Being. One stormy night I tossed on my bed unable to sleep, as I thought of the terrible sufferings of our soldiers and sailors. I spent an hour in prayer to God for some method of relief, and he put the Sanitary Commission in my mind with all its details as distinctly as though the instructions had been written out by a pen and handed to me. Hereafter, always thank your heavenly Father, and not me, for this organization which has eased so much pain and saved so many lives.'"

Lincoln, we may be sure, would stretch out his arm for the protection of childhood from the blight and shame of child labor. His love for children was pathetic. When he was East at the time he made his great speech at Cooper Union, he spent a Sunday in New York. He did not look up the children of the rich on Fifth Avenue, though he loved them, too; but he hunted his way down into the submerged district of the East Side, and attended a Sunday school session at the Five Points Mission, and there spoke to the children of poverty words of wisdom and encouragement. The incident has been retold a thousand times, and is one of the priceless memories of that institution.

Lincoln never would have entangled himself with the fiends of war. His first published speech as a member of Congress was a fierce arraignment of the President of the United States for the causeless and wicked war on Mexico, and the wanton plunder of one-half its territory. He thus referred to the President: "He is deeply conscious of being in the wrong, he feels the blood of this war, like the blood of Abel, crying to heaven against him. He has some strong motive to involve the two countries in war, and trusts to escape scrutiny by fixing the public gaze upon the exceeding brightness of military glory, that attractive rainbow that rises in showers of blood, that serpent's eye that charms to destroy. How like the half insane mumbling of a fever dream is the whole war part of his late message."

BY constitutional temperament Lincoln was a man of peace. Today, in the midst of the worst war of history, he would stand for national and international peace. From the very beginning he would have been crying out to the contending nations to stop the war. He would favor an international court of arbitration that would encourage and compel a universal peace.

How his great heart bled at the thought of the Civil War, and how hard he tried to prevent it! His first inaugural address was a pitiful plea for peace at about any price. In it he promised to maintain slavery, and even favor the return of fugitive slaves, if the South would not go to war. Much as he hated slavery, he feared more the awful bloodshed of a civil strife. In his address in Independence Hall in Philadelphia on his way to his inauguration, he said:

"Now, in my view of the present aspect of affairs, there is no need of bloodshed and war. There is no necessity for it. I am not in favor of such a course, and I may say in advance that there will be no bloodshed unless it is forced upon the government. The government will not use force, unless force is used against it."

But the gun fired at Sumter turned the man of peace, whose heart broke at the thought of civil strife, into the most relentless warrior of the centuries. Righteousness, justice and loyalty took the throne, and while he had not a muscle to move in an offensive warfare, his life and the lives of his fellow countrymen were pledged in a defensive warfare for the protection of the American democracy, the world's hope of universal liberty; "that form and substance of government whose leading object is to elevate the condition of men; to lift artificial weights from all shoulders; to clear the paths of laudable pursuits for all; to afford all an unfettered start and a fair chance in the race of life."

LINCOLN today would be our greatest champion of peace, and yet if he were at the head of affairs it would not be well for any nation, or for all nations combined, to set a single hostile foot on our shores. Early in life Lincoln's Americanism found this expression: "At what point shall we expect the approach of danger? By what means shall we fortify against it? Shall we expect some trans-Atlantic military giant to step across the ocean and crush us at a blow? Never! All the armies of Europe, Asia and Africa combined, with all the treasure of earth in their military chest, with a Bonaparte for a commander, could not by force take a drink from the Ohio, or make a track on the Blue Ridge in a trial of a thousand years."

While he would not tolerate the idea of militancy, like the foolish and wicked armaments of the dominant nations of Europe, Lincoln would insist on an army and navy and coast defense sufficient to protect us against the possible assaults of any foreign power impelled by greed or a grievance. He would stand for that preparedness which is the only real safety of the nation, the preservation of a pure democracy, the right and duty of the people to rule themselves and to do so practically; and individual and public righteousness. How his honest soul would rebuke the falsehoods and frauds that creep into everyday life, the crushing of small corporations by large ones, the insufficient wage, the oppression of the poor, the purchase of city councils, state legislatures, and national Congresses with money, the prostitution of public office to personal gain, the tampering with the ballot box, the domination and damnation of American politics by colossal institutions of vice and crime. These he would count the real enemies of the republic, to be feared, to be resisted and overcome, rather than the ships and soldiers of a foreign foe.

LINCOLN would be in the forefront of the warfare on the liquor traffic. He promised his mother when a little boy that he would never touch intoxicants, and he kept that vow sacredly to the day of his death. He told one of his most intimate friends that a drop of liquor had never passed down his throat and that he did not know what the various kinds of drink tasted like. Few addresses can be found more eloquent than some of his temperance lectures. His friends in Springfield knew he never kept drink at his house and sent over a box of liquors for the reception of the committee of the Republican party who were to notify him of his nomination for the presidency the first time. Looking at his wife and calling her "Mother," as he always did, he said: "We have never used or served such drinks and will not begin now," and sent the box back. And it is a matter of history that this moral giant had the courage officially to drink to the health of the party and the nation in cold sparkling water from the well, making a beautiful tribute to it as he proposed the toast.

In the White House he never touched even the lightest kind of wine. Yet in the face of these facts the liquor men had the hardihood to claim him as their friend, and put his revered face at the center of newspaper whisky advertisements — an act very little short of sacrilege. It so offended the taste and conscience of the public that the trade found it prudent and profitable to withdraw that homeliest and handsomest face which seemed in the paper to frown on its unseemly surroundings. General Horace Porter, who was on Grant's staff, tells of a visit Lincoln made to Grant at City Point. Lincoln said he had been badly shaken up on the bay the night before, and had not yet gotten over his seasickness. An officer immediately brought a bottle of champagne, saying it was a sure cure for the trouble. The President replied: "No, my friends, I have seen too many fellows seasick ashore from drinking that very stuff."

We are not left to conjecture as to what Lincoln would do in the war on alcohol. Major J. B. Merwin, who was commissioned by his old friend Lincoln as temperance evangelist to the Federal army, recently made this statement: "On the afternoon of the day in which Lincoln was assassinated, he said to me as his trusted messenger: 'Merwin, we have cleaned up, with the help of the people, a colossal job. Slavery is abolished. After reconstruction, the next great question will be the overthrow and abolition of the liquor traffic; and you know, Merwin, my head, my heart and my hand will go into that work. In 1842, less than a quarter of a century ago, I predicted that, under the influence of God's Spirit, the time would come when there would be neither a slave nor a drunkard in the land. I have lived to see, thank God, one of those prophecies fulfilled. I hope to see the other realized.'"

Lincoln would take an important part in the Woman Suffrage movement. Eighty-one years ago, when there was not the wildest dream that the question would be a practical issue in American politics, in a letter to the Sangamon Journal, of New Salem, Illinois, he declared himself as friendly to female suffrage. He had the profoundest respect for womanhood. He said: "All I am in the world I owe to my sainted mother." He had unbounded faith in the people, in all the people, and included in an ideal democracy woman's voice and vote.

LINCOLN would be a prominent religious personage in our time. He would attend church service, as he did every Sabbath. He would stand for the integrity of the Scriptures, which he believed from lid to lid. A close friend of his told us he had held in his hand a Bible from which Lincoln read every day, and from which he drew those truths which in his public messages and private character so blessed the nation. That holy volume was thumbed almost to pieces by the Railsplitter's fingers. In his love to God and fellow men, in his imitation of the example and spirit of Christ, in his divine inspiration, and in his faith in the future, Lincoln today would command universal attention as a force for righteousness.

"I am approached with the most opposite opinions and advice," he wrote during a supreme crisis, "and by religious men who are certain they represent the Divine Will. . . . I hope it will not be irreverent in me to say that if it be probable that God would reveal his will to others, on a point so closely connected with my duty, it might be supposed he would reveal it directly to me. . . . If I can learn his will, I will do it. . . . Whatever shall appear to be God's will, I will do."

We made a pilgrimage to see an old retir officer who had been a journeyman printer in in Springfield, Ill., and one of Lincoln's acquaintances, and asked him to tell us a st the magazines and books had not found. He "One day Lincoln asked me to ride fifteen in the country with him and become witness he was to write for a woman on her deathbed the will had been signed and witnessed, th said to Lincoln: 'Now I have my affairs for t arranged satisfactorily. I am thankful to long before this I have made preparation for t life I am so soon to enter. I sought and foun as my Saviour, who has been my stay and through the years, and is now near to me to over the river of death. I do not fear deat really glad that my time has come, for loved o gone before me and I rejoice in the hope of them so soon.' Mr. Lincoln said to her: 'Y in Christ is wise and strong, your hope of a fu is blessed. You are to be congratulated o through life so usefully, and into the future pily.'

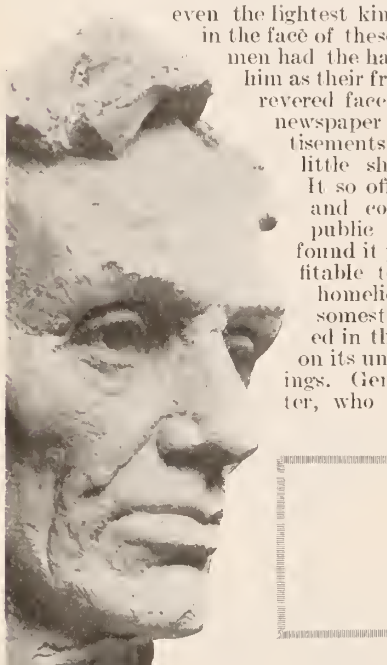
"She asked him if he would not read a fe out of the Bible to her. They offered him t but he did not take it, but began reciting from the Twenty-third Psalm, laying especial upon 'Though I walk through the valley shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.' the book, he took up the first part of the fourt John, 'In my Father's house are many m After he had given these and other quotati the Scriptures, he recited several hymns, clos 'Rock of Ages, cleft for me.' I thought at th had never heard any elocutionist speak wi ease or power as he did. I am an old man my heart melts as it did then in that death as I remember how with a pathos truly d spoke the last stanza beginning, 'While I d fleeting breath.' The woman died while there. Riding home, I expressed surprise should have acted as pastor as well as attorne fectly, and he replied, 'God and eternity and were very near to me today.'"

Early in life Lincoln was swept into unbelie gust of skepticism that passed over the land time, but like all sincere searchers after the t came out into a stronger faith. Those who d religion will be fortunate if they get within sigh in the other world, so near will his pure spirit White Throne.

"Great captains, with their guns and drum
    Disturb our judgment for the hour,
  But at last silence comes;
    These are all gone, and, standing like a
  Our children shall behold his fame,
    The kindly-earnest, brave, foreseeing m
  Sagacious, patient, dreading praise, not bl
    New birth of our new soil, the first Am

Lincoln and the New American

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.



The Novelli Lincoln

IN 1890 a small, dark-eyed boy leaned over the railing of a huge ocean steamer and gazed with curious, expectant eyes at the vague, romantic shoreline of a great city. On one side the red stone buildings of Ellis Island loomed up, formidably, through the fog; on the other the Statue of Liberty stretched out a welcoming arm to the newcomer. And the small boy drew a rather deep little sigh while the welcome of his beauty-loving soul expanded to the misty, fairy-like city.

The boy was James Novelli, an Italian. He was only one of the hundreds of little aliens that swarm to our shores every year. Most of them are in search of fortune and perhaps happiness. James Novelli was dreaming of fame and the beauty of the new land, and the liberty to pursue a dream.

He went to school after a time—as most little aliens go to school. And in that school he learned the difference between an alien and a citizen. For his teacher, one day, told him the story of a brave man who lived a brave life and died bravely. After that the dream began to take a real shape.

A vast number of the little foreigners who come to our shores are marvelously talented. Because our country is not quite so free or kind as they have been led to suppose—because the streets are not paved with gold—many of the little foreigners sell their birthright for the necessary mess of pottage, and lead their lives, brokenly, selling papers or fruit for small profit. Not all of them have the dream of Lincoln to help mold their lives.

James Novelli had skill, great skill, in drawing and modeling. All through school he drew at recess, and made queer little figures of putty and mud and clay. But the modeling had no exactly definite aim. After he heard of Lincoln, his talent began to shape itself around the beloved, ungainly figure of our nation's hero. When he had studied a bit of the life of Lincoln, his clever little fingers began to model the clay into heads—heads with homely, rugged features and sad, dreaming eyes.

His vision of Lincoln carried Novelli through public school and out into the great world. Only too plainly he saw his faults of construction; only too vividly he saw the amateurishness of his work. He realized that he needed more study under good teachers.

Lincoln gained his learning by walking miles to borrow books, by writing his letters in charcoal on the rough bricks of the fireplace. That is one of the stories of Lincoln that they are most likely to tell to little aliens in school. Perhaps that story of Lincoln was the one that helped the eager-eyed little Italian boy—that kept him working hard for the instruction that he knew he needed.

THE streets of America are made of nothing more valuable than paving-stones or concrete. We, who have lived here always, have never doubted it. The little emigrant boy who sails over the vast ocean—the child who comes to our shores—finds it out all too soon. By working hard, after he left school, James Novelli was able to earn four dollars a week. After a time—not a short time—the four dollars grew to six. In the interval, the boy saved. He h holidays, although occasionally his young e gave him a half day off. In that half day h Gibson pictures, which he gave to said en who in turn signed them and gave them to So He was in love with Someone, and at that tin son pictures were very fashionable indeed.

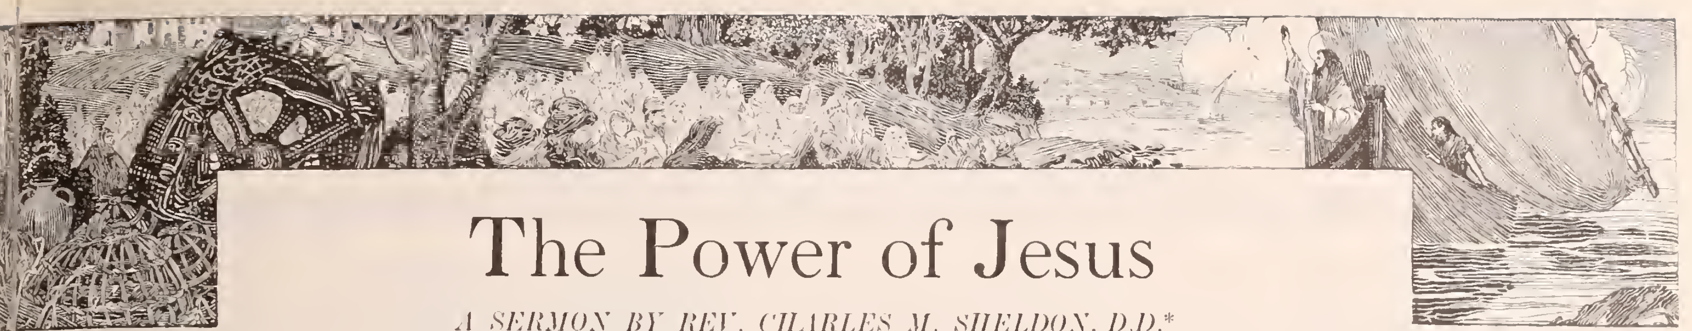
And Novelli did work, minus the half h When he copied the pictures, he enjoyed th for he knew that, in a way, he was acquirin needed practice. And as he worked he sav ligiously. When he had saved enough to buy a ship ticket he sailed over to Europe. There, i and in Rome, he toiled with his beloved plas marbles and bronzes. And always, in crowded or on the gay boulevard, he held before him th of another boy who had worked and—won.

Six years ago Novelli came back to the land adoption America. Since that time he ha many creditable bits of work, but it was no rather recently that he touched permanently u ideal. He is now working on a head of Linc massive head, three times actual size.

It isn't every nation that has a hero like I for the younger generation to live up to. Ita Garibaldi and, very far back, Cæsar; Fran Napoleon; England has William the Conquer Richard Cœur de Lion; Russia has Peter the But few of these men are loved as Lincoln is For while they made their fame by conquests an tives and brute strength and military genius, I molded the pages of history by sheer stren character and tenderness.

Every year, every week, almost every day aliens—perhaps like Novelli—come to our with eyes bright with anticipation and heart beat high with hope. Sometimes, like Novelli

Continued on page 171



The Power of Jesus

*A SERMON BY REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

TE T—Matt. 28 : 18. "All power hath been given unto me hee n and on earth."

CHRISTIANITY cannot be understood without Christ. And it cannot be lived apart from him. The two go together, because Christianity is more than a religion and that lig n is bound up with a Life, the most remarkable d owerful life ever lived on this earth.

W en Jesus, therefore, says, "All power hath been ve unto me in heaven and on earth," we want to io what that power was, in order to acquire some it nd obey his command, "Go ye, therefore, into l t world and make disciples of the nations."

The Teaching of Jesus

T first source of Jesus' power lay in his teaching. nd t was power because it had these qualities:

It vas simple. "The common people heard him ad ." The old philosophies common in Jesus' life- ne vere obscure and the language was such that the di ry man could not grasp them. What average an ould get anything out of Plato, Aristotle or er Socrates? Jesus taught so that day laborers d stood. That was power, and it always will be. he nodern preacher must learn this secret.

Je s' teaching was fundamental. It went to the nt of men's sins, needs and hopes. In the Seron n the Mount, which can be read aloud in fifteen in es, Jesus talks about anger, adultery, hy- oe y, murder, injustice, revenge, covetousness, xi y and selfishness. He did not teach schoolroom st ctions, impersonal philosophy, but the great si sins of common daily life and their remedies.

Je s' teaching was revolutionary. Take four of s achings: "Love your enemies." This would d oes create an upheaval in society. It was not e nything in the old pagan teaching. "Resist t vil." This is distinctly upsetting to ordinary or belief and practice. The observance of it would m etely change civilization. "Be perfect, even s ur heavenly Father is perfect." This destroys e blow the easy complacent morality of a world a would like to be "as good as it can be under e ircumstances." It sets a standard for human a cter that stops nowhere short of divinity. "T meek shall inherit the earth." This teaching n adicts every worldly maxim of "success." It t across the century-old saying, "Look out for m er one." It is distinctly revolutionary.

J us' teaching was authoritative "He taught as e ho had authority, and not as the scribes." He v standards. His teaching gives men a way by hi to walk. That gave his teaching power which ies.

WHEN we ask, "What did Jesus do that made him powerful?" at first we have to say, judg- ig rom worldly standards, he did not do anything. e nade no money, put up no buildings, wrote no oc s, organized no party, constructed no public o s—in short, he did nothing.

I t he did do two things. We have mentioned e irst—teaching. The second was healing. "He e about doing good." In Mark's Gospel the ac- ou says he healed every known disease—blindness, m ness, paralysis, leprosy, deafness and dumbness, s ity, consumption—and he even raised the dead e. This was an exhibition of power over disease n physical weakness which is unparalleled in human is ry. And it was done for the purpose of reveal- g o common everyday humanity the tremendous ru that the Divine Being is deeply interested in u n happiness and wants to relieve humanity of ai and make it well and strong. It was a great o r to possess and gave Jesus a great hold in the ff tions and memories of thousands of people.

ANOTHER great source of Jesus' power lay in his character. If Jesus was the perfect man- o of the race, the qualities that he possessed ought o e imitated and cultivated by us if we want power n have any ambition to grow into great men and v en. Here are some of the great elements in es' character:

ise. He was busy, but calm; intense, but not lu ered. He could take time to talk to the woman t e well, and stop and play with little children.

ourage. He had physical and moral bravery. l lived in the midst of plots against his life, and n than once calmly walked among his enemies g ing death with unruffled spirit. And in his denunciation of evil he showed to the world the dauntless courage of one who was willing to die for a principle even if it cut short his career at the beginning.

Indignation. Pity the man who never gets angry at the sight of wrong. One of the great qualities of God is his ability to get angry. Jesus had this faculty in high measure.

Enthusiasm. Nothing sadder in all the world than a young or old person whose life has no enthusiasm, nothing but cold, critical attitude toward art, music, literature, life itself. Heaven deliver us from this gray-ashes existence. Jesus glowed with passion to do. He lived life brim-full.

Wisdom. Some people think common sense cannot be acquired. It can be. Jesus "grew" in wisdom. So can we. This quality is greatly needed if we are to have full-grown manhood.

Humility. The world is destroyed by pride. People are killing one another because of pride of nationality, race, military prowess, false patriotism. Jesus taught and acquired meekness, a prime faculty for power.

Spirituality. Jesus spent all night in prayer. Three-fourths of all the church members in America never go near their own prayer meetings to acquire spirituality. Do we wonder that the church lacks power when the very source of it that Jesus had is ignored and in many cases questioned? Manhood cannot reach its flower and fruit until it is spiritually minded.

Affection. He loved men. He had his beloved disciple. He took little children up in his arms. Many of us go through life cold, undemonstrative, living in a cold storage to preserve the outward formalities of society.

Optimism. Jesus had eternal hope for the world. In spite of all outward facts, he never wavered in his faith in the final victory of God.

Convictions. These go with the full-grown man. Character is a farce unless it believes some things beyond question. Jesus never expressed a doubt. You cannot find one anywhere in his life.

A passion to save. This was the crowning characteristic of Jesus. It was the regal flower of his manhood. He came to seek and save the lost. The greatness of his power is expressed in his cry as they were nailing him to the cross, "Father, forgive them! They know not what they do!"

IN summing up Jesus' power we are compelled to acknowledge that in these particulars, aside from his Teaching, his Doings and his Character, he is unsurpassed.

He had a complete knowledge of humanity.

He had a complete unity with God.

He was able to forgive sins.

He was without sin himself.

He foretold his death and resurrection.

He returned to life and to the earth to prove the resurrection.

He was conscious of his own power so that he dared to say, "All power has been given unto me in heaven and on earth."

In the face of this great statement these things ought to be settled:

Jesus' Teaching is final. It is the last word. Sin is death. Repentance is life. Doing his will is the reconstruction of the world.

The Future Life is a fact. Jesus said so, and proved it. Let science say what it will about life, Jesus lived it and proved its immortality.

The Ultimate Triumph of God and Right is assured. The power of Jesus working through his disciples will bring to pass the final victory of right over wrong, of God over the devil.

Come, ye men and women that love power! Come, learn what it is in the greatest Person of history! Cultivate the marvelous traits of his sinless character, and learn to have his passion to redeem. For he is the hope of the world. There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby the world can be saved.

THE great world movements for world betterment all have behind them this divine power of Jesus. Christianity has been the one great, unique, underlying, silent force which has changed human hearts and made new history. Dueling, gambling, lotteries, slavery and commercialized vice have felt the force of this Jesus power. Industrial betterment, the abolition of race prejudice, national prohibition, yes, world-wide prohibition of the liquor traffic, church federation and abolition of war will in turn acknowledge the power of him to whom all power has been given, until finally he shall be crowned the all-conquering one of whom Isaiah spoke when he proclaimed him "Wonderful, Counselor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace."

WHAT does the Prince of Peace, this powerful One, want of us? He wants of us what the divine has always wanted of the human. He wants his disciples to cooperate with him in establishing justice and righteousness in the earth. "The government," as Isaiah says, is "on his shoulder." Yes, we do not have to bear that awful and majestic and divine burden, but we can help him bear it, we can share it with him, and that is the great work of the church today. It is for us to bring our gold and frankincense and myrrh and lay them at his feet.

Lord, I would bring my gold to thee,
  And lay it at thy feet;
A lesser offering to a King
  I know would not be meet;
And as I lay it down,
It may become a crown,
  Some overcoming soul to greet.

IT is for us to consecrate to him the best we have. What will you, his disciple, give to establish peace on the earth through the power of the Prince of Peace? The scorn and contempt and fiery indignation of God must be poured out today over those in this land of ours who with voice or pen, by cheap paragraph or witticism, try to belittle any attempt honestly made to bring sinful rulers of the multitude to stop the awful slaughter of their innocent peoples. What contempt is too great for God to have of those who, lifting no finger and spending no money themselves to bring peace to the distracted nations of the world, criticize and ridicule those who are trying to do it at a time when all the Christian world ought to be uniting on any plan that promises even in the remotest degree to bring the world to its senses and mankind to its knees? And what sorrow must fill the heart of Him who today bears the government upon his shoulder that men born under the shining of his star and the shadow of his cross are coining dollars out of the bleeding flesh of their brothers and making their factories smoke day and night to produce more terrible weapons for men to use for killing! And what must be his anguish as he sees the politician and the munition-maker trying to create out of America, the world's last hope, a military camp that shall pierce the heart of the Crucified One afresh, and press the crown of thorns down deeper on his sweating brow!

What will the church give to the Wonderful, the Counselor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace? Come! Let us give him our means, our talents, our time, our enthusiasm. How many of you will consecrate your children, dedicating them to that great task of building up the ruins of Europe when the war has passed? For just as sure as the mercies and the judgments of God, it is certain that some time soon such a door of Christian missions will open before America as earth has never yet seen. Will the church furnish its bravest and best to the task of reconstructing the faith of the world which this hell's blast has withered, and of binding up the wounds which humanity's hatred has inflicted? It is not an age for soft and easy and self-indulgent ambitions. It is rather an age for the exercise of all that is heroic and self-sacrificing. The chant of hate has been sung long enough. It is time the world cast out its last great enemies, Drink, and War, and Greed, and Race Prejudice, and Lust, and in the omnipotent might of the Wonderful, Counselor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace, secure a lasting triumph that shall swing the earth up out of darkness into light. He, our Prince of Peace, has wrought wonders in the world movements for world betterment. Come! Let us go to meet him as he comes confident and strong over the hills of the centuries, and, wasting no long time over the tears of our repentance, let us greet him with a shout of rejoicing. For he is the world's hope. It cannot perish. For "the government is upon his shoulder, and of the increase of his government and of peace there shall be no end." But—are we going to help or hinder the coming of his triumph? Make answer, men and women of the church, as ye know ye shall stand some day before his judgment seat to give account of the deeds done in the body. For he is waiting to see what his disciples will do. All power has been given him. Will the church "go" with that power and give it to the world and make disciples of the nations?

---

astor, Central Congregational Church, Topeka, Kan

A Week in the World's News

THE PRESIDENT ON PEACE AND PREPAREDNESS. President Wilson began his swing around the circle by two addresses in New York on January 27. At noon he addressed a clerical conference of the New York Federation of Churches and in the evening he spoke at a dinner given by the Railway Business Association. Speaking to the ministers he did not refer directly to preparedness, but said openly that he was not for peace at any price. He said in part: "In my efforts for peace, I have been conscious of representing the spirit of America. . . . I can find no other foundation for peace than is laid in justice without aggression. If you wish to be just and insist upon being justly treated, and have no motive of covetousness or aggression, I believe you stand upon the only firm foundations which will sustain peace. . . . The greatest thing in the world, the greatest force in the world, is character; and I believe that character can be expressed upon a national scale and by a nation. . . . America has always stood resolutely and absolutely for the right of every people to determine its own destiny and its own affairs. . . . I have never found audiences in America responding to any doctrine or purpose of aggression; but I have found them responding instantly, as the instrument responds to the hand of the musician, to every sentiment of justice and every ideal of liberty and every purpose of freedom. . . . If men do not love one another, they cannot love peace; if men are intolerant of one another, they will be intolerant of the processes of peace, which are the processes of accommodation. . . . Peace dwells, after all, in the character and in the heart; and that is where peace is rooted in this blessed country of ours. It is rooted in the hearts of the people. The only place where tinder lies and the spark may kindle a flame is where still deeper things lie which they love, the principles and independence of their own life. Let no man drop fire there! Because peace is inconsistent with the loss of self-respect. More than that, peace is inconsistent with the abandonment of principle. . . . We believe in peace, but we believe also in justice and righteousness and liberty, and peace cannot subsist without these."

The address before the railway men dealt more with the subject of preparedness. The President emphasized the fact that he had no anxiety about the safety of America, but he asserted vigorously that he had come to believe that a definite program of preparedness was absolutely necessary at once. He said in part: "The question, it seems to me, which most demands clarification just now is the question of preparation for national defense. I say that it stands in need of clarification because, singularly enough, it has been deeply clouded by passion and prejudice. . . . We live in a world which we did not make, which we cannot alter, which we cannot think of in a different condition from that which actually exists. It would be a hopeless piece of provincialism to suppose that, because we think differently from the rest of the world, we are at liberty to assume that the rest of the world will permit us to enjoy that thought without disturbance. . . . How can Americans differ about the safety of America? . . . Is it not a more desirable thing that all Americans should put partisan prepossession aside and draw together for the successful prosecution of peace? . . ."

Here the President paid a tribute of respect to the Republican leader for his recent speech in the House of Representatives. "Let no man dare to say, if he would speak the truth," he continued, "that the question of preparation for national defense is a question of war or of peace. If there is one passion more deep-seated in the hearts of our fellow-countrymen than another, it is the passion for peace. . . . There is no spirit of aggrandizement in America. There is no desire on the part of any thoughtful and conscientious American man to take one foot of territory from any nation in the world. I have sought to maintain peace against very great, and sometimes very unfair odds [applause] and I am ready at any time to use every power that is in me to prevent such a catastrophe as war coming upon this country. But there is something that American people love better than they love peace. They love the principles upon which their political life is founded. They are ready at any time to fight for the vindication of their character and of their honor. . . . They will at no time seek a contest, but they will at no time cravenly avoid it. Because if there is one thing that the country ought to fight for and that every nation ought to fight for, it is the integrity of its own convictions. . . . And, whether by one process or another, we have made ourselves in some sort the champions of free government and national sovereignty in both continents of this hemisphere. . . . Nobody seriously supposes that the United States needs to fear an invasion of its own territory. What America has to fear, if she has anything to fear, are indirect, roundabout, flank movements upon her regnant position in the Western Hemisphere. Are we going to open those gates, or are we going to close them? For they are the gates to the hearts of our American friends to the south of us, and not gates to the ports. Win their spirits and you have won the only sort of leadership and the only sort of safety that America covets. We must all of us think, from this time out, in terms of the world, and must learn what it is that America has set out to maintain as a standard-bearer for all those who love liberty and justice and the righteousness of political action. . . ."

The President admitted that in the past year he had found it necessary to change his mind both on the subject of preparedness and upon the subject of a tariff board, and he explained this change of mind as follows: "I would be ashamed if I had not learned something in fourteen months. The minute I stop changing my mind as President, with the change of all the circumstances in the world, I will be a back number." He said further: "America will never be the aggressor; America will always seek, to the last point at which her honor is involved, to avoid the things which disturb the peace of the world. But America does not control the circumstances of the world, and we must be sure that we are faithful servants of those things which we love, and are ready to defend them against every contingency that may affect or impair them. . . . It goes without saying, though apparently it is necessary to say it to some excited persons, that one thing this country never will endure is a system that can be called militarism. Militarism consists in this: it consists in preparing a great machine whose only use is for war, and giving it no other use to which to apply itself. Men who are in charge of edged tools and bidden to prepare them for exact and scientific use, grow very impatient if they are not permitted to use them, and I do not believe that the creation of such an instrument is an insurance of peace. I believe that it involves the danger of all the temptations that skilful persons have to use the things they know how to use. But we don't have to do that. America is always going to use her army in two ways. She is going to use it for the purposes of peace, and she is going to use it as a nucleus for expansion into those things which she does believe in, namely, the preparation of her citizens to take care of themselves. . . . What I am for, and what every American ought to insist upon, is a body of at least half a million trained citizens who will serve under conditions of danger as an immediately available national reserve. . . . We have a traditional prejudice against armies, which makes us stop thinking the minute we begin talking about them. . . . This America that we thought was full of a multitude of contrary ideas now speaks with the great volume of the heart's accord, and that great heart of America has behind it the moral force of righteousness and hope and the liberty of mankind."

"PEOPLE'S LAWYER" ON SUPREME BENCH? The name of Louis D. Brandeis of Boston was sent to the Senate on January 28, as the President's nominee for the place made vacant in the Supreme Court by the death of Justice Lamar. Attaining wealth as a corporation lawyer, Mr. Brandeis retired with an assured competence and has since used his great knowledge of corporation law and corporate practices solely in the interests of the public. Mr. Brandeis was chief prosecutor in the government's action against the New Haven Railroad, and he was counsel for the people in defense of the women's ten hour laws in Oregon and Illinois and the nine hour law in Ohio. Mr. Brandeis was born at Louisville, Ky., November 13, 1856, and was admitted to the bar in 1878. There was some talk of opposition to his confirmation when the appointment was first announced, since it had been expected that the appointme vo go to a southern man. He is the first mb of the Jewish people to be nominate r th Supreme bench.

"I DIDN'T RAISE MY COLT T BE CHARGER." This might easily be a pul "neigh" of the pastures of Americ her equine mothers look in vain for the lil foa that last year trotted at their sides. S e th beginning of the war about 500,000 ho an 10,000 mules have been sent abroad, tl orse averaging a cost to the purchasing vern ments of $175 at the port of shipment How ever, owing to an action of the Depart nt Agriculture in 1913, which stimulated eres in the raising of horses, this drain u ou supply of domestic animals has not ene the number within our borders, thei ein, now about 24,000,000 horses and 4 ,000 mules in the United States.

ANNUAL DAY OF PRAYER FO OL LEGES. Thursday, February 10, h been selected as the day for "prayer for coll s for the year 1916." A contemporary say , "It would be hard to overemphasize the imp ance of this occasion." This is true. The col s of our land are responsible for much of the der ship in politics and in business as well as edu cation, and it is certainly devoutly to be shed that their work should inevitably l con ducted in the fear of God, faith in Jesus rist and a genuine love for human kind. t us pray that the ranks of those colleges wl are so conducted—and for whom let u give thanks—may be greatly increased durir 916

NATION MAY TAX INCOMES On January 24, the Supreme Court of the ited States, in a sweeping decision, sustai the constitutionality of the Federal inco tax law. Proposals are now pending in C ress to tax as high as fifty per cent., inco s of more than $1,000,000, of which th are estimated to be at least sixty in the c try and also to carry the tax on incomes low the present minimum of $3,000. Ac ing to last year's returns there were 357, in comes subject to the Federal income ta

THE CLERGY DENOUNCE PR ARE EDNESS. At a meeting of the New Yo Fed eration of Churches, held on January 24 a o 4 Madison Avenue, after a spirited deb on "preparedness" it was voted unani sly to endorse the program of the Leag to Enforce Peace. This was the first ble occasion on which "preparedness" wa offi cially condemned by a large and represe ive body of pastors of different denomin ons and its example will doubtless be ely followed. In its report of the meetir the New York Times of January 25 said:

"The Rev. Dr. William Laurence S an, associate pastor of All Souls' Unitarian C ch, in the affirmative, and the Rev. Dr. W am Payson Merrill, pastor of the Brick Pre te rian Church and trustee of the Church ace

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Indépendance Belge

THE fog which hung over the Montenegrin situation at the end of last week seems now to be largely dispelled. It appears that the king of Montenegro did ask on what terms Austria would suspend hostilities, and that the reply was made that before any negotiations looking toward that end were entered into, the Montenegrin troops in arms must unconditionally surrender. Nicholas, who was then at Podgoritza, thereafter made his way to Italy, visited his daughter, the queen of Italy, at Rome, and then took refuge at Lyons, France, where his arrival was officially announced.

The departure of the king, with whom went most of the ministry, disorganized Montenegrin resistance almost completely. A small portion of the army under General Marinovitch resolved to resist further and retreated, as said last week, to Scutari in Albania. The bulk of the army, however, concluded to accept the Austrian conditions, and town after town with its garrison surrendered, the Austrians taking possession successively during the past week of Podgoritza, Dainlov, Nikshich, Kolashin and Andreyevitza, the only important centers of Montenegro remaining unconquered. Finally, on Tuesday, January 25, the remaining representatives of the government of Montenegro signed formal articles of surrender.

In the meantime the Austrian forces in southern Montenegro crossed the Albanian border and took Scutari, the most important town in the northern part of this country. The Montenegrins under Marinovitch, and the Serbians who had reached that place after their westward retreat through the North Albania Alps, fell back southward, offering only a perfunctory resistance. The Austrians followed these retreating forces and at the end of the week entered San Giovanni di Medua, the enemy forces continuing to fall back to the south.

Evidently it is the intention of the commanders of the Serbians and Montenegrins, as well as of Essad Pasha, former prime minister of the Prince of Albania, who has gathered together a small force of Albanians, to fall back to Durazzo in central Albania, on the seacoast, where there is a large Italian garrison. If the Bulgarians, however, to the east and south of Durazzo, and the Austrians coming from the northeast combine in an attack on Durazzo, that place will be very hard to hold. Farther south is Avlona, where there is also a large Italian force, but the Bulgarians hold the roads between this town and Durazzo.

The situation on the frontiers of Greece and Serbia and at Salonica has not changed in the least during the past week; both sides continue to fortify their respective positions and neither manifests any present intention of attacking the other. The French made air raids on Monastir and the frontier towns directly north of Salonica, but with apparently no very serious results. The Allied fleets also continued to bombard rather fitfully towns on the southern coast of Bulgaria, in a continuation of the effort to feel out the strength of the enemy's positions there. The Greek parliament was opened by King Constantine without the usual ceremony, and as soon as opened adjourned for several days. No other news of the political situation in Greece has come to us.

The tension between Sweden nd Great Britain shows no sign of re a tion, and now seems to include u mark. The Swedish parliament, v ch opened this week, at once appoin a committee of national defense, ch ed with the military and naval intere of the country. A bill was also p ed appropriating considerable mone to the purposes of this committee.

During the past week there has en very heavy fighting indeed in Me o tamia between the British forces v ch are attempting to relieve Ge al Townshend's army, shut up in K l Amara, and the Turks. The B sh have three times announced that is force had reached a point only s en miles' distance from Kut-el-An a, but this has turned out and is adm d to be an error.

For the first two days of the w a battle royal raged between the B sh and Turks at a point twenty-three es from Kut, in which both sides fo t themselves to a standstill withou he British being able to pierce or to rn the Turkish positions. The Br sh admit heavy casualties. Since e conclusion of this battle the f es opposing each other have rema d quiet in their respective posit s.

On the other bank of the river, l

Continued on page 179

nic in the negative, debated the question oo the United States need larger armaien According to the Rev. Dr. Sullivan, o tie should be lost in adequately preparing iis ation for defense. He said that the icts iad to be faced, and men and nations ad be considered as they were, not as one ou have them be. As for militarism, he aid, he people of America are in about as uc danger of becoming cannibals as militaris. There is not a single mind in the nit States that believes in that degree f a ression that constitutes militarism.

"e Rev. Dr. Frederick Lynch, one of the cr aries of the Carnegie Endowment for nte ational Peace, deprecated the 'hysteria f p aredness,' as he called it, for he believed er should be a more gradual form of preprat . The present methods seemed to him n ke too much excitement in the country. sp ally did he oppose the growth of a ili y autocracy. 'Militarism,' he delar 'threatens democracy. Democracy is he fusion of government among the people. lil rism is centralized government at a ati al capital. Every soldier added to the rm every gunboat to the navy, means a hre to democracy.' The debate was folow by a rising vote on the resolution: Re ved, that the voting representation of he ew York Federation of Churches now res t heartily endorses the program of the ea e to Enforce Peace.'"

CINA AGAIN FACES JAPANESE DE-JADS. It is reported from English sources ha apan has transmitted to China through he iinese minister in Tokyo a note embodying even demands which were included in Gro V of the demands made upon China ast ear. Group V was postponed, but not lefi tely abandoned, as the result of unani- not protests to Japan by Great Britain, Fra e and Russia, in which the United Sta s joined. The demands, which are now pre nted for the second time, provide for he mployment by China of Japanese as dv ors; for the construction of Japanese os tals, churches and schools in China: for he mployment of Japanese in the police le tments in the larger centers; for the pur ase by China of a fixed proportion of her va munitions from Japan; for the right to or ruct certain railways in China under Jap nese control, and concessions to Japan n e province of Fukien: and for the right of panese subjects to propagate Buddhism n hina. The effect of the granting of these de nds would be to close the open door wh Secretary Hay secured in China for the ommerce of the world. It would seri- ous affect both the commerce of the United Sta s and the sovereignty of China.

R A FRANCO-AMERICAN EN-TE TE. A very influential group in France, for hom Stephen Pichon is the spokesman, is rking to develop the friendly relations wh h have always existed between France an America into an entente similar to that wh h has allied France and Great Britain an which has now been perfected between Fr ce and Italy. In a recent interview wi a correspondent of the New York Times, M Pichon said: "We are not working to ru America into entangling alliances. We do ot even propose a definite agreement, but w ope to utilize the old established friendsh and community of ideals and interests as foundation for an edifice of mutual compr ension and mutual furtherance of world ci ization. America will have a special pi leged position at the end of the war, and m even have been mainly instrumental in hr ging about that end."

NLY A FEW PENCE. Brigadier Gener Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, U. S. A., gave to he Senate Military Committee on Janua 26 an estimate of the cost of preparedness. A ording to General Crozier, a plant suffici t to provide necessary ammunition and war m erial to keep an army of 1,000,000 men in th field, and to equip an additional million re uits, would require an expenditure of $,000,000, and would employ a force of 7 000 workmen. The general advised a nst the establishment of such a plant, e ressing the opinion that the interests of t country were better served by the development of private plants in the interior capable o eing enlarged in case of emergency.

HE WORK OF CONGRESS. It was a ounced on January 24 that the President h begun an effort to speed up Congress, it b ng his desire that the Congress should finish it business and adjourn before the assembling o he national political conventions in June. T President was reported as anxious that t regular appropriation bills should be gotten o of the way so that the Administration r asures for merchant marine, for preparedn s and for Philippine independence could given the right of way. The President was a reported to have expressed himself to presentative Kitchin as favoring a tariff mmission or board with power to investigate t administration and fiscal effects of customs l s, to determine the relations between rates raw materials and finished or partly finished p ducts, to investigate the effects of ad orem and specific duties, to examine the angements of schedules of rates and classi tions of articles, to investigate the pro ions of law relating to the tariff and the gulations of the Treasury Department, and to determine the working of customs and the tariff laws and their economic effect. A board established for similar purposes in the Taft administration was discontinued. On January 26, Senator Hitchcock proposed an amendment to the Philippine Bill providing for independence in not less than two years nor more than four years after the meeting of the Filipino legislature to be created by the pending measure. Senator Sutherland of Utah, opposing the Hitchcock amendment, expressed the opinion that we should "keep on adding schools and say nothing about independence until we are ready to get out." On January 25, Representative Mann of Illinois made an earnest plea in the House for preparedness. Mr. Mann advocated a standing army of 250,000 to 300,000 or even 500,000 men, ample coast defenses, and a navy capable of protecting the interests of this country at sea. He also urged a mobilization of industrial resources. As a part of the Pan-American policy of the Administration, an attempt is to be made to force action on the pending treaties with Colombia and Nicaragua, which have been held up in the Senate for more than two years. The Colombia treaty proposed to pay Colombia $25,000,000 for the separation of Panama, with an expression of regret that anything should have happened to mar the relations of these countries. The Nicaragua treaty proposes to pay $3,000,000 for an option on the Nicaragua canal route and for a naval base in Fonseca Bay Among the objections to the Nicaragua treaty are two from Salvador and Honduras, countries which also own portions of the shore line of Fonseca Bay, and insist that Nicaragua has no right to permit the establishment of a naval base there without their consent. The Administration is also anxious that the new convention with Haiti, authorizing a financial protectorate, should be ratified.

© American Press Association

Giant All Steel Dredge at Work on the Unwelcome Island Created in the Canal by the Last "Slide"

© International Film Service, Inc

Cetinje, Capital of Montenegro, Whose King Has Fled to France for Refuge

ANOTHER PROTEST TO ENGLAND. On January 25, Secretary Lansing cabled to Ambassador Page at London a strong remonstrance against the new extension of the British "Trading with the Enemy Act," under which act British subjects would be forbidden to trade with persons or firms in neutral countries when they are of enemy nationality or of enemy association. Secretary Lansing took the position that the domicile of a merchant must determine the nationality of his goods for purposes of trade, and that the nationality of his business is not dependent upon his allegiance: the trade of a merchant in the United States regardless of whether he is of belligerent origin is American trade, and must be considered as neutral trade. The American position is in accordance with all prize court rulings prior to the present war.

NO MORE LEGAL MURDER IN TENNESSEE. In a recent decision, the Supreme Court of Tennessee has sustained the validity of the Bowers Law, abolishing capital punishment in the state.

ACTUALLY REFUSING BUSINESS. According to the Philadelphia North American, the great shipyards in that neighborhood are turning down orders, because contracts already in hand will keep their greatly augmented forces working at top notch speed for the next two or more years. The statement is that the contracts in hand approximate far above $50,000,000. The contracts include battleships and torpedo boats for the United States government: a large number of oil tankers; some freight vessels and some passenger steamships: and most of the ships, it is said, are destined to fly the American flag. All of which has a cheerful sound, and we trust that the orders which have been turned down at Philadelphia will turn up and be welcomed in other American shipyards from Maine to California.

MONOPOLIZING WATER POWER. According to data recently furnished by the Secretary of Agriculture in a report submitted to the Senate, 18 corporations control more than one-half of the total water power now used by public service corporations in the United States, while six corporations control more than one-quarter. According to the report, there is a marked tendency toward association or community of interests, particularly between the principal holding companies.

BOILER EXPLOSION KILLS FIFTEEN. A boiler explosion at the plant of the Kelker Blower Company in Buffalo on January 24 crumpled a three-story building, burying more than twenty workmen in the ruins, of whom fifteen were killed.

LOOKING AHEAD FOR BUSINESS. Various companies owning vessels in the trans-Atlantic trade, including the German companies whose liners are now idle, are reported to anticipate a greatly enlarged movement of passenger traffic from America to Europe after the close of the war. Eastbound passenger traffic in 1915 decreased 416,000 over 1914, westbound decreased more than 700,000. It has been estimated that there will be at least 500,000 Germans, Austrians, Hungarians, Poles and Slavs ready to start for Europe in the first days of peace to see what has become of their relatives or of their property. Most of them will travel second class or steerage. The steamship lines are now preparing to take care of that traffic.

GROOMING AN IMMIGRATION BILL. The Committee on Immigration of the House of Representatives at Washington has been holding hearings on the Burnett Immigration Bill, which was vetoed at the last Congress and which is being groomed for another try at the executive hurdle. The bill has been changed to increase the head tax on immigrants from four dollars to eight dollars. The literacy test is still retained and the provision to exempt Canadians, Mexicans and Cubans from this test has been stricken from the bill. Notwithstanding demands from the Pacific coast, the committee has decided not to include in the bill legislation to stop immigration from Asiatic countries. A provision of the bill provides that steamship companies which bring to this country undesirable immigrants, who are refused admission, must not only transport the immigrant to his original port of departure, but must repay to him the price of his passage. The bill gives the Commissioner of Immigration-authority to refuse admission to any immigrant who "for any reason" might become a public charge. In spite of the fact that both Presidents Taft and Wilson vetoed similar bills because of the literacy test, the immigration committee expects to report and press this measure again at this session.

THE HONOR MEN OF THE NAVY. The Navy Department has ordered an award of thirty-eight medals of honor to the officers of the navy and marine corps for deeds of extraordinary heroism and for distinguished conduct during the seizure of Vera Cruz April 21-22, 1914.

UNEMPLOYMENT LESSENING. One of the best measures of prosperity is found in the proportion of men unemployed to those employed. The Federal Labor Bureau recently announced there had been a marked lessening in unemployment. In December, 1914, a careful survey of New York City showed that unemployment had increased by about 200,000 workers during the year. A survey by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company early in 1915 showed that out of 252,912 wage-earners, eighteen per cent. were unemployed. The survey a month later showed 16.2 per cent. unemployed. The number of wage-earners out of work in New York City fell from 398,000 in February, 1915, to 164,500 in September. Later reports indicated further absorption of unemployed labor in various industries. Falling off of immigration has had something to do with the reduction of unemployment, but a general increase in prosperity throughout all lines of business is the principal factor in the reemployment of these workers.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE $1.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Through Gates of Pearl

Augusta Albertson

CHAPTER V—Continued

I DID not miss the lessons there. Parts of them were to bring me sorrow deeper than regret. As my guide conducted me from point to point beneath the glowing canopy of the Court of Gentle Service, now and then I caught glimpses of familiar faces. From some of these I was constrained to turn away, remembering as though it were but yesterday events of years ago. One such event was as follows:

In a certain church which I used to attend I often saw an old man with quaint manners and gentle speech. I learned from some source that he was a pensioner upon the bounty of one of his kinsmen. His allowance, however, must have been a meager one, for I have seen him walking in inclement weather, cumbered with heavy packages, when he might have used a street car and saved himself a long and tiresome journey. Once he passed by my house looking very weary. The thought came to me that I should go out and speak to him, and ask him in to rest and give him a cup of tea and a bite to eat. My tea-kettle was bubbling on the fire at the time and a plate of toasted crackers was within reach. I did not do so, however. Perhaps it was mere indolence which prevented my carrying out the generous impulse.

Not long afterward he died, and it was reported that he died alone in a basement bedroom. Those who came to bury him found the only articles of food in his scant cupboard had been some crusts of bread and a small portion of smoked fish. Now I saw him. He was evidently no stranger here. He was no longer old, and yet I had no difficulty in recognizing him. I would have turned away, glad to be unnoticed by him. He saw me, however, and came to greet me as though I were a dear friend. I fell upon my knees and would have kissed his feet, but he restrained me. I said, "I recall with bitter shame that when you passed my door I failed to ask you in. I ministered not to you in your need. In the light of this world I see it all. You were old and weary, but I was selfish and ease-loving. You died neglected and alone. Forgive me, I beseech you."

With touching gentleness, and with all the grace of a king exercising clemency, yet absolutely without the attitude of condescension, he comforted me by recalling certain small benevolences on my part. I did not then nor do I now remember them. As he spoke it came to me that those acts of kindness were really not purposed on my part. They were accidental and hence left no impression upon my mind. Did I indeed take his arm one winter day and help him across a crowded street? Did I, one Christmas, send him a woolen muffler? Did I shake hands with him at the close of a Communion service one Sunday morning, and hold his hand for a little time while we talked about the blessed Sacrament? He told me I had done these things, and that he had cherished the recollection of my kindness and carried it with him into the immortal life! He said, "My child, many are the surprises that await us here. I have marveled much to find how little value is attached here to many an earthly deed which we thought virtuous, and how great may be the worth of acts we counted of no consequence. High as the heaven above the earth are infinite above finite values."

(Since my return from the dream-journey through Gates of Pearl, I have been more careful not to allow to pass unemployed any opportunity to exercise "the charities that soothe and heal and bless." I have gone back to drop a coin into a blind man's cup concerning whom I argued to myself as I first passed him, "He may not be blind; he may be a professional beggar, with money in bank." "Even so," I have said to myself, "he may be in need; he may be 'one of the least of these, my brethren.'" Some of my friends tell me I am encouraging mendicancy, making it more difficult for organized charity to rid the streets of unworthy solicitors. Perhaps I am. But having seen what I saw, and heard what I heard in the Otherwhere, I think I would rather run the risk of serious unwisdom from the viewpoint of organized charity than fail to minister to a needy mortal in distress. Of course I am not blind to the duty we owe to society to protect it from impostors. If I were more Christlike, I would interest myself personally in the blind beggar, ascertain his circumstances, and seek if possible some method of making him capable of self-support. That was the Master's way.)

CHAPTER VI

BEYOND the Court of Gentle Service rise into the upper atmosphere two mountain peaks, one crowned with snow, the other with a crest of fire. Between these mountains, through a valley of ideal beauty, along a path flanked on one side by terraces of flowers and bordered on the other by a stream as clear as crystal, I was led toward a gate on the north side of the City. It was the portal I had asked to see. I was not surprised to find it broad and high. The pillars were of jasper, but the gate itself was a lattice-work of semi-transparent onyx. The pillars rested upon pediments of white stone which resembled Carrara marble. The interstices of the lattice-work bore pendent pear-shaped pearls. Rather, they were tear-shaped. I knew this to be the Gate of Penitence from the inscription which it bore. What other could it bear than that best verse of the Penitential Psalm: "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise."

MY guide gently constrained me to descend with him the crystal stairway, to pass through the outer portal and to stand beside that entrance that I might see the passers-in. I saw almost immediately why he brought me here. From my vantage-ground I could see the faces of the company that approached. Talk of tragedy! Unutterable woe rested upon every face. Have you ever seen that picture by Vereshchagin, the Russian artist, in which he paints a "Crucifixion under Roman Law?" The faces I now saw might have been the models from which he portrayed the sufferers from that most agonizing form of execution. Yet it was unnecessary that my guide should tell me that these were not the victims of literal crucifixion. "Some who have been crucified have passed this way. The penitent thief on Calvary was admitted to Paradise through this gate. These you see, however, are, most of them, those upon whose minds it dawned at last that they had missed the prize of life. As death approached they saw their fatal failure. Stricken remorse, but not despairing of the love of which they had spurned, they prayed for par ing grace. Not in every instance were prayers audible; some of them had but a ment's time to think of God and of their s But even in a single moment it is possibl one to experience an age of illumination. all who see in death's one revealing mor the failure of their lives are penitent, but s are. These were," he said.

I FIXED my eyes upon a youth who proached the gate, and it was given m have, as it were, a flash-light vision. For fraction of a minute I was back on earth. I that youth pinned underneath a burning I saw him then and there even as he saw him in the piercing light of eternity, a soul w idol had been self. He perceived the utter va of all he had esteemed of highest value. thought, though he did not speak aloud, ' if somebody had only told me!" I do not k whose fault it was he had not been told. haps the sweet reasonableness of Christia had never been presented to him. He locke me so fine, so clean, so well-bred, in tort grasp as he was, I believe he would have sponded if it had ever been presented to aright. That burning car was his chario flame, and from it he came straight to the portal by which he might be admitted to City of God. I now saw him broken-hea and contrite. Not all broken hearts are cont (Contrition is more than sorrow on accoun sin; it is sorrow that arises from a sense of baseness of sin, and there is in it more th languid desire for redemption; there is a pose, however unuttered, to seek redempt whereas broken-heartedness may be the re of mere circumstantial distress.)

The guide reminded me that through entrance passed that woman of the Gospel s who bathed our Saviour's feet in tears and wi them with her flowing hair. "Hither c also," he said, "three thousand years ago as count time, that king of Israel whose words sl out above the portal, and, more than a mil nium later, that father of the church who n forgot that the early years of his manhood w wasted and whose shamefast prayer was 'Thou Ancient of Days, yet Ever New, too I loved thee!'" Familiar with the life of Au tine as I was, I wondered that he had not pa to his immortal home through the Ambassad Gate. Reading this thought, my escort prom explained, "He was indeed an ambassado Christ; he occupies an ambassador's man here, yet was he all his life a penitent."

FROM the Gate of Penitence to the Gat Sanctity we moved, the interpreter an along a central landing of the crystal stair midway between the inner and outer gates thought until that moment I knew the mear of whiteness, the whiteness of snow, or of p light. In sight of a gate above which I rea starry letters the sixth Beatitude, "Blessed the pure in heart, for they shall see God,' became apparent to me that, compared with whiteness of this portal and of its support pillars, the purest whiteness I had known dull indeed. Not so many entered here as the Gate of Penitence. Are the pure in he how in number? I know not, but I knew as I stood there that I was altogether unworthy to be admitted through that gate. Children might be admitted here, but the Children's Gate, I recalled, was on the south side of the City. All those I now saw entering bore upon their faces evidence that they had preserved throughout their mortal years the child-heart. Most of these were women, though a few were men. Among the latter I recognized the face of a poet whose verses for children I had read. I never knew him, but his intimate friends have said that his frequent prayer was that he might never outgrow the capacity, characteristic of childhood, to be interested in little things, to be pleased with the simplicities of Nature and of life.

I PUT the question to myself, "How is it possible for those on earth, amidst its manifold corruptions, to preserve the innocence of childhood?" My companion replied: "You have read how Enoch kept his heart pure in an age while yet the world was young, before the race had outgrown the grossness of its animalism; he 'walked with God.'" So, I reflected, through this gate passed that patriarch of whose earthly life we know so little and yet so much. God was his intimate Companion, his uttermost friend, and there came a time when those who knew him said: "He has gone to be the guest of God in God's own land." My angel-teacher spoke: "There are those here who like to think of this entrance as the Virgin's Gate, for through it passed that Mary, the most blessed of women, the human mother of the Incarnate Word. She was elect to Messianic motherhood because her heart was pure." Protestant as I am, I felt at that moment and have felt since, deep emotion at the thought that it was mine to stand where the Virgin Mother's feet had stood.

A still more precious privilege was mine. I had heard no music as I stood outside the Gate of Penitence. Now there reached my ears, from within the gate of indescribable whiteness, music soft and sweet and low, the sound of singers singing and of harpers harping. Gradually the volume of harmony swelled until I thought it must proceed from innumerable lips and strings. I caught a portion of that peerless apostolic hymn in praise of love—the love that thinketh no evil and seeketh not her own. Curiously mingled with these verses was a familiar portion of the Psalter. If an apostle furnished the warp, a psalmist furnished the woof of the rare fabric of that celestial song: "Though ye have lain among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold." It was the welcome home to those who had kept themselves unspotted from the world.

BEFORE we left the Gate of Sanctity, I learned that not only did Jesus' mother enter there, but that the apostle of our Lord, who more than any other was admitted to his Master's friendship, the one who leaned on Jesus' breast, and to whose filial care he, while on the cross, committed his mother, passed through that gate. Standing where I stood, then, John got his first glimpse of the many mansions of the Father's house mentioned in the fourteenth chapter of his Gospel.

From the Virgin's Gate—the gate of the apostle John—the gate of the childlike heart—I was conducted to the Prophets' Gate, where I saw a throng flowing in beneath a purple arch supported by purple pillars. Not long did I tarry here, but long enough to reflect and to rejoice that still God has his prophets in the world. I thought of these as coming only from the earth I knew. My interpreter corrected me and said: "Some of these are from worlds which are not yet ready for the revelation of Immanuel. These are doing there what the Hebrew prophets did in the world from which you came." "Were the Hebrew prophets admitted through this gate?" I asked. He answered, "Not all; some were entitled to enter by the Martyr Gate and some by the great white gate which you have just visited; still others by the Ambassadors' Gate. This portal is not alone for those to whom God gave prevision of the future. All are God's prophets who interpret his Word and Will, who prepare the way for the coming of his kingdom, beating down wilderness paths, making crooked places straight and rough places plain." He added, "There are those who call this the Interpreters' Gate."

Perhaps it was because I was once a teacher, in a sense an interpreter of truth, that I re-entered the City through the Prophets' Gate. (Since leaving the Gate of Penitence, my journey had been along the broad landing of the crystal stairway.)

To be continued

"Sweeter Far Than All Things Heard"

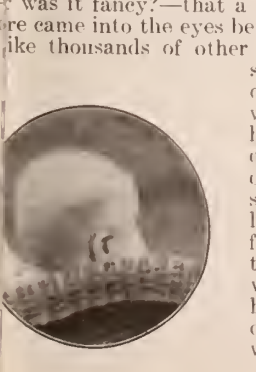
JUNGLE instincts are let loose when humanity throngs into the New York Subway at the rush hours. Like Androcles and the lion, the wild beasts became cooing doves when the Baby entered the Subway. The change in the atmosphere was magical. An instant before, self-interest and self-engrossment appeared to rule, and faces were grim and weary. The entrance of the Baby seemed to be known telepathically, for all eyes were turned in her direction before ever her trilling laughter rang out at a sudden lurching of the train. Half a dozen men more or less sheepishly reached forth hands to steady her in the arms of her father.

Then began the flirtation. The little coquette, early gifted in such arts, was making eyes at three or four men almost simultaneously—and each was shamelessly puffed up over his conquest. One big fellow in rough clothes, whom a reporter might classify as a "tough," surreptitiously touched the flower-like pink hand of the Baby, and won a smile for his temerity. A score of persons, or all that could see the little passenger in the crowded car, lost their grim aspect and were set to smiling by the contagion of Baby's presence. It was as if, somehow, a ray of God's unpolluted sunlight had strayed down into the subterranean depths.

THAT Subway wonder illustrated the mission of babyhood, which is to rejuvenate life when jadedness threatens. The world is kept from getting stale and from dying by the babies which each year brings as surely as it bears us the flowers and springtime. The fountain which Ponce de Leon sought is furnished to the world by infancy, which perpetually renews the race's youth, even for the aged grandparents.

Even the sin-hardened, the world-weary and the superficial respond to the touch of infancy. That hardened woman yonder in the car smiled beneath her paint when Baby looked her way; and it seemed—or was it fancy?—that a new light of sadness and desire came into the eyes beneath the penciled brows.

Like thousands of other American men, this observer has tasted of most of the good pleasures which life has to offer. He has traveled far and feasted his eyes and memory on most of the famous sights of the world. He has sampled the various forms of entertainment that a pleasure-loving world has devised. Yet he bears witness to his conviction that in all the world there is no pleasure so full and so unalloyed and so compensatory as is afforded by a baby. He views the modern tendency of American life to shun the fullest responsibilities of parenthood as not only a social dereliction of first magnitude, a recession from basic religious obligations, but also a huge blunder from the standpoint of sheer self-interest.



Recently I was in an optician's store when a man offered his broken glasses to the proprietor, evidently a friend, with the smiling remark, "A young lady friend kicked me in the eye." Then he and the optician began to count up the total charges to be entered against the flying heels and unexpected fists of a Baby.

THE conversation which followed is almost too intimate to report. It had to do with the domestic reveille in a family of three children, including the frolicsome baby who helps out the optician's business so handsomely. The story ran about as follows:

The mother arises first, of course; household machinery would not begin or continue without a mother's hand at the throttle. Then into a big bed with Daddy, to waken him, is put the Baby, with her winsome, wooing ways. The art of making love is feminine from the first. Often Miss Two-Year-Old and her father have a song-fest, ranging through Baby's entire repertoire. She demands each in turn, but seldom hears a song through. First, always, with Baby joining in, comes,

"Jesus loves me, this I know
For the Bible tells me so,"

a song that is sung in more languages than any other childhood melody.

Always the musical festival ends with a demand for "Frog Courtin'—funny one." The orthodox ballad of "Frog Went A-Courting" is often sung by the Mother, with proper words and tune: but Daddy must improvise for Miss Dancing Eyes; and so Mr. Frog pursues his adventures with most of the animals known to zoology, and some wholly unknown. The more fantastic his experiences, the better pleased the auditor; who asks only that the couplets rhyme; and she greets each with a peal of laughter. Homer, twanging his lyre and singing his improvisations, never had such a devoted hearer as the rhymster who puts Froggie through paces that would amaze musician, poet and naturalist. The clear, bell-like, inspiring laughter of Baby recalls Swinburne's lines:

ALL the bells of heaven may ring.
All the birds of heaven may sing.
All the wells on earth may spring.
All the winds on earth may bring
All sweet sounds together;
Sweeter far than all things heard.
Hand of harper, tone of bird.
Sound of woods at sundawn stirred,
Welling water's winsome word,
Wind in warm, wan weather.

One thing yet there is that none
Hearing, ere its chime be done,
Knows not well the sweetest one
Heard of man beneath the sun,
Hoped in heaven hereafter;
Soft and strong and loud and light,
Very sound of very light,
Heard from morning's rosiest height,
When the soul of all delight
Fills a child's clear laughter.

Golden bells of welcome rolled
Never forth such note, nor told
Hours so blithe in tones so bold,
As the radiant month of gold
Here that rings forth heaven.
If the golden-crested wren
Were a nightingale—why, then Something seen and heard of men
Might be half as sweet as when Laughs a child of seven.

BY this time the music—they would call it noise—has wakened the brothers, and brought them running from their room, with the dog following after. All three pile into the big bed; for in this privileged hour even the dog is permitted on the counterpane. What follows seems almost too simple to put down; it is the frolicking foolishness of a father and three children, the mother participating in the nonsense as she moves about the room. Sometimes there is singing or rhyme-matching, or sober talk of school and life; but mostly it is sheer fun and horseplay, of a sort that even Baby can share. But it is more; for of such light fabric is the precious structure of home, and of family memories, constructed.

BABY'S work is that of home-builder, joy-bringer, youth-restorer, faith-finder. Somehow or other, it at times seems possible to have a business career or a social career without religion; but when Baby comes, then it seems impossible to leave religion out of the reckoning. In a myriad instances every day is being verified the old Scripture, "A little child shall lead them."

William T. Ellis.

Our Editorial Forum

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

Rooted Convictions

ABE LINCOLN used to talk about Herndon's "Bone Philosophy." What he referred to was a remark his law partner used to make frequently in their early discussions about abolition. "Abe," Herndon would say, "you don't feel it in your bones yet." Lincoln called himself an abolitionist, but Herndon used to insist that the conviction had not yet become deep and ineradicable. Then there came a day when Lincoln too felt the truth of the horror and wickedness of slavery "in his bones." He was a different sort of abolitionist after that—the kind of an abolitionist that could and finally did free the slaves.

Mankind's great upward steps have been taken because there were men like this. The early disciples, flinging their words into the teeth of the Jewish magistrates: "We can not but speak the things that we have seen and heard"; Savonarola, standing with unbent back while the entire city marched in abject homage to the wicked duke, and saying: "I will not march in the procession"; Martin Luther, nailing his theses to the church door, and saying later as he faced the angry countenances of men who had both the power and the will to slay him: "I can not recant. I will not recant. Here I stand. I can do no other"; John Wesley, taking the Gospel to the mines and fields when driven out of the churches; Patrick Henry declaring: "Give me liberty or give me death"; Lincoln, taking his pen in hand and freeing three million slaves—this is the stamp of men that have made the world go forward and upward. It is right to be charitable in matters that are not vital, but every man who is worth calling a man has some convictions so deep, so profound, so changeless, so precious, that not even life itself can weigh in the balances against them.

Christians like best to think of Abraham Lincoln on his knees. It was there that he found guidance in the truth; it was there that he found strength to be true; it was there that he found power to make truth triumph. The same sources of truth and power are open to us all. Lincoln was not a learned man as the world counts learning; he was not a rich man as the world counts wealth; but he was good and true, and every one of us can be that. He had seen a vision and was not disobedient to it. In these days of strifes and fears, in these days of carnage and corruption and oppression, God is looking for brave, stalwart men who will pay the price of being true; men who, when the luring voices are heard hinting at compromise and delay and surrender, and offering all the prizes that are richly available for those who will heed these hints to turn aside, will declare, like Paul: "None of these things move me; neither count I my life dear unto me so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the Gospel of the grace of God." The same call that Jesus heard came to the heart of Lincoln and sounds in our souls today: "The spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the Gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted; to preach deliverance to the captives and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised."

Filipino Independence

WILL the people of the Philippines be capable of self-government within the next four or five years? This is the problem that is now being considered in Congress, which has before it the whole subject of Filipino independence. When the original pledge of independence was given by our government it was indefinite as to date. It was never our purpose to keep the islands permanently. Now, for the first time, an effort is being made to set a date for the redemption of our promise. A year ago the House passed a bill providing for independence, but the Senate did not take up the matter seriously until the present session, when a bill was introduced for the creation of a new Filipino legislature. Point has been given to the measure by an amendment, said to be approved by the administration, which provides that within a period not less than two nor more than four years after the assembling and organization of the new Filipino legislature our government should withdraw its sovereignty and proclaim the independence of the islands and their people. As a safeguard, however, it is stipulated that this shall be done only if within the stipulated time the islands shall have adopted an independent government, republican in form and of a character to give reasonable assurance of stability, and which shall agree to recognize and protect the rights and interests of Americans and other nationals in the islands. The amendment reserves to the United States certain coaling stations and naval bases. Should the native government fail to carry out this program satisfactorily and demonstrate its good faith, recognition would be delayed. The President is authorized to invite the cooperation of other governments in agreeing to recognize and maintain the independence of the islands; but even should such cooperation be wanting, other matters being satisfactory, our government, acting alone, would guarantee independence in five years.

The passage of such a measure would be hailed with joy in the archipelago. It would allay political agitation and concentrate the energies of the people in a united effort to render themselves worthy of being trusted with the duties of self-government. To other nations it would be a shining example of the good faith of this republic.

A Real Prayer Meeting

ONE of the biggest problems of modern church life is how to get people to come to prayer meeting and how to make the prayer meetings practical and helpful. Yet this problem which seems so difficult is really one of the simplest in the world. The reason the prayer meetings are not successful is that when people come to prayer meeting they do not pray. It is like a debating society without a debate; a reading circle without reading; a dinner party without dinner. People come to prayer meeting and hear a sermonette by the pastor, perhaps a lengthy explanation of some Bible passage; there are a few formal, often stereotyped prayers; and then a few people get up and try to give a "testimony." If they have nothing special to testify to or if they feel diffident about making any personal statements, they are urged to read or quote a verse of Scripture. But not by the wildest stretch of imagination could this be called a prayer meeting.

We should like to call the attention of our readers to a straightforward letter quoted in the first paragraph of this week's Prayer League. Speaking of the influence of the prayer life at the Bowery Mission on the success of that institution, this writer asks: "Is it not true that if a true Christian faith should get at work in a true channel, effects would be as beautiful and convincing and expressive as ever?" A prayer meeting should be a place where believers in Jesus meet to pray; where they give glad testimonies to prayers answered; where they bring together their desires and requests; where they talk over with one another the real needs of their lives, the real needs of the work of God which is in their hands, and then unite in expectant prayer that these needs will be met.

It is true in our churches, as well as in our own homes and hearts, that we are weak and impoverished and faulty and defeated and dejected because we have not yet learned really to take "Everything to God in prayer."

A Voice from the Past

AT a time when "preparedness" is being widely canvassed throughout the nation, when our lawmakers in Washington are being urged to approve of a vast increase in our naval and military systems, when militant speakers, including an ex-President, are frantically striving to outdo each other in alarmist addresses, and when the nation's executive is "swinging round the circle" in an effort to win popular approval for increased armaments, it is interesting as well as instructive to recall the views of one broad-minded American statesman of a past generation on this subject.

In 1845 Charles Sumner delivered a speech in Boston, before the city authorities, on "The True Grandeur of the Nations," in which he discussed the cost of war and preparation for war in time of peace. In the course of his remarks he said:

> Dismissing the actual usage on the one side, and considerations of economy on the other, I would regard the preparations in the simple light of reason, in a just appreciation of the nature of man, and in the injunctions of the highest truth. Our conclusion will be very easy. They are twice pernicious, and whoso would vindicate them must satisfactorily answer these two objections: first, that they inflame the people, exciting to deeds of violence, otherwise alien to the mind; and secondly, that, having their origin in the low motives of distrust and hate, inevitably, by a sure law of the human mind, they excite to corresponding action in other nations. Thus in fact are they promoters of war, rather than preservers of peace.
>
> Christianity not only teaches the superiority of love to force; it positively enjoins the practice of the former, as a constant, primal duty. It says, "Love your neighbors," but it does not say, "In time of peace, rear the massive fortification, build the man-of-war, enlist standing armies, train militia, and accumulate military stores, to overawe and menace your neigl It directs that we should do to others as we would have do unto us—a golden rule for all; but how inconsistent i distrust in obedience to which nations, professing peace, like soldiers on their arms!
>
> Nor is this all. Its precepts inculcate patience, forbea forgiveness of evil, even the duty of benefiting a dest "as the sandalwood, in the instant of its overthrow, perfume on the ax which fells it." Can a people in who faith is more than an idle word authorize such enormous fices to pamper the spirit of War? Thus far, nations drawn their weapons from earthly armories, unmindful there are others of celestial temper. The injunction " one another" is as applicable to nations as to indivi The barbarism which individuals have renounced nation cherish. Has not the time come when man, created i image and likeness of God, shall cease to look down t beast for an example of conduct? As man is higher tha beasts of the field, as the angels are higher than man, as (is higher than Mars, as he that ruleth his spirit is higher he that taketh a city—so are the victories of peace higher the victories of war.

Charles Sumner used the magic of his eloqu against the militarists of his day. What w an American of his splendid type, were such now, have to say of the concerted efforts oppress the country with mountainous taxation a war which no sane citizen, not even the Presid regards as even a remote probability?

China's Political Tangle

ORIENTAL methods are confusing to Western mind. When Yuan Shi Kai sev weeks ago announced that he had decide postpone his coronation indefinitely, it generally believed that this new policy was adopte order that the government might deal promptly the revolutionary movement. Naturally, it w seem more fitting to celebrate a coronation u peaceful auspices than during an insurrection. N however, a new light is shed on the postponem Washington is advised that Yuan's course is i enced by the fear that his coronation might give to serious disturbances in China, which would exc him from participation in the peace councils at close of the European War.

An important sidelight on the situation comes f another quarter. Sun Fo, son of Sun Yat Sen, the president of the Chinese republic, in a recent add in San Francisco charges that Yuan abolished parliament elected by the people, and with a si stroke of the pen abolished also the provincial or s legislatures, and all of the elective bodies of republic. According to Sun Fo's allegations, republic has really been non-existent since 1914. avers that the new monarchist movement origina in the brain of an American adviser of Yuan, and when the election of a national convention was ca to decide as to the change, only 518,000 persons vo as against a popular vote of 40,000,000 which ch the parliament of 1913. Thus the monarchy decided upon by a vote which represented about o tenth of one per cent. of the population. It is the story of the battle of the "outs" against the "in Doubtless President Yuan and his advisers may h a reasonable explanation of these charges that n satisfy their people. The tangle is so intricate, h ever, that it would seem a hopeless task for any an Oriental mind to undertake to unravel it.

The Good Samaritan

IN common with millions of other Americans, I am stron in favor of our nation "preparing" for peace. We h been spending over $200,000,000 annually on the army navy, on the assumption that they were being prepa Now, it is charged that the money has been wasted. Yet militant leaders propose appropriating double that amou or even a billion dollars a year, for "preparedness."

Think of what a billion good, sound American dollars wo do toward peace "preparedness."

It would equip a great medical commission of the worl leading physicians and scientists, to take up immediately a the war the task of restoring normal sanitary conditions in the stricken areas where disease is now raging.

It would fill a fleet of a hundred relief ships with food for destitute multitudes of Europe, and keep up the supply long as the emergency required.

Uncle Sam has played the rôle of the Good Samaritan different times to China, Japan, Russia, Italy, Finland, In and other countries, in periods of general distress, sending troopships with foodstuffs and medicines, and they were alw welcome. A great fleet of friendly help, setting out fr American ports as soon as peace is announced, would mak more lasting and a deeper impression on the heart of Eur than any military or naval display. It would evoke feelings friendship everywhere.

Besides, a new and let us hope a better Europe will rise the ruins of the old—a Europe hating war and eager to gra the hand that holds, not the sword, but the friendly offer peace and good will.

READER.

New York City.

Daily Meditation

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY

J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

Resolution Armed with Prayer

SUNDAY, February 13. Ps. 27: 14. "Wait on the Lord, and let thine heart take courage." Mere courage may be very inefficient. It can be little more than high spirits, and subject to the swift changes of the surrounding temperatures. Co age may be only a chivalrous impulsiveness, a bri antly attractive flare, but speedily relapsing into the old grayness of the advancing night. There is the co age of the single act. There is the higher courage of rolonged action. There is the still higher courage of aiting, when the relief of action is forbidden. And the fore must we distinguish between the courage wh h is born and dies in a day and that which st bornly persists through the long, exacting years. O is flightiness; the other is fortitude.

ow, the courage commended in the Christian Sc ptures is an evergreen. It is not brave impulsi ness but strong endurance. It is not the exhilara spirits of a single battle, but the firm, resolute m d of a long campaign. It is not so much the im etuousness which can take Jericho by assault, as th hardihood which can, if need be, tramp round it se n times, waiting for the crumbling of its walls. Th kind of resoluteness must itself be armed, or ci umstances will maim and destroy it. Courage can lo its blood, not only by disappointment and defeat, b by the lack of suitable food. The noblest courage m t be armed by regular and appropriate sustenance.

ow, prayer is the appointed means by which this hi est kind of courage is fed. We are to "wait on th Lord," and our heart will "take courage." T ough prayer our courage renews its youth like the ea e. The heart is invigorated into fresh ambition a endeavor. Its grip upon high ends is established, a it turns to the dull road with a new song. It is n so much that we acquire good spirits, as that we o ain deepened communion with the renewing Spirit of od. The praying soul is the dwelling-place of the H y Ghost. Such a soul "shall not fear when heat co eth"; its resources shall be equal to the demands of he fiercest drought. J. H. J.

Our Helper in Time of Trouble

MONDAY, February 14. Isa. 59: 1-9. "The Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save, b . . ." We are prone to place limitations on God. H is the Father of our spirits, loving us with an infin tenderness, and willing to place his resources at o disposal, but he is continually limited by our want o response and faith. We carry our burdens and fr ourselves to death, as though suddenly the hand o his strength could not reach us, because dried up a withered. It used to come so far, but it is shorte d and cannot reach our need. God is ever saying u o us, "Call on me in the day of trouble, and I will d iver thee," or, "Son, thou art ever with me, and a that I have is thine." But we limit the application o such assurances by our narrowness, our timidity, o imprisonment in the notions of our neighbors and a ociations. We paddle in the shallows, instead of l nching out into the deep and letting down our nets f a draught.

From lifelong traditions we have become mentally g oved in narrow conceptions, and cannot realize t power, love and presence of God, shaping every ent to shut us up to his help, and waiting, nay, l ging, to be recognized and called upon. Let us ake henceforth, and avail ourselves of these re urces. Probably we all need more soul-quietude a d thought-concentration in order to do this. We ust be still, that we may know. We must put aside e continual promptings and seekings of our soul-life ward self-help, so as to leave room for God to act. s hand is as strong and reaches as far today as in e times of the early church; but our wanderings to far countries, or our unbelief, have cut us off d separated us from our God. F. B. M.

The True Helpmeet

TUESDAY, February 15. Prov. 31: 10. "A worthy woman who can find! For her price is far above bies." A well-known statesman has said that the ming century is to be the woman's age In these ys of the entrance of women into the varied walks of odern life, when business and politics, social uplift d club life are coming rapidly to assist the women of e West to find their new and useful spheres of activity, the ideas of the East, from which the Bible sprang, should also have their repeated consideration. That this elevation of woman to a larger place and privilege should, in any measure, destroy the divine plan of relationship pictured in the early light of Genesis, no one who reads his Bible carefully can believe. The "helpmeet" idea—both ways—has always been the great idea of relationship between men and women—it is mutual interest wrought in love. And when all the bells of reform have rung out their new song, the elemental interdependence and heart affection between one man and one woman will remain the lasting note, because it is the natural as well as the divine note.

The following lines of a modern verse-maker are not couched in the proverbial style of Solomon, but the same rich meaning is there:

There are sounds I like to hear—the voice of a college friend.
The night-song of a robin, and the jovial talk of men.
But when with miles between me and the one who shares my life,
The postman's whistle tells me, there's a letter from my wife.

But best of all I like to read the love note at the end,
In which she says there's something else, too big and fine to send—
The thing that is both hers and mine forever and a day,
Not that I do not know it, but I like to hear her say
That the country is less beautiful when some one is away.

C. S. C.

At the Empty Tomb

WEDNESDAY, February 16. John 20: 1-9. "He saw and believed." The women had not heard of the seals and sentries, or they had hardly ventured. They were greatly startled, therefore, as they approached the tomb, especially when they saw the stone gone from before it. Mary of Magdala, apparently, was the first to detect it, and without staying further to investigate for herself, she started to apprise Peter and the disciple whom Jesus loved of her conviction that the tomb had been rifled of its treasure. The apostles started up immediately to ascertain the facts for themselves.

John, younger than Peter, had outrun him, but was withheld by reverential awe from doing more than peering into the empty chamber. The linen clothes, lying orderly disposed, specially arrested his notice; yet went he not in. Peter, however, went at once into the sepulcher; he was specially struck with the additional fact that the cloth, which had covered the face of the dead, was wrapped together in a place by itself. Then John also went in, and was convinced by what he saw that the tomb had not been rifled, nor the body stolen by violent hands. These garments and spices would have been of more value than a dead body to thieves; besides, they would not have stopped to unwind or dispose of the cerements with such deliberate care. Whether this was done by the hands of ministering angels, or by the Saviour himself, this careful and orderly disposal, after it had fulfilled its purpose, gave evidence of a tender appreciation of the love that had prompted it at the entombment. The slightest evidences are often the strongest clues, and John believed. F. B. M.

Patience in Welldoing

THURSDAY, February 17. Rom. 2: 6, 7. "God, who will render to every man according to his works: to them that by patience in welldoing seek for glory and honor and incorruption, eternal life." Coleridge said that there were three great words, "Love, Hope and Patience," and that there were times when both hope and love were saved by patience.

When overtaxed at length
Both Love and Hope beneath the load give way
Then with a statue's smile, a statue's strength,
Stands the mute sister, Patience, nothing loth,
And both supporting, does the work of both.

There are times in all our lives when we may walk only by force of habit—when the light on our path is darkness, and when even hope for the moment is lost. Then we can plod and patiently persevere, and the power of patience is revealed. Phillips Brooks once said that he had times when he only was sure of the command to obey—obedience was the only staff, but through leaning on that and going straight on, the path soon wound out into the sunshine. Paul in his letters is often found speaking of this divine quality of patience; he speaks of "patience in hope"; he connects patience with love and meekness, he writes of the "patience of Christ" and "the God of patience."

The patient man reminds himself repeatedly that his whole life work is not to be achieved all at once—that it is only by degrees, day by day, that he approaches the goal. We need to learn to do our work as well as possible for each day, and we shall find that when the morrow comes there will come with it the strength for its tasks. When the inspiration is lacking, it is well to remember that we can be moving along just the same in patient work and in the activity nearest our hand. Plants like the sun, but they grow in the rain. Doing well every day—that is the surety of success; that is to have the characteristic of a Christian. Patience and faith are the characteristics of saints. C. S. C.

Beneath the Everlasting Arms

FRIDAY, February 18. Titus 3: 1-15. "The kindness of God our Saviour and his love toward man appeared." In the morgue at the hospice of the great St. Bernard—the highest inhabited spot in Europe—where bodies found in the snow by the noble dogs are kept exposed for purposes of recognition, and where they remain for years without decomposition, as the temperature is always below freezing point, there is the body of a woman tightly embracing the body of a little child. Nearly the whole of her own clothing has been wrapped around the child and the withered face bends lovingly over its burden. In that awful night of snowdrift, when they perished together, the love of the mother proved itself stronger than death. Such is the kindness of God our Saviour and his love toward man.

God's heart was manifested in Christ Jesus. He is the unveiling of God's feelings toward us, which have been, are and will be for evermore. Nature has spoken, and history, and human reasoning; but only in the birth, life and death of Jesus were these traits of the divine character unmistakably displayed. In Jesus, God stretches toward us his everlasting arms, and wraps us in his bosom, not to perish, but to have eternal life in the unfading summer of his own bright home. There is a sense in which God is unknowable. The mind cannot understand or define his wondrous being; but they who have been justified by his grace, renewed by his Spirit, saved by his mercy, brought into close filial fellowship with him through his regenerating word, know him as the child knows its mother, rest in him, and daily by faith explore him. F. B. M.

The Heart's Tribute of Praise

SATURDAY, February 19. Psalm 146 : 1. "Praise ye the Lord." The last five Psalms may be called the "Hallelujah" Psalms, as each one begins with the word "Hallelujah," which means "Praise ye the Lord," and each Psalm ends with the same word. The word in the New Testament is found in only one chapter of the Book of Revelation and is translated from the Greek: "Allelnia." The music of heaven therefore must be in the same strain as that of the church of God on earth—"Praise ye the Lord." Hallelujah is the melody of God's wide universe, the song of all choirs in all his realm.

Two of the followers of Jesus once met in a foreign land. Not being able to understand each other's language, one said "Amen" and the other "Hallelujah," words that are the same in all languages. They then were able to hold sweet fellowship together.

These last five Psalms are called the Delectable Mountains near the end of life's journey, from whose song-summits we get glimpses of the heights around the New Jerusalem. David had sealed these pinnacles in the mountain range of song by his rapturous flights of passion for praise. He strikes all the chords in the harp of the soul in these climaxes of adoring thanksgiving. He is exultant, ecstatic, almost angelic in his wonderful worship. David became the chorister of God for all the ages of mankind. All the musical flow of the river of his psalmody ends in the glorious Niagara of praise called "Hallelujah—Praise ye the Lord." The mighty volume of incense rising from this magnificent overflow of praise rises up to fill all the heavens and all the earth with its refreshing blessing and perfume—till everything that hath breath cries out "Praise him! Praise him! Praise ye the Lord! Allelnia!" E. W. C.

The Bible and Newspaper

CONDUCTED BY

FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

A Wineless Banquet

AT the annual banquet of the Bar Association of the District of Columbia, held in Washington the other night, no wine or intoxicating liquors of any kind were served. It is said that this is the first time in the history of the Association that liquors have been omitted from the bill of fare. This voluntary act on the part of the able and upright lawyers of the capital of the nation is an excellent example, a barometer indicating the clear atmosphere of a healthy public sentiment, and is especially significant at this time when there is a serious contest before the present Congress to secure prohibition for the District of Columbia. The action is an expression of belief in these words: "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." (Prov. 20:1.)

An Indian Suicide

INDIAN CHIEF OGALLALA FIRE, who participated in the massacre of Custer at Little Big Horn, died in Chicago, January 9, from a self-inflicted knife wound in his throat. He was ninety years old, and had visited most of the large cities of this country and Europe since he first made his appearance with other Indians of the Sioux tribe at the World's Fair at Chicago. Although he had participated in many raids and battles with the white settlers and troops in the days of the Western Indian warfare, Chief Ogallala Fire was incapacitated only once, and that was at Little Big Horn, when one of General Custer's troopers slashed him across the face with a saber after shooting him twice in the chest. He is survived by his granddaughter, Mrs. Lillie Bear, with whom he resided for many years. It is charitable to think that as the bodily powers of the old warrior gave way, his mind let down also, leading to self-destruction. One of the most disgraceful chapters in American history is the treatment of the Indian by the white man. The white man took away from the ancestors of Ogallala Fire an empire in territory and wealth, paying no attention whatever to the command: "Thou shalt not steal." (Ex. 20: 15.)

Veteran Life-Saver

AFTER fifty years of service to the government of the United States, Sumner I. Kimball has just retired at the age of eighty-one. For thirty years he was at the head of the United States Coast Guard and Life-saving Service, and his work was completed when he accomplished the amalgamation and organization of that service with the Revenue Cutter Service of the Treasury Department. He retired under a special act of Congress which carried with it three-quarters pay. In accepting his application for retirement President Wilson paid him a beautiful tribute, holding him up to the admiration of his fellows for the development of the wonderful humanitarian system of life-saving from its beginning. The United States government paid no attention to the rescue of the shipwrecked along the coast till 1847, when $5,000 was appropriated for lighthouses on the coast and appliances for life-saving. The next year $10,000 was voted and eight stations for the rescue of mariners were planted on the New Jersey coast. It was not till the Powhatan went down with 400 on board within 200 feet of shore that the government began in earnest its great life-saving service. Over 1,000 vessels a year are disabled on the coast and nine out of ten of them are saved, and of the 9,000 passengers and crew imperiled during a year only thirty of them are allowed to perish. Mr. Kimball, who began the service in its infancy, fifty years ago, has done much to bring it to the point of efficiency of which the nation is justly proud. Put the medals on his breast, wreath the laurel about the brow of this real hero, but while this is being done, let the brave men who were with him share similar honors. Any one who wants to know the stuff that these life-savers are made of will only have to go to the ocean shore in a storm and see a wrecked ship crying for help, and witness these supremely brave men laughing at the storm, and daring death to harm them as in their passion for saving men they rescue the lost. Some of the men perish in saving others. All have the spirit of sacrifice thus expressed: "Neither count I my life dear unto myself." (Acts 20: 24.)

Ate Charged Mice

IT is the normal thing for a cat to eat mice, not white ones, for there are so few of them, nor those inoculated with pneumonia bacilli, as the six white mice were that the cat got at Albany the other night. Impelled by the fearful pneumonia epidemic, the State Department was carrying on scientific investigation with six white mice which had been inoculated with pneumonia bacilli. A cat crawled through an upper window into the laboratory, knocked over the cage, ate the mice and sorely disappointed the medical scientists. Science will not rest until it has discovered an antidote for the pneumonia and tuberculosis germs, as it has for other deadly diseases. There is no mention of the domestic cat made anywhere in the sacred Scriptures. In Egypt it was worshiped as a divinity. The law for its protection was so strict that it killed a man for killing a cat. They had mice in olden times; they were very destructive. Herodotus attributed the loss of Sennacherib's army to mice which in the night time gnawed the bowstrings and shield straps of the soldiers. The field mice of Palestine destroyed the grain of the Philistines, who were thus commanded by their priests: "Wherefore ye shall make images of your emerods, and images of your mice that mar the land." (I Sam. 6:5.)

© International Film Service, In

Newsboys Hear President Over Phone

PRESIDENT WILSON in Washington, on the night of January 17, spoke to the boys at the Avenue A (New York) Boys' Club by long distance telephone. About 500 from seven to fifteen years of age were gathered. Mr. R. S. Scarburg took up the receiver and said, "Mr. President, this is Mr. Scarburg, one of the committee to raise $500,000 to extend the work of the Boys' Club of Avenue A and the Newsboys' Club. We have now about 5,000 members. There are several hundred of these boys assembled here with telephone receivers to their ears waiting to hear you. These boys are sturdy, independent little chaps, whose only need is an opportunity and an inspiration. The new quarters will give them more opportunity, and your message will be an inspiration to them." The President answered: "I hope you will have all success in your great work. It is one of the first signs of friendship for the youngsters who bring us our newspapers. My sympathy has always been for the boys. I wish them all a happy new year." The boys sent back three cheers to the President. A little over $80,000 has been raised for the new home. It is a pity these boys could not have been kept in school longer for a better equipment for life, but they are a splendid lot, take them through and through. They are bright, industrious, honest and enterprising, and the new quarters for them will be a blessed charity. It is surprising how many of these little chaps get into good positions and succeed in life. A roll-call in any great city will reveal a number of the ablest, best, and most eminent men who have come up from the newsboy and bootblack class. When the claims of this charity are presented to the people, they should remember these words: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." (Matt. 25: 40.)

Cab-Driver's Bequests

THE will of William Todd, the old cab-driver, who was found dead in his room in Brooklyn, was found among a mass of papers in his desk. It showed that during a period of nearly sixty years of saving, he had amassed more than $25,000. Before the advent of the taxi, Todd had driven his own cab for many years on Fifth Avenue. Henry Hayward, an old friend of Todd, said the will provided that the $25,000 left in divided equally between the Me
Hospital, the Norwegian Hospi Twelfth Reformed Church, the Baptist Church and the Eig
Street Methodist Church. Sixt of hard work and twenty-five th dollars of patient savings is the side of the cab-driver's life. Th side was sixty years of honest and of unselfish Christian livin his gifts to the hospitals and ch
he has linked himself to an eart mortality of service and of love simple, humble man will conti nurse the sick and preach the Go the end of time, illustrat fact that "None of us l himself, and no man dieth self." (Rom. 14:7.)

Seed Centuries (

JOHN G. ALLEN of
Ari., was fishing
Verde River one day, and little luck he concluded h search among the cliff dv and see if he could fine specimens of pottery used people of far-off times.
tered one room and cam
a wall which he suspectec lead into another room.
enough, he broke throu carefully sealed wall and a room with certain ute clay ware, corn cobs, and seeds that looked like the squash. He planted the season. Only one of then up, but that one prod squash, the past fall, weighed twenty-five poun is thought that the see sealed up in that chambe centuries ago and that li wheat in the hands
Egyptian mummy had re its life germ. This seed w fruitful life after its burial cave for so many hundre is the type of the immorta
the soul, and the resurrec
the body through Jesus our Lord. "For since b came death, by man came a resurrection of the dead.
in Adam all die, even so in shall all be made alive." ( 15:21, 22.)

A Heroic Death

TWO lads had fallen tl
a hole in the ice o
Morris Canal, and were d
ing. Ira Stringham, a youn of twenty-one, heard the
and saw what had happ
He ran across the bridge, threw coat and shoes and rushed to the where the boys had disapp
He saved the two lads but his own life. It is likely that the negie medal he so richly won w given to his mother. The world such young men as Ira Stringha needs also such heroic deaths fo culture and salvation. He liv hundred lives for a hundred yea the one moment when the lives o lads seemed larger and more pre than his own, and deliberately too risk to save them. The teachers to tell the children in the schools such acts, and the preachers to illus their sermons to young men, an ought to be lifted to a higher plane by the example of one who others so much that he died to them, in imitation of his Maste whom it was said: "He laid dow life for us, and we ought to lay dow lives for the brethren." (I John 3

© Underwood & Underwood

© International Film Service, Inc

© Underwood & Underwood

The Country Comes to Town

THE most refreshing thing that has happened in city life in many a ear has been this seon's exuberant skating fa o you remember your fir pair of skates? "Come here, Jimmie," said the paent slave-of-all-work in your house whom your faer customarily addressed as "Mother"; "come here an try on Jennie's skates and see if they won't be ju right for you to learn on." Remember what you sa? Aren't you ashamed of yourself? You snatched thn out of that patient hand and flung yourself onhe kitchen floor and tried them on. The runners we about as thick as a lead pencil and curved up an formed an unfinished letter "o" at the toe. Uights from these runners supported a piece of wood alt an inch thick and shaped something like the so of your shoe. Enough leather to make a set of haess was attached to this plank and you had to bil it around your ankle and over your toes. You ha to get it fearfully tight over your ankle so as to suort you, and tighter still over your toes so that thskate wouldn't wobble. So the minute you had yr skates on, your blood ceased to flow past your anle. Consequently you never knew how cold your fe really were until you got off the ice and unstrapped yr harness. Then you discovered that they were alolutely dead.

hey were great skates, though; I know, for I had a pa. To my unutterable disgust, they fitted my shoes sohat a new pair was out of the question,—Jennie ha got a new pair for Christmas, hence, et cetera. So I id these monstrosities under my pea-jacket and slk off by a back way to the river to learn how to ste.

ou remember how you learned how to skate? Y had always known in your innermost consciousns that if ever you got a pair of skates you would he no trouble in skating. You just naturally felt tt you were a born skater. And as you got near the ic heard the shouts and saw the swirling figures of t other boys and girls, and heard that peculiar eng of the ice under the strokes of the skaters, you ban to lose your shame of the disgraceful things uler your pea-jacket, and began to run down the iline toward the river proudly waving these objects ithe air and hollering: "Hey, fellers, I got a pair of stes, too!"

Then you sat down and put one of them on, and soped to pick up the other and discovered it was ge. About ten miles out on the river your faithful ylow dog was having great sport with that skate. I seemed to appreciate to the full your thoughtfulns in having provided one skate for him as well as f yourself. He was racing hither and yon, dragging t thing after him, and not at all discouraged by t shouts of your friends, who seemed pleased at your dog's happiness. You got up to start after him, quite forgetful of the disparity in your feet.

When you got through rubbing the back of your head, you told half a dozen interested boys who were standing around you that they had better just look out or they would laugh on the other side of their mouths; and then you pulled off the one skate you had so as to run after Fido, and just as you got it off, up came Fido with the other skate, wagging his tail in the most bewitching fashion. Undoubtedly you are ashamed yet of the reward you gave him for bringing your skate back. Probably you are also ashamed of the things you said to the boys who continued to be interested in the scene. You hurriedly adjusted both of Jennie's skates to your feet, slowly pulled on your red mittens, and rose to show these jeering comrades a thing or two in the art of skating.

Remember?

OR don't you like to remember? I don't. I never in my life have had a harder bump than I received at the moment when my feet shot out from under me, and I never want to have one. But it was a very useful bump. Just right then and there, it jounced out of me every particle of conceit in my untried prowess as a skater. I was just as convinced and just as suddenly convinced that I was no skater, as most of us are the first day out at sea that we are not the seamen we thought we were. (As a matter of side remark, bumps are very wholesome things in life, as a rule. Those bumps we received at our first skating session taught us enormous caution.)

Speaking of caution, remember how you made your next effort to glide like a bird over the glassy ice on Jennie's skates? You turned around on your knees with your back to the scene and took a firm hold on the river bank. Then you straightened your knees and made sure you could retain the position of an inverted letter V. Then you gingerly let go with the one hand, discovering that you were still secure. You let go with the other and gradually straightened yourself to the perpendicular. Or, rather, almost to the perpendicular. You were just about to draw a long breath of relief, when both feet shot straight out behind.

Then you turned over and sat up. You looked at the grinning faces around you and managed to grin yourself: "Aw, fellers," you pleaded, "give us a hand, won't you? I can skate all right, but these things get my feet all tangled up." Two of your stanch friends drew alongside with easy strokes, and you laid hold on them and dragged yourself slowly to an upright position. Despite the armor on your ankles, your legs bent inward and outward in the most surprising manner. "Don't be afraid, Jimmie," urged your stanch friends. "Hang on to us, and strike right out. You can do it all right." So you struck out with your left foot, but somehow simply couldn't move your right foot an inch. Out and out and out toward the center of the river sped your left foot, until, just as you were about to split in two, you let go your hold on your friends, and went down. But they dragged you up again and insisted that the proper way to skate was to use both feet. "Take short strokes, Jimmie," they advised you; and leaning your entire weight upon their bended shoulders you began to skate.

BY persistent practice and through tribulations too numerous to mention, you finally reached a point where your head no longer gathered in the constellations of which your feet had gone in search. You could skate! Once in a while you still stubbed your toe or turned an ankle, but you could skate, straight away, as hard and fast as most of the boys who had so greatly enjoyed your first half hour on the ice. Then you learned how to swing one foot back and turn your face toward the receding landscape and skate backward. You practiced so enthusiastically that you skated right into an air-hole, but it was no matter, you skated then until you were dry. Then you learned to cross your feet and to throw one foot over the other and to cut circles and figure-eights and finally to write your name. The final score of victory was yours, however, when you learned to handle a skate sail and could make a four-mile length of the river in five minutes, and tack back again for another run. There were bonfires upon the shore and games of hockey and races on the ice, and potatoes roasted in the coals, and chilblains—ouch! how they did hurt! But skating was a royal sport, and you were a prince of the line after you had your first really truly boy's skates, the kind that went on with one pressing of the lever.

Now you are older and you live in the great city which is artificial and a hard taskmaster to boot, and you feel again the rush of youth in your blood, for once more you are going skating. Some of your unfortunate friends who grew up among the brownstone fronts and who never skated in their youth are finding that the blood of some more fortunate ancestor has left in their veins a pulse that answers to the call of the frozen lake, and they are skating too, skating as if they had always done it. On every park lake, on private ponds and on artificial ponds in roof gardens, they are skating, and they are getting joy out of it, for they are putting joy into it, the joy of struggle and of swift movement and of the tang of frosty air on cheeks warmed with surging blood.

© International Film Service, Inc.

© Underwood & Underwood

© International Film Service, Inc.

Our Great Fisheries

CONTINUING
FRANK G. CARPENTER'S NARRATIVE

Copyright, 1916, by Frank G. Carpenter

Alaskan Fish-Hooks Used by the Indians

DURING the past few weeks I have visited many of the fishing centers of Southeastern Alaska. I have already written of the weekly shipments of halibut, which are growing so rapidly that they promise to make that fish the most common upon our dinner tables, and have visited many of the canneries where they are putting up salmon for shipment to all parts of the world. There are forty-four such canneries in Southeastern Alaska alone, and more than eighty in the whole territory. I have also gone through the cold storage plants at Ketchikan and elsewhere, where they are freezing salmon for export, and have seen the various processes of mild-curing and smoking and pickling the fish for the market. The extent of the industry is surprising and it is rapidly growing.

But few people appreciate what Uncle Sam is now getting out of the waters of this territory. So far the seas have proved almost as valuable as the land. We have realized more than $275,000,000 from them, but this includes $52,000,000 which has come from the skins of the fur seal. The seal is really a water animal. It spends the most of its life in the ocean and is caught only during the short season when it comes to the Pribilof Islands in Bering Sea to breed.

The balance is the money received from the fisheries alone. It has already amounted to more than $225,000,000 and it is being increased at the rate of $20,000,000 a year. In other words, we are now getting almost three times as much annually from Alaskan fish as the sum we paid for the whole territory when we bought it of the Russians, and we have received thirty times that amount since the purchase was made. The product of fish last year amounted to $21,000,000, and if the industry is properly protected and fostered it should produce that much or more for all time to come.

Indeed, the waters of Alaska have to be reckoned among the chief sources of our food supply. The fresh salmon shipped last year weighed very close to 2,000,000 pounds, and that cured, pickled and smoked weighed between three and four millions. The halibut exported in 1914 amounted to about 15,000,000 pounds, and the codfish to fifteen million more. In addition to this there are many other kinds of fish in these waters that will eventually be caught and shipped, so that in some respects the industry is at its beginning.

So far I have seen only some of the fisheries of Southeastern Alaska. This is known as fishing district number one in the water divisions which the United States Fish Commission has made of the territory. There are altogether four great fishing provinces. Southeastern Alaska begins at the Portland Canal, on the international boundary, and runs along the coast and in and out through the hundreds of islands, 500 to 600 miles, to Yakutat Bay, ending some distance east of Mount St. Elias. This district has great halibut banks off the islands, and it is the seat of the fresh fish industry of Alaska. The fishing investments there amount to something like $160,000,000, of which thirteen millions are in salmon and about three millions in halibut. There are more than $800,000 invested in the whale fisheries. Southeastern Alaska is by far the most important of the water regions of our territory, having something like 10,000 men engaged in fishing its waters.

THE second fishing district is known as that of Central Alaska. This begins at Yakutat Bay and includes the great Gulf of Alaska and all of the waters south of the mainland and along the Aleutian Islands, which run almost to Asia. This district is several thousand miles long and a great part of it is paved with fish. The bulk of the catch is salmon, but there is also an annual export of cod, amounting to millions of pounds, from the extensive cod banks which lie south of the Alaska Peninsula and the Aleutian Islands.

These banks compare with those of Newfoundland. Some of them are 120 miles long and of great width. They are so situated that the Arctic and Japanese currents bring them a great deal of fish food and the cod come there by the millions to eat. They move about over the banks seeking the best feeding grounds for their pasture. Many of the cod fishermen are Scandinavians. They receive about 5 cents per fish for all over twenty-six inches long. Under that size they count two fish as one. The fishing is done in small boats and the fish are brought to the stations on the islands to be dressed and salted. The largest plant is on Unga Island, but the fishing extends as far west as Unimak. There are now between three and four thousand fishermen at work in the second district.

The third and fourth fishing districts are on the west and north sides of the territory. The third is known as Western Alaska and the fourth is Arctic Alaska. Western Alaska comprises all of our coast along Bering Sea, of the eastern and southern shores of a body of water one-third as large as the whole United States. It has all the waters north of the Aleutian Islands, including banks swarming with cod. It embraces Bristol Bay, where the salmon run into the streams by the tens of millions a year, the deltas of the Kuskokwim and Yukon Rivers, as well as the coast of Norton Sound and all the waters along Seward Peninsula to Cape Prince of Wales at Bering Strait. We have also an island in the middle of the strait about which some fishing is done.

As far as its fisheries are concerned, Western Alaska is next in importance to Southeastern Alaska. It has something like $14,000,000 invested in the industry, and the men employed are more than seven thousand. The seal fisheries are in the Pribilof Islands in the heart of this district.

As to Arctic Alaska, its fish product is so small that it is hardly worth noting. The commercial business is devoted mostly to whales, and the whaling is small in comparison with that of Southeastern Alaska, from where we get whalebones and the other products of that fish.

During my travels in Southeastern Alaska I have met a Mr. Patterson, who tells me that a great many silver salmon run up the Kobuk River every season. They begin running about July 20, and shortly after that you can see miles of salmon racks filled with the drying fish, which the Eskimos are laying up for the winter.

I asked Mr. Patterson as to the whales of the Arctic Ocean. He replied:

"We have the white whale, and that in great schools. The fish are fifteen feet or more long and the largest of them will weigh three or four tons. They are especially valuable for their skins, which sell for as high as 15 cents a pound when green. The whale meat is eaten by the natives. It is of a grayish color and full of oil."

As to the whaling industry of the rest of the territory, it is carried on in Southeastern Alaska and in Western Alaska. Some whaling is done by shore stations, and some by ships that go out from San Francisco and Seattle every season. The steamer Karluk, which went north with the Stefansson Arctic expedition, belonged to the San Francisco whaling fleet. The steamer Herman, another San Francisco ship, caught six bowhead whales in 1914 and took altogether about 10,000 pounds of whalebone, and the brigantine Jeannette, which went as far north as Point Barrow, on the Arctic Ocean, caught three whales, which yielded something like 2,500 pounds of bone. The Polar Bear of Seattle caught ten bowheads last season, and the steamer Belvedere, from the same port, took five.

THE shore whaling stations are operated by two companies. Both of these companies have steamers which they send out to shoot whales. Each vessel has a three-inch muzzle-loading gun on its bow. The projectile is attached to a heavy line that is fastened to a steam winch on the deck of the vessel. When the gun is shot, the projectile is supposed to go into the whale. It explodes and leaves a barbed harpoon in its flesh. The barb opens as the whale is struck, and it is thus caught by the wire rope, and can be played by means of a steam engine, the line being loosened and tightened as necessary. After the animal is dead drawn near to the vessel and then pumped up wit to prevent its sinking, and in this way is flo and towed to the shore station.

Upon the arrival at the station the whale is ha out on a platform and the blubber is chopped axes and then stripped off by means of a steam wi The whale is then cut up and cooked to get out the and the residue is used for fertilizer.

The best oil comes from the sperm whale, which a cavity in its head full of fat. A single sperm w is worth as much as $3,000. It will sometimes pro many barrels of valuable oil, the best of which for $20 per barrel. The cheaper grades sell for m less, the poorest bring only about $12 per ba Some of the whale meat is saved for cattle food. sells for $40 per ton. The fertilizers bring from to $27 a ton. Whale beef is said to be healthful palatable.

The salmon is by far the most important of the of Alaska. There are four kinds, all of which delicious. The largest and most valuable is the salmon, which has an average weight of twenty- pounds and sometimes weighs as high as 100 pou This is found in Southeastern Alaska in all month the year, and in May and June it runs up many of rivers to spawn. The next in size is the sock-ey red salmon, which is about a yard long and has average weight of five pounds. It is found all Alaska, and it runs chiefly from June until the mi of August. The silver or Coho salmon is not so v able on account of the paleness or light color o flesh. It weighs on the average about six pounds, runs later than the sock-eye. The humpback is smallest of our salmon. It is caught by the mill in Southeastern Alaska, and many of the canne depend upon it. It weighs up to eleven pounds. addition to these four species we have also the salmon, which is good for freezing, salting smoking, but poor for canning. This salmon is ship largely to Japan.

THE business of the Alaskan canneries is enorm I went through one in Ketchikan that will put seven and one-half million cans of salmon this y and, in addition, will freeze hundreds of thousands pounds to be sent in a frozen state to the East. T buildings of the cannery cover several acres, and fish are brought in by the boatloads and dumped by the thousand. When they reach the wharves t are so fresh that they are still kicking and t fairly fly through the "iron chink," a machine wh cleans each fish, cutting off its head, tail and fins a taking out its insides within the time of a watch ti It used to be that all this work was done by hand, a those hands were usually owned by a Chinam When the machine was invented to take the place the Chinaman, it was nicknamed the "iron chin and so it is known to this day. The inventor wa cook of Seattle named Smith, who made a fortune of his invention. His machine will clean 30,000 fish i run of ten hours, or as much as was formerly done fifty of the most expert Chinese. Nevertheless the wh

Hauling in a Salmon Trap (see opposite page) ich e is not much bigger around than dou barrel, and not more than eight ot i height. It consists of a number kn es so arranged by machinery that th fish fly in one knife cuts off the ad, and at the same time another op off the tail.

At he end the fish has been split and e b kbone taken out. The blood has en emoved and the salmon is ready t can. It is carefully inspected, wer, before being put into the can n who watch the stream of fish th make their way on over endless lts the chopper.

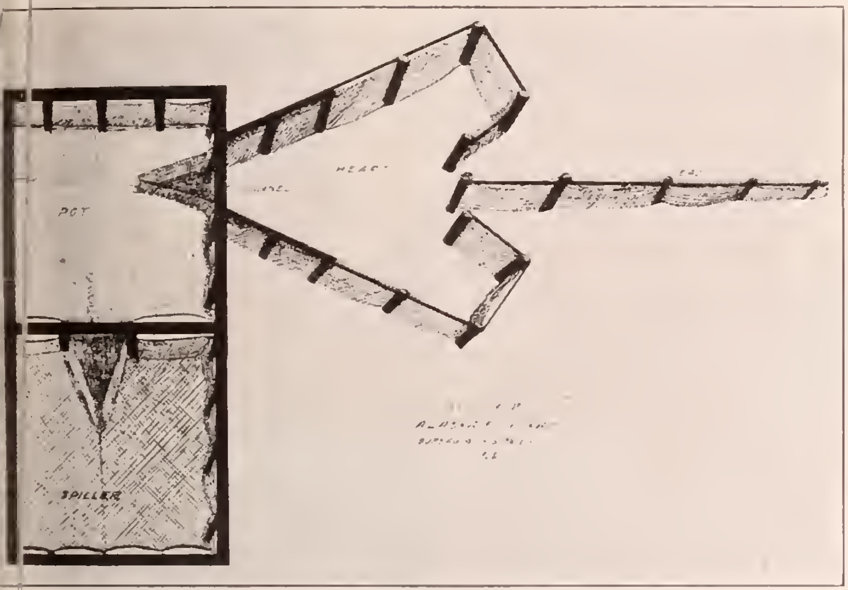
Th chopper is a second machine that to atically cuts the fish into pieces th right size for the can, and this in ch way that each can gets its own ar of the several parts of the fish. m st have some from the back and m from the belly in order to supply e eak of lean and the streak of fat, hic like bacon, is necessary to make e n of salmon just right. The ac he puts in just sixteen ounces, hic fills the can to the top. As the ns ove onward they pass through an to atic weighing machine, and if y re of light weight the machine op them out.

Af r this the cover of the can is tte on by machinery in such a way at t will allow the steam to escape, d e cans travel on into a furnace e aust box, where the temperature 21 degrees. After this another ma-hin makes the tops tight, without id r solder, and the cans are moved n o great retorts, where they are ol in a heat of 254 degrees for an ou and a half. When they come out they are ready to be labeled and packed in boxes for shipment to all parts of the world.

Catching the salmon and bringing them to the canneries is another great industry. There are certain weeks or months of the year during which these fish come from the ocean into the fresh waters of the rivers to spawn. They are born in fresh water, and the spawning grounds are often a thousand miles or more inland from the sea. I have seen them fighting their way up the Yukon 2,000 miles from its mouth at Bering Strait, and they may be found in great numbers climbing over the rocks of the streams that flow down the mountains of the coast into the Pacific.

The fish come in such hordes that they can be caught in traps both stationary and floating, in nets fastened to posts and stakes in the rivers and in seines which are brought from the beaches and the boats. They are also caught by fish wheels moved by the currents of the river in such a way that the net work of wire or cord on the ends of the wheels scoops up the fish as they swim against the current and fairly shovel them down into the boats. Fish wheels of this kind are to be seen here and there along the coast, and there are hundreds of them owned by the Indians along the Kuskokwim and Yukon Rivers. There are about 180 great fish traps in Southeastern Alaska, and some also in Bristol Bay and along Bering Sea. The fish caught in Bristol Bay last year were more than twenty million in number, and they all went into cans.

To be continued



There Are About 180 of these Great Fish Traps in Southeastern Alaska

"Dumdrudge"

NOT all the pulpit sentiment of Canada is warlike. Many pastors and laymen alike have gr n weary of the interminable con-fli which is draining the best blood an stilling the bravest hearts of the na ons—for what? In a volume of se nons just issued by the George H. D an Company, the Rev. John Mac-N l, of Toronto. one of the foremost pu it orators of Canada, deals with th great struggle for world power and ex ses the unspeakable immorality of m tacism. From Carlyle—also a war-ha r—he takes this illustration.

What, speaking in quite unofficial langu e, is the net purport and upshot of war? T my own knowledge, for example, there dw l and toil in the British village of D ndrudge, usually some five hundred souls. F n these there are selected, say, thirty ab-bodied men. Dumdrudge, at her own ex nse, has suckled and nursed them: she ha not without difficulty and sorrow, fed th n up to manhood, and even trained them to afts, so that one can weave, another build, a her hammer, and the weakest can stand u r thirty stone avoirdupois. Neverthele amid much weeping and swearing, they a selected; all dressed in red; and shipped a y, at the public charges, some two thousa l miles, or say only to the south of Spain; a fed there till wanted.

And now to that same spot in the south of S in are thirty similar French artisans, fr a French Dumdrudge, in like manner wending, till at length, after infinite effort, the two parties come into actual juxtaposition; and thirty stand fronting thirty, each with a gun in his hand.

"Straightway the word 'Fire!' is given, and they blow the souls out of one another, and in place of sixty brisk, useful craftsmen, the world has sixty dead carcases, which it must bury and anew shed tears for. Had these men any quarrel? Busy as the devil is, not the smallest. They lived far enough apart; were the entirest strangers; nay, in so wide a universe, some mutual helpfulness between them. How, then? Simpleton! Their governors had fallen out, and instead of shooting one another, had the cunning to make these poor blockheads shoot."

High treason against God, the sovereign power of the universe; an attempt to leap the throne of the Eternal; the assumption of authority that belongs to him alone—these are among Dr. MacNeill's characterizations of the struggle for world-power. The spiritual must be supreme, uniting and not dividing, constructive not destructive.

The nations will emerge from this war with a more profound sense of the value of human life, a new recognition of the great truth that every human being is created in the image of God, and that there are inalienable human rights that must be kept inviolate because man is what he is—a spiritual being, and not a mere plaything for kings or food for cannon.

TO MY Campbell's CONDENSED
VEGETABLE
SOUP
VALENTINE

"Here's the art that warms the heart
With sentiments most tender.
I'm sure 'twill play a potent part
In favor of the sender."

Yes, it goes to their hearts.

People who eat this wholesome Campbell "kind" as a part of their regular diet are bound to be brighter and happier for it as well as stronger, because good spirits go naturally with good digestion and health. And these are always promoted by

Campbell's Vegetable Soup

Beside the nourishing properties of a strong rich stock made from selected beef, this palatable soup contains such nutritious vegetables as white potatoes, sweet potatoes, carrots, small peas, tender corn, green okra and "baby" lima beans; to which are added "alphabet" macaroni, a snappy touch of red peppers and a delicious flavoring of parsley and celery.

No home kitchen could produce such a soup at anywhere near the price. Try it on your table today, and you'll never want to bother with home-made soup again.

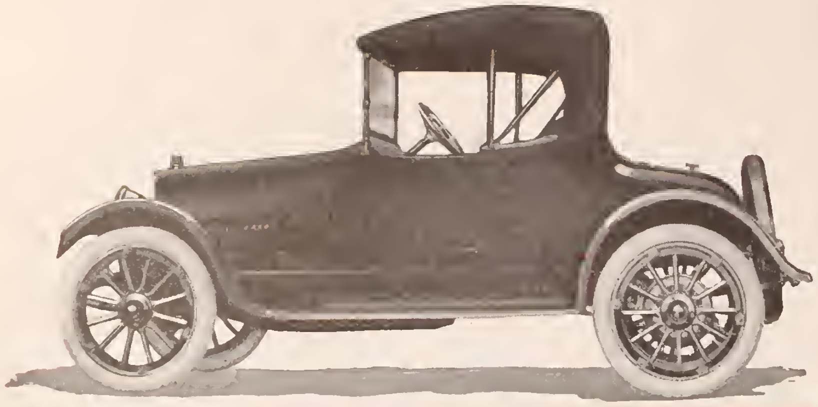
Your money back if not satisfied.

21 kinds 10c a can

Campbell's SOUPS

LOOK FOR THE RED-AND-WHITE LABEL

The New REO the Fifth
The Incomparable Four



The New REO 4-Cylinder Roadster

On the standard Reo the Fifth chassis and at the same price as the touring car model, this Roadster is one of the nattiest, classiest and roomiest cars of this type you'll see this season.

Note the graceful lines when the top is up—an effect much desired but difficult to obtain.

In stormy weather closes in as tightly and as cozily as a coupe. Instantly converted into an open roadster. Lots of room under rear—and dust-proof.

Body is similar in design to that of the new Reo Six roadster. Seats three full grown adults comfortably.

Your local Reo dealer will give you full specifications and show you the car.

Reo low maintenance cost is a feature of this model—one reason for the widespread and insistent demand.

Price, same as Reo the Fifth Touring Car

$875

The New REO"

If you were to ask us what, in our opinion, is the most vital informati say "How to secure one". ¶ Only way is to place your ord annals of Reo—and over-demand is the normal condition with u your order must be in your local Reo dealer's hands at once. ¶ isn't a moment to lose. Make it a genuine order—pay him a deposi you. Do that and you'll be sure of your Reo. Today won't

The New REO "SIX" Roadster

We Reo Folk are just a little conceited about this model—we think it sets a new standard not only in value but in appearance.

It's a genuine four-passenger roadster, too.

Driver's seat is located several inches forward of the main seat. This latter accommodates two liberally, and without interfering with the driver.

Then there is an auxiliary seat which folds neatly under the cowl when only three are present—but when needed for a fourth is ready on the instant.

We experimented with various "clover leaf" and other types but finally decided on this body as being at the same time the most comfortable, practical and graceful in outward appearance.

Output of these roadster models is limited and demand—seems—almost unlimited. Your order must be in your Reo dealer's hands well in advance of date you want your roadster delivered.

$1250

l give you about Reo cars—any model—at this time, we would ediately. ¶ Demand is tremendous — unprecedented even in the d have your Reo when you'll want it, for early spring delivery lotment and can promise you a definite date of delivery. ¶ There e cannot, in fairness to his other customers, reserve a Reo for o soon. Reo Motor Car Co., Lansing, Michigan.

Physical Victory!

What Does It Mean to You?

It means that you can be Strong Vigorous — full of Life and Energy—Realize The Best Within Yourself for yourself, your family and friends.

You can be free from Chronic Ailments.
You can have a Clear Skin.
You can have a Good Figure.

You Can Weigh What You Should Weigh

I no longer need to say what "I can do," but what "I HAVE DONE". I have helped 75,000 of the most cultured, intelligent women of America to arise to their very best—why not you?

No Drugs—No Medicines

My pupils simply comply with Nature's Laws.

I think I do not exaggerate when I say I have built up the vitality and strength of more women during the past eleven years than any ten physicians—the most progressive physicians are my friends—their wives and daughters are my pupils—the medical magazines advertise my work.

I am at my desk from 8 A. M. to 5 P. M. personally supervising my work. When in Chicago come to see me.

My work has grown in favor because results are quick, natural and permanent, and because they are scientific and appeal to common sense. Fully one-third of my pupils are sent to me by those who have finished my work.

I have published a free booklet showing how to stand and walk correctly, and giving other information of vital interest to woman. You can judge what I can do for you by what I have done for others.

If you are perfectly well and your figure is just what you wish, you may be able to help a dear friend—at least you will help me by your interest in this great movement for perfect health, greater culture, refinement and beauty in woman. Won't you join us?

Expressing Poise—Balance—Ease

Sit down and write to me NOW. Don't wait—you may forget it. I have had a wonderful experience, and I should like to tell you about it.

SUSANNA COCROFT
Dept. 18, 624 Michigan Avenue, Chicago

The fact that Miss Cocroft has advertised in this magazine for 14 years is evidence that she accomplishes what she claims. Rand McNally & Co. have just published her new book, "Beauty a Duty." For sale at all booksellers. Beautifully bound.

Send Us Your Old Carpets
We Dye Them and Weave
Velvety Rugs

Beautiful new rugs in plain, fancy or Oriental patterns — any color you want, any size—totally different and far superior to other rugs woven from old carpets.

Rugs, $1.00 and Up

Reversible, seamless, soft, bright, durable rugs, guaranteed to wear 10 years. Money back if not satisfied. Every order completed in three days.

You Save 1-2

Your old carpets are worth money, no matter how badly worn.

FREE Write for book of designs in color, our liberal freight payment offer and full information.

OLSON RUG CO.
Dept. A-30. 40 Laflin St., Chicago, Ill.

GIGANTIC TOMATO
SEEDS FREE

Here is the king of all Tomatoes, largest and most productive, fruit often weighing 2 to 3 lbs., each, and 100 to 150 lbs. have been grown on one plant. Handsome red color, very smooth, few seeds, solid all through, ripens early. A few plants will produce more Tomatoes than a family can use.

Our Special Offer

We want every person who uses seeds to see our 1916 Seed Book and try this Giant Climbing Tomato. We will send a sample packet in a 10c coupon envelope for trial, with Seed Book Free. This Book describes the best Vegetables, Fruits and Flowers. Send your address today.

MILLS SEED HOUSE, Dept. 25, Rose Hill, New York

Our Relief Work in Austria

WE have received from the Christian Herald Relief Committee in Vienna a report of the work accomplished by the committee up to the middle of December, 1915, among the war widows and orphans in thirteen provinces, where the extensive suffering called forth the utmost energies of the workers. The committee's report is notable in respect of the large work actually done with comparatively limited resources, and also from the fact that the administrative expenses of distributing a total of 72,590.79 kronen ($14,518) was only 399.79 kronen ($79.80)—a phenomenally low rate, which speaks volumes for the generosity of the managers and workers in bearing their own burdens, instead of making them a charge upon the relief fund. The official report of the committee is given below.

Besides this report we print below in part a letter from a correspondent, one of many such received by us each year. It is because we know from our experience that great numbers of our readers wish us to keep them informed on the worthiest objects of their charity that we announce again and again the continuance of this fund for the Relief of the Widows and Orphans of the War in Europe. The destitution and the helplessness of these miserable multitudes must awaken pity in us all. Let all who can continue to send their help, and we will see that your gifts go forward with all possible expedition, to be distributed by one or another of the committees now working in practically all of the war-smitten sections of Europe.

"Vienna, Dec. 15, 1915.

THE undersigned board of the Austrian Assistance Committee of the Christian Herald of New York take the liberty to submit herewith the accounting of the amounts of 55,555 kronen and 16,037 kronen received, together with the accrued interests, amounting to 998.79 kronen, total. 72,590.79 kronen, for the relief of widows and orphans of men killed in the war.

"According to this accounting, 834 needy widows received from various provinces (see attached list) a total amount of 72.191 kronen; 399.79 kronen were needed for various expenses.

"The undersigned board ascertained with sincere satisfaction that with these amounts many a great sorrow has been mitigated, as can be seen from the words of thanks received from the beneficiaries; and the board also takes the liberty of sending heartiest and most sincere thanks in the name of all these unfortunate ones. At the same time, the board would also venture to hope that it might be possible for the Christian Herald to assist the Austrian committee with further contributions, as there are still just as many applications unprovided for, owing to the lack of available means. These applications come from women and families worthy of pity, in the most beautiful provinces of Austria Carinthia, Salzburg, Styria an Austria—whose providers foug true courage, devotion and priv their country against the new in the southeast of our monarc had the misfortune to lose their

"In view of the great need wh vails in these provinces among t lies of the fallen ones, the und board respectfully pleads, in the those worthy of pity, for further

"In this expectation, and wit pression of most sincere grati subscribes itse with, The Boar Austrian Relie mittee of the C Herald of Ne in Vienna.

(Signed) J. The Vice P
(Signed) Karl Se
Gustav Kaetf
Treasurer.

Christian friends, in your charity "ye have done it unto such as these"

List of Paym

Bohemia	307
Moravia	38
Saxonia	1
Silesia	62
Triest	1
Tyrol	125
Bukowina	3
Carinthia	123
Salzburg	6
Upper Austria	102
Lower Austria	32
Carniola	7
Styria	27
	834

"The vouche the copies refer the above will mitted after the end of the w your notice and examination."

A Generous Gift to Charity

Mr. Alexander Redford, a rea this journal in Texas, has forwa the Christian Herald a draft fo with the request that it be appo as follows:

Widows and Orphans of the Eur pean War	15
China Orphan Fund	100
Bowery Mission	100

Additional Gifts for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the Wa

Miscellaneous Amounts

Mr. & Mrs. J. H. Rickel, $4.00; Pomeroy Mather, $6.00; Maria E. Dewey, $4.00; H. V. Lawless, & T. B. Stewart, $6.00; Chas. M. Henley & Friend, $6.00; Millard A. Coiner, $4.00; J. E. Eckert, $2.55; Sackrider People, Hart, Mich., $6.50; Mrs. E. Eggleston, $1.25; Mrs. E. G. Smith, $7.00.

Gift of $25.00

Mrs. W. P. Welcher.

Gifts of $15.00 Each

A Friend, Columbus, Ohio; ——, Galena, Ill., E. W. Miller; The Bowman Family; R. E.; Mrs. Addie Birchkelbow.

Gifts of $10.00 Each

C. A. Hagaman; A Providence, R. I., Friend; Mrs. L. A. Lelean; Wilbur F. Newhall; Miss Maud L. Miller; M. L. H.; David H. Harris; A Friend, Soudan, Minn.; Geo. Ravn; E. W. Farnham; Elizabeth E. Grime; Lowell M. Welles; A Friend, Worcester, Mass.; Mary J. Snyder; Mrs. L. B. Fletcher; Mrs. Jas. Anderson, Mr & Mrs. Chas. Glattly; Mr. & Mrs. C. E Hinckley; Miss Mary A. Kelken; Mrs. Chas. Aldrich; A. A. S.; Robt. E. Johnson.

Gifts of $5.00 Each

S. C., Iowa; H. A. Watkins; Harry McBride; Mr. & Mrs. Frank; S. Mills; D. C. Scarborough; Mrs. Albina G. Hilton; Mrs. W. D. McKinstry; W. R. Minter; Henry Leyh; F. E. Knight; Mrs. H. H. Kirkpatrick; Anna E. Walker; ——, Holdingford, Minn.; Mrs. Walter Nunn; Ethel May Dunlop; C. H. Johnson; Ada & Ida M. Reed; T. J. Toliver; Friends, Fort Wayne, Ind.; A. S. Judy; Mrs. Theo. Carlson; Alma Donithen; William Wilson; Mrs. J. A. Hardy; Wm. Aurlie; Wm. N. Bowers; Wesley & G. W. Mumaw & F. E. Tucker; An Old Subscriber, Cleveland, Ohio; W. S. Shinn; S. W. Hamblen; Mrs. Susan J. Johnston; Robt. L. Freeman; Roy Hubbs; Evelyn M. Gardiner; Mrs. E. P. Anderson; C. L. Taggart; "Virginia"; Simms Family; F. C. Errington; A Friend, Tiffin, Ohio; ——, Augusta, Ga.

Gifts of $3.00 Each

——, Ellenburgh Center, N. Y.; Mrs Thornton Hughes; Elsie A. Jones; Mrs. Jane D. Morse & Family; E. A. Barber; J. F. Reinhardt; Miss Minnie Clewell; A Friend, Lyons, Kansas; Mr. & Mrs. Daniel Humlich; Mrs. G. W. Rhoads.

E. P. Savage; Mrs. Ida E. Wood; C. E. Soc., East Brentwood, N. H.; Jane R. Williams; E. M. Tubbs; Mrs. J. M. Tillotson; Miss Margaret Pritchard; Mrs. J. G. Cook; John Marty; Mrs. John Unterkircher; Mrs. E. Stebbins; Children's Meeting, "Stough Campaign," Buffalo, N. Y.

Gifts of $2.50 Each

Miss N L. Hooker; S. W. Hoffman.

Gifts of $2.00 Each

A Reader of the C. H., New Richmond, Wis.; Mrs. Peter Richard; R. C. Donnell; Mrs. Harriet Tucker; C. A. Fairchild; Mrs. Anna Miles; Mrs. W. A. MacCart; Isaiah Roosa; Lillian M. Benton; A Friend, Rochester Mills, Pa.; Mary Andrews; Mrs. H. Jeffery; Miss Elizabeth W. Price; Thos. G. Donaldson; Minnie Roush; Julia H. O'Neal; Iva M. Thomas; A China Missionary; Effie N. Lason; E. J. Solt; A Friend, Norwich, Conn.; Mr. & Mrs. E. G. L.; ——, Macomb, Ill.; Mrs. E. Umlaudt; R. Hodgman; Mrs. W. A. Carlton; ——, Coupeville, Wash.; F. C. Boodleson; J. Grover; C. Knipple; A Friend, Newberry, Pa.; Geo Lee; Mrs. Everett Paullin; H. G. Osgood.

May Buckelew; Mrs. Thomas Fuller; Mrs. W. M. Browning; Mrs. A. C. Ferguson; Mrs. A. L. Beggs; Jas. Huddleson; Mrs. L. H. Brisbine; Mrs. Thos. Richardson and Miss Janet Davidson; J. L.; Anna Wilson; Mrs. A. R. Sayre; Mrs. John E. Stewart; Mrs. Mary M. Johnson; Mrs. Anna N. Chandler; A Friend, Newberg, Ore.; Mrs. B. L. Peacock; Mrs. A. P. Warren; Mrs. J. P. Forden; Mrs. J. W. Stokes; A Friend, Turlock, Calif.; Mrs. Aug. Ulrich; Mrs. A. W. Giddens; S. V. W.; Mrs. Florence L. Smith; Mrs. Geo. Pierce; A Friend, Deer Park, Md.; Miss Charlotte C. Barbour; S. M. Miller; Michael Shipe; Mrs. R. Peckham; A Subscriber's Wife, Oblong, Ill.

Gifts of $1.50 Each

G. Tepmann; Wilhelmine Olsen; John Trimble Thanksgiving offering, Boydville, Ga.; Mrs. Walter Norton; Mrs. Grace M. Hoover.

Gifts of $1.00 Each

Sarah Huston; A Friend, Summit Hill, Pa.; Mrs Julia Ayres; Mrs. T. A.; Mrs. C. M. Thompson; A Friend, Rock Elm, Wis.; Marinus Pedersen; Lida Cunningham — Bolton, N. Y.; Maria Bymar; Cl Allemang; Miss E. Van Arsdale; Berbimple; C. A. Peterson; A Luzerne, Pa.; Jennie Trautvetter; A Subscriber, Ft. Plains, N. Y.; Mrs. I Haines; Agnes Stevens; E. T. Dalton F. Weaver; J. B. Haas & Son; Mrs. B sor; Mrs. J. C. Schwester; Mrs. A Moffit; Mrs. D. C. Whitehill; In His Little Compton, R. I.; S. M. E.; Edward Whitney; M. A. Larrabee; Schwartz; C. H. S., Skaneateles, N. Christian Herald Reader, Porstsmou Mrs. Howard Murray; Mrs. Marian Mrs. E. Salkeld; S. M. Van Wagenen Geo. A. Clark; Cynthia I. Graves; Name, Line Lexington, Pa.; Jr. C. E. S Dover, Okla.; Mrs. Thomas Davis; A. D E. H. Bowie; Mrs. L. B. Evans; E. G. W. ney, Vt.; F. C. Staples; Mrs. W. C. St J. W. Worcester; A Friend of the Unfor Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Minnie Emmel; E Adams; C. L. Spring; One Who Lo C. H., Webb City, Mo.; Member o Presby. Church, Columbia, Tenn.; J Brown; C. M. Cotton; W. L. Zalman Reid; Mrs. Em. Eliza Ober; A Friend C. H., Humboldt, Kans.; Jas. D. Ja Friend, East Haven, Conn.; Little B Club, Paul Smiths, N. Y.; M. Larder S. Kempton; Mrs. C. W. Blymyer; Name, Battle Creek, Mich.; ——, Lyon, Mich.; Mrs. Callie Baker; Distin; A Subscriber, Dorchester, Ma Friend, McBain, Mich.; Rev. H. McC. win; S. D. Chaplain; Mrs. Helen Milh Mrs. Jennie David; T. R. F., Terra Al Va.; Glenn Fox; Mrs. Grace E. Senior Marie F. Sharp; M. W. Windsor; A Morrisville, N. Y.; New Subscriber, On N. Y.; Mrs. C. W. Henderson; C. M.

A Friend, Keyser, W. Va.; Ella John G. Michael; "In His Name," Cl Ill.; Ellen Simkin; A Friend, Troy, Mrs. A. E. P., M. C. B.; W. M. True; Manhattan, Kans.; John Crozier; Durrell; Mrs. Sarver; Mrs. Cary Berr

Gifts of 50 Cents Each

Mrs. & Miss Overton; Ethel Beatrice Dewey; Miss Carrie A. Davis

Gifts of 25 Cents Each

Oscar J. Renshaw; Wm. R. Hasel ——, Cruso, N. C.

Additional acknowledgments will f

For Evangelization of Latin-America

E Congress on Christian Work in atin America convenes at the ty of Panama, on February 10, a en-day session. The purpose of Cgress is:

"Fst. To obtain a more accurate itu knowledge of the history, oules, achievements and ideals of e pples so closely associated in their sins and social life.

"Sond. To reveal the fact that esepuntries may mutually serve one othr by contributing the best in eir ivilizations to each other's life.

"Trd. To discover and devise means coect such defects and weaknesses chracter as may be hindering the ow of those nations.

"Furth. To unite in a common rpe to strengthen the moral, social d eligious forces that are now orkg for the betterment of these untes, and to create the desire for esehings where absent.

"Fh. To discover the underlying incles upon which true national osprity and stability depend, and to nsier ways and means by which eseprinciples may be put in action d ade effective."

Th spirit of the Congress is expressed th paragraph quoted from the proedigs of the Committee on Arrangeent "This committee strongly comends that those who are akg arrangements for the Panama oness, as well as all writers and ea rs at the Congress, bear in mind at the best and most lasting results e be obtained, while frankly facing ora and spiritual conditions which ll or missionary work in Latin mea, and while presenting the osp which we hold as the only leqte solution of the problems which os conditions present, it shall be the irpe of the Panama Congress to coize all the elements of truth and odess in any form of religious faith. ur pproach to the people shall be eitr critical nor antagonistic, but spd by the teachings and example of hri and that charity which thinketh o il and rejoiceth not in iniquity, t joiceth in the truth."

T invitation to the eonference ad as follows: "All communions or ga zations which accept Jesus Christ ivine Saviour and Lord, and the ol Scriptures of the Old and New esment as the Revealed Word of odand whose purpose is to make the ill Christ prevail in Latin America, e ordially invited to participate in e Panama Congress, and will be early welcomed." Notwithstanding e discussions which marked the aoing of delegates by the Protestant pipal Church, the Congress is not ielf an attack upon Catholicism. Delates from the Catholic Church ou be welcomed at the conference, hi aims only to seek out the facts galing ignorance, superstition and n South America, and to find what ia be done to meet these conditions, t name of the Saviour. On January 4 ore than fifty denominations and itdenominational agencies had exresy commissioned delegates to the onrence. Those in charge of the rragements for the Congress ask ha every Christian pray each day for he Congress, because "only the mind hin was in Jesus Christ can create n is great gathering the spirit and ener which are necessary, if it is to chve the results for which those h have initiated and planned the o ress have labored unselfishly and ntingly."

I an address at Garden City, on aiary 12, Mr. Robert E. Speer said f is Congress that it is based upon xiing facts; that churches now have h missions in Latin America and ha it was the evangelical churches of a America who asked for this orrence. He said also that hundreds f housands, even millions of men xi in Latin America who are not onected with any church, but that ma of these are men who have deeply on heir heart the moral and spiritual ne s of their own people; that some of th men are responsible for the x ence of our missions in Latin America. It was President Sarmiento who invited the Methodists to start the first normal schools in Argentina. The Presbyterian Church missions in Guatemala were established at the urgent request of President Barrios, who offered to pay the expenses of the missionary. The work in Bolivia was likewise at the request and with the assistance of the government. Speaking of the churches in South American countries which he had visited, he said that in every field there were tens of thousands of men and women who had no church connection, and who were like sheep scattered abroad having no shepherd, and that even among nominal Christians there were millions without the Bible and multitudes to whom the religion of the New Testament was unknown. It is in the interests of these that delegates have been gathered in this Congress at Panama.

The proceedings of the Congress will be fully reported for the Christian Herald by Mr. Willard Price, editor of the World Outlook.

◆

Lincoln and the New American

Continued from page 156

win a place in the world's esteem; sometimes, like Novelli, they study Lincoln and shape their lives after his great teachings. But sometimes the little aliens who come hopefully to our land do not hear of Lincoln. Sometimes they shape their careers and characters after less worthy patterns. Sometimes it's the popular prize-fighter with the cord-like muscles and the round bullet head; sometimes it's the thickset millowner—the man with the dollars—that they look up to. Sometimes it's the hurried person, swamped in business, who hasn't time to smile at the little wistful-eyed boy from whom he buys his paper. Sometimes it's you that he models the clay—the clay of his life—after. Sometimes it's you! Are you worthy of the great responsibility?

JAMES NOVELLI is now working at his head of Lincoln. It's a very wonderful head, I think. It rises out of a rough heap of carving, a perfect, finished likeness. But somehow, looking at it, one does not see exactly the Lincoln that so many sculptors have fashioned. As one looks into the deep-set, dreaming eyes—as one sees the large mouth—firm, but tenderly firm—as one sees the sadness, and yet the promise and the more than victory of the noble rough-hewn face, one visions a new Lincoln. It is the Lincoln of an emigrant boy who caught his first impression of a new country through a mist of dreams, and fashioned his conception of its people after their greatest man.

◆

Called Higher

PAUL B. HUSTON, Olympia, Wash., Mrs. Sarah C. Wise, Marion, Iowa, 74 years. Mrs. Emily Kenyon, Galena, Ohio, 82 years: Mrs. John Pettigrew, Joliet, Ill., Mrs. Eura Ellis, Shannon City, Iowa, 84 years Mrs. Eliza J. Bellows, Good Ground, L. I.; Mr. William H. DeMass, Lambertsville, N. J.; Mrs. Charles Hagen, Middleboro, Mass., 91 years; H. W. Murray Lauraville, Md., 93 years: Edward Taylor, Gaffney, S. C., 66 years; Margaret G. Butler, Philadelphia Pa., 94 years; Mrs. Elizabeth A. Lake, Muskegon, Mich., 82 years; Mrs. Sarah M Lindsay, Evanston, Ill., 80 years; Mr. W. H. Eldridge, New Britain, Conn.; James Powell Huntington, L. I., 90 years; Mrs. Emily Hiorns, Schenectady, N. Y., 71 years; William C. Reiff, Carlsbad, N. M., 68 years; Mrs. L. R. D. Ramath, Grimes, Calif., 91 years; Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Crane, Bradford, Mass.; George W. Rabby, Coden, Ala.; Mrs. M. C. Salmon, Rock Ledge, Fla., 58 years.

◆

AN INCITEMENT TO BIBLE STUDY

I AM planning to make my grandson, a boy of sixteen, a present of a subscription to the Christian Herald, and one of the greatest inducements in selecting your paper is the hope that the "Bible Picture Study Contest" will give him more interest in Bible study.

Natick, Mass. MRS. H. J. S.

Concentration

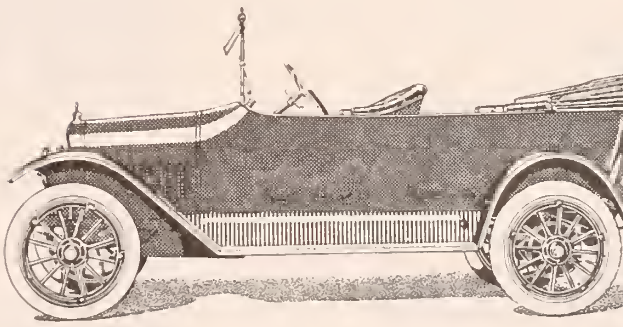
"MAN is not born to solve the problems of the universe, but to find out what he has to do and to restrain himself within the limits of his comprehension."

So spoke one of the world's greatest philosophers. And the same immortal truth has been echoed down the centuries.

Notably, in this era of specialization, the greatest awards are to those who concentrate on a single aim and accomplish it with exceeding skill.

Maxwell Motor Cars are products of concentration. They are built by organized specialists, whose collective aim is the creation of a car of such excellence that we can be justly proud to trade-mark and brand it with our name.

The achievement of this aim is facilitated by the great volume of business necessary to make a low price possible. Thus we "restrain ourselves within the limits of our comprehension," by evolving a car of character that will capably serve a wise and economical public.



One Chassis, Five Body Styles

Two-Passenger Roadster	$635
Five-Passenger Touring Car . . .	655
Touring Car (with All Weather Top)	755
Two-Passenger Cabriolet	865
Six-Passenger Town Car	915

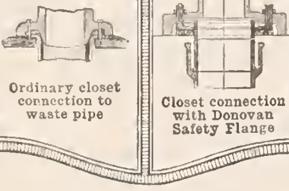
Full equipment, including Electric Starter and Lights. All prices F. O. B. Detroit.

Maxwell

MOTOR COMPANY, DETROIT, MICHIGAN

How 250,000 People Bought Pianos & Organs

LINCOLN said, "You can trust the collective judgment of the people; when many people agree upon a thing it is pretty certain to be right." A most impressive example of this is found in the fact that more than 250,000 people have chosen "The Cornish Plan" of buying pianos and organs. This is the plan which was inaugurated years ago by a famous maker of pianos and organs, the late Joseph B. Cornish, and carried out today by Senator Johnston Cornish and Joseph B. Cornish, 2nd. Under the operation of this plan the purchaser is enabled to save $100 to $150 on a piano and as much as $50 on an organ. These figures mean a stupendous aggregate saving, and, therefore, a great service rendered to the music-loving public by this noted family of piano and organ builders. Further, when you investigate "The Cornish Plan" you will find that it affords you easy terms; in fact, any arrangement for payment satisfactory to you; and the plan gives you a year's trial of your piano—with your satisfaction guaranteed or all your money refunded. All of which shows how important it is for you to get "The Cornish Plan" and see just what it offers you in your individual case before you decide on any instrument. If you will write to Johnston Cornish, President of the Cornish Company, Washington, New Jersey, and ask for "The Cornish Book" (mentioning Christian Herald), he will send you the famous Cornish plan, and piano information that will prove invaluable to you no matter what make of instrument you may decide on later. Just address—Johnston Cornish, Dept. C. H., Washington, N. J.



Ordinary closet connection to waste pipe
Closet connection with Donovan Safety Flange

How to Avoid Sewer Gas Dangers

You can't smell sewer gas, it's odorless. But the ordinary connection of closet to waste pipe soon permits it to leak. With closets equipped with the Donovan Safety Flange, the leak can be detected instantly, any time, and a half turn of a screw makes the joint tight again.

Our booklet, "The Dangers of Sewer Gas," tells how to get a closet fitted with a Donovan Safety Flange. Send for it. It's Free. Dept. G

The Trenton Potteries Co.
Trenton, N. J.

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE

To try in your own home 30 days free, no matter where you live. Show your friends. Send it back at our expense if you do not want to keep it. Hundreds of thousands in daily use. Perfect bakers, efficient heaters, made of high grade material, beautifully finished, smooth design, guaranteed for years by our Two Million Dollar Bond.

Ask your dealers to show you Hoosier Stoves. Write for our big free book showing photographs, describing large assortment of sizes and designs to select from, explaining our free trial. Send postal today. Write your name and address plainly. No obligations.

HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, Ind.

There Goes Your Shade!

That's the bother of unreliable Shade Rollers. Now, Hartshorn Shade Rollers never sneak up after once being pulled down, or creep down after being raised, or refuse to move. It really pays—10,000,000 homes have proved it pays—to look when you buy shade rollers for this signature:

Stewart Hartshorn

No tacks needed with Hartshorn Improved Rollers. Cost only a few cents more than the poorest. Send today for free book "How to Get the Best Service From Your Shade Rollers."

Stewart Hartshorn Co., Dp. 37 E. Newark, N. J

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS

A Voice in the Wilderness

BY GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL LUTZ

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

MARGARET EARLE, school teacher and "tenderfoot," mistaking a water stop for her station, was left behind on the desert plain of Arizona. A passing half-drunken rancher told her that her station was twenty miles away. She started to go to the rancher's camp, but she found his company less desirable than loneliness. The rancher reported his erstwhile passenger to his wife and the eight men in the bunk house. One of them was young and "different." It was a subtle difference that they all felt unconsciously and that kept them in some awe of "the Kid," as they called him. The Boy saddled two horses and went in search of the girl. He found her, reassured her, set her on a horse and returned with her to the ranchhouse. On the way, Margaret and the Boy talked of the wonders of the Arizona night, and she discovered in him an indefinable something that she could not penetrate. The first sight of the bunk house was not very reassuring, but the Boy had told her that "Mom" Wallis would look after her and there was no alternative but the desert. The Boy left her at her boarding-house late the next afternoon, but left with her promise to see him again. Afterward she met the Rev. Frederick West and a dog. She liked the dog. Margaret and the dog and "Bud" Tanner, the son of the house, became fast friends. "Bud" gave all the help needed in the important business of getting settled, and the Rev. Mr. West found his help unnecessary and the road to better acquaintance somewhat difficult. Margaret showed a decided preference for Bud's company. They inspected the school together after she had dismissed the minister, and Bud gave Margaret a detailed description of her school, especially emphasizing the leadership of "Delicate" Forbes and Jed Brower.

CHAPTER X

THE minister did not appear until late in the evening after Margaret had gone to her room, for which she was sincerely thankful. She could hear his voice fretful and complaining as he called loudly for Bud to take the horse. It appeared he had lost his way and wandered many miles out of the trail. He blamed the country for having no better trails, and the horse for not being able to find his way better. Mr. Tanner was gone to bed, but Mrs. Tanner bustled about and tried to comfort him.

"Now that's too bad! Dearie me! Bud oughta hev gone with you, so he ought. Bud! Oh, Bud! you ain't gone to sleep yet, hev you? Wake up and come down and take this horse to the barn."

But Bud declined to descend. He shouted some sleepy directions from his loft where he slept and said the minister could look after his own horse, he "wasn't a-gon'ta!" there was "plenty corn in the bin."

The minister grumbled his way to the barn, highly incensed at Bud, and disturbed the calm of the evening view of Margaret's mountain by his complaints when he returned. He wasn't accustomed to handling horses, and he thought Bud might have stayed up and attended to it himself. Bud chuckled in his loft and stole down the back kitchen roof while the minister ate his late supper. Bud would never leave the old horse to that amateur's tender mercies, but he didn't intend to make it easy for the amateur. Margaret, from her window seat watching the night in the darkness, saw Bud slip off the kitchen roof and run to the barn, and she smiled to herself. She liked that boy. He was going to be a good comrade.

The Sabbath morning dawned brilliantly, and to the homesick girl there suddenly came a sense of desolation on waking. A strange land was this without church bells or sense of Sabbath fitness. The mountain, it is true, greeted her with a holy light of gladness, but mountains are not dependent upon humankind for being in the spirit on the Lord's day. They are "continually praising him." Margaret wondered how she was to get through this day—this dreary first Sabbath away from her home and her Sabbath school class, and her dear old church with father preaching. She had been away, of course, a great many times before, but never to a churchless community. It was beginning to dawn upon her that that was what Ashland was—a churchless community. As she recalled the walk to the school and the ride through the village she had seen nothing that looked like a church, and all the talk had been of the missionary. They must have services of some sort, of course, and probably her fellow boarder was to preach, but her heart turned sick at thought of listening to him.

She drew a deep sigh and looked at her watch. It was late. At home the early Sabbath school bells would be ringing, and little girls in white with bunches of late fall flowers for their teachers, and holding hands with their little brothers, would be hurrying down the street. Father was in his study going over his morning sermon, and mother putting her little pearl pin in her collar getting ready to go to her Bible class. Margaret decided it was time to get up and stop thinking of it all.

She put on a little white dress that she wore to church at home and hurried down to discover what were the family plans for the day, but found to her dismay that the atmosphere below stairs was just like that of other days. Mr. Tanner sat tilted back in a dining-room chair reading the weekly paper. Mrs. Tanner was bustling in with hot corn bread. Bud was on the front door steps teasing the dog, and the minister came in with an air of weariness upon him as if he quite intended taking it out on his companions that he had experienced a trying time on Saturday. He did not look in the least like a man who expected to preach in a few minutes. He declined to eat his egg because it was cooked too hard, and poor Mrs. Tanner had to try it twice before she succeeded in producing a soft-boiled egg to suit him. Only the radiant outline of the great mountain which Margaret could see over the minister's head looked peaceful and Sabbath-like.

"What time do you have service?" Margaret asked as she rose from the table.

"Service?" It was Mr. Tanner who echoed her question as if he did not quite know what she meant.

Mrs. Tanner raised her eyes from her belated breakfast, with a worried look like a hen stretching her neck about to see what she ought to do next for the comfort of the chickens under her care. It was apparent that she had no comprehension of what the question meant. It was the minister who answered, condescendingly:

"Um! Ah! There is no church edifice here, you know, Miss Earle. The mission station is located some miles distant."

"I know," said Margaret, "but they surely have some religous service?"

"I really don't know," said the minister loftily, as if it were something wholly beneath his notice.

"Then you are not going to preach this morning!" In spite of herself there was relief in her tone.

"Most certainly not," he replied stiffly. "I came out here to rest, and I selected this place largely because it was so far from a church. I wanted to be where I should not be annoyed by requests to preach. Of course, ministers from the East would be a curiosity in these Western towns, and I should really get no rest at all if I had gone where my services would have been in constant demand. When I came out here I was in much the condition of our friend the minister of whom you have doubtless heard. He was starting on his vacation and he said to a brother minister with a smile of joy and relief: 'No preaching, no praying, no reading of the Bible for six whole weeks!' "

"Indeed!" said Margaret freezingly. "No, I am not familiar with ministers of that sort."

She turned with dismissal in her manner and appealed to Mrs. Tanner.

"Then you really have no Sabbath service of any sort whatever in town?" There was something almost tragic in her face. She stood aghast at the prospect before her.

Mrs. Tanner's neck stretched up a little longer, and her lips dropped apart in her attempt to understand the situation. One would scarcely have prised to hear her say "Cut-c daw-cut," so fluttered did she

Then up spoke Bud.

"We gotta Sunday schoo There was pride of possession tone and a kind of triumph over ister, albeit Bud had abjured school since his early infancy. ready now, however, to be offer altar of Sunday school, even would please the new teacher— the minister. "I'll take you wanta go." He looked defiant minister as he said it.

But at last Mrs. Tanner se grasp what was the matter.

"Why!—why!—why!—You preaching service!" she cluc "Why, yes, Mr. West, woul be fine? You could preach for could have it posted up at th and the crossings, and out a both trails, and you'd have crowd. They'd come from ov camp, and up the canyon w roundabouts. They'd do you they surely would, Mr. West. could have the schoolhouse for a house. Pa, there, is one of t board. There wouldn't be trouble——"

"Um! Ah! Mrs. Tanner, I as it's quite out of the question. I I was here for absolute rest. I think of preaching. Besides, it' my principles to preach witho neration. It's a wrong idea. T man is worthy of his hire, yo Mrs. Tanner, the Good Boo

Mr. West's tone took on righteous inflection.

"Oh! Ef that's all, that'u right!" she said with relief. could take up a collection. T would be real generous. They are when any show comes They'd appreciate it, you know, like fer Miss Earle here to h preach. It'ud be a real treat to being a preacher's daughter a She turned to Margaret for sup that young woman was talking She had promptly closed with to take her to Sunday school, she hurried away to get ready, Mrs. Tanner to make her cle rangements without aid.

West was still endeavoring to the Tanners with the importan late charge in the East as M came down stairs. His pompo raised to favor the deafness took for granted in Mr. Tanne reached her ears.

"I couldn't, of course, think it every Sunday, you understa wouldn't be fair to myself nor which I have just left, but of c there were sufficient induce might consent to preach some before I leave."

Mrs. Tanner's little satisfie was quite audible as the girl cl front door and went out to the Bud.

THE Sunday school was a affair, presided over by an and very illiterate man, who nu elbows and rubbed his chin medi between the slow questions w read out of the lesson leaf. The who taught the children was call to nurse a sick neighbor and the were huddled together in a group. The singing was poor a whole of the exercises dreary, in the prayer. The few women sat and stared in a kind of aw visitor, half belligerently, as if s an intruder. Bud lingered the door and finally disappeare gether, reappearing when the last was sung. Altogether the new felt exceedingly homesick as she her way back to the Tanners besi

"What do you do with your Sunday afternoons, Bud?" she as soon as they were out of hea the rest of the group

The boy turned wondering e ward her.

"Do?" he repeated puzzled.

passes the time away, like most any day. There ain't much difference."

A great desolation possessed her. No church! Worse than no minister! No Sabbath! What kind of a land was this to which she had come?

The boy beside her smelled of tobacco smoke. He had been off somewhere smoking while she was in the dreary little Sunday school. She looked at his careless boy-face furtively as they walked along. He smoked, of course, like most boys of his age, probably, and did a lot of other things he ought not to do. He had no interest in God righteousness and he did not take it for granted that the Sabbath was different from any other day. A sudden heart sinking came upon her. What was the use of trying to do anything with such as he? Why not give it up now and go back where there was more promising material to work upon and where she would be welcome indeed? Of course she had known things would be discouraging, but somehow it had seemed different from a distance. It looked utterly hopeless now and she was crazy to have thought she could do any good in a place like this.

And yet, the place needed somebody! That pitiful little Sunday school! How forlorn it all was! She was almost sorry she had gone. It gave her an unhappy feeling for the morrow, which was to be her first day of school.

Then, all suddenly, just as they were nearing the Tanner house, there came riding down the street with all the glory of the radiant morning in his face, and light in his eyes at seeing her that melted away her desolation; for here at last was a friend!

She wondered at herself. An unknown stranger, and self-confessed a [illegible] so far in his young life—and yet he seemed so good a sight to her amidst these uncongenial surroundings!

CHAPTER XI

THIS stranger of royal bearing, riding a rough Western pony as if it were decked with golden trappings, with his bright hair gleaming like Roman gold in the sun, and his blue-gray eyes looking into hers with the gladness of his youth; this one who had come to her out of the night-shadows of the wilderness and led her into safety! Yes, she was glad to see him.

He dismounted and greeted her, his hat in his hand, his eyes upon her face, and Bud stepped back watching them in pleased surprise. This was the man who had shot all the lights out the height of the big riot in the saloon. He had also risked his life in a number of foolish ways at recent festal carouses. Bud would not have been a boy had he not admired the young man beyond measure; and his boyish worship of the teacher yielded her to a fitting rival. He stepped behind and walked beside the pony, who was following his master meekly as though he too were under the young man's charm.

"Oh, and this is my friend William Tanner," spoke Margaret, turning toward the boy loyally. (Whatever good thing made her call him William? Bud's soul swelled with new dignity as he flushed and acknowledged the introduction by a grin.)

"Glad to know you, Will!" said the newcomer, extending his hand in a hearty shake that warmed the boy's heart in a trice; "I'm glad Miss Earle has so good a protector. You'll have to look out for her, she's pretty plucky and is apt to stray around the wilderness by herself. It isn't safe, you know, not for such as her. Look after her, will you?"

"Right I will," said Bud, accepting the commission as if it were heaven-sent, and thereafter walked behind the two with his head in the clouds. He felt that he understood this great hero of the plains and was one with him at heart. There could be no higher honor than to be the servitor of this man's [illegible]. Bud did not stop to question how the new teacher became acquainted with the young rider of the plains. It was enough that both were young and handsome and seemed to belong together. He felt they were fitting friends.

THE little procession walked down the road slowly, glad to prolong the way. The young man had brought her handkerchief, a filmy trifle of an excuse, that she had dropped behind her chair at the bunk house where it had lain unnoticed till she was gone. He produced it from his inner pocket as though it had been too precious to carry anywhere but over his heart, yet there was in his manner nothing presuming, not a hint of any intimacy other than their chance acquaintance of the wilderness would warrant. He did not look at her with any such look as West had given every time he spoke to her. She felt no desire to resent his glance when it rested upon her almost worshipfully, for there was respect and utmost humility in his look.

The men had sent gifts; some arrowheads and a curiously fashioned vessel from the canyon of the cave-dwellers; some chips from the petrified forest; a fern with wonderful fronds, root and all, and a sheaf of strange beautiful blossoms carefully wrapped in wet paper and all fastened to the saddle.

Margaret's face kindled with interest as he showed them to her one by one and told her the history of each and a little message from the man who had sent it. Mom Wallis, too, had baked a queer little cake and sent it. The young man's face was tender as he spoke of it. The girl saw that he knew what her coming had meant to Mom Wallis. Her memory went quickly back to those few words the morning she had wakened in the bunk house and found the withered old woman watching her with tears in her eyes. Poor Mom Wallis, with her pretty girlhood all behind her and such a blank dull future ahead! Poor, tired, ill-used, worn-out Mom Wallis! Margaret's heart went out to her.

"They want to know," said the young man, half hesitatingly, "if some time, when you get settled and have time, you would come to them again and sing. I tried to make them understand of course that you would be busy, your time taken with other friends and your work, and you would not want to come; but they wanted me to tell you they never enjoyed anything so much in years as your singing. Why, I heard Long Jim singing 'Old Folks at Home' this morning when he was saddling his horse. And it's made a difference. The men sort of want to straighten up the bunk room. Jasper made a new chair yesterday. He said it would do when you came again." Gardley laughed diffidently, as if he feared their hopes were all in vain. But Margaret looked up with sympathy in her face.

"I'll come! Of course I'll come some time," she said eagerly. "I'll come as soon as I can arrange it. You tell them we'll have more than one concert yet."

NOW it happened that Rev. Frederick West was walking impatiently up and down in front of the Tanner residence, looking down the road about that time. He had spent the morning in looking over the small bundle of "show sermons" he had brought with him in case of emergency, and had about decided to accede to Mrs. Tanner's request and preach in Ashland before he left. This decision had put him in so self-satisfied a mood that he was eager to announce it before his fellow boarder. Moreover, he was hungry, and he could not understand why that impudent boy and that coquettish young woman should remain away at Sunday school such an interminable time.

Mrs. Tanner was frying chicken. He could smell it every time he took a turn toward the house. It really was ridiculous that they should keep dinner waiting this way. He took one more turn and began to think over the sermon he had decided to preach. He was just recalling a particularly eloquent passage when he happened to look down the road once more, and there they were, almost upon him! But Bud was no longer walking with the maiden. She had acquired a new escort, a man of broad shoulders and fine height. Where had he seen that fellow before?

He saw the look between the man and the maiden; the look of sympathy and admiration and a fine kind of trust that is not founded on mere outward show, but has found some hidden fineness of the soul. Not that the reverend gentleman understood that, however.

Another Hour in Bed

That's what you can have every washday morning if you'll use Fels-Naptha Soap.

Because the naptha in Fels-Naptha Soap loosens the dirt and dissolves the grease in clothes and everything you use it for. It does the hard part of the work for you.

And besides being a wonderful time-saver and work-saver, it harms nothing that pure water does not hurt. So use it for all your household soap-and-water tasks.

Fels & Co. Philadelphia

FELS-NAPTHA
FELS-NAPTHA

Songs for Service

A Great Song Book

Sparkling, snappy, invigorating, energizing, appealing, effective and useful, this latest and greatest of Rodeheaver productions has set a new high-water mark in gospel songbook making. Hundreds of churches, Sunday schools and other religious societies are already using it and are expressing unbounded approval and delight. The first to introduce it into your church community will have exercised "winning strategy."

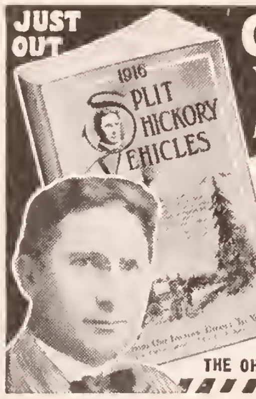
Songs for Service

has 288 pages, is printed from new plates on better-than-usual paper and is finely bound. Orchestrated for 15 instruments. Printed in both round and shaped notes. It is the book used exclusively in the "Billy" Sunday campaigns.

EXAMINE A COPY FREE—Simply state that you will either return it in good condition within 15 days or will remit the retail price. State binding desired.

PRICES—Cloth 35c, limp 25c, manila 20c per copy, postpaid.
Cloth $25, limp $18, manila $15 per 100, not prepaid.

THE RODEHEAVER CO.
1083 MONON BLDG., CHICAGO 633 LIPPINCOTT BLDG., PHILADELPHIA



JUST OUT

GREATEST BUGGY BOOK FREE—Postpaid

My new 1916 Vehicle Catalog is ready. This big book contains the finest and biggest selection of buggy bargains ever offered. Shows 150 nifty, new styles—more than you would find in 20 stores—all offered at prices that save you $20 to $40. For example, $39.25 and up now buys a genuine

SPLIT HICKORY

Guaranteed two years, and I give you 30 days free road test, to prove the quality and convince you that it is the best buggy value you can buy. Why take chances with unknown makes when you can get a genuine Split Hickory direct from the factory at my 1916 bargain prices! Write for my new free book today. Address

H. C. PHELPS, Pres.
THE OHIO CARRIAGE MFG. CO., Station 220 Columbus, Ohio

(13)

Catalog Shows 150 Other Styles for $39 25/100 and Up

I will save you money on Farm Wagons & Harness. Write for Special Catalogs

Greetings to Brush Dealers—Here's the long-haired, world-renowned gentleman who always suits brush users and builds up your business

The largest wholesale dealers in Brushes in the United States buy exclusively

WHITING-ADAMS BRUSHES

THE UNITED STATES NAVY has made its largest and most extensive purchases of Brushes several times of

WHITING-ADAMS BRUSHES

SEND FOR ILLUSTRATED LITERATURE

JOHN L. WHITING-J. J. ADAMS CO.

BOSTON, U. S. A.

Brush Manufacturers for Over One Hundred Years

Whiting-Adams Brushes Awarded Gold Medal, Highest Award, Panama-Pacific Exposition, 1915

STRAWBERRIES give the Quickest, Biggest and Surest Profits of Anything You Can Grow

The work is so easy and simple that even beginners make big profits from the start. Our free book tells how.

Kellogg's Everbearers

produce big crops of big, fancy berries from June until November. Light freezing does not affect their fruiting. The berries are in great demand. Price ranges from 30 to 45 cents per quart. Three months after plants are set, your profits begin. Our free book tells the rest.

A Kellogg Strawberry Garden

will add beauty, pleasure and profit to your home. Get our free book and learn how to supply your entire family with delicious strawberries the year round without cost.

Great Crops of Strawberries and How to Grow Them, the best and most complete strawberry book ever written. Fully explains the Kellogg Way. 64 pages of common sense, actual experience, strawberry facts, pictures galore. Kellogg's ... Kellogg's ... and Kellogg Pedigree Plants insure your success. Our book is worth its weight in gold—costs you nothing. Send for copy today. A postal will do.

R. M. KELLOGG CO.
Box 670
Three Rivers, Michigan

FREE
BUIST'S SEEDS
FREE

This is the 88th year that Buist's Seeds have been the favorites of America's most experienced gardeners. Since 1828 their quality has never deviated. These seeds produce big crops of the right kind.

This Year to Our Friends and New Customers We Make the Following FREE Offers

For every dollar you purchase in packets and ounces we will allow you an additional 25c worth, of your own selection, in packets and ounces. In addition we will send you five packets of our finest flower seeds, all profuse bloomers from early spring to late fall. Get these premiums now—and send for our helpful free Garden Guide.

ROBERT BUIST CO., Dept. M. Phila., Pa.

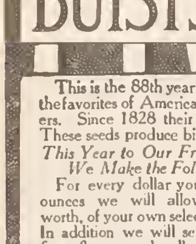
Paint Without Oil

Remarkable Discovery That Cuts Down the Cost of Paint Seventy-Five Per Cent.

A Free Trial Package is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.

A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. Y., has discovered a process of making a new kind of paint without the use of oil. He calls it Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powder and all that is required is cold water to make a paint weather proof, fire proof and as durable as oil paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and costs about one-fourth as much.

Write to Mr. A. L. Rice, Manuf'r., 109 North St., Adams, N. Y., and he will send you a free trial package, also color card and full information showing you how you can save a good many dollars. Write to-day.



Delivered TO YOU FREE

A sample 1916 model "Ranger" bicycle, on approval and 30 DAYS TRIAL.

Write at once for large illustrated catalog showing complete line of bicycles, tires and supplies, and particulars of most marvelous offer ever made on a bicycle. You will be astonished at our low prices and remarkable terms.

RIDER AGENTS Wanted—Boys, make money taking orders for Bicycles, Tires and Sundries from our big catalog. Do Business direct with the leading bicycle house in America. Do not buy until you know what we can do for you. WRITE TO US.

MEAD CYCLE CO., DEPT. G-71 CHICAGO

BARGAINS IN SEEDS

Hundreds of special offers in seeds and plants at bargain prices. Don't buy until you have seen our beautiful new catalog and special liberal offer, mailed free if you mention this paper.

Iowa Seed Co., Dept. E., Des Moines, Iowa

GREIDER'S FINE CATALOGUE

of pure bred poultry; 70 breeds illustrated and described, many in color. Perfect poultry guide—all facts. Low prices on stock and hatching eggs. Incubators and brooders. 23 years in business. You need this book. Send 10c for it—today.

B. H. GREIDER, Box 14 Rheems, Pa.

Pearl Grit

Aids digestion, makes shells, makes eggs, makes feathers, makes ... and free valuable booklet. Write to-day.

The Ohio Marble Co., 318 Cleveland St., Piqua, Ohio

He had no fineness of soul himself. His mind had been too thoroughly taken up with himself all his life for him to have cultivated any.

Simultaneous with the look came his recognition of the man, or at least of where he had last seen him, and his little soul rejoiced at the advantage he instantly recognized.

He drew himself up importantly, flattened his chin upward until his lower lip protruded in a pink roll across his mouth, drew down his yellow brows in a frown of displeasure, and came forward mentor-like to meet the little party as it neared the house. He had the air of coming to investigate and possibly to oust the stranger, and he looked at him keenly, critically, offensively, as if he had the right to protect the lady. They might have been a pair of naughty children come back from a forbidden frolic, from the way he surveyed them. But the beauty of it was that neither of them saw him, being occupied with each other, until they were fairly upon him. Then, there he stood offensively, as if he were a great power to be reckoned with.

"Well, well, well, Miss Margaret! you have got home at last!" he said pompously and condescendingly, and then looked into the eyes of her companion as if demanding an explanation of his presence there.

Margaret drew herself up haughtily. His use of her Christian name in that familiar tone annoyed her exceedingly. Her eyes flashed indignantly, but the whole of it was lost, unless Bud saw it, for Gardley had faced his would-be adversary with a keen, surprised scrutiny and was looking him over coolly. There was that in the young man's eye that made the eye of Frederick West quail before him. It was only an instant the two stood challenging each other, but in that short time each knew and marked the other for an enemy. Only a brief instant, and then Gardley turned to Margaret and before she had time to think what to say he asked:

"Is this man a friend of yours, Miss Earle?"—with a marked emphasis on the last name.

"No," said Margaret coolly, "not a friend—a boarder in the house." Then most formally, "Mr. West, my friend, Mr. Gardley."

If the minister had been possessed of a skin less thick, he would have understood himself to be dismissed at that; but he was not a man accustomed to accepting dismissal, as his recent church in New York state might have testified. He stood his ground, facing them stubbornly, his mouth down at the corners, his chin flatter than ever, his little eyes mere slits of condemnation. He did not acknowledge the introduction by so much as the inclination of his head. His hands were clasped behind his back and his whole attitude was one of righteous belligerence.

Gardley gazed steadily at him for a moment, a look of mingled contempt and amusement gradually growing upon his face. Then he turned away as if the man were too small to notice.

"You will come in and take dinner with me?" asked Margaret eagerly. "I want to send a small package to Mrs. Wallis if you will be so good as to take it with you."

"I'm sorry I can't stay to dinner, but I have an errand in another direction and at some distance. I am returning this way, however, and if I may I will call and get the package toward evening."

Margaret's eyes spoke his welcome, and with a few formal words the young man sprang on his horse, said "So long, Will!" to Bud, and ignoring the minister rode away.

To be continued

Young People's Topics for February 20

The Tragedy of Indifference

Epworth League Topic. Lam. 1:12; Luke 10: 30-32; Judges 5: 23

IT is easy to know what to do with an opponent; we must in some way or other overcome him. It is easy to know what to do with an ally; we must work with him. But what shall we do with one who is neither enemy nor friend, who is neither opponent nor ally? The Bible indicates that this is a great problem even for God.

Today's Scripture references are worthy of special study. That strange, sad verse in Lamentations has long been used in sacred song and literature as an expression of the lonely grief of Christ, a grief intensified because so many do not care. "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by?" Some were sorry for him during the hours of his anguish; some reviled and still antagonized him. But the great multitude seemed not to care. "Sitting down they watched him there." Or else they passed idly by. Not even now, so long after Calvary, does Jesus know what to do with an indifferent man. If you are still cursed with this calamity of indifference, read again the sad story of Christ's sufferings as told in the Gospels. See if your heart is not stirred to pity; remember that your indifference is grieving and hurting him yet, is prolonging that agony of Calvary. If you will let your heart be melted to sympathetic sorrow for the dying Christ you will find the beginnings of new spiritual life and strength.

Luke 10:30-32 tells the story of the despicable indifference of the priest and Levite who did not care when they saw a fellow man suffering and in need. They "passed by on the other side." This is largely the attitude of the church today toward the oppressed, suffering, bleeding world. We are stirred up now and then by the most harrowing tales of suffering; there has been boundless grief among Christians over the sorrows of the present war. But the ordinary, steady deprivations of men, women and little children, the sorrows of the prisoner, the drudgery and want of the toiler, the misery of homes where poverty reigns—we shut our ears and our eyes to things like these. They annoy us. They interfere with our pleasures and the daily routine of work, so we pass by on the other side, leaving the weary, wounded sufferers to their pain.

Judges 5: 23 is part of a martial song. The frenzied singers, Deborah and Barak, in this stanza are cursing the inhabitants of Meroz because they did not come to the help of the Lord "against the mighty." Just so there are people today who are not keen on fighting the battles of the Lord. It is the very same indifference that cursed the Levite and the priest. The sufferings of others should move us to intense, passionate action for their relief. We must try to relieve the suffering; we must try to stop it; we must try to find and remove its causes. We must do this, or a greater curse will meet us than that called down by Deborah and Barak upon the people of Meroz. What will that curse be? Simply the memory of those cries and tears we might have stopped and did not; simply the eternal, unalterable fact that some life was twisted and torn and crushed by a grief that we might have prevented and did not.

St. James has a terrible warning to the rich who are oppressors of the poor. It is to all, rich and poor alike, who either cause suffering or who fail to do what they might to relieve the suffering they see! "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth."

How to Put the Bible Into Life

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. Ps. 119: 105-112

EVANGELIST D. L. MOODY wrote on the flyleaf of his Bible: "This Book will keep you from sin, or sin will keep you from the Book." In the

"A Train Load of Boo
What Clark is Doing f
the Book Bu

IN several hundred tho
Libraries in the hom people in every walk of from the day laborer t college professor and government official, fro persons who buy a few bo popular fiction to the pe who pride themselves on ing the complete works of all the standard auth
De Luxe Editions artistically printed and bo almost every book was bought from me.
Because, I have no agents and sell you jus books you want—all new—many at saving of 50 to 90 per cent — you examine the books in own home for five days before paying for them.
satisfied, return at my expense—and owe me not

Sample Prices:
Five Little Peppers and How They Grew. My price, 24c.
Their Yesterdays. My price, 35c.
Brady's Government Collection of Civil War Photographs, Publishers' price $3.50. My price, $1.45.
Bookkeeping at a Glance. My price, 35c.
People's New Census Atlas of the World. Publishers' price $4.00. My price, 98c.
The Arithmetic Help. Publishers' price, $3.00. My price, 65c.
Koran of Mohammed. P ers' price, $1.50. My 48c.
Wild Animals of North
ica. Publishers' price,
My price, 46c.
Napoleon's Military C
Publishers' price, $2.
price, 65c.
Boston Cooking-School
Book. My price, $1 3
What All Married
Should Know. Publ
price, $3.00. My pric
Law Without Lawyers
lishers' price, $2.0
price, 45c.

Here are De Luxe Editinns, Morocco bound, complete many of them at less than 25 cents on the dollar. Hugo, K
Poe, Eliot, Dickens, Thackeray, Scott and scores of othe

Get My Big, New Catalog

My new catalog, sent free for the asking, tells you save 50 to 90 per cent on thousands of books. It is a in literature, giving nationalities, date of birth and d authors, the author's life and standing in literature, etc dreds of sets and thousands of single volumes listed.
I sell more books direct to the booklover — the ind reader—the rich man who insists upon his dollar's wort man who watches his pennies—and sell them for less m than any other man in America. Every book new and and guaranteed to please you—you to be the judge. I quibble, and would rather have a book or set of books r at my expense than to have a dissatisfied customer.

David B. Clarkson, The Book Brok
211 Clarkson Building Chicago, Il

KEEP YOUR CHILDREN STRONG

Some children catch one ailme after another, have colds after col while other children are seldom si

If your children are pale or fra if they catch colds easily, lack a bition or are backward in scho
they need SCOTT'S EMULSI which is rich in the food eleme to create good blood to strength their bodies and brains—SCOT
EMULSION is free from alcohol or habit forming drugs.

CHILDREN RELISH IT.
REFUSE SUBSTITUTES.

14-58
SCOTT & BOWNE, BLOOMFIELD, N.

VIOLIN
MANDOLIN GUITAR or CORNET
GIVEN
FINE TONE

To introduce our wonderful new system of teaching note music by mail, Violin, Guitar, Mandolin, Piano, Organ or Cornet, will give you a dandy instrument without guarantee to make you a player or no charge; comple given. Write at once. Special offer to first pupils. No ob SLINGERLAND'S CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Dept. 142, C

WOULD Y show this standard grade 42 key fully typewriter to your
and let them see w it excells any oth
typewriter, if by do and rendering other s
sistance, you could easily
GIVEN YOU to keep as your own? Then by p or letter to us simply say, "Mail Particulars."
WOODSTOCK TYPEWRITER CO., Dept. F 176, Chi

MERRY-GO-ROUN
MAKE BIG MONEY
We make everything in the ing-Gallery and Carousselle from the smallest to the highest
Bring in hundreds of dollars
Finest appearing, easiest ing and most attractive manufactured. Write for catalog and partic
HERSCHELL-SPILLMAN CO., Park Amusement Ou
625 Sweeney Street, North Tonawanda, New York.

LAME PEOPLE
OLD WAY
OUR WAY
The Perfection Extension Shoe for any person with one short limb. Worn with any style of ready-made shoes with perfect ease and comfort. Shipped on trial. Write for booklet.
Henry E. Lotz, 313 Third Ave., N. Y. City

BLYMYER
CHURCH
BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHE
SWEETER, MO
ABLE, LOWE
OUR FREE CAT
TELLS W
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry B-51 Cincin

midst of all the controversies about the Bible this fact holds fast and is indisputable: that the Bible does show a man his sin and tell him how to get rid of it. The Bible disturbs the conscience. "The Word of God is quick and powerful [R. V., alive and active], and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

Augustine, after having lived a worldly, profligate life, and while seeking truth through earnest study both of pagan philosophy and the New Testament, heard one day a mysterious voice saying, "Take up and read, take up and read." History differs as to whether this was an inner voice or the voice of a child playing in a neighboring garden. But Augustine went back to the parchment he had thrown down in despair, took it up again and read the words: "Let us walk honestly as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, but put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ and make no provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof." His heart was suddenly filled with light and peace and faith. Thereafter his faith proved God's power to save and keep, and he lived to teach others the way of salvation.

There are two great words for putting the Bible into life: Faith and Obedience. We must yield ourselves by faith to the message from the Holy Spirit which comes to us from the divine Book, and we must rouse our wills and keep them strong and do the things God commands us. "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not those things which I say?" asks Jesus. "Be ye doers of the Word, and not hearers only," exhorts St. James.

This faith and obedience must apply the Bible in three different ways. First, to our own souls. We must grasp the promises of God for ourselves; we must stand upon them; we must let the Holy Spirit make them true in our own lives. We must work out our own salvation by a strong personal determination to do the things God commands.

Second, we must work out the teachings of the Bible in our relation with others. We must try to get the little group of people with whom our life is intertwined to take God's ways for their ways, and God's thoughts for their thoughts. To refer to Augustine again, he got a little group of friends together and lived with them apart from the world in a spiritual community. We do not need to do this; the church has outgrown the monastic idea, and is understanding better the words of Jesus, "I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world," but every one of us should have a circle of friends, great or small, whom we are trying to help keep in touch with God and whom we are influencing to lead the life of the Spirit.

Third, we must in the largest way possible try to get the message of the Bible into the great, dark, godless, strife-cursed, sin-stricken world. We must make no compromises with wrongdoing. We must assure the world that there is no way to go but the way of God. We must make the Bible echo again the cries of the oppressed, the protests of the enslaved, the plea of the hungry and weary and desolate. We must give our lives to answering the prayer that God's will shall be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

Answers to Bible Contest Inquiries

QUESTIONS about this or that point in the Bible Picture Contest are pouring in, and while we wish to do all in our power to make the conditions clear, it is not practicable to answer every individual question by any means. We shall, however, from time to time print replies to some of these questions so that all who are perplexed on the same points may be helped. Of course, no question can be answered that touches upon the fitness of special verses to pictures, and it is useless to write us along that line. We also call the attention of all contestants to the Answers to Queries printed in the Reply Book. Before writing, always refer to them, and please do not ask questions the answers to which can be found in the Reply Book. Also read the rules carefully. And do not put off attention to solving the pictures until you get an answer to your question, because we do not promise to answer every particular question. We feel that the Reply Book and Rules cover every essential point, but will try to answer some of the more important questions from time to time in the Christian Herald, as we say above. Below are a few such questions and answers.

Question: "I wish to submit seven verses in answer to one of the pictures. According to the Rules only five verses can be submitted in one set of answers. What shall I do?"—B. A., Utica, N. Y.

Answer: If you should wish to submit more than five answers (different Bible verses) for any picture or if you should be uncertain on the sound judgment of giving one verse as your first choice for a picture rather than another (for you may see the possibility of two points of view), or if you should want to reduce your possible total of incorrect answers, and should therefore want an opportunity to enter the present arrangement of answers and also another arrangement: then you are entitled by the Rules to submit an additional set of answers. Each contestant may submit as many as three different sets of answers. For the three ways to secure an addional outfit see our offers, printed above.

Question: Do we have to draw pictures in the Reply Book?"—T. B. K., Topeka, Kan.

Answer: No. Only the verses are written in the Reply Book. There are sixty pages set aside in the Reply Book for writing down of the verses you wish to submit. Each of these pages is numbered, the numbers running from 1 to 60 inclusive. No pictures need be submitted with the Reply Book at all.

Question: "If only a portion of a verse fits a picture, must we submit the whole verse?"—H. W., Pueblo, Col.

Answer: Always. Entire verses MUST be submitted. Portions of verses submitted will be stricken out.

Question. I find nothing stating that the artists, or those who produced the pictures, are prohibited as contestants."—D. K., Dalton, Ohio.

Answer. The rules governing the Bible Picture Contest expressly state that no employee of the Christian Herald can enter the Contest. The artist who drew the pictures is unquestionably an employee of the Christian Herald. Also, the artist does not know anything about the Bible verses we may have in mind when the picture is conceived. He simply draws from a description given him. Then his picture is passed upon and changes in it are ordered until it is satisfactory. So the artist would have no advantage even if he could compete. And he can't. We assure you that the prizes will be awarded fairly and equitably and every set of answers will be given careful consideration. You can trust us to be fair, can't you?

Question: "I see in the Christian Herald of December 1 the Bible Picture Contest. I think that Exodus, 2. 5 verse is the most appropriate. Am I right?" Mrs. J. A. J., St. Joseph, Mo.

Answer: The picture you refer to is simply an object lesson one drawn to show readers graphically what the Contest would be like. The first regular contest picture appeared in the December 22 issue. Answers are not to be sent us at this time, but at the end of the Contest, after the last picture has appeared in the Christian Herald. For convenience in recording answers, we have prepared a Reply Book, in which to place your answers to the pictures. We are unable to give any opinion as to the correctness of your answer. The "best" sets of answers will be selected at the end of the contest by a committee of judges.

How to Obtain "Gems from the Bible" and Reply Book

OFFER NO. 1: "Gems from the Bible" and Reply Book will be sent on receipt of $2.00 for yearly subscription to the Christian Herald (new or renewal).

OFFER NO. 2: "Gems from the Bible" and Reply Book will be sent FREE to any subscriber who sends us $1.50 for a new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald.

OFFER NO. 3: "Gems from the Bible" and Reply Book will be sent FREE to any subscriber who sends us $2.00 for a new subscriber who enters the Contest. The new subscriber will receive the Christian Herald for one year, "Gems from the Bible" and Reply Book, and the present subscriber sending the new subscription will receive, as a present from us, "Gems from the Bible" and Reply Book FREE.

Resinol

RESINOL
SOAP
FOR THE SKIN AND COMPLEXION

Soap

a friend to tender skins

The soothing, healing medication in Resinol Soap which is so helpful in clearing poor complexions, is equally dependable for protecting delicate skins from the havoc of wintry wind and cold.

To use Resinol Soap for the toilet is usually to make sure that one's complexion will come through the cold weather unharmed, and that the hands will be kept free from redness, roughness and chapping.

If lack of proper care should result in painful and unsightly chapping, a little Resinol Ointment will generally afford complete relief.

Resinol Soap is not artificially colored, its rich brown being entirely due to the Resinol medication it contains. Sold by all druggists and dealers in toilet goods. For a trial size cake, with a sample box of Resinol Ointment, free, write to Dept. 6-E, Resinol, Baltimore, Md.

Resinol Shaving Stick also contains the Resinol medication so that it soothes and refreshes the face, while supplying a rich, creamy, non-drying lather. The best druggists carry it.

Gold Dust brightens housewives' lives,
As it brightens forks and knives.

For cleaning knives and forks, for washing dishes, pots and pans, add a tablespoonful of Gold Dust to a panful of hot water.

Gold Dust does not mar nor scratch. Follow the simple directions on the package.

FAIRBANK'S
GOLD DUST
Washing Powder

5c and larger packages for sale everywhere

THE N.K. FAIRBANK COMPANY

The Busy Cleaner

GOLD DUST

This Used Piano

Many splendid bargains in all standard makes of pianos, including Steinway, Knabe, Emerson, Kimball and others from $45 up to $195. Also second-hand player-pianos from $195 to $325. No money down. 30 days' free trial. Lowest payments.

Big Piano Book Free

containing beautiful illustrations of new Starck Pianos and a vast amount of piano Information. Send today. 50 FREE MUSIC LESSONS with every piano. Write quick for latest bargain list.

P. A. STARCK PIANO CO., 62 STARCK BLDG., CHICAGO

How a Timid Woman Makes A Fine Income

You can do it as easily as she did, taking orders for the famous Malloch Hosiery and underwear. No experience nor capital necessary. Spare time or full time work. We need help and protect you. Free fabric samples. Liberal treatment.

Book Free Write and ask for free book and full particulars of this unusual opportunity. Write today.

Malloch Knitting Mills, Dept. 702 Grand Rapids, Mich.

SHEERIN'S FRESH DUG FRUIT TREES

Buy At One-Half Agent's Prices

Let me send you my catalogue—it's free to everybody—it's different. It tells you facts about my fresh dug trees and how you can save money and receive a guaranteed SQUARE DEAL. Write today and see the difference in buying direct from grower than through agents.

Apple, 4½-6 ft., $14.00 per 100.
Peach, 3½-4½ ft., $9.00 per 100.

SHEERIN'S WHOLESALE NURSERIES, 35 Seward St., Dansville, N. Y.

Paint is a familiar word; "white lead" is not. 'Twould pay house-owners to learn to think

Dutch Boy White Lead

where they now think simply "paint."

Send for Paint Tips 151

NATIONAL LEAD COMPANY

New York Boston Cincinnati Cleveland
Buffalo Chicago San Francisco St. Louis
(John T. Lewis & Bros Co., Philadelphia)
(National Lead & Oil Co., Pittsburgh)

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D. C.

INVENTORS Do Not Sacrifice Your Inventions
Get full money value. RELIABLE Book Free. Write
R. S. & A. B. Lacey, 610 Barrister Bldg., Washington, D.C.

300 Plans FREE

Standard Home No. 331—Modern 6 room bungalow, bath, built in cabinets, all lumber, millwork, paints and hardware. Craftsman slash grain fir finish. Price complete with plans - - - - - - - $810

Save $200 to $800 on Your Home!

Send the coupon today for our two big plan books. 300 perfect plans! Color schemes, floor plans, ideas, and exact prices—not estimates. Every plan proven—all built hundreds of times. Both books free. One on Ready-cut Homes. One on Material for Standard Homes. Houses from $300 up. All at wholesale prices. Forest direct to you.

Shipped Anywhere!
Satisfaction or Money Back!

Over 100,000 satisfied home-owners buy regularly from us. Local references; write for them. Ask your bank. Quick shipments. A whole house or any part of a house. All our quality highest; graded to established standards. No shoddy. Money back if you are not satisfied.

Standard Material or Ready-Cut Homes!

Buy either way you like. Ready-cut Homes shipped, bundled and numbered like plans. Mill-sawed to fit. Construction costs cut. No extras. No come-backs! Send coupon today for these 3 Big Books FREE!

Two plan books and also free 156 page, illustrated Building Material Catalog. 5000 Building or Remodeling Bargains. All at wholesale. Use coupon.

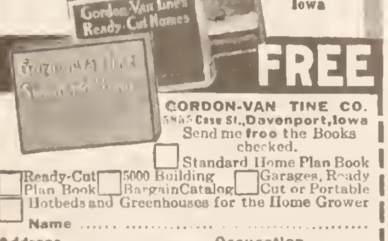
Gordon-Van Tine Co.

Established Half a Century

5855
Case Street
Davenport,
Iowa



GORDON-VAN TINE CO.
5855 Case St., Davenport, Iowa
Send me free the Books checked.
☐ Standard Home Plan Book
☐ Ready-Cut Plan Book ☐ 5000 Building Bargain Catalog ☐ Garages, Ready Cut or Portable ☐ Hotbeds and Greenhouses for the Home Grower
Name ......
Address ...... Occupation ......

Christian Brotherhood at Jerusalem

International Sunday School Lesson for February 20

Acts 4:32—5:16

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By REV. F. B. MEYER, D.D.

"Love one another from the heart fervently." I Peter 1: 22.

The Spirit of God is within the hearts of his children, or obedience to this command would be impossible. But he is within us, as the source of whatever is unselfish and lovely in character and disposition. All that we have to do is to believe this mighty fact and to reckon on it. Whenever we detect the uprising of the spirit of hatred, ill-will, or jealousy, we must deliberately concentrate our thought on the spring of eternal love which is within our hearts, and bid it assert itself to the overwhelming of those baser passions, which are seeking to usurp the throne, and assume control. Like the Saviour awakened on the tossing boat, the peace of God must assert itself within the heart and command the storm to drop into silence. We must believe in God's yearning desire to help us in these hours of passionate outburst, and be very quick to detect and obey his least impulse to right a wrong, confess a fault, entreat forgiveness, make some kind advance, heap hot coals of love on the icy barrier which has arisen between us and another, until it melts as the great icebergs do when the ocean currents drift them into the southern seas.

The Dream of Brotherhood

By Arthur H. Howland

MANY pages have been written describing and discussing the beautiful episode of the communistic plan of life which the believers in Jesus at Jerusalem adopted after Pentecost. The very words of the Scripture record are beautiful: "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and one soul; neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common." Notice how the spiritual blessings are described along with the brotherhood and charity—"And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus. And great grace was upon them all." Now another picture showing how the "great grace" worked out in life: "Neither was there any among them that lacked; for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold, and laid them down at the apostles' feet; and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need."

The chief discussion about this episode has been whether it was the intention of the Holy Spirit that Christians should go on living in this communistic fashion or whether this was a particular program adopted for a particular time. Most students of Scripture as well as students of sociology agree that it was a temporary plan. Many Jews had come from other cities and provinces for the Passover and Pentecostal feasts at Jerusalem, and when they prolonged their stay in the city, found themselves without funds. This probably started the wholesale giving, and these young Christians found the experience of giving so delightful that they kept it up more and more enthusiastically until many of them had given all that they had into the common fund. Evidently there was no fixed rule compelling all the Christians to dispose of all their property. Peter said in rebuking Ananias: "While it remained, was it not thine own, and after it was sold, was it not in thine own power?" Later Christians of high repute possessed property, notably the mother of John Mark, who owned a home at Jerusalem. There is no indication that other groups of Christians adopted the communistic plan of living of these Jerusalem believers.

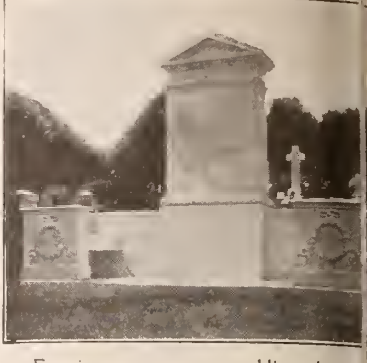
But in stating this position and in defending the rights of Christians to own property, many have gone too far. They have claimed that the Gospel of Jesus should not be applied to these economic problems, and that the disciples had no idea of disturbing the orders and classes of society. Yet the disciples were hailed as men who were turning the world upside down. The institution of feudalism gave way before the Gospel of brotherly love that Jesus taught; the institution of human slavery followed. Other social wrongs will be righted in this same way as followers of Jesus realize how impossible it is really to be true to him and to carry out the spirit of his teachings and at the same time adopt and perpetuate the principles of life, work, play and gain adopted by the world. There was in this communistic episode at Jerusalem a beautiful hint of what the world might be like if people would really make some definite, determined effort to put into actual life the principles that Jesus taught.

CONSIDER again the tragedy of that great black BUT with which the fifth chapter of Acts begins. Before that, love, holiness, fellowship, harmony, joy, power, life; after it, death, strife, divisions, the beginnings of weakness, the horrid stain of sin. And all because Ananias and Sapphira "kept back part of the price." If they had not had before them the example of such men as Barnabas, if the others generally had not made the noble sacrifice of "all," their own duty might not have been so clear. But they evidently came face to face with the same requirement that Jesus made of the rich young ruler, "Go, sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven." They flinched. Greed triumphed. Then they lied, not only to men but to God, and were overtaken by a swift and mysterious death.

It is not necessary for a Christian to accept the communistic system of economics. It is not necessary for every Christian literally to dispose of his possessions. But it is necessary for every Christian to shun the love of money, which is "a root of all kinds of evil"; it is necessary for every Christian to recognize that all his possessions belong to Christ and must be used for the welfare of all; it is necessary for every Christian to recognize that every other Christian is his brother and every other person in the world his neighbor; it is necessary for every Christian to strive to his utmost to reorganize and reconstruct society in accordance with the spirit and plan of Jesus, bringing about some system of cooperation to take the place of strife, trying to instil in every soul the motive of love instead of greed; trying to break down the artificial distinctions that separate men from true brotherhood, distinctions that were not in any sense established by "providence" but are the result of greed and rapine, and trying to make true that dream of true brotherhood, which is not in any sense an idle dream, but the dream of Christ, the dream of democracy, the dream of God.

Teachers will have no difficulty in making the lesson scene and lesson story vivid. The Jerusalem Christians evidently had a common meeting-place. Peter was in charge. Gifts came pouring in. Men like Barnabas gave all to the new cause. Take pains with Barnabas. Follow his career. See how noble it was. See how the promise of Jesus recorded in Mark 10: 29, 30; Matt. 19:29; Luke 18: 28-30, were fulfilled for him. Then show Ananias, greedy, crafty, hypocritical. He wanted not only money, but he wanted the credit of having given all when he had given only part; he was giving from the motive, not of love of others, but of love of self; he was a liar, a hypocrite, the first church hypocrite on record. See Peter's sternness. See

OUR memorials are of a character th
reflects the dignity of their purpos



For sixty-one years our public and priva memorials have typified the highest arti tic ideals combined with a recognition practical requirements.

Our Portfolio "E" on request

HARRISON
GRANITE
COMPANY DISTINCTIVE MEMORIALS
200 FIFTH AVE N.Y.

Crooked Spin Made Straig

Thousands o Remarkable Cas

An old lady, 72 year age, who suffered for years and was absol helpless, found relief. A who was helpless, unab rise from his chair, wa ing horseback and pla tennis within a year. A child, paralyzed, was pla about the house after we a Philo Burt Applian weeks. We have success treated more than 25,000 cases the past 15 y

30 Days' Trial

We will prove its value in your own case. There is no reason why you should not accept our offer. The photographs show how light, cool, elastic and easily adjusted the Philo Burt Appliance is—how different from the old torturous plaster, leather or steel jackets.

Every sufferer with a weakened or deformed spine owes it to himself to investigate thoroughly. Price within reach of all.

Send For Our Free Book
If you will describe the case it will aid us in giving you definate information at once.
PHILO BURT MFG. CO.
B 207 Odd Fellows Temple, Jamestown,

Make Your Spare Time Profit ble

We are establishing hundreds of add nal local agencies for the Christian Herald.

By devoting only your spare time the interest of the Christian Herald, you ca arn

A STEADY INCOME.

Write for particulars.

CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New Yor N.Y.

Army and Navy Liquid ue

Odorless, Clean, Mighty to Me

The ONLY liquid hide and sinew glue. Send 1 ents and we will send you at once anywhere, postpaid arge self-sealing container of this REAL glue.

Name of your dealer appreciated

STANDARD GLUE CO., Dept. C, Baltimo Md.

CHURCH FURNITURE

Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Desks—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.

DeMoulin Bros. & Co. Dept. 54. Greenville, Ill.

Individual Communion ps

Convenient, Noiseless and Sanita

List of thousands of churches using our cups an REE CATALOG with quotations sent upon request.

SANITARY COMMUNION OUTFIT CO. 67th ST., ROCHEST N.Y.

POULTRY SECRE S

Valuable 130-page data-book. Fact lowering death-rate, getting 100 per batches, highest prices, etc. Illustr improved incubators. Write today. MO INCUBATOR CO., 28 Henry St., Buff. N.Y. Also 59 Barclay St., New York

TABLE GRACES For DAILY SE SPECIAL YS and OCCAS NS

All Will Welcome This New Book of Graces. Postpaid. Pape 25c. Cloth, 50c. M. E. MUNSON, 77 Bible House, New Yor I.Y.

uani's fear and shock. His head els, is heart stops. He is dead. uria the East, as among Jews every- here is swift. His body is hurried vay. No one tells his wife. The oung men must have gone far, for it thr hours before they return. Just fore they enter the assembly hall appl a comes in. There is in her art e same greed, the same fraud, e sa e intent to deceive God and man, e s e intent to pass for better than i Her smitten conscience also ills e beating of the guilty heart, and an her hour she lies beside her usba l.

Th church's first tragedy. The urc s first hurt from the cruel sin of eed The church's first lesson that do not pay to trifle with conscience d ith God. The church's first arn g of the dangers of wealth.

Bu the last picture of the lesson is ha y one. Power remains with the hur because the rest are faithful and ue. New believers join the Christian om y. The power of healing abides. It ems an absolutely unjustifiable nd npossible wrench to make this erip ure teach a temperance lesson. t is lesson of Christian economics; le n in Christian brotherhood; a sso in Christian consecration; a lesson Christian truthfulness; a lesson f d's demands for sincerity and on and wholeheartedness in dealing ith him, with the church, and with r ighbor.

The How Column

nd ted by Frank L Brown, Joint General cr y World's Sunday School Association

H to Obtain Class Interest in Lesson Teaching

O NG to the practical helpfulness of e subject we shall continue the suggest s by which teachers of classes above he imary Department secure the interest f t lass in the actual teaching of the lesson.

A onnecticut teacher of young men finds t n ssary to appeal to present-day needs. "T only way I know is to deal with present-day fe as the boys know it and apply the ess teaching thereto." It should be said or e new International Senior Grade lesson that this discussion of present-day pro ms of young people is emphasized in he urse.

eacher of a lot of fifty Junior boys and irl believes in action of face, hand and to "I find the point of contact is a good sto told earnestly and vividly—a story bri ng out points or clinching facts."

uccessful Brooklyn teacher, whose smile is inning point, faces his sixteen-year-old bo without the lesson paper. "I never teach a l on with a book in front of me. I come pr red and ask questions to the point. The cla as a rule are always deeply interested."

m a Pennsylvania teacher of a mixed ad class comes this word: "I vary my plan. So times we study the characters of the les and associate the lesson points with th haracters. Sometimes I use the most im rtant statements in the lesson text. V ty seems to be the keynote of nolding th nterest."

California teacher of thirteen-year-old gi says: "No set plan. I try to avoid ro ne. I use a story sometimes; or some lo incident or person serves to lead to the le n. Sometimes a conundrum catches th and starts to thinking. Sometimes a sl p. quick review to find who can answer q kest is best."

One of the best foundations for teaching interest is suggested by a New York state teacher of ten boys in the critical years between fifteen and seventeen: "Every boy knows I love him, that I am his friend in sympathy. I feel with them and put myself in their place and have a full appreciation of a boy's nature by the personal contact of heart with heart. Only thus are boys led to the best in life. They know my willingness to help in any of their joys and troubles, and so listen on Sunday when we meet for the study of spiritual things."

A Pennsylvania teacher of adults says: "I make the lesson apply to everyday life as forcefully as possible. There are comparatively few lessons that cannot be compared with present-day experiences."

A Connecticut teacher gets her seventeen-year-old boys at work at the teaching. "Sometimes I have the boys take turns in teaching the lesson while I sit as a pupil."

The story for twelve-year-old boys when imagination runs riot is the method of an Ohio teacher. "I believe the story method gives best results when teaching. They love to have a story well told and are quick to grasp its bearing upon the lesson for the day."

Thought-compelling questions have been found helpful by a Connecticut teacher of young men eighteen to twenty-five years of age. "I have a carefully prepared list of questions, which bring out free discussion and carry the thought through to a logical conclusion. I avoid wasting time on minor points."

The teacher of a ladies' class in Pennsylvania starts with the historical setting: "I first give the history leading to the incident related in the lesson text; then ask for any lesson the ladies have noted in the study of the text. I point out others they have failed to note. Sometimes I use the lecture method, emphasizing certain points, then asking the class for points I overlooked."

Atmosphere in the class as a basis of lesson interest is brought out by a Kansas teacher of twenty-five young mothers of the church: "I hardly know, but it seems to me that we have 'home feeling' in our class, and each one has a part in the talks. I find my best way is to have a well-prepared and systematic plan for each lesson."

One teacher of young men in Kansas creates expectancy by keeping out of ruts for his "fellows." "I try to have no set plan. I am quite sure that I teach every lesson a little differently from the one before. I try to have my fellows expecting something different each time I come."

The teacher of a Pennsylvania Bible class of 140 men, with an average attendance of 90, deserves a hearing as to method "Introductory story; general questions and discussions; application to present-day conditions."

Another New Jersey teacher of all the school above the Intermediate Department says as to her plan:

"I don't know. It's different every time. I try not to lecture but to get them to question, but am afraid I do most of the talking. We take up our chapter, each one reporting on his section in turn or we ask questions on the chapter as a whole; or reach a paragraph at a time and comment on it There is so much that they don't seem to see; they are always interested when I make them discover what is there. Of course I always have a plan for each lesson but it has to be modified when I see who is present and how much preparation they've made."

A Latrobe, Pa., teacher of big girls secured a response "by asking questions on the daily reading and by asking one of the pupils to present an account of these readings for discussion."

In Mr. William H. Ridgeway's Sunday school at Coatesville, Pa., the daily Bible readings for the week are printed upon a slip and given to the scholars each week to be read by them, or by the parents in family worship.

The Christian Herald Prayer League

LL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in dly prayer at the noon hour. Also any o is at liberty to send a request for yer or an acknowledgment of answered yer, thereby becoming enrolled as a mber of the Prayer League.

AN unusual and convincing letter comes from Mr. A. B. Smith, treasurer of the Alliance Coopera- e Insurance Company at Topeka, n. Referring to the recent expansion the Prayer League he asks: "Do ese answers to prayer have a significant and extraordinary effect on the ople attracted to the Bowery Mission convincing them of God's power and ve and efficiency, here and now? If , does it increase religious interest and votion? Are these answers to prayers fundamental factor in making the owery Mission a success? Assuming e above to be answered affirmatively, ould not a similar action of devotion, trust and faith all over this land be an irresistible and onward force for Christ? Is it not true that if a true Christian faith should get at work in a true channel, effects would be as beautiful and convincing and expressive as ever, and in the light of so many Bible assurances, would it not glorify a heavenly Father who is more willing to give good gifts than an earthly parent? When I read, 'Which is easier to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee, or to say Arise and walk,' I sometimes tremble with fear. If faith is to save me, and I can get no evidence of its action in this life, how can I rest about my everlasting destiny, which is based on faith entirely?"

Mrs. S. A. W. writes from New Mexico: "For years I have prayed for a son who is an engineer on the railroad, that he might be saved. We could never persuade him to go to church He was a good citizen and loved by all, but felt no need of the Saviour. He has been happily converted and is living a Christian

Fresh Strawberries When Snow Flies!

Think of picking strawberries right out of your own garden in early winter! A small bed of Progressive Fall-bearing plants will supply your table with big, luscious berries long after any but the hothouse sort have disappeared.

The Progressive Strawberry is the best of all fall-bearing varieties. It beds up freely like spring-fruiting varieties, and bears fruit of delicious quality. Set the plants in the spring and they bear the following fall.

The Chesapeake Strawberry is one of the most popular late spring-bearing varieties. It produces large and uniform berries on firm stems which hold the fruit up off the ground. The berries ripen about the same time as the well-known Gandy variety.

Fall-bearing Strawberry Seeds One of the most interesting ways to raise strawberries. The seeds are the true hybridized sort, about 500 to the packet. Bert Mitchell, of Pulaski, N. Y., sowed these seeds February 24th and picked ripe berries August 4th of the same year. Isn't it really wonderful?

How To Get These Plants Free

Through a special contract with a large, reliable strawberry plant specialist, we have secured a limited number of hardy, true-to-name plants of these two popular varieties, and packets of the wonderful seeds. You may secure these plants or seeds—as long as the supply lasts—at the expense of

THE FARMING BUSINESS

An up-to-date paper that helps the business farmer apply business science on the farm. Is edited by a staff of foremost agriculturists. A specialist is in charge of each department. The Farming Business is published weekly and read in over 100,000 progressive farm families for its

The
The FARMING BUSINESS

Farm Management
Poultry and Orchard
Live Stock and Dairy
Market Reports
News in Brief
The Household
Vegetable Growers' Magazine Section

These and other unusually interesting, and helpful departments appear in every issue. The Vegetable Growers' Magazine Section alone is worth the subscription price. You need this great paper in your home. To make this easy we make the following offers:

Offer No. 1 Send $1.00 (stamps accepted) for one yearly subscription—52 big issues—to The Farming Business, and we will send in addition, one dozen healthy Progressive Fall-bearing Strawberry Plants. Plants shipped this spring just at the right time to set. Postage prepaid.

Offer No. 2 Send one yearly subscription to The Farming Business together with $1.00 (stamps accepted) and in addition to the paper we will mail you one packet of true hybridized Fall-bearing Strawberry Seeds, which will produce about 500 plants.

Offer No. 3 Send $2.00 (stamps accepted) for The Farming Business—2 years—104 big issues—and we will send in addition, 12 Progressive Fall-bearing Strawberry Plants and 25 plants of the popular Chesapeake variety. Thus you will enjoy luscious berries both spring and fall.

Mail the coupon at once with $1.00, (or $2.00), to make sure of your selection. Do it to-day as our supply of plants and seeds is limited.

Note: If you are already a subscriber to The Farming Business, accept one of our offers anyway, and your subscription will be moved on one year, or two, from expiration.

The Farming Business
500 North Dearborn St.
Dept. H
CHICAGO, ILL.

THE FARMING BUSINESS CHICAGO, ILL. Dept. H
Find enclosed stamps (or money-order, or check) for $1.00 (or $2.00) as acceptance of your Offer No. 1, or No. 2, or No. 3 (check which). Send paper now and strawberry plants at proper time for setting out.
Name ....
Address ....

FOOD FACTS

What an M. D. Learned

A prominent physician down in Georgia went through a food experience which he makes public:

"It was my own experience that first led me to advocate Grape-Nuts food; and I also know from having prescribed it to convalescents and other weak patients that this food is a wonderful rebuilder and restorer of nerve and brain tissue, as well as muscle. It improves the digestion and patients gain, just as I did, in strength and weight, very rapidly.

"I was in such a low state that I had to give up my work entirely and go to the mountains, but two months there did not improve me; in fact I was not quite as well as when I left home. My food did not sustain me and it became plain that I must change.

"I began to use Grape-Nuts and in two weeks I could walk a mile, and in five weeks returned to my home and practice, taking up hard work again. Since that time I have felt as well and strong as I ever did in my life.

"As a physician who seeks to help all sufferers I consider it a duty to make these facts public."

Trial 10 days on Grape-Nuts when the regular food does not seem to sustain the body will work wonders.

"There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

"I Now Hear Clearly"

You, Too, Can Hear!

Inasmuch as 200,000 users of the "ACOUSTICON" have had the same results from it as Mr. Garrett Brown, whose photo appears above, we feel perfectly safe in urging every deaf person, without a penny of expense, solely and entirely at our risk, to accept a thorough trial of the

1916 ACOUSTICON

No Deposit FREE No Expense

All you need to do is to write saying that you are deaf and will try the "ACOUSTICON" The trial will not cost you one cent, for we even pay delivery charges.

WARNING! There is no good reason why everyone should not make as liberal a trial offer as we do, so do not send money for any instrument for the deaf until you have tried it.

The "ACOUSTICON" has improvements and patented features which cannot be duplicated, so no matter what you have tried in the past, send for your free trial of the "ACOUSTICON" today and convince yourself—you alone to decide. Address

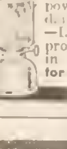
GENERAL ACOUSTIC CO., 1314 Candler Bldg., New York
Toronto, Ont. Office, Royal Bank Bldg

BECOME A NURSE

WE have trained thousands of women in their own homes to earn 10 to 25 a week as nurses. Send for "How I Became a Nurse" 248 pages with actual experiences. 48 illustrated lesson pages free.

Fifteenth Year.

The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St., Jamestown, N.Y.



"Best" Hand Lantern

A powerful portable lamp, giving a 300 candle power pure white light. Just what the farmer, dairyman, stockman, etc. needs. Safe—Reliable—Economical—Absolutely Rain, Storm and Bug proof. Burns either gasoline or kerosene. Light in weight. Agents wanted. Big Profits. Write for Catalog. THE BEST LIGHT CO.
3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

Does YOUR Church use this cleanly and sanitary method? Send for catalog and special offer. Outfits on trial.

Thomas Communion Service Co. Box 150 Lima, Ohio

life." Mrs. E. U. C. writes from South Dakota: "God answered my prayer and brought my son home to me and made him a well boy once again, for which I am very grateful." Mrs. S. E. V. writes from Morris Plains, N. J.: "I asked your prayers for the salvation of husband, aged seventy-eight. Recently he was very ill. Since his recovery, in answer, as I believe, to my prayers, he is turning to the Lord."

Mrs. M. A. C. writes from Lockland, Ohio: "God in his loving kindness has seen fit to spare mother to us a while longer. Praise his name! Pray for us." Mrs. M. J. F. writes from Greensboro, N. C.: "I asked prayers for healing from pellagra and eye trouble. God has wonderfully restored me."

Mrs. C. E. G. writes from California: "I asked prayers that I might learn the whereabouts of my son. The prayer has been answered." Mrs. C. A. B. writes from St. Louis, Mo.: "A year ago I asked prayers for a dear friend, which were answered in a most miraculous manner. I send my heartfelt thanks." H. Miller writes: "I wish to say that the first petition I sent you (about November 10) was answered very soon in a highly satisfactory way. I am deeply grateful." Mrs. S. S. G. writes from Pennsylvania: "Soon after the Prayer League was started I joined it and sent in requests for prayer for the saving of a son and daughter. The daughter was saved last summer at camp meeting, which brought great joy to my soul. Please continue to pray for my son. I have just passed my seventy-second birthday. Fifty-eight of these years I have been in the service of the Lord. He has done much for me. I can truly witness to his saving, keeping, sanctifying and good healing power. I wish I could tell it out how Jesus has answered my prayers for myself and family." M. S. writes from Danville, Ky.: "I write to tell you of the glorious revival in Danville. It has been felt for hundreds of miles about."

M. E. N. writes from Waynesboro, Pa., acknowledging answered prayer for recovery from spinal trouble and other diseases. She writes: "I was afflicted for three years, but am now able to walk around and help with the work. God has filled my life with peace and joy." P. W. H. from Marthaville, Mo., writes: "Some time ago I requested prayer for recovery of sister's and my own health. I am rejoiced to say that both of us are improved." Believer writes: "A few months ago I asked you to pray for healing for a young man who was ill with serious heart trouble. The doctor said he might 'slip away at any time.' Since you began praying he has steadily improved, and expects to reenter college next month." "New England" writes: "A few years ago I hoped very much that a young friend of nineteen years would unite with the church. He had received splendid religious home training, but no young man of our acquaintance was more indifferent to spiritual things. After ten months of prayer 'without ceasing,' combined with the deepest faith, I was rewarded by hearing in my distant home town that he had become a most active and sincere Christian." Mrs. C. J. B. writes: "Some time ago I asked you to pray for a position for my husband. The prayer was soon answered."

Here is one of the letters which show how willing God is to answer our prayers in what might be called "the little things": Mrs. G. H. F. writes from Chicago: "I have been sick for a long time and I asked God to restore me to health so I would be able to sit up at the table with my family for Christmas, and he did. Bless his name! I ask prayers that myself and husband may be completely restored to health and that his hearing may be restored."

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS of answered prayer have also been received from:

N. E. P., Acton, Ind. (for blessings upon dear ones, work for a brother and the meeting of other needs); N. V. D., South Bend, Wash.; A Seventy-seven-year-old Reader of the Christian Herald, Salina, Kan.; M. D. M., Waco, Texas (for successful revival meetings); M. R. J., St. Johns, Quebec; C. J. M., Alton, Ill.; M. F. S., Port Dickinson, N. Y.; Mrs. D. E. W., Ackerland, Kan. (for healing of two children who were very ill); Mrs. O. M., Port Orange, Fla. E. B. Livonia, N. Y.; Mrs. J. E., Franklinville, Pa. (for conversion of son); R. E. D., St. Petersburg, Fla. (for improved health of two friends); Mrs. E. E. P., Knightdale, N. C.; Mrs. L. F., Vermontville, Mich.; Reader, South Carolina; Miss V. M., Reeds, Mo.; D. D., Del Norte, Colo.; Marie, Topeka, Kan.; M. A. B., Hale, Mo.; S. J. S., Oxford, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. W. C.; A Friend, Duluth, Minn.; Miss J. D., South Holland, Ill.; J. O. J., Akron, Ohio (for help in securing employment); Mrs. J. M., Amsterdam, N. Y.; M. A. T., Hartford, Conn.; Mrs. H. M., Sterling, Ohio; Mrs. E. B., St. John, Wash.; Mrs. C. S. W., La Fayette, N. Y.; Mrs. P. E. P., News Ferry, Va. (for healing of daughter), Reader, Marion Mich.; E. V., Hutchinson, Kan.; Mrs. L. S. S., Hampton, Iowa; A Reader San Marcos, Texas; M. P., Riceville, Tenn.; Mrs. G. S. G., Granite Hill, Ga. (for conversion of son); Mr. F. H. B., Cleveland, Ohio; E. Z., Blue Mound, Ill.; A. D., Middletown, N. Y.; Mrs. A. M. V., Akron, Ohio; Mrs. M. E. W., Steubenville, Ohio; Mrs. M. R. G., Clear Lake, Minn.; T. C., St. Louis, Mo.; A Subscriber, Boonton, N. J.; Constant Reader, Wilkinsburg, Pa.; Mrs. G. H. D., Meshoppen, Pa.

MRS. E. S. K. writes from Elmira, N. Y., in great distress of mind to say that her son is a patient in the hospital for the insane, and asks most earnest prayer for his recovery. A pathetic letter comes from a Texas reader. It is intelligently written, yet asks prayer for mental as well as spiritual strength. The writer adds: "My mind is very weak and the doctors have given me up. I feel that our heavenly Father will continue to help me." A Mother asks prayer for guidance as to whether or not she should leave her daughter's home where the atmosphere seems to hinder her spiritual life. Her daughter's husband, however, is a spiritually-minded man, so the mother is quite perplexed as to her duty. Mrs. B. O. asks special prayer for her husband, who has palsy in his right arm. She adds: "I believe God will answer."

PRAYERS are asked for revivals of religion at

Chambersburg, Pa.; Syracuse, N. Y.; Good Thunder, Minn.; Waco, Texas (for state-wide prohibition and for the lost everywhere); Hutchinson, Kan.; Spring Hill, Kan. (that class of nine girls may be saved); Monona, Iowa; Medford, Ore.; Lancaster, Ohio (in a struggling church that every hindering barrier may be removed and sinners saved); Ontario, Canada (that seven souls may be saved); Darien, Conn.; Opequon, Va.; Madelia, Minn.; Kibbie, Mich. (in country church); Schoharie, N. Y.; Tyner, Sask., Canada; Biltmore, N. C. (cottage prayer meeting); Pittsfield, Mass. (for conversion of twenty-one men and the reclaiming of two men); Clarksville, Ark.; Benton, Pa.; Beaumont, Ky.; Savona, N. Y. (in the M. E. church); Berryville, Ark.; Athens, Ohio; Marion, Mich.; Orlando, Fla.; Earville, N. Y.; Bishop, Calif.; Napoleon, Ohio; San Francisco, Calif.; Wysox, Pa.; Reader, Silver Creek, N. Y. (that all the students at the A. M. Chesbrough Seminary at North Chili, N. Y., may be saved); Arcade, N. Y.; Mount Pocono, Pa.; Oxford, N. C.; M. J. J., Island Creek, Md. (that the Epworth League of Brooks M. E. Church may grow strong); Wharton, Texas; Mrs. C. H. B. (that a young man licensed to preach the Gospel and who has fully surrendered his life to the Master's service may receive an appointment—at a small charge or mission).

Mrs. E. H. D. asks prayer for complete mental healing; M. M., "Hopeful," Mr. J. M., that their minds may be restored. M. E. H., that mother's mind may be restored. Twenty-four friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening of relatives or friends.

E. V. B., that mother's sight may be restored. Fourteen friends ask prayer that sight may be restored. Mrs. G. M. C., that sight of son's one eye may be restored. Mrs. G. W. T., Mrs. U. H., that sons' sight may be restored. Three friends ask prayer that sight may be restored for relatives or friends.

Seventy-five friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing

Miss M. C. asks prayer that father and two brothers may be saved from the liquor habit; I. L., that four men may be saved from the liquor habit; sixteen parents, their sons; four wives, their husbands; L. M., that father may be cured of the liquor habit. Twenty-two friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be saved from the liquor habit; J. M., that a friend may be given strength to give it up.

A Sorrowing Mother asks prayer to be cured of the drug habit.

Sixty-eight parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons.

Thirty-seven wives ask prayer for the conversion of their husbands. Ninety-three other readers ask prayer that friends or relatives may be converted.

Twenty-nine ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for relatives or friends, including one that son's life may be wholly surrendered to God, and that he may be led to answer a call to preach the Gospel.

CHRISTIAN HERALD BOO

Two Books by a Famous Past

Rev. J. H. Jowett, D. D., has been described as the most spiritual preach America. He has written two volu "Thirsting for the Springs," and "B by the Traveler's Way."

These two volumes, aggregating 530 handsomely bound in cloth, will be sent tog with the Christian Herald for one whole postpaid, for $2. Or, we will send to old sub ers, FREE, as a reward, these two volum sending us one new yearly subscription t Christian Herald with $1.50.

Margaret E. Sangster's New B

"Real People and Dreams" cont about eighty poems and thirty-two s stories and sketches.

We will send this new volume by Margar Sangster, Jr., handsomely bound in cloth gether with the Christian Herald for one year, postpaid, for $1.85. Or, we will send t subscribers, FREE, as a reward, this volum sending us one new yearly subscription t Christian Herald with $1.50.

"Forty Thousand Beautiful Quotation

Some years ago the Christian H published a work entitled "Forty T sand Sublime and Beautiful Thoug We have had so many inquiries for it we have decided to republish it.

We will send you this volume, together wit Christian Herald for one whole year, for $3. we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a re "Forty Thousand Sublime and Beau Thoughts" for sending us two new yearly scriptions to the Christian Herald with $3.

Luther in Light of Recent Resea

While there are several lives of Lut Professor Heinrich Boehmer's fa work, which has attracted universal tention in Europe, is one of the best has ever appeared.

The Life of Luther, handsomely bound in c will be sent together with the Christian H for one whole year, postpaid, for $2.25, or we send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, volume for sending us two new yearly subs tions to the Christian Herald with $3.00.

A New "Do Something" Boo

Did you read "Janice Day," which offered with the Christian Herald year? The success of the book was that the author, Helen Beecher L wrote a sequel entitled "The Tes of Janice Day."

We will send "The Testing of Janice D 310 pages, attractive cloth covers, together the Christian Herald for one whole year for or we will send to old subscribers, FREE, reward, "The Testing of Janice Day," for sen us one new yearly subscription to the Chris Herald with $1.50.

Our Art Calendar for 1916

This beautiful calendar is a reproduc of that remarkable picture of Christ w ing beside the plowman in the field, titled "Lo, I Am With You Alway."

We will send this superb calendar together the Christian Herald for one whole year for or to old subscribers sending us their renewal one new subscription to the Christian He we will send two copies of this calendar ma to separate addresses if desired, FREE.

A Companion to the Bible

"555 Difficult Bible Questions swered" is another book which has a wonderful success during the past y

We will send "555 Difficult Bible Quest Answered" together with the Christian He for one whole year for $1.85. Or, we will sen old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, this vol for sending us one new yearly subscription to Christian Herald with $1.50.

A Story for the Family Circle

We do not know when we have quite as much pleasure in reading any b this year as "Little Sir Galahad."

"Little Sir Galahad," 376 pages, illustrated handsomely bound in cloth, will be sent post with one yearly subscription to the Chris Herald for $2.00. Or, we will send to old s scribers, FREE as a reward, this volume for se ing us one new yearly subscription to the Ch tian Herald with $1.50.

Our 1916 Almanac

Add ten cents to your subscription to Christian Herald and we will send you the Ch tian Herald Almanac for 1916 postpaid.

Our Red Letter Bibles

The Only India Paper Red Letter Bible in t World

The only genuine edition of the Red Letter B is the Authorized or King James Version, changed save for the variation of the color in type. Two colors (Red and Black) are emplo in accordance with the simple plan devised by late Dr. Louis Klopsch, the Originator of the Letter principle applied to the Holy Scriptures.

1—In the Old Testament the passages quo by our Lord, or directly related to incidents which he referred, are Printed in Red.

2—In the New Testament, the words u versally accepted as those of the Saviour Printed in Red.

3—A Red Star (★) immediately followin verse in the Old Testament indicates that verse embodies a prophetic reference to Ch as the coming Messiah.

Contains Full References; also a Concordan Subject Index, and Dictionary, Helps, Maps, a Numerous Illustrations.

Large type, bound in American Levant, ov lapping edges, red-under-gold, weight 20 ounc We send this superb Bible prepaid, together w the Christian Herald for one whole year for . . . . $3.

OR: We will send it to old subscribers Free a reward for sending us two new yearly subsc tions to the Christian Herald with $1.50 each.

Bound in Genuine Morocco, Calf Finish, Leat Lining, Silk Sewed, will be sent, prepaid, w the Christian Herald, for one year FOR ONLY . . . . $4.

OR: We will send it to old subscribers Free a reward for sending us three new yearly su scriptions to the Christian Herald with $1.50 ea

Our Red Letter Testament

Only New Testament which contains all words spoken by our Lord printed in Red. Bou in American Levant, with over-lapping edges—r under-gold—with book mark. Issued in both Authorized and Revised Versions, and is S Prepaid, together with the Christian Herald for One Year FOR ONLY . . $2.

Or: We will send it to old subscribers Free as reward for sending us one new yearly subscri tion to the Christian Herald with $1.50.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York, N.

Is This Man Your Neighbor's Boy?

IF your boy or your neighbor's boy were known or even suspected by you to be in the ranks of the almost hopeless fellows who, with what hope remains, turn to the Bowery Mission in their hour of need, we feel very sure that though you had given again and again for many years to this work, you would give at least once more. You would not stop because of the monotony of the giving, because of the sameness of the plea year after year, if you had the least idea that some boy in whom you were interested had tripped and fallen into such a state.

And how do you know that such is not the case? How can you be sure that some old friend of yours whom you have not seen for many years is asking in his heart that old wistful question, "Where is my wandering boy tonight?" If the notion took possession of you that perhaps the son of some such friend had fallen on evil days and was standing in peril of his soul outside the door of the Bowery Mission, you would not rest until you had done what you could to enable the men of the Mission to throw open the door, draw him in, feed him, warm him up, clothe him, slap him on the back, put an arm around his shoulder, tell him they knew of a job waiting for him, and remind him of his God.

We plead for life's failures, the men who have fallen upon evil days. And we who are strong—we are assured by the inspired writer—should bear the burdens of them that are weak, and not please ourselves. Even a strong man bearing a burden excites sympathy; what of a weak man whose burden is rapidly carrying him under? Why stop to ask if it is worth while? Why still that impulse of the heart by statistics of the many times you have already given to the Bowery Mission? Why grow weary in well doing? Read the few brief statements by the Mission's business manager which are found below. They are mere indications of the results of the work that is being done there.

Suppose you were to come upon a familiar face looking out of the ticket seller's window in a railway station and the man walking along with you should cry out, and rush forward and thrust his arms through the window exclaiming: "My son! He was lost to us, and now he is found again! Praise be to God!" And then the son should say, "Father, this is the result of the Bowery Mission!" Would you be sorry, or would you be glad, at that moment, for what you did after reading this article?

"NOT long ago, while I was sitting at my desk at the Bowery Mission," writes Mr. James T. Hunt, the business manager, "a young man, perhaps twenty years of age, came in and placed in my hand five $10 bills. When I questioned him as to his name and address, he simply said, 'A friend, who knows the Bowery Mission and its work—that's all.' He had not forgotten the bridge that helped him back to a life of happiness and respectability.

"At the Grand Central Station, New York, the other day, as I was buying a ticket, the agent who waited on me called me by name, and asked how the work of the Mission was getting along. He informed me that it had been a great help in his life, and he could never forget what it had done for him.

"The Bowery Mission has been aptly named 'the place where God makes crooked men straight.' I have personally encountered many cases of this sort, where men, once forlorn castaways, had been saved in the Mission.

Many of the Mission converts have become practical evangelists, working at their regular business by day and devoting their evening hours to soul-winning. Groups of these willing workers are sent out by the Mission to speak in churches, at Y. M. C. A. meetings and elsewhere, and their spiritual experiences and earnest testimonies are listened to with intense interest. On a recent Sunday, one group of three converts spoke at two meetings—afternoon and evening—one in a church and the other in a Y. M. C. A. hall, their announced topics being "Out of the Depths," "Where is God?" "From a Bowery Savage to a Christian." Their addresses were stories of souls saved and lives transformed, and made a wonderful impression on all who heard them.

The War in Europe

Continued from page 158

ve a battle took place on January 26 at a place called Menalarie, with indecisive results, though both sides lost heavily. At Kut-el-Amara itself only occasional bombardments by the Turks are reported.

Heavy fighting is reported to have been going on for the past six weeks in the country behind Aden on the Red Sea between the English and the Arabs, but here again none of the details have reached us, so that it is impossible to judge of the results.

During the past week reports reached us of a revival of fighting in Africa. A few weeks ago General Smith-Dorrien was appointed to the supreme command of the British forces in Africa, with instructions to complete the conquest of the German colonies. This action took place in the colony of Kameroon and the fighting resulted in a German defeat near the border of Spanish Guinea, into which territory later reports indicated that the German troops were about to cross, which would mean internment until the conclusion of the war.

Three times during the week the British coast has been raided by German aeroplanes. It is noteworthy that these raids have been made by aeroplanes for the first time, heretofore Zeppelins having been used. There have been reports for some time that the Germans had a new form of aeroplane called the Fokker, which was far more powerful and speedy than the old types, but whose cruising radius was supposed to be limited to a hundred and fifty miles or thereabouts.

The appearance of this type of aeroplane over Kent, Dover and the outskirts of London seems to indicate, however, that their cruising radius is greater than was supposed. The raids themselves accomplished little and the British appear to regard them merely as reconnoitering expeditions, or as extended trials of the new type, and seem to anticipate extensive air attacks on London in the near future.

On the Austro-Italian frontier one infantry fight of moment took place near Oslavia, where the Austrians captured the advanced Italian positions and took with the trenches some 1,200 prisoners besides some artillery. Italian counter-attacks up to the present writing have failed to recover the lost ground. Late in the week the Italians made an attack of the same character on the Austrian advanced positions near Monfalcone but failed to dislodge their defenders. Late reports state that the Italians will evacuate the port of Durazzo.

All along this western front there were steady artillery duels the whole of the week. The only incidents of particular note were the destruction by the Germans of the Cathedral at Nieuport on the Belgian coast, whose towers the Germans affirm were being used by their enemies as observation points, and the renewed bombardment of the City of Nancy by the Germans with their 15 inch guns.

The Germans were successful in infantry attacks both on the Artois front and in the Argonne. On the Artois front, they captured from the French a few hundred feet of advanced trenches near Neuville, and in the Argonne, a couple of trenches near the Four-de-Paris, in each case taking a few prisoners. On the whole, however, these advantages were of little moment.

The British Parliament was prorogued on Thursday, January 27, by the king until February 15. In the speech from the throne the government took occasion to state: "We shall not lay down our arms until we have vindicated the cause which carries the future of civilization with it."

CHAMPION
4 out of 5 are

Champion
"TOLEDO MADE FOR THE WHOLE WORLD'S TRADE"
Dependable Spark Plugs

If you could look at the spark plugs in all the new motors as they leave their makers' shops you would find four Champions to one of any and all other kinds.

The men who build Fords, Overlands, Studebakers, Maxwells, and over eighty-five others, equip their motors with Champions —to get results which their tests show that Champions alone will give.

There is a Champion Spark Plug designed to get results in your motor—better results than you can get with any other plug—or it wouldn't be branded "Champion."

Your dealer knows which plug to sell you when you tell him what car it's for. Look for the name Champion on the porcelain—not merely on the box.

Champion Spark Plug Company 304 Avondale Ave. Toledo, Ohio

FREE!
1916 Nursery Catalog—America's Authority
SEND TODAY! PLANT EARLY!
Seeds, Roses, Plants
Shrubs, Trees, etc., fully described, beautifully illustrated. No agents. Save money—buy direct from America's leading nurserymen. Hardy, Lake Erie grown stock, 7 kinds of soil, over 1,200 acres, 48 greenhouses. Experts for 62 years. 25 bargain collections of choice Roses, Begonias, Cannas, Bedding Plants, Shrubs, Vines, etc. Hardy Perennials, Fruit Trees, Ornamentals, Hedge, etc. Safe arrival and satisfaction guaranteed. Low prices, how and when to plant, etc., all told in free catalog No. . Write today!
THE STORRS & HARRISON CO.
Dept. 201, Painesville, Ohio

ADLER'S PLAN SAVES HALF
Before you decide on an organ for Church, Sunday School or Young Peoples' Society, you should get my big FREE ORGAN BOOK and details of my direct-from-factory selling plan. I will save you big money.
CHURCH ORGANS
Any size or style shipped freight prepaid for 30 days absolutely free trial. Price so low and terms so easy that no Church, Sunday School or Young Peoples' Society need be without a sweet-toned, resonant, durable, highest grade organ. My organs won highest prize at St. Louis World's Fair and National Conservation Exposition. Fifty year guarantee. Send postal for big, free book of all styles of organs for homes, Churches, Sunday Schools, etc.
C. L. ADLER, Pres., ADLER ORGAN CO.,
8009 W. Chestnut Street, Louisville, Ky.

BROWN'S Bronchial TROCHES
New 10c Trial Size Box
Give quick and continued relief from irritating coughs, hoarseness and tickling in the throat. Contain no opiates. Regular sizes 25c, 50c and $1. At all druggists.
If your dealer cannot supply you, we will mail any size upon receipt of price.
JOHN I. BROWN & SON, Boston, Mass.
Dept. 84

Deaf?
The day of imperfect hearing is past. Science rivals nature in the marvelous new 1916 Mears Ear Phone, "Intensitone" model —the world's greatest hearing device. It transmits sound without blur. Write today for our 15 days' free trial offer.
Perfect Aid to Hearing
The Mears is the only scientific instrument for the deaf. It marvelously covers 96 degrees of sound, every range of tone of the human ear.
Write for Free Book Our free book is a highly valuable treatise on deafness. Write for it today—learn all about our 15 days' free trial offer and low direct laboratory price. If convenient to New York call for demonstration.
FREE Book
MEARS EAR PHONE CO., Inc.
Desk 2492 45 W. 34th St., N.Y.

25 Times World's Champion 402,000 in Use
Get all facts, proofs, particulars—my low prices—money-back guaranty—also my $1300.00 Gold Offers—all come with my big illustrated Free Book "Hatching Facts," in colors. Write me today. Jim Rohan, Pres.
Freight Prepaid. 1, 2 or 3 Months' Home Test
Belle City Incubators and Brooders
Belle City Incubator Co., Box 127, Racine, Wis.

Vick's Garden and Floral Guide
Now Ready Several new features. Contains valuable practical information on planting, etc. Several splendid new varieties. For 67 years the leading authority on Vegetable, Flower and Farm Seeds, Plants, Bulbs and Trees. Send for your copy today. It is free. For 1916
JAMES VICK'S SONS, Rochester, N. Y.
13 Stone Street The Flower City

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

VIRGINIA & NORTH CAROLINA FARMS $15.00 per acre and up. Easy payments. Fruit, Dairy, Stock. Mild Climate. Raise Spring Lambs for early market. On Railroad. Best markets nearby. Write for farm lists, information and N. & W. Rwy. Homeseeker, all free. F. H. LaBAUME, Agrl. Agt., Norfolk & Western Ry., 327 N. & W. Bldg., Roanoke, Va.

KIDDER'S PASTILLES For 50 yrs. Standard Relief for Asthma (Inhalation) All Druggists; or by mail, 35c.
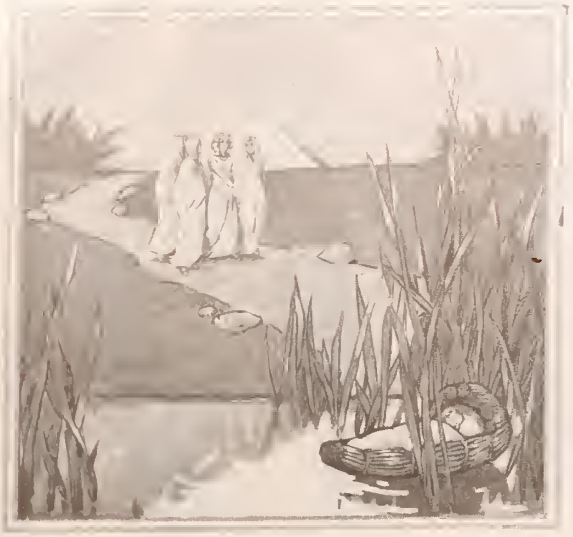
STOWELL & CO., Manufacturers, Charlestown, Mass.

YOU CAN AFFORD Familiar Songs of the Gospel (No. 1 or 2). Round or shape notes. $3 per hundred; samples, 5c each. 83 songs, words and music.
E. A. K. HACKETT, FORT WAYNE, INDIANA



←Suppose this sample picture were one of the regular pictures in the Contest you'd look in your "Gems from the Bible" for a fitting verse

I, who have signed my name on the front and back covers of this book, submit the following Bible verses as individually fitting

PICTURE No. X

I submit the verses in the order of their applicability to the picture. (Number each verse as you write it down; see illustration on page 2.) One, two, three, four or five verses may be submitted for each picture.

1. And the daughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself at the river; and her maidens walked along by the river's side; and when she saw the ark among the flags, she sent her maid to fetch it. Ex. 2:5.

HERE you see a page from the Reply Book, and in the corner above a page from "Gems from the Bible." These two books constitute the Outfit with which you can conveniently compete in the Bible Picture Contest. "Gems from the Bible" consists of about 2,000 verses. The Reply Book consists of sixty pages, consecutively numbered, on which you can write your answers. There is plenty of room on each page to make the full allowance of five verses for each picture, if you wish to do so.

G E M S F R O M T H E B I B L

gone up: he stooped down, he couched as a lion. and as an ol lion; who shall rouse him up? Gen. 49:

The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgive from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shal the gathering of the people be. Gen. 49:10

Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well whose branches run over the wall: Gen. 49:2

And when Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons he gathered up his feet into the bed, and yielded up the ghost and was gathered unto his people. Gen. 49:33

And Joseph took an oath of the children of Israel, saying God will surely visit you, and ye shall carry up my bones fron hence. Gen. 50:25

So Joseph died, being a hundred and ten years old: and they embalmed him, and he was put in a coffin in Egypt. Gen. 50:26

FROM THE SECOND BOOK OF MOSES, CALLED EXODUS.

And the children of Israel were fruitful, and increased abundantly, and multiplied, and waxed exceeding mighty; and the land was filled with them. Ex. 1:7.

And the daughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself at the river; and her maidens walked along by the river's side; and when she saw the ark among the flags, she sent her maid to fetch it. Ex. 2:5.

And it came to pass in those days, when Moses was grown, that he went out unto his brethren, and looked on their burdens: and he spied an Egyptian smiting a Hebrew, one of his brethren. Ex. 2:11.

And he looked this way and that way, and when he saw that there was no man, he slew the Egyptian, and hid him in the sand. Ex. 2:12.

Now the priest of Midian had seven daughters: and they 12 and then, having found one, you'd write it in the Reply Book

EXPLANATION

OF THE DIAGRAM ON THIS PAGE ILLUSTRATING THE BEST WAY TO

TAKE PART IN THE

Bible Picture Contes

IN the upper left hand corner of this page is a specimen picture. The are 60 like that in the Contest. Let us suppose this one is a re Contest picture.

You, as a contestant, must submit a solution or answer, consisti of one Bible verse—not any verse at all however, but a verse to be take by you out of a standard list of 2,000 possible answers. You must pic a Bible verse (from the eligible list) which describes the picture.

Where will you look for an answer? Where else but in the litt volume containing the standard 2,000! You open the book (it is t one entitled "Gems from the Bible"), you scan one text, then another-it is not long before they are almost all in your memory—and you con upon a Bible verse that suits. In this case your search would bri you to the page from "Gems from the Bible" shown up above here. Yo would readily pick the verse about Pharaoh's daughter spying the a among the flags. Good.

Now, what next? Don't write us a letter saying "My answer picture No. so-and-so is——" then giving this verse. A Contest must carried on uniformly. With every copy of "Gems from the Bible," w supply a specially designed blank book, known as Contest Reply Boo This book contains various items of value, but here (on the left) w show you part of a Reply Book page numbered to correspond with on picture in the Contest. That's where you write the Bible verse you wis to submit as your answer.

You may find still another text in "Gems from the Bible," which equally applicable with the first verse. Very well: you are permitted t enter as many as five different answers for one picture.

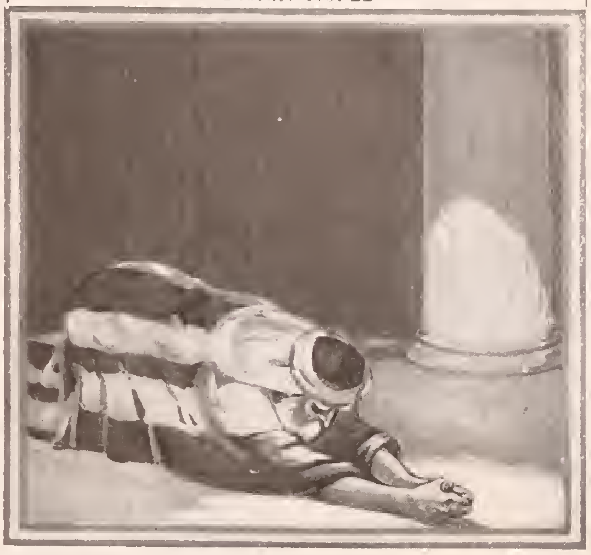
There are 60 pictures and there are 60 ruled pages in the Reply Boo When you have worked out your answers for all the 60 pictures, sen in your Reply Book to the Christian Herald; and you will have don your part.

The First 21 Pictures Are Given to All Who Ask for Them When Ordering the Bible Picture Contest Outfit

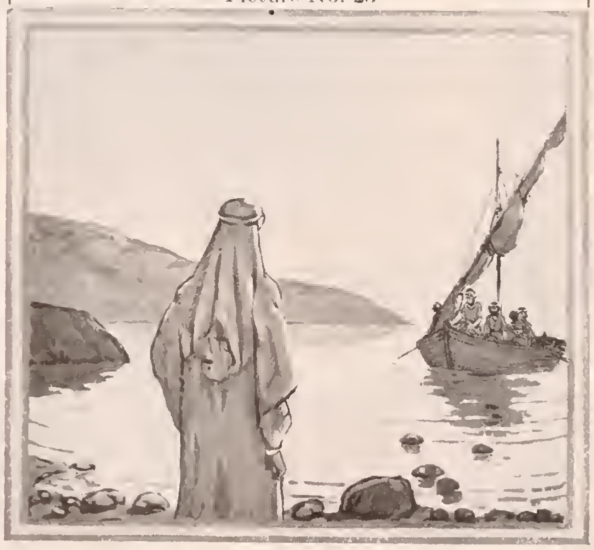
You Should Start At Once

There is Solid Enjoyment and Educational Interest

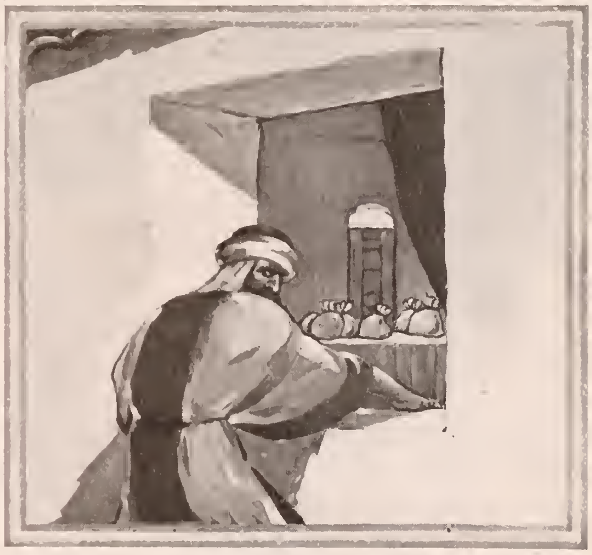
Picture No. 22



Picture No. 23



Picture No. 24



Ideal Recreation

YOU who have read the Bible through, perhaps many times, can testify how a new, unfolding meaning is per- eved now in one verse, now in another, a each review.

The Bible Picture Contest is not in itself a s tematic course of Bible study—for our r ders surely have other facilities (including o er departments in this publication) for s h instruction. Nevertheless this Contest i proving productive of a freshened interest i the Bible, and of a greater familiarity with i contents. We know this by the letters of c mmendation that keep coming to us.

You can be certain that you are not wasting your time when you turn for recreation to the ble Picture Contest. You will quickly discover how profitable a pastime this is. You are tain to win the prize of better Bible knowledge, and may win one of the valuable material zes as well.

$1,250 First Reward

419 Rewards, Totaling $3,500

First Reward	$1,250 cash
Second Reward	625 cash
Third Reward	350 cash
Fourth Reward	250 cash
Fifth Reward	150 cash
Sixth Reward	100 cash
Seventh Reward	75 cash
Eighth Reward	50 cash
Ninth Reward	20 cash
10th to 24th Rewards, each $2.50	37.50 cash
25th to 419th Rewards, each $1.50	592.50 cash
419 Cash Rewards in all, aggregating	3,500 cash

In case of ties, full rewards will be paid the tying contestants.

SOME POINTS OF INFORMATION

F you haven't started in the Contest yet, the big coupon at the bottom of this page will interest you. All the back pictures (Nos. 1 to 21 in- sive) will be sent, as well as reprint of the es, object lessons and all other needed infor- tion, on request, with the Contest Outfit.

No text will be accepted as an answer for a picture less it is one of the 2,000 Bible verses contained in e book, "Gems from the Bible," published by us. e reason for this procedure has already been ex- ined—to make opportunity equal for all and to sure emphasis on observation and judgment ther than deep knowledge.

You can do one of these two things: either tain the free list of references from us; or secure e maximum of convenience by obtaining the tle book "Gems from the Bible." "Gems from e Bible" is the exclusive list of possible answers.

DON'T be satisfied with the first obvious text that comes to your eye. Remember that we have ked for the greatest number of correct answers for the pictures. If there are two for a picture and you submit only one, you have failed to do your best. You must search "Gems from the Bible" to find all the applicable quotations. You will enjoy the hunt.

An answer for a picture means one whole Bible verse (out of "Gems from the Bible"), neither more nor less. If part of the verse applies to all of the picture, or part of the picture to all of the verse—once you decide on the closest possible match, it is the complete Bible verse (and only one, not several) which you must submit as one answer. Then, if you wish, you may submit additional different answers (not more than five, including the first) for the same picture. If you hesitate which of two to leave out, omit the longer one.

The answers are to be submitted only after you have seen all the sixty pictures.

Complete equipment for contestants consists of "Gems from the Bible" and Reply Book. These two books form the Contest OUTFIT, offered as a premium with subscription.

CUT ALONG THIS LINE

HOW TO OBTAIN THE OUTFIT OF

"Gems from the Bible" and Reply Book

(Mark X in front of offer you want.)

Accept any one of the following five offers and we shall at once send you free of charge and prepaid the Contest OUTFIT consisting of "Gems from the Bible," Reply Book, rules and information and everything else you need.

OFFER NO. 1: Send us a yearly subscription to the Christian Herald (new, renewal, or extension—for yourself or some other person) at $2.00.

OFFER NO. 2: You being a subscriber, send us a yearly subscription to the Christian Herald, in behalf of some other person, at $1.50

OFFER NO. 3: The same as offer No. 2, except that the new subscriber will also receive an OUTFIT if, instead of $1.50, you send $2.00.

OFFER NO. 4: Send us two yearly subscriptions, one for the Christian Herald and one for the Modern Priscilla (a monthly magazine for the home), at the total price of $2.50. One or both can be for yourself or anybody else. New, renewal or extension.

OFFER NO. 5: Send us two yearly subscriptions, one for the Christian Herald and one for the Orange Judd American Agriculturist (a live weekly farm paper published separately for different sections of the country), at the total price of $2.50. One or both can be for yourself or anybody else. New, renewal or extension

BIBLE PICTURE CONTEST ORDER COUPON

Date.................1916

The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City.

Gentlemen:—I enclose $ . . . . , for which fill the Offer to the left which I have marked with an X, and send me the Bible Picture Contest Outfit, consisting of "Gems from the Bible" and Reply Book, free and postpaid immediately.

(Cut off the bottom of this page, along the dotted line. If you want the 21 back pictures sent you free with the Outfit, write on bottom margin of page: "Send 21 back pictures free with the Outfit.")

Name . . . .

Address . . . .

NOTE: This coupon may be either cut out or copied.

Address: THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY

BLUE STREAKS

THERE can be no better value than these Goodyear Blue Streak bicycle tires.

Yet our price for the non-skid is $2.50 each — wherever you live — and you get Goodyear standard quality, in a guaranteed tire.

Your dealer can easily get Blue Streaks if not now in stock.

You can always tell a Goodyear by the beautiful white tread with the Blue Streak on each side.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company
Akron, Ohio

GOODYEAR
AKRON
Bicycle Tires

Ro-San

Indoor Closet

More Comfortable Healthful and Convenient than the Out-Door Privy

Eliminates the open vault and cesspool, breeding places for germs. Have a warm, sanitary, odorless toilet right in your house. No going out in cold weather. A boon to invalids. Endorsed by State Boards of Health.

ABSOLUTELY ODORLESS

Put It Anywhere In The House

The germs are killed by a chemical process in water in the container, which you empty once a month. Absolutely no odor. No more trouble to empty than dishwater. Closet absolutely guaranteed. Write for full description and price.

ROWE SANITARY MFG. CO. 230 ROWE BLDG., DETROIT, MICH.

Ask about the Ro-San Washstand—Hot and Cold Running Water Without Plumbing

GREGORY'S
60th Birthday
Bargain Seed Offer
Only 10c.

GREGORY'S HONEST SEEDS

We want to celebrate our 60th anniversary by getting acquainted with 25,000 lovers of flowers. To do this we are making an unusual offer of five packets of our finest flower seeds for 10c postpaid. These include Aster, finest mixed, Bachelors Button, the old favorite. Phlox Drummondi, a great variety of colors. Poppy mixed, very showy for borders. Petunia, finest mixed, excellent for bedding display, including Garden Blue Print with five packets, only 10c. Valuable Catalog Free. Tells how to successfully grow all kinds of flowers and vegetables. Offers money-saving on choicest and best varieties. Illustrated. Send 10c for special offer of 5 packets Gregory's Honest Seeds described above. 60th Anniversary Catalog, free.

J. J. H. Gregory & Son, 319 Elm St., Marblehead, Mass.

FREE BOOK WAGNER PARK Flowers

At prices that will surprise you. Our Roses [illegible] from Coast to Coast. Free delivery everywhere in the U. S. We assist you to plan [illegible] Our years of experience at [illegible] free. Our instructive catalog will [illegible] creating the most artistic and [illegible] whether yours is but a small [illegible] Write today for catalog 94.

WAGNER PARK NURSERY CO., Box 867, SIDNEY, OHIO

SAMPLE OUR SEED

Three earliest vegetables in cultivation for 10c. One packet each, Robinson's Earliest Tomato, Earliest Round Red Radish, Earliest Lettuce, 10c to new customers. Regular price 30c. CATALOG FREE.

C. N. Robinson & Bro., Dept. 64, Baltimore, Md.

More Views on "Preparedness"

"Preparedness" Antagonistic to Christ

WHY should there be any argument in a professedly Christian land over the subject of national preparedness? Christ came to earth the avowed exponent and expounder of spiritual law.

Were his utterances upon self-defense so unintelligible that we fail to understand? There may be in Scripture many passages with hidden and symbolical meaning that to the natural mind may be difficult of understanding; but what excuse can we possibly have for misinterpreting the following short, terse, concise commands:

"But I say unto you, that ye resist not evil."

"Overcome evil with good."

"Put up the sword into his place; for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword."

The idea of "preparedness" is antagonistic to Christ's doctrines. It is an insult to divinity to discuss it. Preparing to meet our enemies with deadly weapons, ready to violate his expressed command to resist not evil! Unwilling to adopt his plan of "overcoming evil with good"!

We have played fast and loose with spiritual law down to the present moment. We have for ourselves substituted a code of morals from natural law, and have called ourselves Christians.

By "preparedness" this nation, in effect, says to our brothers, "We prefer not to kill you, yet at the same time we distrust you, we suspect you, and we are getting ready to kill you whenever occasion requires." Are we so foolish as to call this Christianity? "Ye are my friends," said Christ, "if ye do whatsoever I command you."

Plainville, Conn. D. C. PECK.

What the West Stands For

I LIKE the stand you take against the wild craze to stampede the American people into huge preparations for war. The West wants nothing of it. What we do stand for is proper coast defenses, including battleships, submarines, arms and ammunition, all manufactured by the government. No private contracts in this. And we stand for 100,000 or 125,000 men in the regular army as a nucleus and no more. Great military preparations always have led and always will lead to war. If we are always right there will be very little occasion to fight. OSCAR BOOTH.

Central City, Neb.

Let Us Have Peace—Not War

I HAVE been a subscriber for the Christian Herald a number of years and consider it one of the very best papers published. I am glad of the stand you have taken on the war question, and as to the much-talked-about "Preparedness." I hope you will always continue on the side of right. May God bless richly all who are in any way connected with the publishing of so good and helpful a paper.

MRS. JENNIE A. CASSEL.

Hummelstown, Pa.

National Unrighteousness a Danger

THE published views of your readers are interesting and add to the attractiveness of your valuable paper. Every living being who desires peace can have "the peace of God which passeth all understanding," but to expect peace among nations where the Prince of Peace is not recognized in the government is not reasonable or consistent. "They have healed also the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace, when there is no peace."

This country was founded by Christian men and belongs to Him who is heir of all things—King of kings, King in heaven and King over all the earth.

How can the good Dr. Sheldon expect this nation to escape war—regardless of whether a majority of people do or do not favor war? "The nation that will not serve me shall perish." The great European war is said to be a commercial war, and it is but a short time since our high tariff was making war for commercial gain on other nations, and this regardless of the fact that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth" (Acts 17:26).

So long as our nation denies Christ's authority in our fundamental law, sanctions immoral divorce, breaks the Sabbath, sells intoxicating liquor, prevents our fellow-beings of other nationalities from commercial intercourse through high tariff, and unjustly discriminates against the colored peoples, we shall need some kind of armor for defense against a sure coming day of reckoning.

Conscience makes cowards of us all, and we need not blame our high tariff friends if they insist on a large army and navy. Some of those nations in Europe and Asia whom we have wronged through the commercial acts of our government and owing to the color of their skin may feel aggrieved, especially as we continue to send them missionaries. No; so long as we don't recognize God any better than we do—thereby forfeiting his favor and protection as a nation—we would better do the next best thing and fortify, lest some wandering Danite tribe might observe us as "quiet and secure" and we share the same fate as Laish.

Chicago, Ill. J. C. MCCANDLESS.

America's Great Opportunity

I HEARTILY endorse your ideas in regard to "preparedness." "Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide." I feel that that moment has come for the United States to stand strong for peace, and by our actions show ourselves followers of the Prince of Peace. I pray that the Christian Herald may be used in a way to bring this about.

Conway, Mo. ANNIE DAVIS.

"Blessed Are the Peacemakers"

I BELIEVE we, as individuals and as a nation, have a right to believe that we shall be blessed if we are peacemakers. I believe it is the history of nations that they that have taken the sword perish by the sword.

I was reading in the Herald that the cost of the present war was $50,000,000 daily, and it told what good things it would do and how if a small part of the money that is spent for war and preparing for war was rightly used, there would be no more poverty and want. I think we who believe that, ought to let our Congressmen know how we feel and ought to teach and talk peace.

Bradentown, Fla. T. B. GALLUP.

"Preparedness" and "Fat Contracts"

I WOULD like to see you take a still more decided stand against the "preparedness" advocated by President Wilson and the arms and munitions interests. I think all the jingo talk in the papers is published to create a sentiment in favor of preparedness, that the munition and arms concerns may get fat contracts from the government.

Jetmore, Kan. JOHN BRUMFIELD.

"Preparedness" Leads to War

IT seems to me that by trading in munitions for war we are only encouraging the nations now at war, showing them that we believe in war. We too are preparing for war. I believe if we had been spending the mon in spreading the Gospel these genera ons past that we have spent on battl ips and other war tools, we might have een more enlightened and thereby have ept down the evil spirit and war vil. This preparedness has not one pta of love in its tone. It is only a lou ry, "We dare you to molest us. W vill surely kill the last one of you." his world is forgetting the God of ve; malice and hate are the upper ost thoughts. Loving a sinner has wor m, but hate never. Why not love a n ion and win it? We never can win by preparing to fight. If this nation s a solid phalanx of love and peace, in ad of being like a balky team, some p ng for war, others for peace, we i ght gain the whole world for Christ in ad of preparing for war.

MRS. E. C. BLOOMFIE

Lincoln, Kan.

No Danger of War With Eur e

THE foreign nations have a less at home that will last as long a ny now living will remember. We v ld make the most stupendous blunde ny nation ever committed in preparin for what is not and in no way can ev e. The nations in war are so exha d, they would never make such a ve re. When we learn who is agitating fo his preparedness, we find it is the n ey power, the men of finance or the n u-facturers who see in war a gam or millions for their pockets.

The President referred to this w as a foreign affair and urged that we st be neutrals, which we accepted as e. He even assisted in appointing a n-mittee to go abroad with Pres nt Jordan to see if peace could n be arranged. He was very anxiou or peace, a view in which the nation j ed and approved. Had he continue in the same way, he would yet ha a united nation to back him. Ha he continued his peace policy and ret ed shipments of war material, he w ld long ago have accomplished tha in which he failed. A. H. GRIE

Lawrence, Kan.

The Only Way for Christiar

I FEEL as to the question of e-paredness that the first tho ht should be "What would Jesus do?" d what did he tell his followers t lo when he was on this earth in the m of a man?

I can't see any way other tha he Christ way and that is not the wa of war, but the way of love and peace As of old, our prayer should be "I d, increase our faith," and perfect th destroyeth fear. As Elisha said, " ar not, for they that be with us are re than they that be with them."

Perry, Mo. L. O. KEITHL

True Christianity Against "P paredness"

IN the December 16 Buffalo Ex ss Dr. Hobbie says: "I nowhere d in my Bible that war is an evil or ." At quite a large Sunday scho I attended some time ago the sup n-tendent asked: "How many know e commandments?" Two hands went p. Had he asked how many have d Christ's sermons recorded in Matt v, Mark, Luke and John I suppose al t the same number of hands would e raised. Is it any wonder Christians e murdering each other in Europe d favoring preparedness in America? he Christians are not doing so and will t do so.

The American Church Peace Unio is against preparedness. It is compose f twenty-nine different church organ -tions. Say they, "Military prepa -ness has proved inadequate as a s -guard against war." All pastors e asked to help foster a deeper spiri f racial sympathy and international g d will. ALFRED KIEFE

Lackawanna, N. Y.

Model

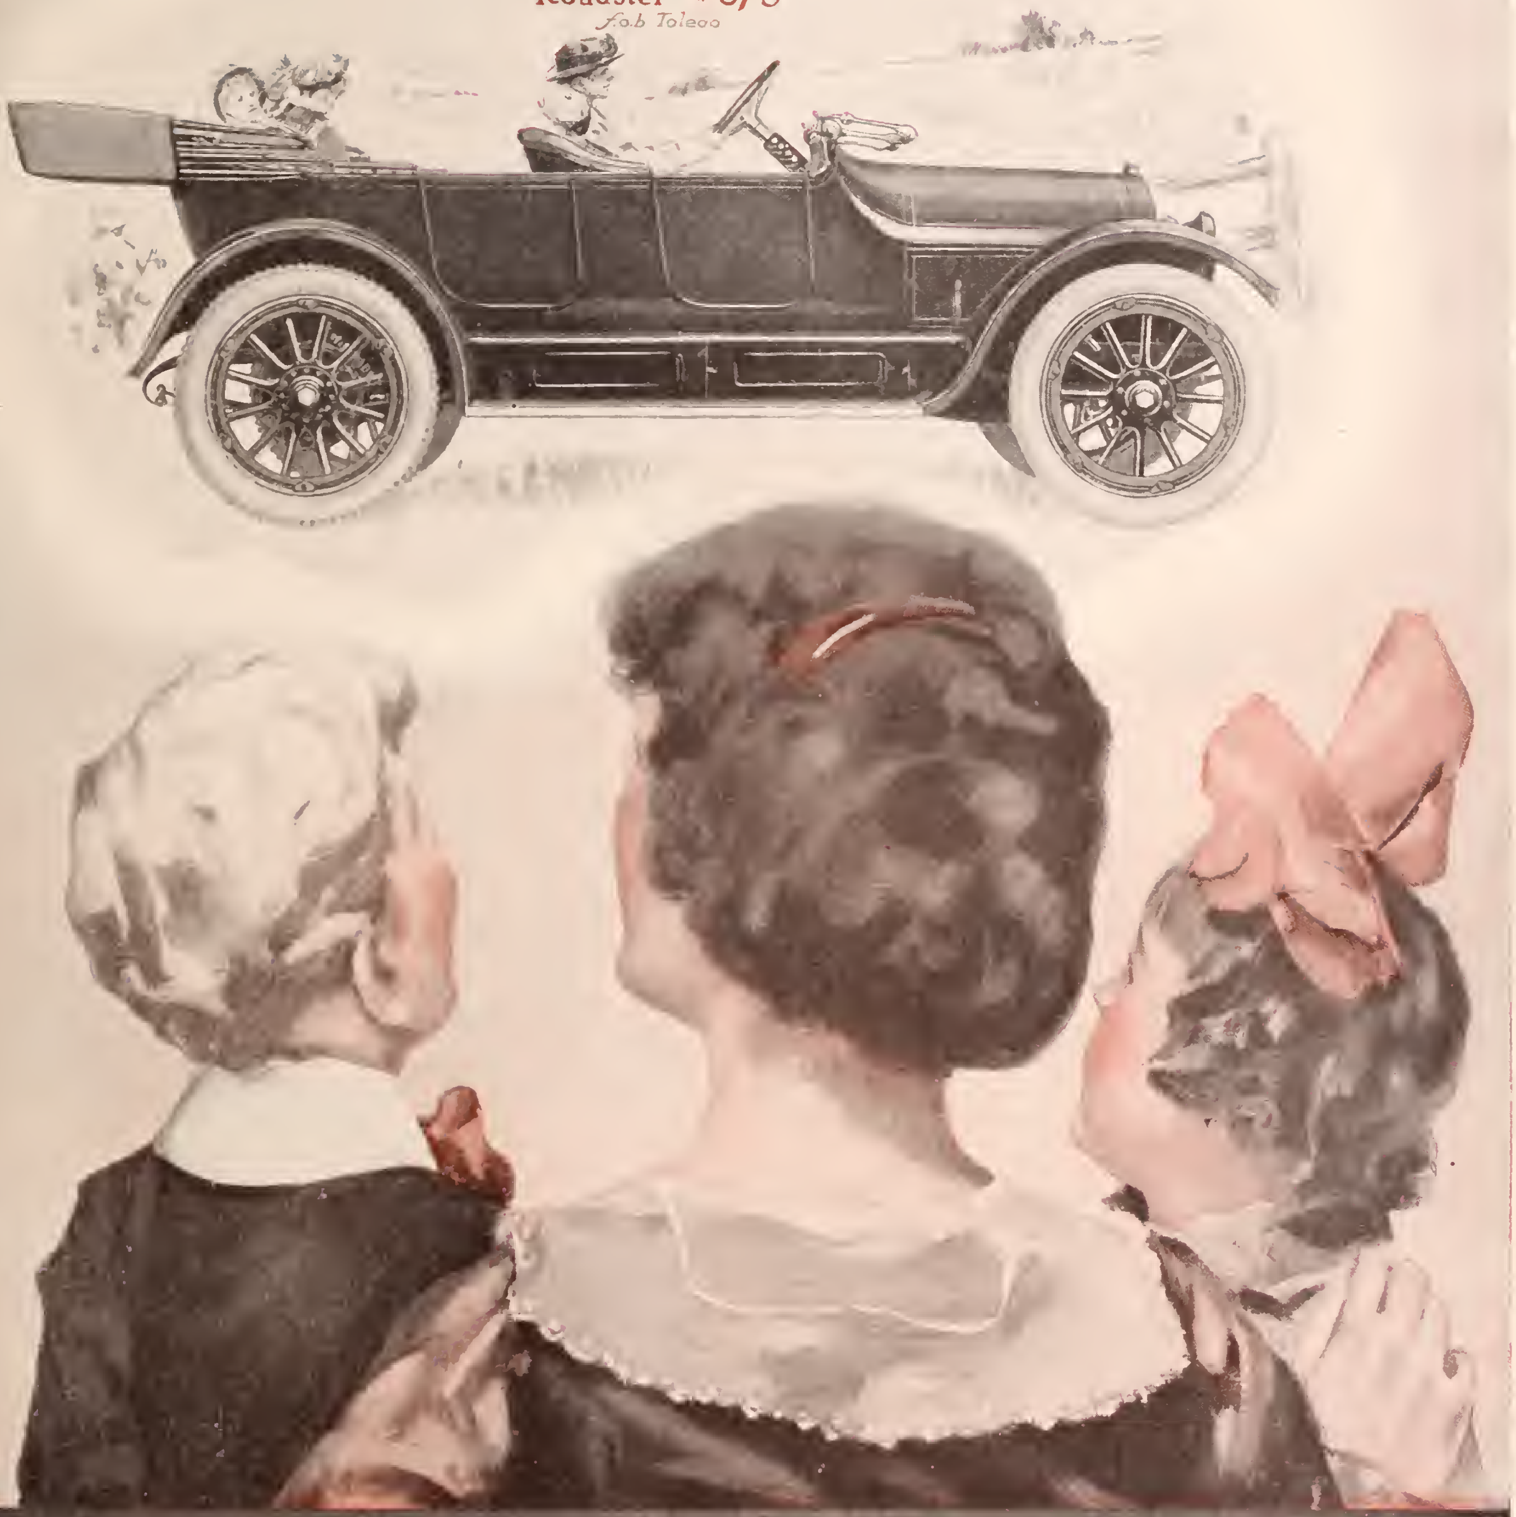
83-B

Overland

$695

Roadster $675

f.o.b. Toledo



Now—Let Your Dream Come True

For you can now have the big, comfortable, beautiful family car—

The thirty-five horsepower Overland—

The economical means to a bigger, broader, healthier, happier, family life—

For $695.

And though the price has been reduced the car is improved.

It has the very latest en bloc type motor with a smooth flow of abundant power and an exceptionally fast "pick-up."

Here is the car (with improvements) which has outsold, virtually two for one, any other car with a wheelbase of more than 100 inches.

Never before has the purchaser had so well founded, so emphatic, so conclusive a popular value-verdict to tell him which car to buy.

Time after time upon the completion of one production program we have enlarged our capacity, bought material for a bigger output and set a new and supreme standard of value.

And invariably there has followed a long period during which even the larger output has fallen thousands of cars short of satisfying the demand.

This time the value is greater by far than ever before.

We know that the price for this model will never be lower.

But we cannot guarantee that it will not be higher, for we are in the midst of a strong advance in the prices of materials.

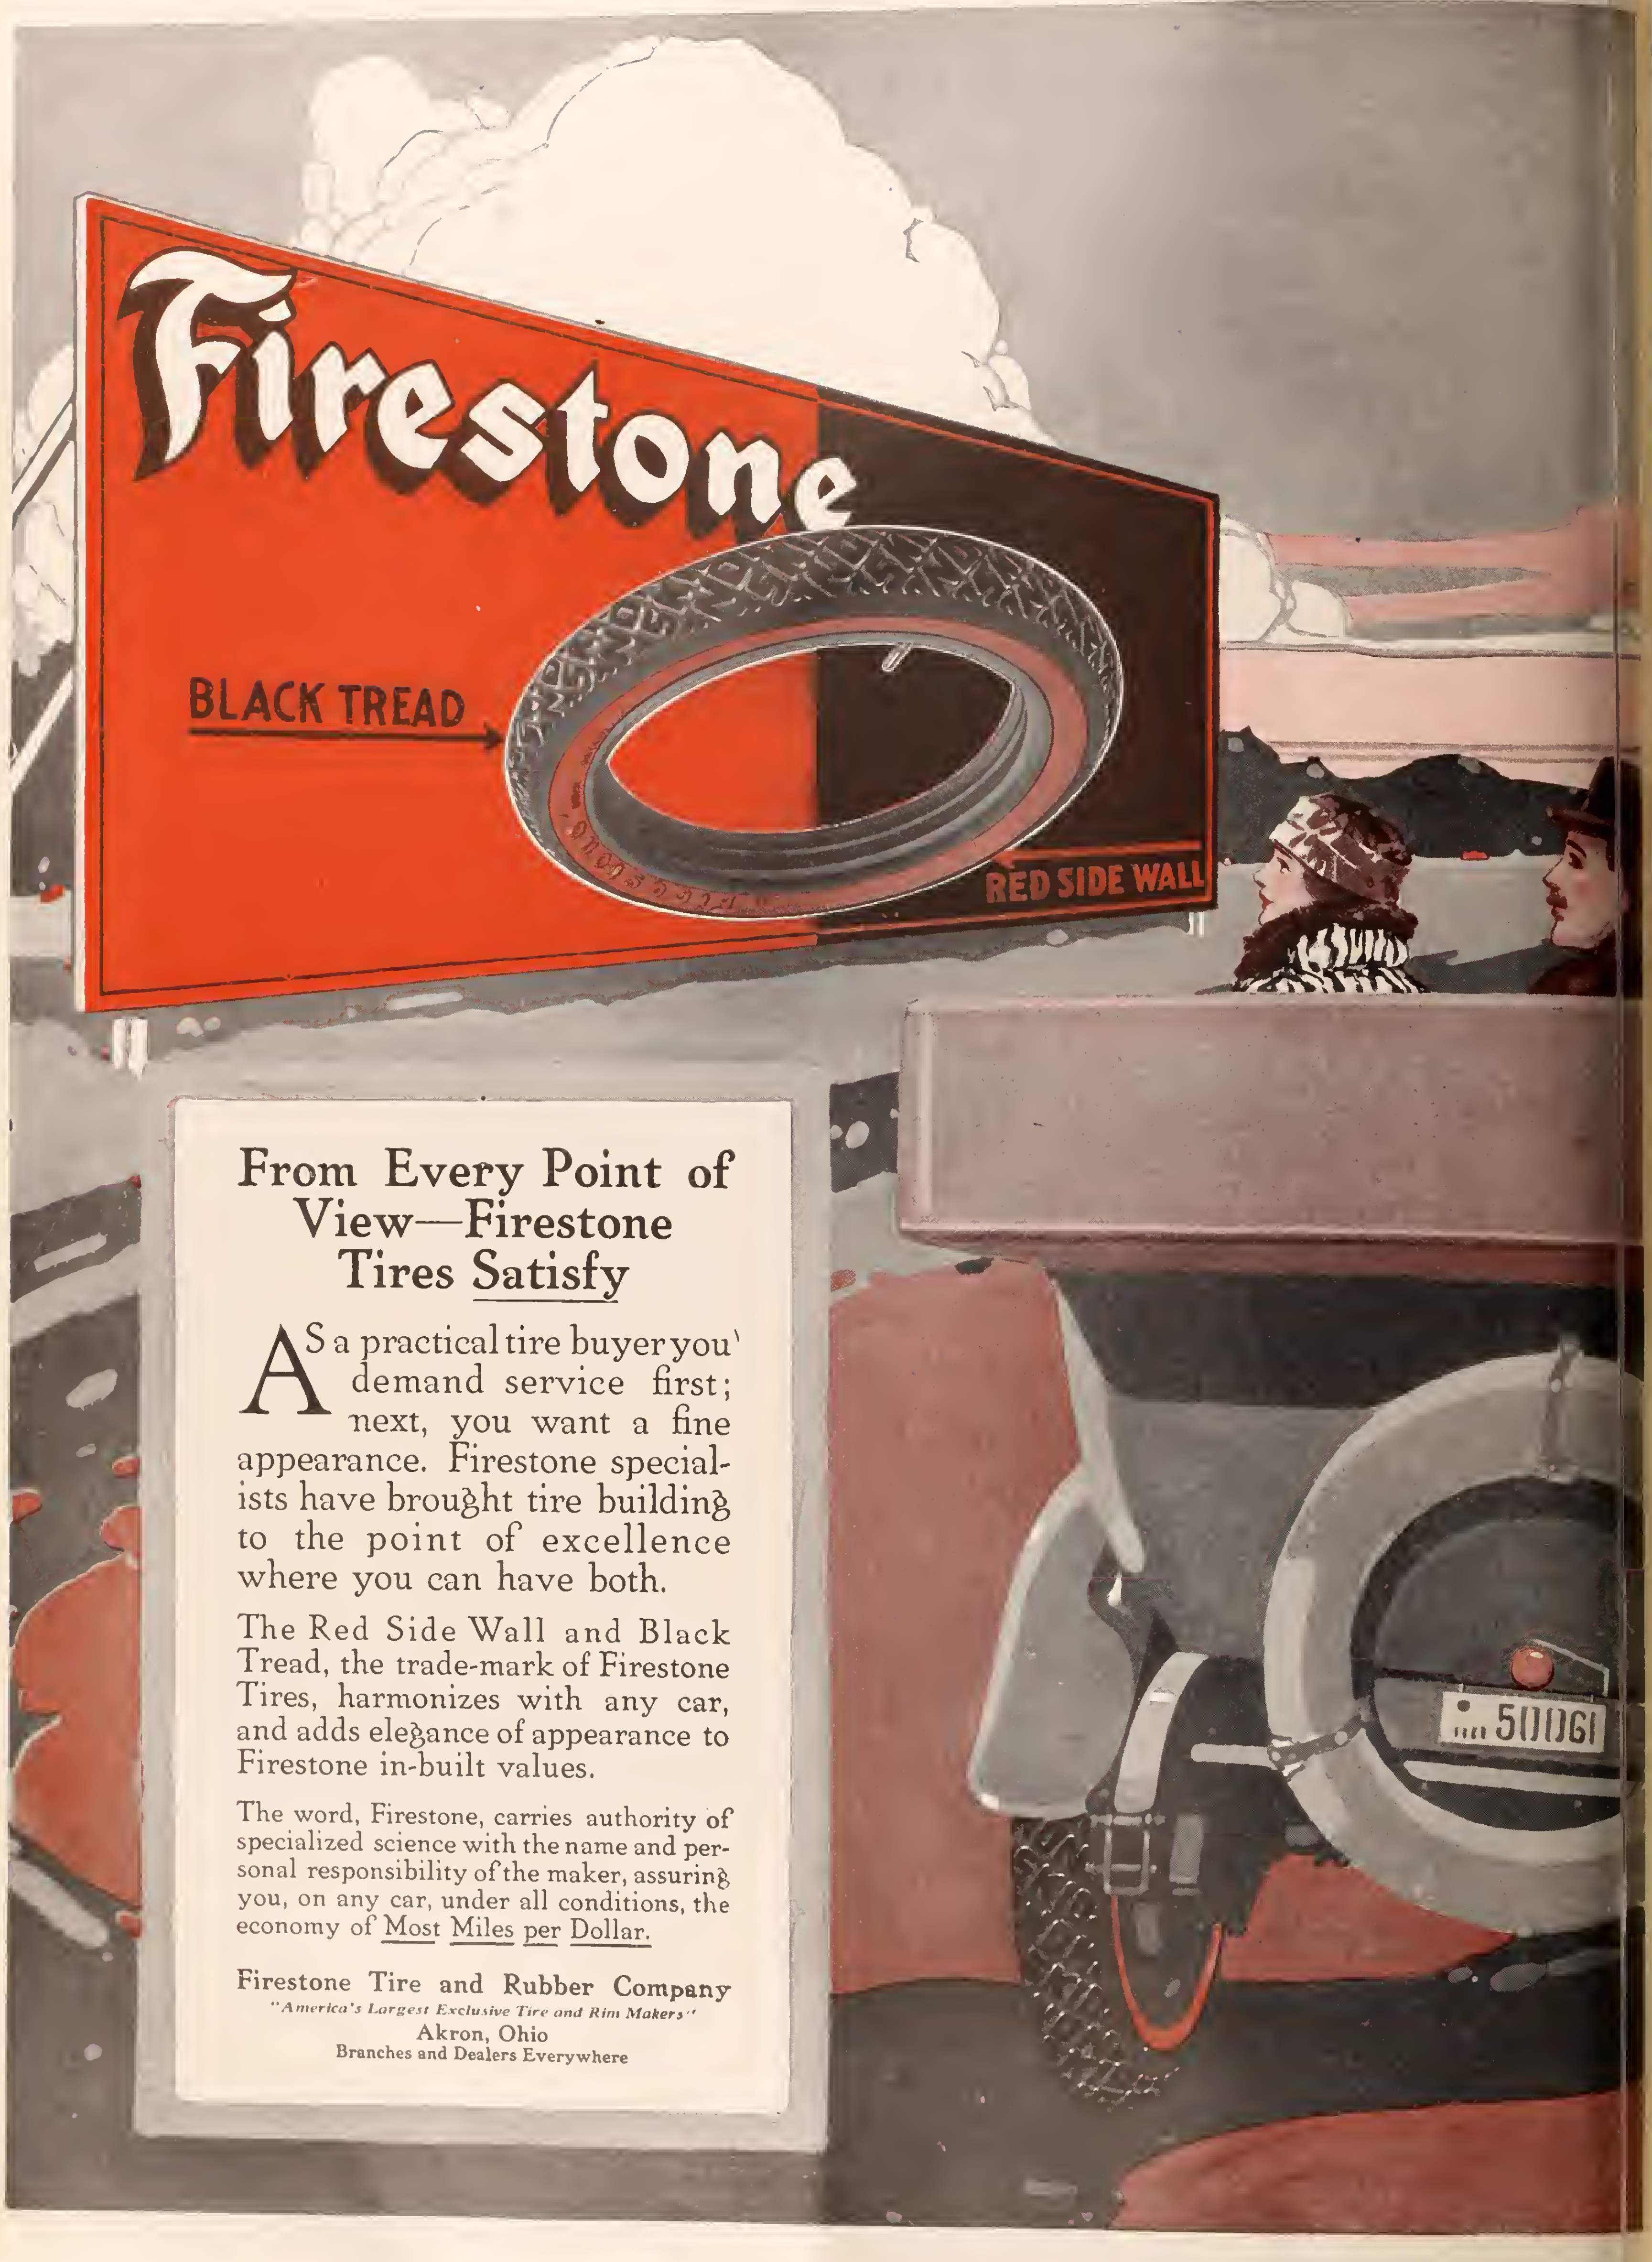
Now is the time to order your car either for immediate or later delivery.

See the Overland dealer at once and make your arrangements now.

Catalog on request. Please address Department 369

The Willys-Overland Company, Toledo, Ohio

"Made in U.S.A."



From Every Point of View—Firestone Tires Satisfy

As a practical tire buyer you demand service first; next, you want a fine appearance. Firestone specialists have brought tire building to the point of excellence where you can have both.

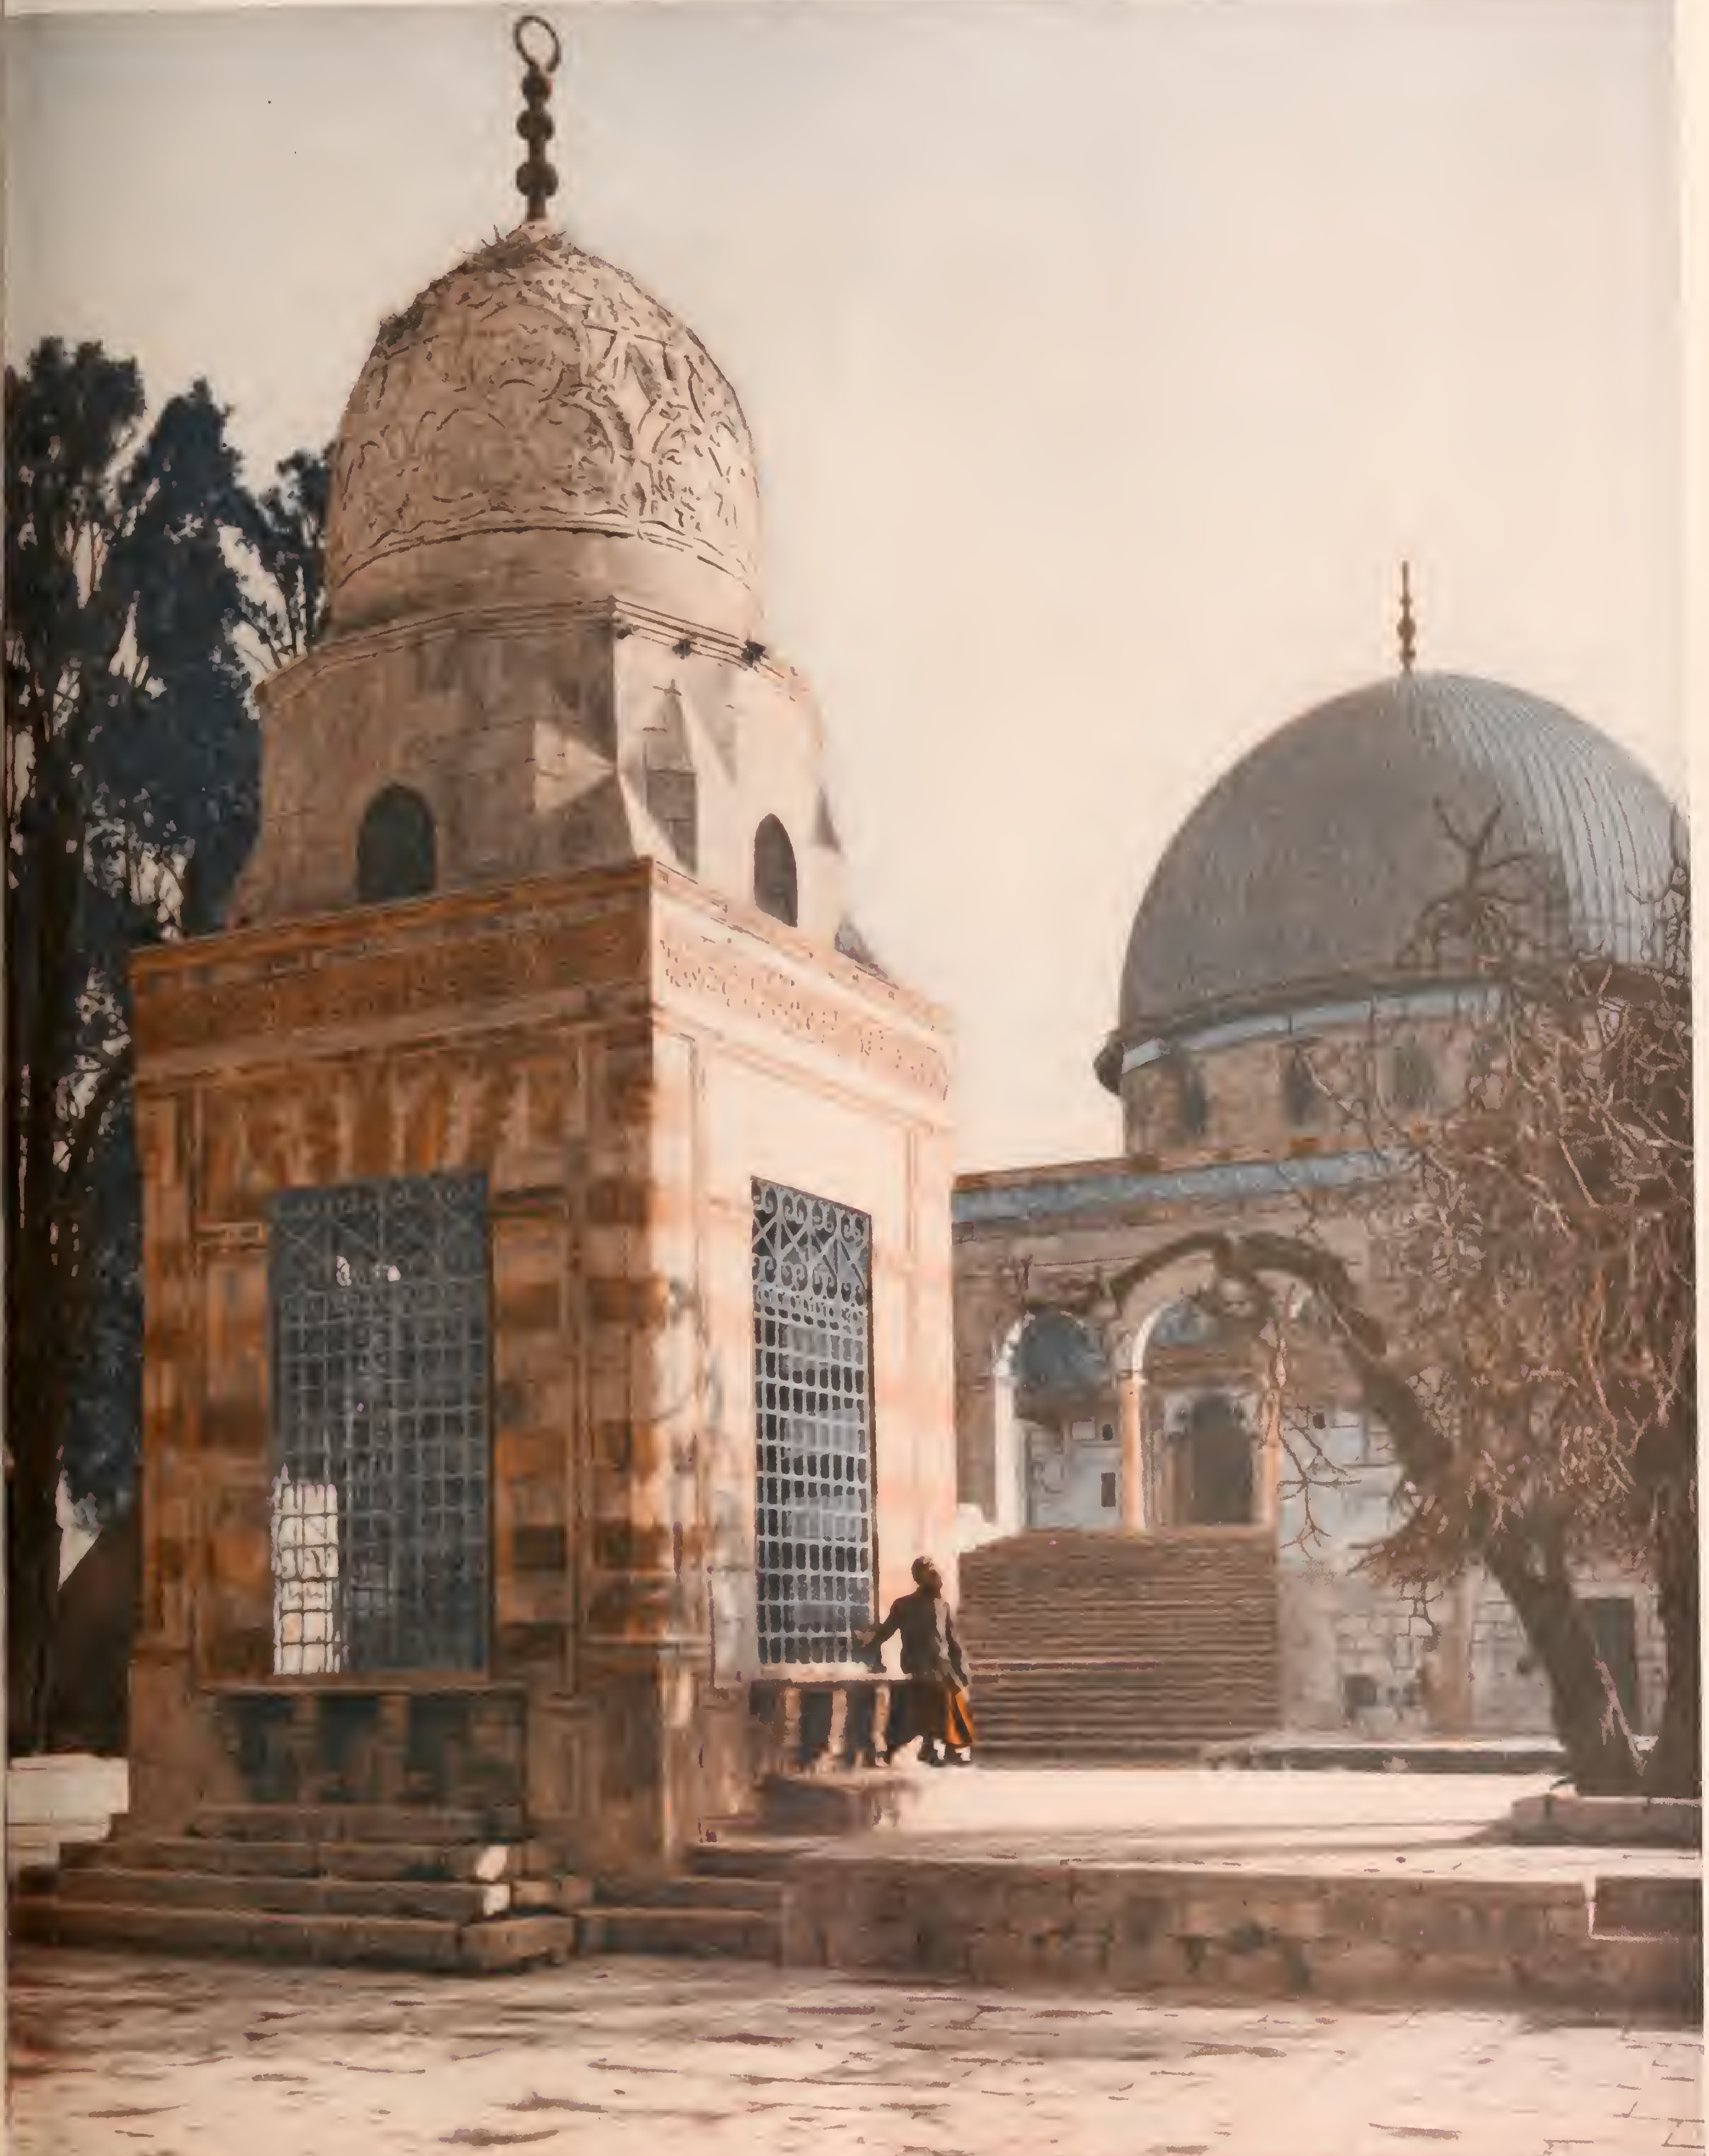
The Red Side Wall and Black Tread, the trade-mark of Firestone Tires, harmonizes with any car, and adds elegance of appearance to Firestone in-built values.

The word, Firestone, carries authority of specialized science with the name and personal responsibility of the maker, assuring you, on any car, under all conditions, the economy of Most Miles per Dollar.

Firestone Tire and Rubber Company
"America's Largest Exclusive Tire and Rim Makers"
Akron, Ohio
Branches and Dealers Everywhere

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1916, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
SBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR
NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 16, 1916
VOL. 39—NO. 7. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



Photograph by American Colony

"THE FOUNTAIN" AND MOSQUE OF OMAR AT JERUSALEM, ERECTED 1468

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

Y. V. T., Peoria, Ill., and D. E. McK., Brookline, Mass. I was deeply interested in your answer of November 26 replying to B. L., Iowa. In your answer you said "We have many good reasons for believing they know our present life and circumstances." I wish you would kindly give in the Mail-Bag some of the reasons above mentioned.

First of all is the fundamental conviction of the truth of immortality. If we accept at all the promise that life exists after death, such an existence would seem to imply the power to be conscious of events in the world of matter. Referring to the Scriptures, we notice the words of Jesus in relating the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, that the rich man seemed to know the condition of his brothers in the world he had left. If this is true with those who have not reached the heavenly places, how much truer must it be of those who are safe with our Lord? The words of Jesus, "There is joy in the presence of the angels over one sinner that repenteth" (Luke 15: 10), indicate that inhabitants of the heavenly world are aware of events in this. We have frequently in the Mail-Bag gone over the arguments and passages which indicate that those who died in the grace of Christ are happy and conscious, and this in itself would seem reasonably to imply that they have the power of observing the affairs on earth. To these inferences must be added what seem to be many well-substantiated psychic experiences in which Christians on earth have been conscious of being in communion with the spirits of those who have died; such particularly as the death-bed experiences of saints of Christ who have seemed to see Christian friends and companions who had previously died.

Mrs. M. E. F., Walla Walla, Wash. The descendants of Esau are generally believed to be the Edomites.

Subscriber, Cauthornville, Va. We cannot answer your question, which should be referred to some competent medical authority. Any judgment formed in advance might prove very unjust.

Thad, Ozmon, Conn. If the daughter feels it to be her duty to care for her stepmother, she may be justified in doing so. On the other hand, if she believes that she can make a proper and satisfactory arrangement, with skilled help to take her place, the case would be different. Whichever way she decides, she will doubtless act conscientiously, and her decision ought to be respected. There may be circumstances that put such an arrangement as you wish out of the question.

Inquirer, New Milford, Pa. The story that Ingersoll recanted in his last hours and confessed the truth of Christianity has never been verified.

Mrs. C. E. P., Rockford, Ill. Much of the enthusiasm which is awakened at the outset among the friends of missions in our churches subsides owing to the lack of personal contact with the work. If your class would undertake to give a modest amount regularly toward the support of a missionary, or for the education of a heathen child, or for any other specific purpose and would get into touch with the missionary, the latter would be more than glad to send them a letter at stated intervals, telling something about his work. The day on which such a letter came would be literally a "red-letter day," as far as class interest and enthusiasm are concerned. We know of people who have been enjoying this privilege for years and who would not think of stopping. Their enthusiasm never wanes, because they feel that they have a substitute at the front to pray for, to encourage and to help with their support.

M. E. A., Carthage, Mo. If by the "fruits of civilization" you mean the evils and wickedness of the times, in both Europe and America, it would be illogical as well as unjust to attribute them to the teachings of the Christian churches. It is not religion, but the neglect of it, that has caused the trouble. God's laws and his supreme rulership have been ignored and the teachings of Jesus Christ neglected. Yet all history teaches that the permanence of any nation or government depends upon such recognition. "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord," says the Scripture and Daniel in the passage to which you refer had the same basic idea when he wrote, "The Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men and giveth it to whomsoever he will." (Dan. 4: 17, 25, 32.) The same warning is thrice emphasized in a single chapter. There is always a temptation to draw parallels from history; but no one can foresee the outcome of the present international strife, nor the effect it may produce on the world's spirituality. We have no reason for pessimism, however. Christianity is progressive, as its record for 2,000 years has demonstrated, and we believe that after the world-war is ended, the Christian faith will be the sole victor, and will lead the nations back to the Saviour and his teachings, which will redeem society and raise out of the ruin a nobler, better, more spiritual civilization than any we have yet known.

Mars or Christ?

By ELISHA SAFFORD

HE hath levied toll of your forge and mill;
Day in, day out their red fires blaze;
Your wheels must turn at his sovereign will
While ye toil like serfs in the choking haze.
He hath levied toll of your iron and brass,
The gold and the grain that ye sorely need;
You must drive your herds from their native grass
To glut the maw of the despot's greed.
Ye have paid him toll, and more and more
Ye must pay, and the payings never cease.
Yet ye do all this for the god of War!
Would ye do as much for the Christ of Peace?

HE hath dragged your ships through the churning tides,
Away to the east, away to the west;
Black guns that gape from their brazen sides
Proclaim to the shuddering world their quest.
Their tall stocks belch their scorching breath
Like angry storm wracks 'gainst the blue;
Their crashing broadsides flame with death
And stain the waves to a crimson hue.
But he asked for these and ye paid him toll,
In ships and guns ye have calmed your fears,
Though the very keels that he laid he stole
From the orphan's prayers and the widow's tears.

HE called, and ye sent him a million men,
He called again and ye gave him more;
Ye cheered while he tore them from field and glen,
From wan-faced wives at their cottage door.
He haled them through mart and busy shop
To be maimed and spitted and scourged and flayed;
To be hurled in torrents that never stop
To graves that his fierce blood-lust hath made.
Ye have given the bravest and best ye bore
To be winnowed and slaughtered without surcease.
Ye have done all this for the monster War!
Would ye do as much for the Christ of Peace?

GO read the truth that is born of blood,
That leaps from this welter of smoke and flame,
The truth that ye blindly have long withstood,
And scornfully mocked to your bitter shame.
"O men and women, whatever your creed,
Had ye made for the world such sacrifice,
Ye had lightened its burden of human need
And kindled new joy in its sorrowing eyes.
Ye had clothed its naked and fed its poor,
Ye had changed to laughter its dole and tears;
Ye had brought the King to your very door
And hasted his coming a thousand years."

Mrs. M. E. L., Edinburg, Ill. Commentators have expressed the opinion that the probable reason why Daniel was not included in the summons to Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego was that he may have been at some distant part of the empire on state business; or the enemies of the Jews may have decided to begin with those near at hand and who had less influence, before attacking Daniel. Besides, Daniel was regarded in a very special light by the king (see Dan. 2: 46) and hence was not required to bow to the image.

B. F., Dayton, Ohio. The evidence of the existence of Jesus, furnished by secular writers, includes first of all Tacitus the historian, who, about 115 A. D., wrote that the Christians whom Nero persecuted were named after Christ, who was put to death by Pontius Pilate in the reign of Tiberius. Pliny, Roman governor of Bithynia, about 122 A. D. wrote to Trajan concerning the best method of dealing with Christianity—which he called a "superstition" that had spread till the pagan temples were almost forsaken and the trade in sacrifices ruined. "These Christians" reverenced one whom they called Christ and to whom they sang hymns and prayed. Josephus in his "Antiquities" twice makes mention of Christ, and although the genuineness of the passages has been disputed, they have never been successfully shown to be spurious. The passages are in Ant. XVIII: 3: 3 and Ant. XX: 9: 1. Furthermore, there was evidence in the Talmud itself—a fact well understood by eminent Hebrew scholars today.

Mrs. O. P. J., Iowa. The passage in Jonah 3 : 10, in which God is spoken of as "repenting," is frequently misunderstood. When the message was sent to the people of Nineveh, they were so ripe for judgment that their destruction was inevitable, should they continue in sin. But the moment they showed evidence of real repentance, the divine attitude—in conformity with God's immutable laws in dealing with sinful men—was relaxed and the punishment averted. This indeed was the object of the mission to Nineveh—if they turned from their sin, they would be forgiven and the disaster would be averted; if not, then they should perish. There is nothing inconsistent in God's attitude, nor was there at any time a change in his twofold purpose. The change was in the Ninevites, who by repenting became objects of mercy as the divine law provided.

Reader, Fullerton, N. D. He is a very poor Christian who, having health and opportunity, does not avail himself of the privilege of worshiping God in his temple. There are so many injunctions in the Bible on this point, and so many promises of blessing attached to it, that we are surprised that anyone cl ing to be a Christian should overlook em. Again and again we are enjoined not forsake the assembling of ourselves toget in prayer and praise and worship in d's house. Both under the Old and the ew Dispensations, this is a rule laid down the godly to follow. "A day in thy c s," wrote David in Psalm 84, "is better n a thousand." "How amiable are thy er-nacles, O Lord of Hosts! My soul lo th, yea, even fainteth for the courts of the d." "Blessed are they that dwell in thy se: they will still be praising thee." Whil is possible for one to be of a retiring na e—even a hermit—and still live a Christia ife, the usefulness of such a life must be ins ifi-cant in comparison with that of one wh uts all his talents and energies into the d's work in hearty cooperation with the th-ren. Union is strength in spiritual in secular things. Therefore, unless sickr or some insurmountable obstacle preven our attendance at church, we miss much the real Christian life, and restrict our own lue as Christian workers by remaining away

Mrs. N. B. Some time ago it was anno ced in the Mail-Bag that the 119th alm contains in every verse but one som rm of reference to the law of God. hat verse is meant?

The statement is often made that every rse of this Psalm contains some such refe ice. But this is hardly correct. Verse 122 ds, "Be surety for thy servant for good; l not the proud oppress me." It is hardly p ble to make the word "surety" refer to d's law. In verse 90 the word is "faithful s," but faithfulness here is described as uni sal and eternal, and so may be said to imply d's law. In verses 3 and 37 the word is "v s," and this too, implies a law—a law of c uct and operation. But verse 122 asks ply for a personal assurance, and so seems dly to refer to law.

Subscriber, San Francisco, asks i any reader of the Mail-Bag can name the aut of the poem which contains this stanza:

"Perhaps some day when I'm weary,
I shall think of myself again;
And loneliness shall fill my heart
With a selfish wearing pain;
But I know I can trust my Father
To send an angel down,
To point my gaze from the cross I b
To the bright and starry crown"

F. B. McG., Iowa State College, es, Iowa. Write to the foreign missionary rds for information on industrial and agricu ral work in mission fields. We believe tha gri-cultural work is taught at some of the mi ons in China, India and elsewhere. Look the work of George A. Roberts of I. S. at Old Umtali, South Africa.

W. W. G., Viola, Kan., sends this tle descriptive note of a scene familiar in any homes, but to which too many others e a stranger: "When the children were sm we had evening worship while we still sat a nd the supper table, and before the childr got sleepy. On Sabbath evenings all took p in prayer. The Lord's Prayer was often u in the morning. How lame the common e se. 'Haven't time!' For what family coul not repeat a verse of Scripture each and have ief prayer, not taking over five minutes, ich would be far better than no recognition of l?"

H. N., Scarsdale, N. Y. The Moody in-ing School, East Northfield, Mass., Ha on Institute, and several others of the same ass will furnish the information you want i ou write to the secretaries.

Mrs. C. M., DeWitt, Iowa. If the gam in any sense a gambling one, better leave it ne. It is a good rule to "avoid even the appea nce of evil," and to remember that, while a ing may be harmless as far as we ourselves ar on-cerned, the result of our example, if we ac-tice a doubtful pastime, may be to lead ers wrong, with far more serious consequen .

D. W., Medina, Ohio, writes: "I notic In the Christian Herald the couplet:

'What I gave, I had.
What I kept, I lost.'

Many years ago, it is said, an epitaph as found on a tombstone with these lines:

'What I spent, I had;
What I gave, I have;
What I had left, I lost.'

I thought you might like to keep in me ry the triplet instead of the couplet. I am a ld subscriber, seventy-two on my last birt y."

Our reader's memory is keen and her q a-tion is doubtless correct. We are glad to w its origin.

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD
An Illustrated News Weekly for the Home

Making Over the Koreans

By F. HERRON SMITH

ONE might easily have made himself believe he was on Fifth Avenue, had it not been for the crowds of brown-faced, sailor-hatted, white-clad people about. A hurdy-gurdy was grin ng out the latest tunes. The streets were brig ly lighted, and the great newspaper building in ron of which we stood was ablaze with hundreds of elec e lights. Even as we looked, a gigantic sign in a s nge language flashed before our faces. Our eyes wandered to the righ to behold one of the ost beautiful illuminat s imaginable; the ven able and picturesq South Gate of Seo outlined with hundre of incandescent ligh. It is doubtful whe er ever before an illu nation has followed suc nusual and graceful es. A searchlight, stat ned on the mountai de above it, was poi ng its finger of ligh hither and thither.

T our left was anoth great gate delin ed in electricity aga st a dark mountain, and clustered about it and in front dozens of glit ring towers. On th tallest, another sea light was located; an above, a Zeppelin-sha d captive balloon, ga with colored lights, pro aimed the merits of a p ular brand of toothpo er and cosmetics.

every station in Ja n and even on the ste ers we had seen the orgeous posters of a rean dancing girl ad rtising the Chosen In strial Exhibition, cel rating the fifth anni sary of the annexatio and we needed no guide to tell us that we were in th midst of it. It is five years since old Korea died an Japan as coroner took charge of the remains. Ja n is unique. Most countries would have crem d the corpse and gotten what they could from th ashes. Japan decided on resuscitation, and a ve able resurrection is taking place. Only the other da Dr. Robert E. Speer, at a luncheon given in his honor by the governor general, Count Terauchi, said that Japan's policy toward Korea was unique in two respects.

JAPAN is the only country that is subsidizing its colonies to any great extent (from four to six millions, gold, a year), and Japan is the only strong and virile nation that has offered and is trying to assimilate a weak nation over which it has secured control. Dr. Speer was filled with amazement at the changes that had taken place in the eighteen years since he had visited Korea, and even we who live in Chosen are amazed at the miracles that are constantly taking place before our very eyes. The great X of the railroad is constantly being extended till it now totals more than 1,000 miles, and the upper right hand is rapidly stretching toward Vladivostok. Were it not for the railroad the exposition would be an impossibility, but with its aid some 20,000 people each day are viewing their modernized capital and the exhibits showing what has been accomplished in the past few years.

General Terauchi takes more pride in what the Koreans have accomplished than in what is done by the Japanese. He looks on them as his children and has instilled into the Japanese the feeling that they must treat the Koreans as younger brothers and sisters. Where a few years ago it was not unusual to see a Japanese beating or kicking a Korean, nowadays one can travel from one end of the country to the other, as the writer does, without seeing a single case of cruel treatment. A friend from Tokyo expressed surprise at the contented appearance of the people and at the rapidity with which they are acquiring Japanese and adapting themselves to the new conditions. It is a fact that while there may still be apprehension in the hearts of some, the only Koreans who are greatly dissatisfied with present conditions are the officials whose graft has been stopped once and forever, and a small number of really patriotic young men who are grieving that their country has disappeared from among the nations and who would rather be citizens of a mean and insignificant but independent Korea than part of a great Japanese Empire. The Prince Yi Household, as the former imperial family is called, receives 1,500,000 yen a year from the government. At the time of the annexation an imperial donation of 30,000,000 yen was made from Japan to Korea, of which 13,000,000 yen went as a solatium to the nobles, ministers and other officials of the former régime, and 17,000,000 was made a foundation fund for giving work to Koreans, spreading education and

Photo by Methodist Board of Foreign Missions

A Class of Japanese Christian Boys and Their Teacher, Rev. F. H. Smith

Photo by Methodist Board of Foreign Missions

Good roads are being built, barren spots planted with grass—with such results as this

The Installation of Water Systems Is Reducing Disease in the Cities

Photos by Methodist Board of Foreig ons

Tearing Down Ancient Gateway, Seoul, to Accommodate Modern Traffic

relieving people in distress. In former days Korean gentlemen despised labor and women passed much of their time in idleness shut up in their houses. Much of this money has been used in encouraging industry and in giving instruction in agriculture, sericulture, filature, weaving, the manufacturing of paper and of other small articles that can be made at home.

TO one who has seen San Francisco or San Diego, this exhibition must have seemed very tame. Even those who are accustomed to the expositions which are so common in Japan called this a "Yabo show." By this they meant that it was an exhibit that might be interesting to and instructive for the common Korean. And indeed this is just what it was intended for. In 368 common schools, in 78 industrial schools and in various special and higher schools, at an expense of more than 2,000,000 yen a year, the Korean youth is being given a practical training and inspired with Japanese ideals. This exhibition was intended as a fifty days' special course for adults, and there they could see with their own eyes what is transpiring in this peninsula.

Outline maps showed the whole country with the 1,000 miles of railroad and 6,000 miles of state roads, making every part easily accessible by train or automobile. In miniature one could compare the old toilsome and exceedingly slow methods of transportation with the new. Practically all the members of our mission who are engaged in evangelistic work are now equipped with motorcycles, and one man can do easily the work that three formerly accomplished with great difficulty. Beautifully made models showed the chief harbors of the peninsula; Fusan with one pier completed and another well under way; the new open dock at Chinnampo; the big basin under construction at Chemulpo; also the beautiful ports of the northeast coast.

Surely many were filled with pride and spurred to new efforts as they saw the splendid apples, pears and grapes that can be grown here with little trouble. Cotton, hides, tobacco, wheat and rice had a building to themselves. Model houses, model irrigation systems, model implements, in fact models of almost everything, were everywhere. Visitors were shown how to raise silkworms, how to plant trees, how to weave, how to care for the sick, how to make good wells—even how to bury the dead. In the stalls were Swiss and English bulls and cows and American hogs.

It is doubtful whether in any country in a like period such tremendous changes have been introduced. Exports have increased from 18,000,000 yen in 1910 to 34,000,000 yen in 1914, while imports advanced from 39,000,000 yen in 1910 to 71,000,000 yen in 1913. Even the population is increasing rapidly, having advanced from 13 to 15 millions under the new régime. This is largely due to the strict sanitary measures taken and to the activities of the eighteen great charity hospitals and the scores of dispensaries scattered through the country. Vaccination is still enforced at certain times, and opium-users are arrested and forced to take treatment for their evil habit.

Arbor Day is observed even more zealously than in Kansas or Nebraska, and this year on that one day as many as 15,000,000 trees were planted. Rich in gold, iron and coal, with a fertile soil, a good rainfall and a climate that is not equaled in the temperate zone, and located at the very axis of the Orient, with close communications with Japan, China and E ope this, the poorest and most downtrodden of the n ions of the earth, is already fairly on the way to pros rity and better days.

JAPAN is endeavoring to nationalize the Kor n as she has the Loochooan. She is giving the K ean the best chance he ever had to make a man of h self. Four of the thirteen governors and the heads of any counties are Koreans. Thousands are emplo l as teachers and under officials, and the treatmen hey receive depends on their ability. Some are sai be mere figure-heads, but if it is so, it is because th ack the ability to be anything else. The stron and capable personalities among them command r pect everywhere.

This policy of nationalization has led to ome unpleasantnesses with mission schools. The g ern-ment has issued a new rule that will shut out al ible teaching from the regular curriculum and forl all religious ceremonies in school hours and in hool buildings. This is not to be enforced for ten ars. Let us hope that before the period is up the g ern-ment may come to have so much confidence the missionaries and such a high regard for Christ nity that it may not be necessary to enforce th rule strictly. Another new regulation requires the gis-tration of all churches and Christian workers, t is not meant to limit the religious freedom hi erto enjoyed. It cannot be said that the phenc enal interest of the Korean in Christianity is dimin ing, for at the special evangelistic meetings held ring the exhibition there was an attendance of nore than 100,000, and 11,583 inquirers were enrolle

For Gospel Work Among War Prisoners

AT a meeting of clergymen and laymen of various denominations held in the Bible House, Eighth Street and Fourth Avenue, New York City, on February 1, a movement was organized for prosecuting Gospel work among the prisoners of war in the great military detention camps of Europe. There were present at the meeting:

Rev. Joseph W. Kemp, D. D., pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, New York; Mr. Hugh Munro, Mr. Don O. Shelton, president of the National Bible Institute; Rev. Arthur J. Smith, D. D., superintendent of the New York Evangelistic Committee; Professor Franz Zeller; Mr. Delavan L. Pierson, editor of the Missionary Review of the World; Dr. Agide Pirazzini, of the faculty of the New York Bible Teachers' Training School; Dr. Raphael C. Thomas, pastor of the Second Avenue Baptist Church; Dr. Walter J. Sparks, of the Baptist Publication Society; Dr. Arvid Gordh, of the Swedish Baptist Church; Dr. Capek, pastor of the Slovak Baptist Church; Dr. Lipphardt; Mr. Krause, of the Harlem Y. M. C. A.; Dr. G. H. Sandison, editor of the Christian Herald; Professor Jackson of the Bloomfield Theological Seminary, and a number of others.

These gentlemen organized themselves into a general committee to be known as the "American Committee for Gospel Work among War Prisoners." Dr. William I. Haven, president of the American Bible Society, who had been present at a preliminary meeting and expressed his deep interest in the movement, was also elected as a member of this General Committee.

PASTOR WILLIAM FETLER of the Dom Evangelia (Evangelical Church) of St. Petersburg, Russia, in a brief address stated the object of the movement and the great need of it in the military camps of Europe. He estimated that not less than 2,500,000 Russian prisoners were at the present time in German and Austrian camps. Pastor Fetler read a letter from Dr. J. H. Jowett, pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, giving the work his hearty endorsement. Dr. Jowett wrote: "I do not know of any opportunity among all the many opportunities in Europe to do good which is more fraught with promise. The Russian people are essentially a reverent people. This reverence may sometimes express itself in forms of superstition, but nevertheless it is there, a great fruitful awe in the presence of the unseen. I suppose it would be true to say that the Russian people are the most reverent people in Europe. If only that rich bed of reverence could be planted with the seed of the kingdom of our Lord, the harvest would be inconceivable in its range and influence.

"Everybody knows how difficult it has been to evangelize Russia, and how the obstacles have sometimes appeared overwhelming. But now great masses of Russian soldiers are interned in Germany and Austria, and the door is open to present to them the Gospel of our Lord. It can be done not only by the spoken message, but perhaps even more effectively by the printed word. The days of these prisoners are long and they drag wearily on, and therefore they will welcome any form of reading, and preeminently I think they will eagerly welcome the story of our Saviour's love.

"I commend the movement to the Christian people of this country. This country has shown its beneficence toward stricken Europe in a hundred ways; in none could that beneficence be more fruitfully expressed than in sending the evangel of the Lord Jesus to these great multitudes of Russian prisoners."

A LETTER was also presented from the well-known evangelist, John MacNeill, of Denver, Colo., in which he said: "It is evident that to evangelize two million Russian prisoners of war now in Germany and Austria would have the very best results, not only to the men themselves, but to all Russia, when peace comes and these prisoners are free to return to their own land. One can scarcely think of anything more calculated to advance the kingdom of our Lord and to bring glory to his Name, out of the horrors of war han Brother Fetler's endeavor. am willing to do anything myself to lp."

Dr. I. M. Haldeman, pastor the First Baptist Church, New York ity, wrote: "On the black backgrou l of war God can write the evangel his grace; and it is possible that acro the bloodshed of the battlefield me nay have a vision of the blood sh for them in the attitude of infinit and inviting love. Out of this holoca t of bruised and stained bodies, he ma win a harvest of souls."

A telegram was also received rom Dr. Shailer Mathews, dean of C ago University and president of the F eral Council of Churches of Christ in An ica, approving the movement and ex essing his willingness to aid in the wo .

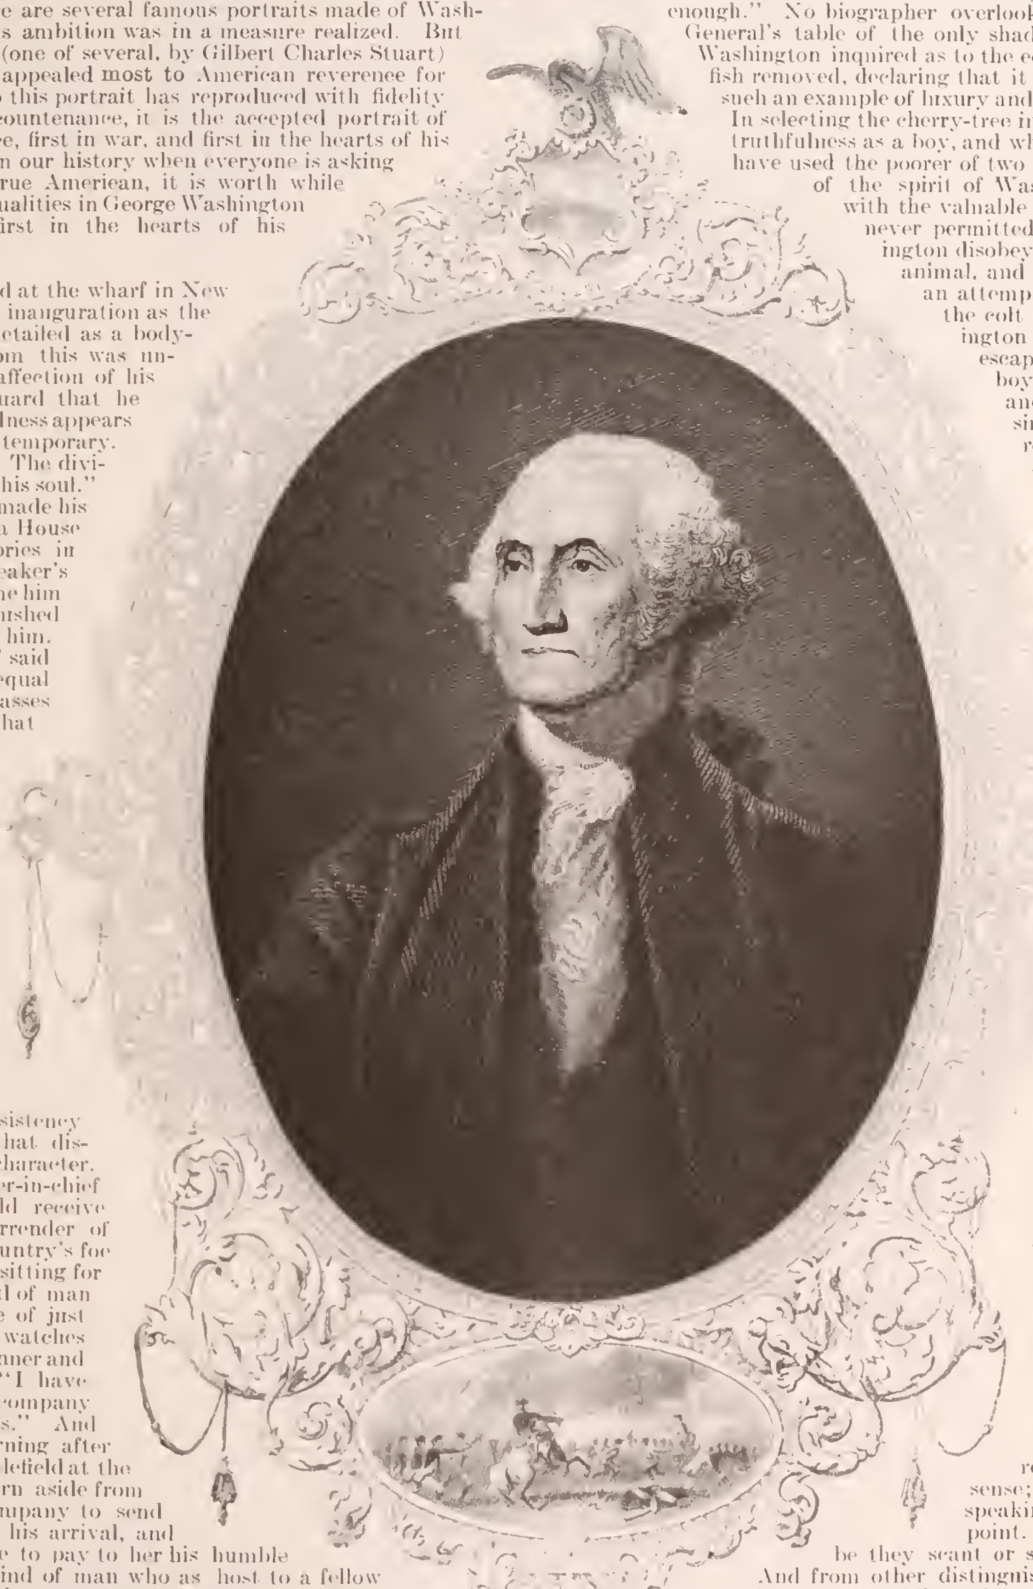
Dr. Arthur J. Smith spoke of ork done by himself and members his church at Savannah, Ga., durin the Spanish-American War, for our s iers in military camps, which was ter carried on by the International M. C. A., and of the great good one, particularly by the special khaki-l und pocket-edition of the New Testa ent.

THE General Committee decid to make an appeal through the ess to the American public and t the churches throughout the count in support of the work. Contributio for this purpose may be sent to the Ch ian Herald, Bible House, New York ity.

A Portrait of Washington

IN 1798 a French artist, Charles Balthazer Julien Fevret de Saint Memin, produced what is said to be the very last portrait which was made of Washington from life. Memin came to America in 1793 and perfected the mechanical devices known as the physionotrace and the pantograph, which enable the operator to reproduce exactly the outlines of any object. General Washington was summoned to Philadelphia in November, 1798, because of the threatened war with France, and Saint Memin then secured his last portrait, making the original drawing by this infallible process.

But it is not to any such method as this that the world is indebted for its conception of the countenance of Washington. Rather, to patriotic genius that sought to give posterity an unmistakable revelation of the spirit and character of the First American. There are several famous portraits made of Washington from life in which this ambition was in a measure realized. But the painting reproduced here (one of several, by Gilbert Charles Stuart) from a steel engraving, has appealed most to American reverence for Washington. Whether or no this portrait has reproduced with fidelity the details of Washington's countenance, it is the accepted portrait of the man who was first in peace, first in war, and first in the hearts of his countrymen. At a moment in our history when everyone is asking himself what constitutes a true American, it is worth while to remind ourselves of those qualities in George Washington which forever make him first in the hearts of his countrymen.



WHEN Washington landed at the wharf in New York on the way to his inauguration as the first President, troops were detailed as a bodyguard. Washington, to whom this was unwelcome, declared that "the affection of his fellow citizens was all the guard that he required." "The general's goodness appears in his looks," wrote one contemporary. "His modesty is astonishing. The divisions of his country harrow up his soul." While still a young man, he made his first appearance in the Virginia House of Burgesses after his victories in Indian warfare, and the speaker's praise and welcome so overcame him that when he rose to reply he blushed in confusion and speech failed him. "Sit down, Mr. Washington," said the speaker; "your modesty is equal to your valor, and that surpasses the power of any language that I possess."

Another contemporary said of him that he was "a most elegant figure of a man, with so much dignity of manners that no person whatever could take improper liberties with him." And another: "He is a soldier and warrior; modest, sensible; speaks little; in action, cool." Patrick Henry said of him that for sound judgment Washington was unquestionably the best man on the floor of the first Congress.

There was a tremendous consistency in all of Washington's acts that disclosed the greatness of his character. The man who, as commander-in-chief of the American armies, could receive the announcement of the surrender of the last hostile army of his country's foe in silence and unmoved, while sitting for a portrait, is exactly the kind of man who would make an allowance of just five minutes for variation of watches when guests were invited to dinner and then to late arrivals explain, "I have a cook who does not ask if the company has come, but if the hour has." And the great warrior who, returning after nearly seven years on the battlefield at the head of great armies, could turn aside from a numerous and brilliant company to send word to his aged mother of his arrival, and then set out on foot and alone to pay to her his humble respects as a son, is just the kind of man who as host to a fellow officer would, in order to make room for him over-night, repair to the quarters of a negro servant to sleep, and, waking in the night and finding his servant sitting up because there was not sufficient straw and blankets for both, insist on the negro's lying down beside himself under his blanket. It is not to be forgotten that Washington's death resulted from a cold taken while riding through a severe storm. Yet shortly after his return from that ride he declined to send a servant out to post some letters because the weather was too bad.

WASHINGTON was a man of extraordinary activity. It was his custom to ride at four o'clock, and he claimed that a great deal of his work was done while others slept. "My manner of living," he wrote, "is plain, and I do not mean to be put out by it." And in his diary are found such items as this, on a date which now stands out as one of our chief national holidays: "February 22, 1785: Moved two pretty large lilacs to the north garden gate, one on each side, taking up as much dirt with the roots as could be well obtained; also from the woods and old fields several young trees of the sassafras, dogwood, and redbud, to the shrubbery on the north side of the grass plot." It was said of him, "At the time of his marriage it is no great strain of metaphor to say that Washington had now his first chance to sit down since the days when he had pored over his school copybook." After the war and his first term as President, Washington found his estates run down and unprofitable; yet he so redeemed his fortunes by his application to his affairs and by good business judgment, that he died the second richest man in America at that time.

He advised a nephew not to conceive "that fine clothes make fine men. A plain, genteel dress is more admired and obtains more credit than laces and embroideries (the fad of the time) in the eyes of the judicious and sensible." And he allowed himself to be irritated because of a niece who sometimes lived in his home and "had no disposition to be careful of her clothes, which she dabs about in every hole and corner, and her best things always in use, so that she costs me enough." No biographer overlooks the incident of the serving at the General's table of the only shad to be found in the market. When Washington inquired as to the cost and learned the facts, he ordered the fish removed, declaring that it should never be said that his table set such an example of luxury and extravagance.

In selecting the cherry-tree incident as an example of Washington's truthfulness as a boy, and which continued to his death, biographers have used the poorer of two possible such incidents, for much more of the spirit of Washington is disclosed in his experience with the valuable colt belonging to his mother which had never permitted the near approach of any one. Washington disobeyed explicit commands not to go near the animal, and mounted this colt, as we all know, in an attempt to break its spirit, with the result that the colt burst a blood vessel and died. Washington and his companions did not report this escapade until his mother asked of the five boys if any of them had seen the sorrel colt, and if he were getting to be as big as his sire; whereupon George stood the test, replying: "Madam, that horse possessed an ungovernable spirit which had to be conquered. I mounted him this morning and he plunged violently and killed himself." History ascribes to Mrs. Washington the same wisdom that characterized the father of Washington at the test of the cherry tree; for she gently replied, "That seems to be a pity. But I am proud and grateful for my brave, truthful son."

"INTEGRITY," Washington once declared, "integrity and firmness are all I can promise. These, be my voyage long or short, shall never forsake me, although I may be deserted by all men; for of the consolations which are to be derived from these under any circumstances, the world cannot deprive me."

It was Washington's rule to set aside a part of each day for meditation and devotion, regardless of circumstances. "At disappointments and losses which are the effects of providential acts," he said, "I never repine, because I am sure that the All-Wise Disposer of events knows better than we do what is best for us, or what we deserve." And he advised that we make the best of mankind as they are, since we cannot have them as we wish.

AMONG the great students of the life of Washington who have left us their conclusions of his character, Charles James Fox said: "Filling for a series of years a station so conspicuous, his character never once was called into question." George Bancroft said: "The character of Washington revealed the highest wisdom of common sense; the perfection of reflective judgment; speaking or writing, he came directly to the point. If he was to act, he suited his means, be they scant or sufficient, in the best way to his end." And from other distinguished writers are gleaned such sentences as these: "His public actions and unassuming grandeur in private life were living examples of courage, wisdom and usefulness." "The whole range of history does not present to our view a character upon which we can dwell with such entire and unmixed admiration." "For eight years Washington conducted the new nation by a course of great actions regulated by prudence, justice, temperance and virtue."

IN quite recent years there came to light a small-sized memorandum book of twenty-four pages, to which Washington had given the title of "Daily Sacrifice," and containing in his own handwriting prayers for the morning and evening of the days in the week, but ending with an unfinished prayer for Thursday morning. Experts in Washingtoniana disagree as to the authenticity of these pages, but their genuineness as the written compositions of Washington are proven to the satisfaction of many. We quote a few detached extracts from these prayers and the prayer for Sunday evening almost in its entirety.

From the prayer for Sunday morning: "I yield thee humble and hearty thanks that thou hast preserved me from the dangers of the night past, and brought me to the light of this day and the comforts thereof.

Continued on page 207

A Week in the World's News

© Underwood & Underwood

The Canadian Parliament Building, Destroyed by Fire February 3

FIRE DESTROYS CANADIAN PARLIAMENT HOUSE. A fire which appeared to start from an explosion in the library of the House of Parliament at Ottawa, Canada, February 3, practically destroyed the building. The House of Commons was in session, and spectators in the galleries as well as members of the House were overcome by smoke, or burned, or were forced to leave the building through the windows by means of ladders, the normal exits being closed by the flames. Two women who were in the spectators' gallery are known to have lost their lives, and two members of parliament are missing. Sir Robert Borden, the premier, was in the building, but escaped. Five persons are known to have perished.

NEW RUSSIAN PREMIER. M. Sturmer has succeeded Jean L. Joremykin as premier of Russia. M. Sturmer was for fourteen years Master of Ceremonies in the Imperial Court and has been representative of the government party in financial debates in the Imperial Council. It is expected that the Duma will reassemble on February 18. Some months ago the completion of a railroad to the open port of Ekaterina, Arctic Ocean, was reported. On February 3 another report announced the completion of a railway at the port of Soroka on the White Sea.

IT WAS NOT PEGASUS. John Trotwood Moore, the poet-laureate of Tennessee, was thrown from a spirited horse and dragged for a mile near Nashville on January 31. His right arm was broken and he was bruised from head to foot, all of which proves that a poet should stick to his steed.

SAFETY FIRST MEDALS FOR 1915. The American Museum of Safety announced on February 3 the awards for the best devices for the safeguarding of life in 1915. The Scientific American medal for notable achievement in securing safety in marine and aerial navigation was awarded to Mr. Elmer A. Sperry and the Sperry Gyroscope Company; the Traveler's Insurance Company medal for achievement in accident prevention among its personnel and promoting safety for the traveling public was awarded to Mr. Wilbur C. Fiske and the Hudson and Manhattan Railroad Company. The E. H. Harriman medal for the elimination of occupational disease was awarded to Mr. William A. Fairburn and the Diamond Match Company. The E. H. Harriman medal to the American steam railroad company most successful in protecting the life and health of employees and the public was awarded as follows: gold medal to the Cincinnati, New Orleans and Texas Pacific Railway. Silver, to the Scioto division of the Norfolk and Western Railway. Bronze, to John O'Brien, switchman on the C. & E. I. Railway. Honorable mention to the Grand Rapids and llana Railway. The Anthony N. Brady m al to the electric railway company tha had done the most to conserve the saf and health of the public and its employe was awarded to the Union Traction Co any, Anderson, Ind.

WORKMEN'S HOMES WILL N BE SACRIFICED. Following the order the United States court, foreclosure proc lings are imminent against tho members the United Hatters' Union of America whos omes were attached to satisfy the judgm secured by D. E. Loew & Co. against the ion. A collection has been taken through the trade unions of America so that the m will not lose their homes.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS. orts have been made in Congress during t past week to rush the Philippine Bill. ator McCumber offered an amendment the Philippine Bill which would withhol ndependence from the Filipinos unless ther powers agreed to respect their sover nty. The amendment was defeated witho roll call. The bill passed the Senate Febr y 2. It provides for independence by March 922, with no international guarantee as ha been proposed. The Post Office Appropriati Bill was reported in the House on January and calls for approximately $320,500,000 The principal change of policy noted in the ll is the suggestion that the Interstate Cor erce Commission should be authorized to i estigate the reasonableness of railway ma pay. The Commission will be authorized to port to Congress but receives no authority to nge the rates. General Miles, testifying fore the House Military Committee, favor the federalizing of the state militia as t best foundation upon which to build an ad iate military establishment. General Mil expressed himself as opposed to univers military service. Chief Constructor Ta of the Navy informed the House Commit on Naval Affairs that there were 68 vess yet to be completed of those authorized the navy, some of them having been aut zed five years ago. Among the unfinishe ips were 17 destroyers, 38 submarines, tw fuel ships, one supply ship and one tra ort.

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Indépendance Belge

DURING the past week Great Britain was subjected to the largest and most important Zeppelin raid she has yet suffered. Seven to nine machines took part and the attacks were directed at portions of the country hitherto exempt. Docks and shipping in Liverpool, and munition factories in the industrial towns of the Midlands and the west of England were particularly aimed at, and it would appear that some of them were bombed. Approximately sixty persons were killed and a like number wounded. Defenders against these attacks are handicapped by having a whole territory to defend, while the offensive can choose specific points. In returning from the raid one, and perhaps two, of the Zeppelins seem to have come to grief.

The sale by Rumania of 50,000 carloads of grain to the Allies was announced during the week. The object of this was to prevent this grain from being purchased by the Teutons, thus aiding in creating of food difficulties in the Central Empires. This grain is probably Russian in origin, as it is known that almost since the beginning of the war Rumania has been acting as a dealer for Russia, as there is no embargo on exports of grain from Russia, except when specifically exported to Russia's enemies.

All avenues of export, except through Rumania and Sweden, are closed to Russia, and Russia possesses no facilities for storing grain, such as are common in other grain-producing countries, hence the grain must move or spoil. The Allies will, however, be unable to move their purchase from Rumania, surrounded as that country is by their enemies.

Newport News, Va., was again brought into the foreground during the week by the sudden and entirely unexpected arrival there of the British steamer Appam, supposed to be lost off the west African coast days before, in charge of a German prize crew. The Appam, a passenger liner of 8,000 tons, with a crew of 155 men and 160 passengers, was on her way from Dakar, French West Africa, to Liverpool, with a large general cargo and $2,500,000 in gold bullion on board, when on January 17, sixty miles north of the Canary Islands, she was intercepted and captured by a mysterious German raider, after a show of resistance. A prize crew of 23 men was placed on board of her under the command of a Lieutenant Berge of the German Naval Reserve, the prize crew being reinforced by 21 Germans who were already on board the Appam as prisoners of war en route to England, who thus suddenly found themselves the guards of their former captors, now their prisoners. On January 17 the Appam parted company with the mysterious raider and shaped her course for the American coast 3,000 miles away, off which she arrived January 31; and, eluding the British and French warships off that coast, entered Hampton Roads on February 1 to the intense surprise of the entire world. Her coming into American waters has raised several delicate and intricate questions of international law which Washington is in process of solving as these lines are written. The vessel itself has been officially designated a German war prize.

The really important fact in connection with the Appam is the revelation that the Germans, who were supposed to have been brushed from the ocean long ago, are actually raiding British commerce on the high seas. The identity of the particular vessel which captured the Appam is not certain, but she is now believed to be the Ponga, a converted merchantman, which slipped out of Kiel disguised as a Swedish vessel and getting past the British cordon made her way to the West African coast, and has remained there up to the present time awaiting an opportunity to dash out and surprise British merchantmen.

Before capturing the Appam the mysterious raider had taken and sunk five other British vessels, the Farringford, the Dromonby, the Author, the Trader, the Ariadne, and captured a collier, the Corbridge, with 6,000 tons of coal on board, which she did not sink, but retained to supply her with fuel. Then came the turn of the Appam, after whose capture and before whose departure the steamer Clan MacTavish put in an appearance, attempted to fight and was sunk. All of ese were important ships of large ton ge. The captured commanders, crew und chance passengers of these six v sels were transferred from the raider t the Appam and have since been set fr by order of the government at Washir on.

All of the single men and the chi ess widowers who enlisted under the I by plan of recruiting between the ag of twenty-seven and thirty-five were led to the colors for the 29th of Feb ary on January 29. Allowing the ual minimum time for training (ght months), these men would be read for active service about the first of ext

Continued on page 207

© By Griffith, through International Film Servic

On the Captured Appam in Dock at Newport News, Va.

T Administration's new Ship Bill was introdud into the House January 31. The bill auorizes the establishment of a United Ste Shipping Board with powers over shping similar to those now vested in the Instate Commerce Commission over railws. It would have authority to purchase, cotruct, equip, maintain and operate vessen the commerce of the United States with fogn countries, and to charter and lease vels for such purposes. All of the vessels unr the authority of the board would constte a naval reserve and would bo subject toll for the necessities of the nation. The prosal to establish a tariff board has reced considerable support from heads of big buness institutions in the East.

EW POSTAL PACT. Ecuador, Bolivia, Pe, Columbia, and Venezuela have just aged upon a reduction of postage on mail crsing their borders. The new rate is th cents gold for about seven-tenths of an oue of mail.

INE WORKERS MAKE NEW DEMNDS. On January 28 a convention of the Ued Mine Workers of America by an almost unimous vote decided to ask the bituminous co operators throughout the country for a teper cent. increase of wages on the mine run ba and twenty per cent. increase for all men pa by the day. They also asked for an eig-hour day, to be figured from the time a n enters the mine until the time he leaves it. Weekly pay days are also demanded and a ole holiday every other Saturday instead of lf holidays on every Saturday.

HE PANAMA PROBLEM. In an intervi in New York on February 1 Major Geral Goethals stated that the slide at G Hill in the Culebra Cut was still moving ar that he could not give an opinion as to wh the canal will be reopened. The Gener estimated that from 7,000,000 to 13,000,0cubic yards of material must be removed bee the slides would be entirely stopped, ar asks for $11,000,000, all but three million beg for excavation. The slide at Gold Hill is mposed of from 500,000 to 750,000 cubic yas of rock, which originally formed an ovhanging ledge at the top of the hill 625 fe above sea level. The General believes th the rock will find a resting-place before it aches the bottom of the cut. If it does nc it will have to be diverted. The report of erations in this canal for the week ending Jaary 17 showed 239,260 cubic yards of exvation. The average weekly excavation fotwelve weeks is 261,648⅔ cubic yards. Dding this amount into the possible 13,00 000 cubic yards that the General believes m have to be removed may give an approxine estimate of the time that will elapse bere the canal will be restored to full use.

IRELESS TO UNITE THE AMERICS. A plan for Pan-American radio communication has been embodied in a memoraum signed by Secretary of the Navy Diels on January 29 which will be submitted tothe eighteen governments concerned. The prect contemplates the establishment of a coplete Pan-American system of radio incommunication which will enable various germents to communicate directly with ea other. The system will also be at the seice of the commercial interests of the varioi countries. The Argentine government ha already planned the establishment of a syem such as is contemplated in the memoralum. A high-powered station will be cotructed in the vicinity of Buenos Aires. Aw high-powered station will be erected at soe point on the coast of Connecticut to see the American end of the Argentine-Arican wireless circuit.

XIT THE SEA SERPENT. If the w hy gentlemen who are interested in a ccain kind of preparedness continue the kd of publicity regarding our defenselessness wh has been appearing in recent weeks, tl summer resorts along the Atlantic margin o he United States of America may have a tor more thrilling than the sea serpent for tl diversion of their holiday-makers. In a rnt issue of the New York Times, a map slvs one hundred and sixteen nearby ports oh to invaders. No invader would want ne than two ports, and since in the compilati such noted ports as Newport, Rockaway Bch, Atlantic City and Cape May were lnuded, there will be almost as much excitent in the sultry days of August in watching t horizon for the curling smoke of that hne-made terror, the mythical invader, as the ever was in searching the tumbling surf fthe fangs and wreathing coils of a serpent n ess mythical.

NEW CROP OF FINANCIERS. Vario movements have been undertaken to eourage thrift on the part of school children. T latest is a movement sponsored by one of t New York papers which aims to secure 5000 dimes to start 50,000 bank accounts for spol children. Branch banks are being eblished in the school buildings, and repntatives of the savings banks of the city a instructing the children how to act as cks, tellers and bankers to handle their own ney The "Dimes to Dollars" fund which t newspaper is raising will be used to incse nine dimes to ten and thus give the thful depositor a full dollar, which will be accepted at the savings banks as the beginning of an account. A great many children, the country over, are now wise depositors in the Postal Savings banks.

FLOODS TAKE HEAVY TOLL. Reports of floods came from many widely separated districts in the last week in January. Near San Diego, Calif., in the Otay valley, fifty lives were lost as the result of the breaking of the Otay River Dam, and in other valleys between San Diego and the Mexican line fifty other lives were lost in similar floods. The devastation in the flood area round San Diego was so complete that it was necessary for Rear Admiral Fullam to send marines and sailors from the vessels of the Pacific reserve fleet to police and patrol the flooded area. Floods were also reported in Kansas, Oklahoma, Illinois, Indiana and Arkansas, and flood warnings were given in the Ohio Valley. At Newport, Ark., the White River levee broke on January 31, flooding the town, and the Arkansas River was reported as ten feet above flood stage at Fort Smith. At Hickman, Ky., the Mississippi River levee gave way, flooding a large area. In all these flooded districts, thousands of people have been made homeless.

Steel Passenger Coaches of the Great Northern Overthrown by Snow Avalanche Near Corea, Washington, January 22, and Carried Eighty Feet Down the Mountain. Six Persons Perished

FORD PEACE TRIBUNAL AT STOCKHOLM. The Ford Permanent Peace Tribunal, with several members not present, held its first formal session on January 26 at Stockholm. It was announced that the commission would first study the causes of the war to enable it to approach, with a better understanding, proposals for peace.

FOR MILITARY HIGH SCHOOLS. Senator McCumber has introduced into the Senate a bill providing for military instruction in high schools, and for student volunteer cadet corps and training camps. The bill is approved by the Secretaries of War and of the Interior, and is based upon what is known as the Wyoming plan. By it the pupils are divided into squads, platoons or companies, the units specializing in different phases of military work. In a report upon the Wyoming plan prepared by Lieutenant E. Z. Steever, U. S. A., it is stated that "in the Wyoming system the fundamental factor is the competition between equally balanced units. The individuals are forced by public opinion among their fellows to go into training, and this training means clean thinking and non-smoking. It is shown conclusively in the various competitions that the clean morally are the surest kind of winners. Smoking and immoral practices must go. Under the fiercest kind of competition the adolescent youth is better enabled to negotiate that difficult period in life."

© Harris & Ewing

Louis D. Brandeis

President Wilson's Nominee for the Supreme Bench

BUSINESS LOOKS AHEAD. There has been a great deal of speculation since January 1 regarding the prospects of 1916 from the merchant's standpoint. It is a large question whether our industries will be able to continue after the war, if it should end in 1916, at the same high pressure at which they are now operating. Some economists believe that the industries of Europe will be absolutely prostrated at the end of the war, and that the world markets will still offer us a fair field with perhaps some favors. Others believe that the commercial interests of the countries now at war will make a desperate effort to regain immediately a trade which they are now losing or serving only partially. The East is interested in the manufacturing situation and in the establishment of new trade routes, and the creation of a merchant marine. The West and Middle West are more interested in a possible market for foodstuffs, especially wheat. Mr. Warburg of the Federal Reserve Board said recently that investments in war munitions plants contained "seeds of grave danger"; but that there was no reason why the regular business of the country should be alarmed, that while Europe would try to regain her outside markets, she must first reorganize her industries and must buy from us the raw materials. It is therefore not to be feared that reaction will come immediately upon the conclusion of the war. Mr. Warburg thought that we would almost inevitably take our place as the world's banker at the end of the war.

TURMOIL SPREADS IN CHINA. The Japanese and Chinese authorities have denied that the Japanese government has revived Group V of the original Japanese demands upon China. On January 27, Peking claimed that the government troops from the province of Kwangsi had defeated a force of revolutionists in the province of Yunnan and captured the city of Loping. Later reports chronicle the divisions of Mongolian insurgents crossing the Chinese wall at a point about 170 miles from Peking. Chinese troops were reported marching to attack the Mongolians. Tho province of Kweichow is also reported in full rebellion. The American gunboat Monocacy has taken a position in the Yangtsekiang at Chungking. The commander of the Monocacy has outlined a zone in which the guns of the vessel will protect foreigners who may be threatened.

WASHINGTON AND ST. PAUL'S CHAPEL. St. Paul's chapel on Broadway and Vesey Street, New York, will celebrate in October the 150th anniversary of its dedication. On April 30, 1789, a solemn service of thanksgiving for the inauguration of the first President of the United States was held in old St. Paul's, and Washington attended service and held a pew in St. Paul's from 1789 to 1791. In his diary for each Sunday is the entry "went to St. Paul's Chapel in the forenoon." The pew is still marked with the initials G. W. at its door, and it is viewed each year by thousands of persons visiting New York.

ALL CLIMATES AT ONCE. The supply department of the Panama Canal Organization has been endeavoring to develop a supply of fresh vegetables that would not have to be shipped in cold storage, as is necessary with those sent from the United States. A colony of Spanish Americans has recently taken up the cultivation of vegetables on the slopes of the volcano Irazu. The gardens begin at an elevation of 5,000 feet, where tropical fruits are raised, and end at an elevation of about 7,000 feet, where the more delicate fruits of the temperate zone are raised. The soil is a porous loam of volcanic ash, fifteen feet in depth and very rich. Shipments have already been begun by a weekly steamer, and if more satisfactory transportation can be arranged, these gardens will be able to supply the Canal Zone with a large quantity of fresh vegetables and fruits.

ARMED MERCHANTMEN TO BE CONSIDERED AS WARSHIPS. In a note to the governments of the allied powers, forwarded from Washington on January 27, Secretary Lansing advised the governments concerned that, in view of the changed conditions of maritime warfare due to the employment of submarines, it was the opinion of this government that existing rules governing merchantmen should be changed and every armed merchantman should be considered an auxiliary cruiser. The allied governments have indicated that they would be unwilling to agree with this suggestion. The representatives of the Teutonic power have protested against the clearing of these armed vessels from American ports.

EXTENDING THE NATIONAL FORESTS. Representatives of more than a hundred organizations and trade bodies in the East attended a hearing on January 28 before the House Committee on Agriculture in support of a proposal to appropriate $10,000,000 to be made available at the rate of $2,000,000 a year for five years for the extension of the national forest reserve in New England and the south Appalachian regions.

FIRST TEST SHOWS GARY SCHOOL BELOW PAR. New York City has been making an experiment with three classes of schools: the public school, which has been developed through the years, and which is termed the traditional school, a variation of the traditional school in which trades are taught, which is called the prevocational school, and a school organized under the Gary system. Examinations were conducted in March and June, 1915, in six elementary schools, two in each group, the examinations being held in arithmetic, spelling, geography, history and grammar. In both tests, the schools of the traditional group showed to the best advantage. The improvement in the June tests over the March tests showed a 54 per cent. improvement in arithmetic in the traditional school, 47.6 per cent. improvement in the prevocational, and 40.7 per cent. in the Gary. The percentages followed similar lines in the other subjects. While it is not the mood of the New York school authorities to condemn the Gary idea on the basis of this showing, yet there is nothing in the showing that would encourage the extension of the Gary idea to other schools and the experiment is still being watched with interest. It has not been claimed that the Gary system could cram young heads with facts as expeditiously as some others; but it has been claimed that it gave its students a better start in the business of living on their own earnings.

NATIONAL RAILWAY ORGANIZATION. The four brotherhoods of railway employees have been planning for a number of months a nation-wide strike to secure a uniform basic workday of eight hours throughout the country. The brotherhoods have been accumulating protective funds and have been taking ballots which are reported to have been reasonably unanimous in favor of action for a standardized shorter workday. It is now proposed to organize a general conference committee of railway managers to represent all the railways in the United States in negotiations with representatives of the brotherhoods. Both sides are anxious to avoid a strike. The unions have announced that thero was nothing to arbitrate and that nothing except complete surrender by the railroads would satisfy them. The railroads are ready to arbitrate, but hold that, because of the regulations of various commissions to which they are subject, there should be some national body competent to assume authority in the case of a dispute such as the one that is pending.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE $1.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

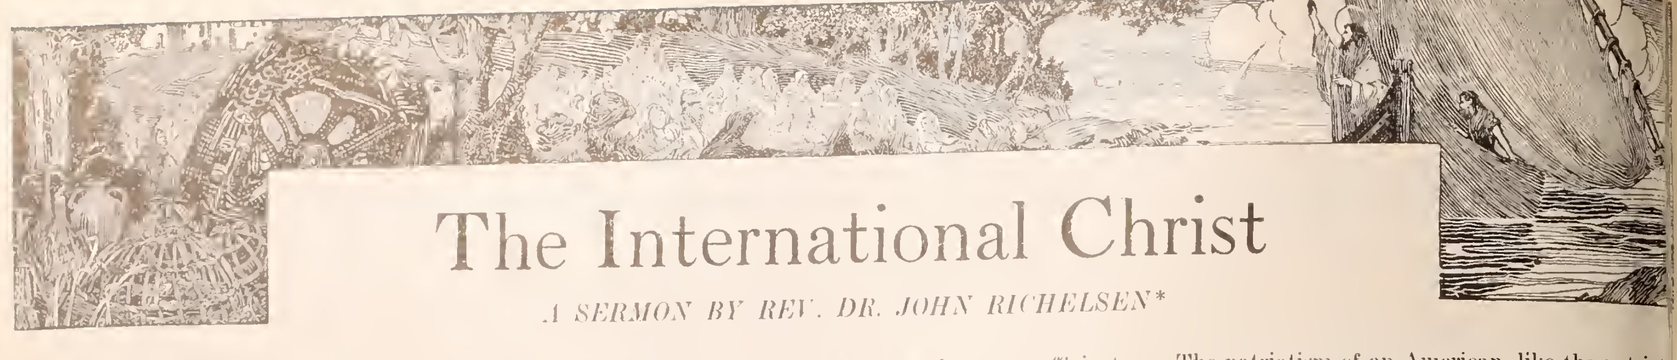
EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa



The International Christ

*A SERMON BY REV. DR. JOHN RICHELSEN

TEXT—Luke 4:25–26. "Many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, but unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow. And many lepers were in Israel in the time of Eliseus the prophet; and none of them was cleansed, saving Naaman the Syrian."

JESUS was eager to lead the Jewish thought of his generation to the altitude of international sympathies. For this very reason he disappointed Jewish patriots. It is not difficult for us to appreciate the clash of opinions and emotions caused by him. The issue is not obsolete even today in America.

Jesus attempted to enlarge the horizon of the Nazareth Jews. With gracious words he led their thoughts from the valley to mountain peaks. Probably his audience did not, at first, note the trend of the discourse as given by Luke in our reading today. Jesus' hearers were unconscious of the fogs which curtained their vision to the bounds of their own nation. As by magic the veil was suddenly lifted. Behold, beyond their own beloved hills the sunshine of God's favor was seen bathing the landscape! And even more strikingly, it was when dark shadows rested upon their own land that favor was descending on foreign soil.

The very audacity of Jesus stunned his audience. Yet soon bewilderment gave way before the emerging bitter resentment of injured national pride. With vehemence the citizens cast Jesus out of the synagogue.

Why should Jesus have uttered such unwelcome words? There was nothing in the circumstances of his presence in the home-town synagogue on that Sabbath day which made the words necessary. Seemingly the one purpose of Jesus was to discredit the intense nationalism of his day. It was not that he wished them to do anything in particular at that time, but that he hoped to influence their mode of thinking. Believing that "as a nation thinketh in its heart so is it," he sought to fascinate them by the wider range of vision. That new outlook of Jesus may be called his "internationalism."

We say with great certainty that Christ would lead American thought of this generation to the high peak of internationalism.

This conception of internationalism must be placed among the ten or twelve distinct ideas which were propelled by the genius of Jesus. By him first was there launched the conception of a nobler loyalty than that which attaches itself to some particular strip of land and its inhabitants.

JESUS' declaration at Nazareth, briefly stated, was this: "God's favor has not been and will not be monopolized by Israel. In the time of Elias, though Israel was in direst distress, God's favor was signally bestowed on a foreigner. With many lepers in Israel, at a later day, God's kindness singled out a Syrian, that is, a foreigner, for its object."

Patriots, who saw nothing good beyond their own borders, could not endure such a reading of history. The Nazareth episode, however, was not an isolated incident of Jesus' international attitude. Once a Roman soldier, a centurion, declared his faith in Jesus' spiritual effectiveness, and the Master's enthusiasm was winged to a height from which he beheld the peoples from afar inheriting equally with the forefathers of Israel the privileges of divine favor. "Many," he declared on that occasion, "shall come from the east and from the west, and sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God." Once, likewise, when two Greek visitors were brought to him, Jesus' imagination pushed into the future, as he prophesied that he should draw unto himself "all men."

With evident significance, on another occasion, the nationality of the one leper who had the grace of thankfulness was pointed out in the words, "and he was a Samaritan." Probably the most striking utterance of Jesus, finally, on this subject of internationalism is embodied in the parable of the Good Samaritan. In that exquisite little character sketch, which you have special reason for heeding, Jesus deliberately creates his hero of a despised race. On the dark background of Jewish narrowness and prejudice, as represented by priest and Levite, Jesus portrays the glorious humanitarianism of a foreigner—a Samaritan. What superb daring that was!

Here, then, we have already discovered in the short records of Jesus' career five instances of his international temper. These references do not begin to exhaust the material on which to base our study of Jesus' mind on this subject; but they are sufficient foundation for our theme. Jesus strove to enlarge the range of human sympathies beyond national boundary lines; he was the first great cosmopolitan—the citizen of the world rather than the Jewish citizen. With him, the distinction on which men might pride themselves was not based on their relationship to each other in one national family, but their tie of allegiance and sympathy should be this: that all human beings were children of one common Father.

Early Christianity, we are glad to note, did not fail to show amazing results of its Founder's spirit. A thorough Jew like Simon Peter reveals a marvelous advance in thinking when he is brought to the conviction he uttered: "God has taught me not to call any man common or unclean." The tremendous influence of Jesus transforms a "Pharisee of the Pharisees" like Saul of Tarsus, till he declares at Athens: "God has made of one flesh all men who dwell on earth."

It may be that the adherents of Christianity in subsequent ages have not realized to its fulness the doctrine of the brotherhood of man. The implications of this teaching are revolutionary in the social fabric and economic texture of society. The international sympathies of Jesus would obliterate the possibilities of racial animosities and jealousies. Consequently, with the complete leadership of Christ in human thought, war would be impossible. But it is hardly our province to criticize the past of Christianity for any shortcomings or for obscuring the ideals of Jesus. Rather let us glory in the appearance of the sun behind the clouds. We have encouragement in the very midst of the carnage of these days to look forward expectantly to a fuller realization of Jesus' spirit in the affairs of mankind. The nineteenth century made of all the world one neighborhood, and we may constantly express our belief and hope that the twentieth century will make of all the world one brotherhood! Unquestionably that is the goal of Jesus' internationalism.

Jesus' relation to the Jewish nation is a model for our relation to the American nation.

JESUS was not ashamed of being a Jew. No Jew worthy of the name ever has been ashamed of his wonderful people. No one can question Jesus' loyalty to his own race. To him it was a matter of pride that God had promised their father Abraham that "in his seed should be blessed all the nations of the earth." Yet this very conception of the lofty mission of his nation made him impatient with the Jewish provincialism displayed at Nazareth.

Jesus owed much to the Jewish race. Unquestionably he was mindful of this fact. The mission of Jesus could not have been fulfilled had he been of any other nationality. Being born a Jew and imbibing Jewish traditions, having the use of the Jewish molds of thought and the tools of a spiritual language, by the providence of God these became invaluable assets to him. As a Roman or a Grecian, Jesus would have been impossible.

Yet the conscious possession of these advantages did not make Jesus a Jewish nationalist. At a time of intense patriotic aspirations, Jesus decisively disappointed the expectations of his fellow townsmen. So soon as his developing talents presaged a brilliant career, and he attracted attention as a personality which would make itself felt in contemporaneous life, an expectation was kindled that he might measure up to the requirements for a "David's Son," to restore the glory of Jewry. Because he shattered that hope whenever it arose, the revulsion against him deepened.

Jesus laid himself open to the charge of being "the man without a country." In one sense, if you please, that was true. Jesus was a man of all countries, rather than exclusively of one country or one race.

IT is not necessary to emphasize that no American worthy of the name is ashamed of his wonderful nation. No matter how intense a patriot any American may be, I feel that he can never overestimate the glory of America. One would need to be dead in heart and soul who, having passed through the war zones of Germany, Belgium and England, as I did last August, could restrain emotions of gratitude and devotion as he looks upon the Stars and Stripes of his beloved America! Proud may be thy humblest son, who beneath the protecting folds of thy emblem may have his domicile. "May my right hand forget her cunning, and may my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, if thou, O America, be not my chief joy!"

The patriotism of an American, like the patriot of the ancient Jew, is in itself the expression of ma worthy qualities. The fault of Jewish patriotism in its confusion of national privileges with its in national mission. Israel supposed that God speci favored her for her own sake. Israel did not appr ate that her mission lay in being a blessing to all nations of the earth. It is possible for intense An icanism to fall into the same error. Jesus' messag the Jews was: "Let us think in terms of human not merely in terms of one section of humanit even if that section be glorious Jewry." And Je message to us and our day is: "Let us think in te of humanity, not merely in terms of one section humanity—even if that section be glorious Americ

JESUS, because of his international sympath became the Saviour for all ages, all nations, tongues. Every nation which knows him appro ates him for her own. The children of every nat say their little prayers to him and think of him as their own nation and tongue.

The painters of all nations, in presenting th ideals of the face of Jesus, show how they appropri him for their own nationality. The Italian study his face has a touch of the predominant Italian co tenance, the German likewise, so also the Span The truth is that Jesus has appealed distinctiv to every nation, to every national temperament, which he has been introduced. He is not the Ma any distinct country; he is not the Jew; he is the M of all countries.

And each nation that knows Jesus yields some d tinct contribution to the sum total of the wor appreciation of him.

No one nation in itself would be able to do cre to the character of Christ. There are always sides his temperament to which some peoples are unresp sive. The perfect portrait of Jesus will not be livered until every nation has contributed its o peculiar praise. The imagery of the Oriental m needs to fire the prosaic and logical Occidental app ciation. When to the reason of the Anglo-Saxon th is added the zeal of fiery Arabians, gospel hyn will praise Jesus in melodies as yet not born.

All nations are members of One Body. The bo is not complete until every member is fitly a harmoniously joined together under the Head, wh is Christ.

Our mission is to spread broadcast the seeds international sympathies. As we among oursel dare not call any man common or unclean, so we m rise to the height of international brotherhood a refrain from calling any human being by any ot name than brother. When this mission is fulfill the vision will be realized when "nation shall longer lift up sword against nation, neither shall th learn war any more. The sword shall be beaten in a plowshare and the spear into a pruning-hook."

Let us rejoice in the privileges of American citiz ship. But let us have not the provincialism display by ancient Nazareth, but the vision of the Saviour all men. The sentiment "My country, right wrong!" is shallow patriotism; it is worse; it is treas against humanity.

We glory in America! God watched at Columbi cradle. The Almighty directed her infant steps a led her to the discovery of the rich treasures w which he had endowed her hills and valleys, mountains, rivers and plains. As we think of Jes message to the patriots of his day, may we take heart the message for our day. May America fu her mission, sending forth to all the world the mess of good will and international brotherhood.

Then will America justify the ideals of her God her, and all the suffering of all the ages when m died for the ideals of liberty and fraternity will crowned with glorious achievement.

"Of such a land have men in dungeons dreame
And with the vision brightening in their eyes Gone smiling to the fagot and the sword."

---

*Pastor First Presbyterian Church, Bradford, Pa

◆

"As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."—St. Paul.

OF what do you think when alone?
What are your reveries and day-dreams?

The needle of the compass may be turned asi by a very slight touch, but when released it imme ately flies back to the north.

So your mind may be diverted by many matte but to what does it fly back when released? Th tells what manner of man you are.

WARREN ROCHELLE.

Daily Meditation

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY

J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

Baffled to Fight Better

SUNDAY, February 20. Micah 7 : 8. "When I fall I shall arise." One of the primary secrets of a victorious life is to learn how to take defeat. We are not to be too much surprised by it. Still less are we to be startled and unnerved by it. We are to be prepared for it, we are to allow for it in our plan, and we are to regard it as an incident on the way to final triumph.

Now no man is ever really defeated who refuses to accept defeat. A man refuses defeat when in the very hour of apparent adversity he keeps his eyes glued on coming victory. The darkness never conquers, so long as the soul is dreaming of the dawn. A man who can sing in the midnight begins to change his midnight into noon. "And at midnight Paul and Silas sang praises unto God, and the prisoners heard them."

There is a great word in Ibsen's play, "The Emperor and Galilean." It is spoken by the Christian, Apollinaris. "Verily I say unto you, so long as song rings out above our sorrows, Satan shall never conquer." It is the very truth of Holy Writ. But if we are thus to make our sorrows subordinate to our songs, if we are to rise above them, if our very defeats are to become the starting-points of victorious campaigns, our faith in the risen Lord must be so strong that our Gethsemane is flooded with the glory of Olivet, and even on our Calvary we can rise into "heavenly places in Christ Jesus."

In Christ Jesus we can extract virtue from our defeats. Out of the eater can come forth meat. We can feed our wills upon our disappointments. Angels' food can be found on fields of apparent disaster. In this great way we can command stones to become bread, and we can emerge, like giants refreshed, from the wilderness and the solitary place.

Our Lord is greatly honored when we refuse defeat. No higher eulogy can the enemy pay to Christian souls than to say that "they know not when they are beaten." A song in the night is one of the most arresting witnesses to the uplifting power of redeeming grace. J. H. J.

The Faith That Claims the Promises

MONDAY, February 21. Isa. 59 : 10-21. "My spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and for ever." It has often been a wonder to me that this emphatic and comprehensive pledge on the part of God is comparatively unknown and unutilized by Christian parents. One would have supposed that there could not be a believing father or mother anywhere who did not make the heaviest possible demand on the explicit promises contained in these words. Thank God, I have met some families of an unbroken godly succession for whom a far-away ancestor claimed that God should keep this covenant in regard to children and children's children; and of course it has been so done unto them. It will be, therefore, a profound comfort if the attention now drawn to these assurances shall lead large numbers of grandparents and parents to appropriate the comfort and confidence that are stored here for their use.

The great service rendered by the promises of God is in suggesting to our faith things which God hath prepared for them that love him, so that we may be made aware of what is within our reach, if only we exercise faith in him who has promised. But, so far as I understand, the promises of God must be unlocked by faith. We must place our finger on words like these, and in a supreme moment must enter into covenant with God, henceforth expecting that not one good thing shall fail. "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force."

F. B. M.

Lord, Teach Us How to Pray

TUESDAY, February 22. Eph. 6 : 18. "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit." Why do we fail at times to get answers to our prayers? Is it not because we do not realize the laws of prayer? The scientist will warn his pupil that he must not require of science anything at variance with the laws of nature. Prayer likewise has its laws and divine conditions, and these should be studied in the Scriptures to find out how to pray.

Paul tells us to pray " in the Spirit," and the law of the Spirit is the law of the nature of God, and God's nature we are told is absolutely certain, "without variableness or the least shadow of turning"; if we can understand the teachings of his Spirit, and ask in line with them, we can be certain of receiving answers to our prayers.

We are told plainly that the law of God's Spirit is one of love—love to me, and also love to others as well. If I ask a solely selfish and self-centered prayer, not thinking how the answer of that prayer may affect some one else, my friend or my neighbor; if I do not consider whether the answer which I want to receive may advance or retard God's work for the world, I am failing to pray in the Spirit of God. His laws are for other people as certain as they are for me; otherwise they would not be laws. I must pray with love and thoughtfulness in my heart for others.

A friend of mine has a little boy who is asking him every day for a drum. The boy does not realize that there is a person very ill next door who would be greatly troubled if the boy's father granted the request. The small boy is not capable of asking in the spirit of love. He has not been brought to appreciate that there are others in the world with rights that may conflict with his own.

Is the prayer I am praying most often a big, unselfish one? Is it a prayer that includes helpfulness in some way to others, as well as to myself? Is my motive right, and have I cleared my heart of any ill-feeling against my brother? If so, I believe that I shall be praying "in the Spirit." Lord, teach me how to pray! C. S. C.

Our Fellowship with Jesus

WEDNESDAY, February 23. John 20 : 11-18. "Jesus saith unto her, Mary. She turned herself and saith unto him, Rabboni." What could angels do for her, who longed to hear one voice only? In an especial sense Jesus was hers: My Lord! Had he not cast out from her seven devils? Chrysostom finely supposes that at this point an expression passed over the faces of the angels with whom she was speaking, of such reverence and awe, that Mary turned suddenly round, to see the source of their illumination. One was standing there, whom she took for the gardener. She was not far from the truth, for he tends and waters drooping plants in the paradise of God. But when presently he spoke her name with the familiar intonation, she answered rapturously in the country dialect, which they both knew and loved so well.

But Mary must learn to exchange the outward for the inward, the transient for the eternal, and to pass from the old fellowship with Jesus as friend and teacher, into a spiritual fellowship, which was alone possible with one who had now been declared to be the Son of God with power, by his resurrection from the dead. Therefore, also, our Lord spake of his ascension and bade her look upward to see diviner things. She was thus prepared for the day of Pentecost, when, after continuing with the rest stedfastly in prayer, she would in a spiritual sense get nearer to him than ever before. That fellowship is for us also. F. B. M.

Making Our Lives Count

THURSDAY, February 24. Acts 4 : 13. "And when they beheld the boldness of Peter and John, and had perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marveled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus." The life of Jesus on earth counted, not merely because of his wonderful works, but also by the atmosphere which it created. Men became happy and lost their fears simply by being with him. The two humble fishermen, Peter and John, were transformed into bold, heroic pioneers of the Christian faith, not by the study of books, but by being with their Leader. They caught his contagious enthusiasm to help and to sympathize. His resistless belief in the triumph of his idea of the Kingdom swept them out of their narrow and provincial notions. They read the divine secret of Christianity in his eyes, as he looked at sinful men and women. They saw the faces of peasant women grow bright at the cottage doors when he took their children in his arms. They saw the woman who pressed through the crowd merely to touch the border of his robe and go away in the gladness of health. They realized that his life counted just by its quiet, loving, healing presence.

Isaiah has described this power of influence: "In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them: in his love and in his pity he redeemed them."

Is my life counting thus by its healing presence, by the radiance of cheer and kindliness shining across my neighbor's path?

A little more tired at close of day,
A little less anxious to have our way,
A little less ready to scold and blame,
A little more care for a brother's name;
And so we are nearing the journey's end,
Where time and eternity meet and blend.
The book is closed and the prayers are said,
And we are a part of the countless dead.
Thrice happy, then, if some soul can say:
"I live because he has passed that way."

C. S. C.

The Defaulter Reformed

FRIDAY, February 25. Philemon 1-10. "I beseech thee for my child Onesimus." This family of three, Philemon, his wife Appia, and their son Archippus, were evidently closely connected with the church at Colosse. See Col. 4 : 17. Epaphras probably carried this letter on his return to Colosse, together with the epistle that bears that name. Probably they dwelt in the environs of the great city, and a church had been established in their spacious dwelling for the convenience of those who might not be able to travel to the central meeting-place. The apostle had clearly been the means of their conversion, had often sojourned as a guest in their home, had enjoyed fellowship with them as fellow workers and fellow soldiers, and had probably entered into a business partnership for their common trade.

While engaged in their holy work among the lower quarters of Rome, where vice and misery festered, the companions of the imprisoned apostle had come across a household slave, who had been well known to them, when visiting at his master's house. This man had apparently robbed Philemon of a considerable amount and absconded to hide amid the dregs of the metropolis, where he probably expected and hoped to elude capture. Either because of his deep repentance or abject misery, this runaway slave attracted the notice of Paul's friends. They learned from his own lips the whole story, and brought him to "the hired house." There Paul won him for Christ—"whom I have begotten in my bonds, my son Onesimus." He now writes to induce his friend Philemon, in the distant city, to receive him back. What an allegory of our lives, as Jesus finds and brings us back to God! F. B. M.

The Vision of Eternal Things

SATURDAY, February 26. John 4 : 28. "The woman then left her waterpot, and went her way into the city." The woman at the well had suddenly been transformed from a sinful person into a Christian missionary. Her vision of eternal things had eclipsed the little duties of the day. Christ had so revealed himself that she forsook all and followed him. Self-surrender means self-restored, while the blurred image of the Creator is brought out in its original beauty and purity.

"In the beginning, God." These are the first words in the Old Testament. "In the beginning was the Word"; the first words in John's Gospel. Should we not always put Christ first, before business, pleasure, ambitions and social joys? With Christ the Father will freely give us all other things needful. Jesus must be the supreme passion of the soul. The devotees of this world have their leader; they are faithful to him. Christians have Christ, who has the words of eternal life, and the love of the Father. We should be so enamored of him as to be willing to leave all for his sake.

A story is told of a street-sweeper in Dublin who fell heir to great wealth. While in the middle of the street, the lawyer conveyed to him the news, and the old man stood, broom in hand and mouth wide open, in astonishment. He was so overjoyed that unconsciously he dropped the broom where he was standing and followed the attorney to enter on his new career. He had always been careful of that broom before; but now he left it where it would be broken to pieces. So the woman of Samaria left her waterpot, and her noble decision saved herself and saved the citizens of Sychar. E. W. C.

Through Gates of Pearl

Augusta Albertson

CHAPTER VI—Continued

ON the western boundary of the City there are three gates. These I saw from within, two of them close at hand, the other from a distance. The King's Gateway is midway between the Gate of Loyalty and the Gate of Intercession.

No such throng as I had just seen swept through the Gate of Intercession. Those who entered here, however, were greeted by a much larger number, relatively, from within the City. I learned that most who entered by this gate had lived their mortal lives obscurely. Few were known to fame. I marked among the new arrivals a radiant spirit with face all aglow with joy—a joy that reminded me of a sentence which describes Christian rejoicing as "unspeakable and full of glory." Attended by a group of spirits like herself, she moved away across a flower-enameled meadow. Those who followed her moved with stately tread, but she leaped and skipped like a care-free child. My guide said, "She never walked on earth; an accident in infancy resulted in an incurable disease of the spine. She had never even stood upon her feet until she passed through the Gate of Pearl and ascended the crystal stairway. Yet has she waited on the Lord. Now she inherits the promise—running without weariness. From her bed of weakness and of pain she sent out messages of comfort to others like herself during all the years she waited for the coming of the Bridegroom. Her intercourse was not alone with earth, however; she made intercession for the saints according to the will of God. She wrote no letter, spoke no word, unaccompanied by prayer. She kept a 'prayer-list'—page after page of names of those for whom she made daily supplication. The source of her serenity was in her partnership with the Holy Spirit who himself maketh intercession for us with unutterable solicitude."

I HAD heard on earth the name of that faithful woman. I had thought of her as a temperamental optimist. Now I knew that her superiority to physical limitations was not the result of an inherited predisposition to cheerfulness, but that it was a spiritual victory. With spiritual weapons she had conquered the circumstances which otherwise had made her life an unrelieved tragedy. God's grace had made her more than a conqueror—had given her power to conquer for others. Fixing his eyes upon me, my celestial companion said, "Say to the Church of Christ in the shadow-world, when you return, that its holiest and highest ministry is that of intercession; that because of its failure in this, the night is long." I have tried to deliver the message as I received it.

CHAPTER VII

MIDWAY between the Gate of Loyalty and the Gate of Intercession, as I have said, I beheld, from a distance, the King's Gateway, the Royal Entrance. As Rousseau once observed, "Definition (and description) would be much easier were it not for the necessity of using words." The King's Gateway was the last of the twelve gates I beheld, and as at the wedding-feast at Cana, the best was reserved till the last. Through the clear atmosphere I saw the flashing of innumerable jewels which adorned the twelfth gate. Graceful towers rose on either side, and these too glowed with multitudinous gems. Straight from the portal which, I learned, the inhabitants of the City think of as the Beautiful Gate, across boundless savannas dotted here and there with fountains, a smooth broad highway leads to the very center of the City, where stands the Presence Hall of the Infinite. Into that I was not permitted to enter. It was revealed to me that if I had entered it, I could never have returned to earth.

(There is an old legend that Moses, at the end of his years, on the mountaintop looking toward the Land of Promise, fell to praying his old-time prayer, "I beseech Thee, show me thy glory," and that the Lord granted his request and the glory of God shone upon him and at that moment he ceased to live.)

I SAW that the Hall of the Presence of the Infinite was not a hall alone, but an edifice of vast dimensions and of such perfect proportions that not until I had looked at it long and from many sides did I apprehend its unearthly size. I perceived that it was cruciform and that above its center rose a dome of virgin gold, the dome surmounted by a cross which radiated light in all directions. Above the dome and cross hovered a sevenfold rainbow. The dimensions of the edifice and the height of the dome and cross I could not even vaguely estimate in earthly measurements. My mind recognized its incapacity to deal with celestial distances. I had traveled as light travels, swiftly, long and far. From gate to gate may have been equivalent to the distance that separates star from star. The avenue of which I have spoken stretching from the Royal Entrance to the central edifice appeared of such length that as I gazed upon it I was reminded of nothing so much as of the track of light across a sea when the moon is full and one stands upon the shore and sees an apparently endless highway across a boundless space. I was quite certain that the dome and cross appeared to rise to a height transcending the altitude of any mountain peak on earth—Mont Blanc or Everest. And since they seemed not excessively high, compared with the length and breadth of the edifice, its dimensions must have been so colossal that if all the royal palaces in the world were combined they might be contained therein.

My guide informed me that the right and left wings of the Presence Hall contained the Judgment Throne Room and the Audience Chamber of the King. Beneath the dome shineth forever the Uncreated Light, the Shekinah, whose earthly counterpart burned above the sacred ark in the Most Holy Place of the Tabernacle in the wilderness and the Temple on Mount Moriah. The approach to the Presence Hall was from the west, but there was also an entrance from the east.

From an arched opening on the southern side of the Hall there flowed a stream of water, placid and broad and crystal-bright. It was the river of the vision of John the Divine, "proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb." There were no bridges here, but companies of spirits crossed and recrossed it at various points, apparently with the ease of thought—crossed it, as it impressed me then, as Jesus must ha walked upon the sea. The banks of the ri were of silvery sand, on which, amidst can of angels, children of various ages play with all of children's abandon and delig "They," I thought, "are not fearful of Go glory." My companion spoke: "The glory the Eternal is cloud-empillared to our sigh I paused for a moment near two children, a heard their conversation. I think they did see me. I heard one ask the other, "What you call him to his face?" The other answe —and I thrilled at the dear child-accent and l of earth—"Sometimes I call him 'Good Sh herd,' and sometimes I call him 'Big Brother I knew of whom they were speaking, and secret prayer I have often called him "Brotl Mine."

TOUCHING my arm, my guide beckor me to follow him. Forthwith he led up the terraced slopes of a near-by hill, whe pausing at the edge of a grove of trees wh bore at the same time both flowers and fruit looked back. Upon the river there rested light like the dawn of a summer daybreak. for whom the children waited, and of wh they had been talking, had come. A growi crowd of children of all ages surrounded hi As one may see a person across a room throu reversed field-glasses, the image of the Go Shepherd, the Elder Brother, was distinct my vision, though reduced in size by the d tance at which I stood. No aureole encircl his head, but so long as he was in sight son thing made him the center of the horizon. T cross-crowned dome was not so obviously t dominating feature of the skyline as was th Figure.

The potent spell of an ample and p vasive Personality filled the whole field of servation. Yet—and it struck me as strange the children were evidently not overwhelm with awe in the presence of that Person. Th did not act as little children do sometimes the presence of their distinguished elders. Th were not little old people, talking like old peop but just dear, delightful, whimsical, affectiona children. I saw them clinging to his robes a heard their laughter and exclamations of delig He held a little child by the right hand on o side, while on the other he steadied a still youn child who sat upon his shoulder. Bird-shap boats glided across the water, and landed, grou of children leaping out from them to greet t Man upon the shore. I said to myself, wonder who all these children are." Instan my mind was illuminated on that point, formed as if by interior revelation. I recogniz a group of little ones whom I had never se on earth, but of whose tragic death I had rea They were the children of a missionary fam in India, and their bodies were crushed by landslide which destroyed their home wh the parents were absent on an errand for t Master.

THEN the strangest thing happened: M mother, in her childhood, had a pla mate, a boy about her own age, whose tra death was the great grief of her childhood. was springtime, and the first brave flow were peeping up in sheltered nooks. He we out to gather flowers. A sudden storm came u ad a great tree fell, crushing him beneath its nstrous weight. My mother has often told about him, so that in my childish imagina- n I had formed a more or less distinct picture him, brown-haired and with great candid zel eyes. Now I saw a child separate himself m the happy company on the river bank and ve straight toward me. In a little while stood before me. Calling me by name, he d, "Are you Martha's little girl?" It was as ough he had been my playmate and chum. asked, "When will Martha come?" And I d him she was still a dweller in the world ere he had known her. He said, "Tell her I all be glad when she comes Home." Then he d joined the company from which he had come, d, led by the Good Shepherd, like a flock of nbs, they moved out of my sight.

(I do not undertake to solve the problem ggested by the above episode, as to whether mother's little friend shall ever grow up in e "spirit world." I remember something at was said within the Children's Gate, ich at the time I had understood as signifying at, while maturity is the law of the heavenly rld—while they who enter the immortal life e ever in the full possession of their perfect powers whether children grow up to maturity or whether the old grow young again depends upon their pleasure and the Father's will. Are there not times when we are able by the exercise of will-power to lay aside the burdens of age and enter again for a season into the spirit of childhood? May this not be prophetic of some such faculty, only vastly greater and more real, in the spirit world?)

From the hilltop on which we had stood we proceeded through a parklike valley to another eminence. On the slopes of the latter hill was an orchard through which ran pleasant paths, reminding me of the poem, "The Orchard Lands of Long Ago." Gentle breezes brought me mingled odors of flowers and of ripened fruit. Blossoms and fruit on the same trees gave me the pleasant sensation of springtime and autumn combined. In this land, I learned that, as on our planet, one may pass "from lands of snow to lands of sun," only much more rapidly and easily than is possible to mundane travelers. From New England to Florida requires forty hours. Here, from season to season may be an almost instantaneous flight.

The next phase of my journey took me through a variety of climates, all of them beautiful. I passed through a midsummer-land into an autumn-land in which the trees were clad with gorgeous foliage. Plain and hillside seemed covered with a rare tapestry of gold and scarlet, with intermediate shades of soft brown and silver. Mountain rose beyond mountain, and horizon stretched beyond horizon. We came at last to an illimitable plain, crossed radially by numerous highways. Along some of these roads passed companies of horsemen, over others swift chariots moved, and by still others throngs of pedestrians made their way—all of them in the same direction. The mystery of the motive power of the chariots awakened my curiosity. When I saw them at close range, I perceived no mechanism, and no place for mechanism in connection with the wheels. My guide said to me: "You are like a child; you wonder how these chariots are propelled. The finest, highest power in the universe is will-power. Your earth has not yet learned to apply it to locomotion except through the media of intricate machinery. You have much yet to learn. These chariots move at the will of their riders. In this world matter is the absolute servant of mind, and mind and spirit are one."

To be continued

The War as God's Crucible

N a very remarkable article published in the British Weekly, the Rev. Professor W. M. Clow, D.D., dis- sses the present war as a great crucible which not only the nations engaged, t civilization, the church and the ole world are being searched and sted. He writes:

